LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Monday, 14th March, 1932.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at Eleven of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

MEMBERS SWORN:

Mr. Panambur Raghavandra Rau, M.L.A. (Financial Commissioner, Railways); and

Mr. John Carson Nixon, M.L.A. (Government of India: Nominated Official).

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

CANCELLATION OF A PASSPORT GRANTED TO SIRDAR HARBANS SINGH, A MERCHANT OF SISTAN.

747. Sardar Sant Singh: (a) Is it a fact that the passport granted to S. Harbans Singh, Indian merchant of Sistan in 1923 has been since cancelled?

(b) Was any application for the grant of a fresh passport made by the said person? If so, with what result?

Sir Evelyn Howell: (a) Yes, Sir. In 1924 the passport granted to S. Harbans Singh was cancelled.

(b) Yes, Sir. It was refused.

SUBSIDY PAID FOR THE MAIL MOTOR SERVICE BETWEEN SALEM AND ATHUR.

748. Mr. Uppi Saheb Bahadur (on behalf of Mr. D. K. Lahiri Chaudhury): (a) Is it a fact that the Superintendent of Post Offices, Salem, paid on his own authority the subsidy from March, 1931, for the mail motor service between Salem and Athur to a certain motor bus proprietor of his own choice?

(b) Are Government aware that there was no regular contract between Government and this proprietor of the motor bus service?

(c) If the replies to the above be in the affirmative, are Government satisfied that the action of the Superintendent of Post Offices, Salem, in paying a subsidy to a motor bus service proprietor without any formal contract with the latter is in order?

(d) Is it a fact that the authority of the Postmaster General is necessary for such a transaction? If so, was it obtained by the Superintendent of Post Offices, Salem? If not, do Government propose to take any action against the latter? If not, why not?

Mr. T. Ryan: Information is being collected and will be placed on the table of the House in due course.

PAUCITY OF MUSLIMS APPOINTED TO THE OFFICE OF THE DEPUTY ACCOUNTANT GENERAL, POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS.

749. Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that 30 appointments have very recently been made in the office of the Deputy Accountant General, Posts and Telegraphs, Delhi; if not, will Government be pleased to give the correct number?

(b) If the reply to part (a) above is in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that out of the total 30 appointments, only four have been given to Muslims; if not, will Government be pleased to state the correct number of Muslims appointed?

(c) If the reply to part (b) above is in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state whether the Deputy Accountant General, Posts and Telegraphs, disregarded the instructions of the Home Department for the recruitment of Muslims in his office? If so, what action is proposed to be taken against the Deputy Accountant General?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Enquiry is being made and a reply will be laid on the table in due course.

APPOINTMENT OF MUSLIMS IN CIVIL ACCOUNTS OFFICES.

750. Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that the Controller of Civil Accounts has issued instructions to the different Accountants General on the method of future recruitment? Do these provide for the allotment of appointments to Muslims according to the proportion fixed by the Home Department?

(b) If not, are Government prepared to direct this Controller of Civil Accounts to issue orders following those issued by the Home Department; if not, why not?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) and (b). Instructions have recently been issued by the Controller of Civil Accounts dealing with certain aspects of recruitment. These however make no reference to any communal basis of selection because on this subject the policy of Government has already been clearly laid down and is well understood.

EMPLOYMENT OF MUSLIMS IN THE TELEGRAPH DEPARTMENT.

751. Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad: Will Government be pleased to refer to their reply to my unstarred question No. 89 (dated 22nd February, 1932) which runs as under:

“The correct figures for the whole of India as they stood on 15th May, 1930, are as follows:

Telegraph Engineering and wireless branches.				Telegraph Traffic Branch.
Europe-ans and Anglo-Indians.	Hindus.	Muslims.	Other commu-nities.	Europe-ans and Anglo-Indians.	Hindus.	Muslims.	Other commu-nities.

and to my starred question No. 13 answered on the 26th January, 1932, and now state what steps have so far been taken to improve the Muslim representation; if not, why not?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhoré: The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the replies given by the Honourable Sir A. C. McWatters and the Honourable Sir B. N. Mitra on the 5th September, 1928 and the 30th January, 1929, to starred questions Nos. 72 and 330 of Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Has there been no change during the last three years?

Sir Joseph Bhoré: I think, as a matter of fact, Sir, it was a question of principle that was involved, and the principle is the same.

RETRENCHMENTS IN THE DELHI DIVISION OF THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

752. *Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad: With reference to the reply given on 22nd February, 1932, to my unstarred question No. 84, will Government be pleased to make a reference to the Division concerned and give answers to the point to parts (b), (c) and (d) thereof?

Mr. P. R. Rau: The information available shows that on the North Western Railway as a whole the general instructions of the Railway Board were satisfactorily complied with. Government regret that they are not prepared to make special enquiry concerning particular Divisions. I would however refer the Honourable Member to paragraph 11 of Mr. Hassan's Report.

Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad: Sir, the reply is not to the point. The question is, is it a fact that no regard has been paid to safeguarding the interests of communities not adequately represented at the time

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Honourable Member can only ask a supplementary question.

Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad: Do you think the answer is to the point?

Mr. P. R. Rau: Yes, Sir.

MUSLIMS PROMOTED TO THE SUPERIOR REVENUE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

753. *Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad: Will Government please state:

- (a) the number of Muslims and non-Muslims promoted to the Superior Revenue Establishment of the North Western Railway from the subordinate service during the last three years;
- (b) the number of these in the Personnel Branch of the service; and
- (c) the number of Muslims and non-Muslims of the superior revenue establishment reverted from the Personnel Branch of the service during the year ending 29th February, 1932?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) During the last three years two subordinates on the North Western Railway have been promoted permanently to the Superior Revenue Establishment of State Railways. Neither was a Muslim.

(b) One of these is at present filling the post of an Assistant Personnel Officer.

(c) Government have no information.

MUSLIMS APPOINTED AS PERSONNEL OFFICERS ON THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

754. Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad: (a) Is it a fact that when replying to the questions of an Honourable Member in February last as to the number of Muslim officers appointed as Personnel Officers, Government stated that 4 Muslims were appointed as such?

(b) If so, will Government please say if the transfer of an officer from one Department to another means an appointment? If not, will Government please say if it is a fact that only one Muslim subordinate was given a chance to officiate as Assistant Personnel Officer in the Mechanical Workshop Division who has been reverted, otherwise there was no such appointment?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) I presume the Honourable Member has in mind Sir Alan Parsons' reply to Mr. Muhammad Muazzam Sahib Bahadur's question No. 673 on 7th March, 1932, in which it was stated that the information available showed that on 1st December, 1931, 4 posts of Personnel or Assistant Personnel Officers on the North Western Railway were filled by Muslims.

(b) As explained in the reply referred to above, posts of Personnel and Assistant Personnel Officers are as a rule filled by officers of the Indian Railway Service of Engineers or the various branches of the Superior Revenue Establishment. About the latter part of this question Government have no information.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Sir, I did not catch the reply to this part of the question, that is to say, whether the transfer of an officer from one department to another is supposed to be a new appointment. What is the reply to this part?

Mr. P. R. Rau: Not usually, Sir; but since there is no regular service of Personnel Officers, appointment to the personnel branch means that an officer already in the service is posted to that particular branch.

ALLOWANCES OF TRAFFIC RELIEVING STAFF OF THE EASTERN BENGAL RAILWAY.

755. Mr. N. M. Joshi: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that the Traffic Relieving Staff of the Eastern Bengal Railway have to work out of their headquarters station? Are Government aware that this involves their keeping establishments both at the headquarters and the stations?

(b) If so, will Government be pleased to state on what grounds their allowances are reduced from 35 days' full allowance to 10 days' full allowance, 20 days' half allowance and no allowance thereafter? For what considerations were these allowances given?

(c) Is it a fact that the Traffic Relieving Staff have submitted memorials to the authorities explaining the hardships inflicted by the curtailment of their allowance?

(d) Is it a fact that the Agent of the Eastern Bengal Railway represented to the Railway Board in the month of July 1931 to reconsider the matter? If so, will Government please state what the proposals of the Agent were and what action they have taken regarding them?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) Relieving staff, as the name implies, are intended to be sent out of headquarters occasionally to fill short vacancies. I understand that this does not ordinarily involve keeping up two establishments.

(b) The practice on different railways regarding relieving allowances was different, and in May last, the Railway Board decided to introduce the uniform practice of granting such staff the compensatory allowance, if any, admissible at headquarters and the usual travelling allowances admissible on tour. The whole question is, however, being reconsidered.

(c) Advance copies of memorials have been received.

(d) The Agent, Eastern Bengal Railway, has not yet submitted his remarks on these memorials, but he made a reference on the subject to the Railway Board in July, 1931, wherein he expressed the opinion that limiting allowances to 10 days would cause difficulties. The orders of September, 1931, which allow half daily allowance for a further period, are intended to minimise those difficulties, and he has not made further representations in the matter.

DISCONTINUANCE OF THE CAPITATION GRANT FOR EDUCATION OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES.

756. Mr. N. M. Joshi: (a) Is it a fact that the capitation grant, vis., annas 8 per child of Railway employees, given to primary schools at Railway centres on the Eastern Bengal Railway, has been discontinued?

(b) Are Government aware that this discontinuance strikes at the very existence of the primary schools especially in the present financial stringency?

(c) Are Government prepared to reconsider the matter?

Mr. P. R. Rau: The Agent, Eastern Bengal Railway, reports that the capitation grant has not been discontinued.

REPLACEMENT OF VICEROY'S COMMISSIONED OFFICERS BY KING'S COMMISSIONED OFFICERS IN CERTAIN UNITS.

757. Rao Bahadur B. L. Patil (on behalf of Mr. B. V. Jadhav): (a) Will Government be pleased to place on the table of the House a copy of the resolution under which Viceroy's Commissioned officers in the Indianised units are to be replaced by the King's Commissioned officers?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state whether the resolution has been brought into operation and the number of vacancies in the Viceroy's Commissioned officers that have not been filled on its account?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state whether they have satisfied themselves that the full implication of the resolution has been realised by the regiments which will be affected by it? What steps have Government taken to explain the consequences of the resolution to the Indian Army?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) There is no such Resolution. A statement relating to the subject was made by the late Commander-in-Chief in his speech in this House on the 8th March, 1928.

(b) The measure has not yet been brought into operation. It will not be necessary to begin replacing Viceroy's Commissioned officers by Indian King's Commissioned officers in any Indianising unit, at the earliest until the first batch of officers Commissioned from the Indian Military Academy has completed its course, as well as one year of attachment to British units, i.e., not at any rate before the autumn of 1935. Even after this, the displacement of Viceroy's Commissioned officers will be a gradual process, as it will only take place in those units which have been selected for Indianisation.

(c) Government are fully alive to the importance of keeping the Indian Army acquainted with the consequences of their policy; and these will be explained in full to all ranks before they are brought into effect.

RECRUITMENT OF MEMBERS OF MARATHI AND CANARESE BACKWARD COMMUNITIES IN CENTRAL GOVERNMENT SERVICES.

758. Rao Bahadur B. L. Patil (on behalf of Mr. B. V. Jadhav): Will Government be pleased to state whether they have considered the question of applying the rules made by the Government of Bombay for the recruitment of the non-Brahmin backward communities from the Marathi and Canarese speaking districts of that Presidency when recruiting servants in the departments directly under the Government of India, such as the Income-tax, Posts and Telegraphs, Customs, Salt, Mint, Security Press, Government Dockyard and State Railways within the territorial limits of that Presidency? If so, do they intend to apply those rules?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: The Government of India have not specifically considered the question of granting representation to non-Brahmin backward communities of the tracts mentioned in Central Services, but they are considering how far it will be practicable to follow the practice of Local Governments in respect of communal representation in the services under their control, recruitment to which is made locally.

DISTINCTION IN PENSION CONDITIONS BETWEEN THE INDIAN ARMY SERVICE CORPS AND THE MILITARY ENGINEERING CORPS.

759. Dr. F. X. DeSouza (on behalf of Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney): (a) Is it a fact that the Indian Army Service Corps, the Military Engineering Corps and other such corps are entirely recruited in this country and are called "Indian Corps"?

(b) Will Government please state whether the pensions of officers belonging to these corps were considerably increased about the same time as the Indian Medical Department and are expressed in sterling?

(c) Is it a fact that A. I. (I.) No. 416 of 1924 has not been rescinded up to date and is it therefore still in force?

(d) Is it a fact that Government refuse to sanction sterling rates of pension in the case of the Indian Medical Department on the ground that it is an Indian recruited Department?

(e) Will Government please state why this distinction is made between one Indian recruited Department and another, viz., the Indian Medical Department and the Indian Army Service Corps?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) Such corps and services form part of the Indian Army. The British personnel of the Indian Army Service Corps consists mainly of officers and men originally recruited in the United Kingdom and appointed to the Corps in India: military personnel of the Military Engineer Establishment are recruited mainly from Great Britain and sometimes from British units serving in India.

(b) and (c). Yes.

(d) and (e). Indian Medical Department pensions are expressed in rupees because members of the Department belong mainly to the domiciled community and are generally expected to reside in India after retirement, whereas British personnel of other ancillary services, such as the Indian Army Service Corps, are generally recruited for the Army in the United Kingdom, and may be expected to reside there on retiring.

HIGH WATER METER RENT IN NEW DELHI.

760. Mr. Bhuput Sing (on behalf of Mr. Lalchand Navalrai): (a) Is it a fact that in privately owned houses in New Delhi a meter rent of Rs. 2 per month is charged in respect of water connections, whereas the meter rent for electric connections is Re. 1 a month only?

(b) Will Government kindly state the reason for the difference of rents in the two cases?

(c) Do Government propose to consider the desirability of reducing the present rate of water meter rent?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) Yes.

(b) The cost of supervision and maintenance of water meters is higher than that in the case of electric meters.

(c) No.

QUARTERLY BILLS FOR WATER CHARGES IN NEW DELHI.

761. Mr. Bhuput Sing (on behalf of Mr. Lalchand Navalrai): (a) Is it a fact that bills for water charges are sent to owners of private houses on a quarterly basis?

(b) Are Government aware that most of these houses are let out to tenants who are liable to change from time to time?

(c) Are Government aware that in actual practice the quarterly bills are not sent very expeditiously and although they are supposed to be quarterly bills, yet by the time they reach the landlords they sometimes contain charges in respect of periods several months old; for instance, the quarterly bills recently received in the beginning of February, contain charges in respect of the month of September?

(d) Are Government aware that there is a possibility of the tenant living in September leaving the house by February and that it is very difficult to recover old bills from a tenant who is no longer occupying the house?

(e) Is it a fact that electric bills, on the other hand, are sent monthly?

(f) If so, do Government propose to consider the desirability of adopting a similar system in the case of water bills? If not, why not?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) Yes.

(b) and (d). I have no direct information, but am prepared to accept the Honourable Member's statement.

(c) The bills are issued as a rule between the 23rd and the last date of the month following the quarterly period to which the charges relate. If owners of houses do not pay their bills on presentation, the arrears are included in subsequent bills.

(e) Yes.

(f) The suggestion will be brought to the notice of the Municipal Committee of New Delhi which has now taken over both these services.

PROPORTION OF ENGLISH AND INDIAN OFFICER INSTRUCTORS IN THE NEW INDIAN SANDHURST.

762. Sirdar Sohan Singh: Will Government please state what will be the proportion of English and Indian officer instructors in the new Indian Sandhurst?

Mr. G. M. Young: No proportion has been fixed. Indian officers holding the King's Commission and possessing the requisite qualifications will be considered for appointment as Instructors at the Indian Military Academy along with British officers.

PROMOTION OF INDIAN MILITARY OFFICERS.

763. Sirdar Sohan Singh: (a) Is it a fact that up to the present not a single Indian King's Commission officer has been appointed a permanent Company or Squadron Commander?

(b) Is it not a fact that there are several Indian King's Commission officers, who are fully qualified, and that they have not been given the chance of a squadron or company command? Are Government aware that, in some cases, English officers have been brought from other units for the purpose of superseding Indian officers in the Indianised units? If the Indian officers of the Indianised units were not considered competent and that was the reason for their supersession, why were not other Indian officers in the other units of the same status not appointed to the Indianised units when the British officers were brought in?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) Yes, because none of the officers is yet sufficiently senior. Many of them are, however, officiating as Company or Squadron Commanders.

(b) I think the Honourable Member has misunderstood the position. Advancement to squadron or company command is made when a vacancy occurs, and it does not follow because an individual officer may be qualified for such command that he is automatically promoted to it. There are many British officers in units of the Indian Army who are senior to the Indian officers, but have not yet been appointed permanent Company or Squadron Commanders.

The answer to the second part of the question is in the negative, and the third does not therefore arise. The only British officers who have been introduced into Indianizing units have been those required for the appointment of second in command in the immediate future. The Indian officers are too junior as yet for this appointment.

AGE FOR ENTRANCE EXAMINATION FOR SANDHURST.

764. *Sirdar Sohan Singh: (a) Have Government considered the question of reducing the age standard of the Indian boys for the entrance examination for Sandhurst, say between 17 and 18 instead of 18 and 20?

(b) Is it a fact that the first batch of Indians for King's Commissions was recruited from those who were of 20 years or even older and that policy is maintained even up to now? Are Government aware that the consequence is that an Indian would be a Lt.-Colonel only after he is 48 or 49 years of age and that India will not have Indian commanding officers for another 15 to 20 years?

(c) Are Government prepared to make some amendments on this point by giving accelerated promotion to some selected Indian officers?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a), (b) and (c). Officers obtaining command of Indian battalions at the present time have generally about 25 years' service, and in some cases less. Indian King's Commissioned officers should therefore normally obtain promotion to the rank of Lieut.-Colonel before they are 47 years of age, and thus be able to complete their full tenure of command. As regards cadets from the Indian Military Academy, I would invite the Honourable Member's attention to paragraph 12 of the report of the Indian Military College Committee. Government have accepted the recommendations in this paragraph, and will take steps, where necessary, to amend the regulations so as to ensure that Indian officers will not be placed at a disadvantage by reason either of the length of the course at the Academy, or of the age of entry. It will not therefore be necessary to give accelerated promotion to selected Indian officers.

PROMOTION OF INDIAN MILITARY OFFICERS TO STAFF APPOINTMENTS.

765. *Sirdar Sohan Singh: Are Government aware that there is no Indian holding a General Staff appointment? If so, what are Government doing in that line? How many Indian officers are trained for staff duties and how many more have been earmarked for it?

Mr. G. M. Young: The Honourable Member's statement is correct. The reasons are that no Indian officer holding the King's Commission has yet qualified for admission to the Staff College, and very few of such officers have the length of service necessary for appointment to a staff post. His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has, however, great hopes that Indian officers will qualify for the Staff College in the near future and is prepared, if necessary, to give extra nominations from time to time to those who do so.

PROMOTION OF INDIANS IN THE INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.

766. Sirdar Sohan Singh: Is it a fact that no Indian Indian Medical Service officer has been given any administrative job such as A. D. M. S. or such like? If so, why?

Mr. G. M. Young: The answer is in the negative. I would refer the Honourable Member to the reply that I gave on the 4th November to Mr. B. Das's starred question No. 1164.

GRANT-IN-AID FOR THE GIRLS' SCHOOL IN SAUGOR CANTONMENT.

767. Sirdar Sohan Singh: (a) Is it a fact that the Cantonment Authority of Saugor has no school of its own to provide primary education to the girls of that Cantonment?

(b) Are Government aware that some philanthropic people of the Cantonment started a girls' school by private enterprise?

(c) Is it a fact that the school has since been recognised by the Education Department of the Central Provinces and is imparting education to about 150 girls?

(d) Is it a fact that for some years past the Cantonment Authority of Saugor has been giving a "grant" to the school and that just at present it is paying Rs. 75 per month as a grant-in-aid?

(e) Is it a fact that the Cantonment Authority has now informed the Managing Committee of the school that, owing to retrenchment, no grant will be paid to the school from 1st April, 1932?

(f) Are Government aware that the neighbouring Municipality of Saugor is spending about 30 per cent. of its revenue over "education" and that the Cantonment Authority is not spending even one-fourth of it, on that subject?

(g) Is it a fact that the guiding principle in the matter of providing education, as accepted by Government, is that the Cantonment Authority should spend the same percentage of its revenue on "education" as the neighbouring Municipality does?

(h) Are Government aware that if the grant is withdrawn, the school will be closed and there is no other girls' school in that Cantonment?

(i) Are Government aware that the people of the Cantonment are greatly agitated over this matter and have memorialised the Southern Command on the subject?

(j) Do Government propose to issue instructions that the grant be continued to be paid till the Board starts a girls' school of its own?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) No, Sir. Girls are taught in the old Sadar Primary School for boys, which is wholly maintained by the Cantonment Authority.

(b) A girls' school was started by some private individuals about nine years ago.

(c) Yes.

(d) Yes.

(e) Yes.

(f) Yes, but against a total expenditure on Education of about Rs. 40,000 the Municipality received about Rs. 20,000 by way of grants and fees, whereas the Cantonment Authority's receipts on account of education was only Rs. 18.

(g) The establishment and maintenance of primary schools is one of the objects for which it is the duty of a Cantonment Authority to make reasonable provision, so far as funds at its disposal permit; and it has been suggested to Cantonments that the scale of expenditure on this subject should approximate as nearly as possible to that of the neighbouring municipality.

(h) No, Sir. The school was in existence before any grant was given from Cantonment funds. There are three other girls' schools in the cantonment, including the primary school maintained by the Cantonment Authority.

(i) No, Sir.

(j) Does not arise.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Do Government give special grants to these Cantonment Boards, which are earmarked for education?

Mr. G. M. Young: Will the Honourable Member kindly repeat the question?

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Do Government give special grants to these Cantonment Boards, which are earmarked for primary education?

Mr. G. M. Young: Grants are given to some cantonments which are in need of supplementary funds, but no general grant is given to all cantonments for purposes of education.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: My point is, are the grants specially intended for education, or does the money to be allotted for education depend upon the voting of the Cantonment Board?

Mr. G. M. Young: Grants to cantonment authorities depend on the circumstances of individual Cantonments.

| COMMERCIAL AUDIT IN GOVERNMENT FACTORIES.

768. Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad (on behalf of Khan Bahadur Makhdum Syed Rajan Bakhsh Shah): (a) Is it a fact that the Commercial Audit Department has been decentralised?

(b) Is it a fact that commercial audit will now be conducted by officers of the Accountant General's Office assisted by Commercial Audit staff? Have such officers any commercial training?

(c) Is it a fact that before the introduction of the commercial audit there was a loss of more than five lakhs of rupees in one item of stock in the Metal and Steel Factory, Ishapore, and that since the introduction of the commercial system of accounts and up-to-date system of stock-taking, no such loss has occurred in any Government factory?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: With your permission, Sir, I will deal with questions Nos. 768 and 769 together.

The Commercial Audit Branch has been decentralised. Government are obtaining certain information to enable them to reply fully to the Honourable Member's questions. Complete replies will be laid on the table in due course.

COMMERCIAL AUDIT IN GOVERNMENT FACTORIES.

†769. Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad (on behalf of Khan Bahadur Makhdum Syed Rajan Bakhsh Shah): (a) Is it a fact that a loss of nearly Rs. 5 lakhs was recently revealed by commercial auditors in the purchase and subsequent condemnation of Hazara Walnut in the Rifle Factory, Ishapore?

(b) Do Government propose to see that only commercial auditors are sent to audit the commercial concerns of Government?

(c) Do Government propose to see that in the scheme of decentralisation the auditors getting less than Rs. 200 do not suffer any financial loss in the matter of their pay and allowances?

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: About this loss of Rs. 5 lakhs which is referred to in question No. 769, is it a fact, and what action have Government taken if it is a fact?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: If the Honourable Member will wait until I am able to lay a full reply on the table, I trust he will get a satisfactory answer to his question.

CONTRACTS FOR UNLOADING AND STACKING COAL ON THE GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.

770. Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: (a) Will Government please state whether it is a fact:

(i) that the Loco. contracts of unloading coal wagons, loading engines and the stacking of coal on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway together with cleaning of Loco. sheds and the clearing of ash-pits are given out without asking for tenders from contractors;

(ii) that particularly on the Bhusawal and Nagpur divisions these contracts have been the monopoly of a certain family;

(iii) that these contractors secured these contracts at war rates and are still paid the same high rates; and

(iv) that rates of labour now are much lower than the rates during the war?

(b) Will Government please state why this avenue of economy has not been tapped by the Great Indian Peninsula Railway?

†For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 768.

Mr. P. R. Rau: I have called for information and on receipt will lay a reply on the table.

IDLE LOCOMOTIVES OF THE GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.

771. *Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: (a) Is it a fact that there are at present at the Loco. Depot of the Bhusawal Division of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway alone over 50 locomotives lying idle and put away in the sidings?

(b) Will Government please state what they intend to do with these idle engines? Is it a fact that there is not sufficient traffic?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) Government are aware that the Great Indian Peninsula Railway have a number of locomotives spare at the present time owing to the falling off in traffic. They are not aware of the number stabled on each division.

(b) Some locomotives have already been transferred from the Great Indian Peninsula Railway to other railways. Other locomotives now surplus will be stabled, until traffic improves. There is not sufficient traffic at present to give full employment to locomotives now in service.

COSTLY ELECTRIFICATION SCHEME ON THE GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.

772. *Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: (a) Will Government please state whether it is a fact:

(i) that the introduction of the electrification scheme on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, in the Bombay Division, has proved to be more expensive than the steam system;

(ii) that Messrs. Tata & Sons offered to supply electricity for one anna six pies per unit for this scheme; and

(iii) that at present it costs the Great Indian Peninsula Railway annas six per unit?

(b) If the answers to part (a) items (i), (ii) and (iii) are in the affirmative, will Government please state who was responsible for this unnecessary and heavy expenditure?

(c) Do Government propose to enquire into the matter? If not, why not?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) (i) and (c). The schemes have not been in existence long enough for any final conclusion to be arrived at; but the Railway Board propose to institute an investigation into them during the course of the next 12 months.

(a) (ii). Electricity is being supplied by Messrs. Tata & Sons for the suburban line electrification, the charge being Rs. 50 per annum per kilowatt of maximum demand in addition to a rate 0.425 anna per unit of actual consumption and subject to a minimum payment of the minimum guaranteed consumption at 0.6 anna per unit.

An offer was made by Messrs. Tata & Sons to supply current for the main line electrification on the same terms; they would, according to calculations made by the Consulting Electrical Engineers to Government, have worked out at 0.633 anna per unit.

(a) (iii). For the main line scheme the cost of supplying electricity from the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Power House was estimated to be 0.665 anna per unit dropping to 0.594 anna per unit with a 30 per cent increase in load.

The exact extent to which this estimate has been realized is at present not known definitely; but the question will form part of the investigation to be undertaken.

(b) Does not arise.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: With all the figures quoted by the Honourable Member, will he be in a position to say whether the electrification scheme is a paying concern and how much per cent. it has yielded last year?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I have just informed the House that the exact extent to which the estimates have been realised is at present not known definitely, but the question will form part of the investigation to be undertaken.

INEFFECTIVENESS OF THE CREW SYSTEM OF RAILWAY TICKET CHECKING.

773. Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: (a) Is it a fact that the crew system on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, although it has been in force for a number of years, has not in any appreciable degree lessened the number of passengers travelling without tickets?

(b) If the answer to part (a) is in the affirmative, will Government please state why the crew system is still continued on that Railway?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) Government have no information as to the number of passengers detected travelling without tickets on those sections of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway where the crew system operates.

(b) The system is being continued as it provides a more intensive check than is otherwise possible and its continuance is considered desirable by the Administration.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: May I ask whether the opinion given about the efficiency is the opinion of the Railway Board or the opinion of the administration of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway?

Mr. P. R. Rau: It is the opinion of the administration of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway. The Railway Board have not come to any definite opinion on the subject yet.

RETENTION OF A LARGE AND EXPENSIVE FUEL STAFF ON THE GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.

774. Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: (a) Is it a fact that the average consumption of coal used on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway locomotives has been tested and worked out to its lowest?

(b) If the answer to part (a) is in the affirmative, will Government please state the reasons for the retention of such a very large and expensive fuel staff as is at present engaged on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) The consumption of coal by locomotives depends on a number of continually varying factors and only by close and constant supervision can the consumption be kept to a minimum.

(b) For a railway the size of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway the staff employed is neither large nor expensive, it far more than pays for its cost.

RE-AMALGAMATION OF THE COMMERCIAL AND TRANSPORTATION DEPARTMENTS OF THE GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.

775. *Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: (a) Is it a fact that till a few years ago the Commercial and Transportation Departments of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway were jointly under the control of the General Traffic Manager of the Railway?

(b) Is it a fact that these two Departments are now separated each under different staff of officers in receipt of high salaries?

(c) Do Government propose to consider the advisability, in the interests of economy and in its present campaign of retrenchment, of re-amalgamating these two Departments? If not, why not?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) and (b). From 1st November 1922 the Traffic Department under a General Traffic Manager and the Locomotive Department under a Locomotive Superintendent were replaced by a Commercial Department under a Chief Traffic Manager, a Transportation Department under a Chief Transportation Superintendent and a Mechanical Department under a Chief Mechanical Engineer.

(c) I would refer the Honourable Member to the reply given to Mr. Joshi's question No. 492 on the 23rd February, 1932.

THE MOODY-WARD AND CREW SYSTEMS OF TICKET CHECKING.

777. *Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha: With reference to the reply to question No. 230, part (d), dated the 10th February, 1932, will Government be pleased to state why the Moody-Ward system was not tried on sections where the crew system was experimented upon, as was also suggested by Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad in his letter dated the 8th May, 1931, to the Secretary, Railway Board (which has been printed in the Railway Retrenchment Sub-Committee's Report)?

Mr. P. R. Rau: The system recommended in the Moody-Ward Committee's Report is in operation now throughout the East Indian Railway, which includes the sections on which the crew system was in force.

'ALLOWANCES OF TRAVELLING TICKET EXAMINERS AND OF GUARDS AND DRIVERS.

778. *Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha: (a) With reference to the answer to question No. 1121, dated the 2nd October, 1931, in the Legislative Assembly, will Government please state in what respects the duties of the

†This question was withdrawn by the Questioner.

Travelling Ticket Examiners are less arduous than those of the guards so far as the travelling aspect of their duty is concerned for which mileage allowance is given to the running staff?

(b) Will Government please state why the Travelling Ticket Inspectors of the East Indian Railway were paid mileage allowance like the guards till they were designated as Travelling Ticket Examiners?

(c) Will Government please state if the abolition of mileage allowance to the Travelling Ticket Checkers is to effect economy? If so, why are the guards and drivers still allowed to draw mileage allowance?

(d) Will Government please state how much saving per year could be effected on the East Indian Railway alone, if the guards and drivers were given consolidated allowance in place of mileage allowance at the same rate as the T. T. Es. ?

Mr. P. R. Rau: With your permission, Sir I propose to reply to questions Nos. 778, 779, 780 and 782 together. I have called for certain information and will lay a reply on the table, in due course.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Will the Honourable Member inform this House whether the Government intend taking any action in regard to the question of T. T. Es. as reported on by the Court of Inquiry especially on the E. B. Railway which appears in the B List of cases cited by Court of Inquiry.

Mr. P. R. Rau: That question does not arise.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: It arises in regard to the mileage allowances, which forms part of the question under reply and is one of the serious complaints made by the T. T. Es.

Mr. P. R. Rau: I cannot understand how the question arises.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Honourable Member has said that information is being collected and will be laid on the table. How can any question arise at this stage?

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Will the Honourable Member inform this House whether the Railway Board (a) has really got any collection boxes, (b) where they place them and who collects information for them?

Mr. P. R. Rau: Not that I know of.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: About a month ago your predecessor said on the floor of the House that he is making an inquiry from the Agents. How long are you going to wait. Will the information be supplied before we disperse?

Mr. P. R. Rau: As soon as I get the information, I will place it on the table.

APPEALS OF TRAVELLING TICKET INSPECTORS TO THE SECRETARY, RAILWAY BOARD.

†779. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if the Railway subordinates have no right of appeal to the Secretary, Railway Board, in case they feel aggrieved against any action taken by the Agent?

†For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 778.

(b) Will Government please state if the Divisional Superintendents have got the power to withhold the appeals of their subordinates sent through them but addressed to the Secretary, Railway Board, against the action of the Agent especially when they are couched in proper language and based on facts?

(c) Will Government please state what action was taken by the Railway Board authorities on the copies of the said appeals, which were sent direct by the Travelling Ticket Inspectors of the East Indian Railway to the Secretary, Railway Board?

REDUCTION IN THE SALARY OF TRAVELLING TICKET CHECKERS ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

†780. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha: Will Government be pleased to lay on the table a copy of the reply given if any to the letter addressed by Sir Henry Gidney to the Secretary, Railway Board, as published in the Hindustan Times, dated 8th July 1931, concerning reduction in the salary of the Travelling Ticket Checkers on the East Indian Railway?

TICKET CHECKING SYSTEM ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

781. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha: Will Government be pleased to lay on the table a copy of the reply given, if any, to the letter of Doctor Ziauddin Ahmad addressed to the Secretary, Railway Board, regarding the ticket checking system on the East Indian Railway as printed in the Railway Retrenchment Sub-Committee's Report?

Mr. P. R. Rau: The letter to the Secretary, Railway Board, does not contain the last two paras. appearing in the copy of Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad's letter, as printed on page 78 of the Railway Retrenchment Sub-Committee's Report. No reply was sent to Dr. Ziauddin.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: If any Member of the Legislative Assembly addresses a letter to the Secretary of the Railway Board, is it not courtesy to acknowledge the receipt of that letter?

Mr. P. R. Rau: May I explain that? I understood from the Secretary that my Honourable friend wanted to interview Sir Alan Parsons or the Member in charge of traffic in the Railway Board on the question and a reply was postponed pending the interview.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: In regard to appeals of railway subordinates will the Honourable Member inform this House whether the Government of India intend to accept the Court of Inquiry recommendations to constitute complaints committees to be attached to each Railway Administration? If not, why not?

Mr. P. R. Rau: May I ask whether this question arises out of the main question? I should like to ask for notice of that question.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: When I sent the letter to the Secretary of the Railway Board, the Secretary never acknowledged it. I spoke to him personally and he had no recollection whatever whether he received that letter, and probably the letter was never presented to him.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Honourable Member is making a statement.

POSTS OF TICKET COLLECTORS ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY PROMOTED TO TRAVELLING TICKET EXAMINERS.

†782. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha: Will Government please state if the posts of the permanent Ticket Collectors on the East Indian Railway who have been promoted as T. T. Es. have been permanently filled up or will remain open for them, if they are not confirmed as T. T. Es. and necessity arises to revert them to their substantive posts?

PASSENGER TRAFFIC RECEIPTS IN THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

783. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha: Will Government please state if the period from June, 1931 to November, 1931, was more prosperous for the East Indian Railway than the corresponding period of the previous year in respect of passenger traffic?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I presume the Honourable Member refers to the number of passengers carried and the earnings therefrom during the period. If so, the number of passengers carried from 1st June to 30th November, 1931, was 30,090,048 compared with 32,808,208 in the corresponding period of the previous year, and the earnings from the passengers carried was Rs. 2,43,87,847 compared with Rs. 2,60,29,765 in the previous year.

SUCCESS OF CANDIDATES IN SUBORDINATE ACCOUNTS SERVICE EXAMINATIONS.

784. Bhagat Chandi Mal Gola: (a) Is it a fact that the result of the subordinate accounts service examination (ordinary branch) for the year 1931 is that 7 per cent. of the candidates who appeared in the examination were successful?

(b) Is it a fact that the results of the previous years' examinations are that between 25 to 40 per cent. of the candidates passed? What is the reason for this great difference?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Enquiry is being made and a reply will be laid on the table in due course.

ECONOMY AND SAFETY OF ELECTRIC SUPPLY.

785. Rao Bahadur B. L. Patil: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the article entitled 'Electric Power Supply in India' by Prof. B. C. Chatterjee of the Benares Hindu University, in the issue of 25th February, 1932, in the Hindustan Times, Delhi?

(b) If so, do Government propose to undertake immediate legislation on the subject in the interests of economy and safety of the general public?

†For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 772.

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore: (a) Yes.

(b) The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the replies given to starred questions Nos. 4 and 688 on the 26th January and 7th March, 1932, respectively.

CONSTRUCTION OF A RAILWAY LINE BETWEEN HUBLI AND KUMPTA.

786. Rao Bahadur B. L. Patil: (a) Is it a fact that the Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway were some time back contemplating the construction of a Railway line between Hubli and Kumpta or some other seaport on the west coast?

(b) If so, is it a fact that the scheme was not further proceeded with owing to financial difficulties?

(c) Are Government aware that merchants of Karnatak undergo several difficulties in their import and export trade through Marmagosa Harbour owing to the fact that their goods have to pass through the Portuguese territory?

(d) If so, are Government in a position to estimate the annual loss to the traders and business men?

(e) If not, are Government prepared to appoint an officer to report as to the total loss and the ways and means of doing away with the various difficulties?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) About 1920 the Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway investigated a proposal for an extension from Hubli to Sirsa; but not from Sirsa to Kumpta or other seaport.

(b) No, the investigation proved that the line would not pay.

(c) A memorial was received, asking for the construction of various lines.

(d) and (e). No.

COMMUNITIES OF NEW RECRUITS REQUIRED FOR EXTRA WORK IN THE INCOME-TAX DEPARTMENT, BOMBAY.

787. Rao Bahadur B. L. Patil: (a) Will Government state how many temporary posts of Clerks, Inspectors, Examiners and Officers were filled up owing to the reduction of the taxable minimum of Income-tax in the Bombay Presidency (excluding Sindh) by Divisions?

(b) Will Government further state, by each Division in a tabulated form, how many of the new recruits are Parsis, Muhammadans, Indian Christians, Brahmins, Non-Brahmins and others; comparing the present strength with the strength of the respective communities that existed before the recruitment?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: The information has been called for and will be laid on the table in due course.

COMMISSIONERS AND ASSISTANT COMMISSIONERS OF INCOME-TAX IN BOMBAY.

788. Rao Bahadur B. L. Patil: Will Government be pleased to state how many Commissioners and Assistant Commissioners there are in the Income-tax Department in the whole of the Bombay Presidency and to what communities they belong?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: There is one Commissioner who is a Parsi. Of 6 Assistant Commissioners, 1 is a Mussalman, 1 an Anglo-Indian, 1 a Sikh and 3 are Parsees.

REPRESENTATION OF THE VARIOUS COMMUNITIES IN THE INCOME-TAX DEPARTMENT, BOMBAY.

789. Rao Bahadur B. L. Patil: (a) Have Government ascertained from the Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, whether the instructions issued by the Government of India regarding the adequate representation of the different communities obtaining in the Presidency have been followed?

(b) If so, what is the result? If not, do or do not Government think it necessary to do so?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) and (b). I invite the Honourable Member's attention to my reply to parts (b) and (c) of starred question No. 1282 relating to the recruitment of Non-Brahmins to the Income-tax Department in the Bombay Presidency that he asked on 13th November 1931. The Government do not consider that there is any necessity to supplement the somewhat exhaustive inquiries that they have already made at the Honourable Member's instance.

THE PROVINCIAL BOUNDARIES QUESTIONS.

790. Rao Bahadur B. L. Patil: (a) Will Government please state whether and when the boundary question will be taken up?

(b) If the answer to part (a) be in the affirmative, will Government further state whether the subject has been included in the terms of reference of any of the Indian Round Table Conference Committees now functioning in India?

(c) If not, do Government propose to set up another Committee? And if so, when?

• The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) For the reasons given in paragraph 21 of their constitutional despatch dated the 20th September, 1930, the Government of India do not intend at present to appoint a Boundaries Commission with general terms of reference to examine the redistribution of provincial areas.

(b) and (c). Do not arise.

†This question has been included in the list of questions for the 15th March, 1932.

ABOLITION OF THE LOWEST SELECTION GRADE EXAMINATION IN THE POST OFFICE.

792. *Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that they have abolished the lowest selection grade examination in the Post Office and R. M. S.?

(b) Is it a fact that in October 1931 the Director General of Posts and Telegraphs issued a circular inviting candidates to appear at the lowest selection grade examination which was to be held on the 14th and 15th March, 1932?

(c) Is it a fact that the candidates were required to purchase books at their own expense and are Government aware that they had to take leave to prepare themselves for the examination?

(d) Is it a fact that only on the 17th February, 1932 the Director General of Posts and Telegraphs issued orders that the examination would be abolished?

(e) Will Government be pleased to state whether they propose to pay compensation to the candidates who were put to extra expenditure in purchasing books and had to take leave for no purpose? If so, what compensation?

(f) Will Government be pleased further to state as to how the lowest selection grade posts will be filled up in the Post Office and Railway Mail Service?

(g) Will the senior clerks in the Department, although they have not passed the examination, get promotion in the lowest selection grade?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) Yes.

(b) No. The circular merely notified the dates of the examination and the classes of officials to whom it would be open.

(c) No, candidates who purchased books, or took leave in preparation for the examination did so on their own initiative and in their own interests.

(d) Yes.

(e) Government do not propose to pay compensation since those candidates who purchased books or took leave, did so in their own interests.

(f) and (g). Promotions to the lowest selection grade posts in the Post Office and Railway Mail Service in the general line, i.e., excluding (i) Inspectors and Postal Divisional Head Clerks and (ii) Accountants and Assistant Accountants, will be made from the seniority list of time-scale clerks by selection based on an official's past record and known capabilities irrespective of the fact whether he has passed the lowest selection grade examination or not. Promotions to the posts of Inspectors and Postal Divisional Head Clerks will be made from the existing 'junior' passed candidates or those who pass the new Inspector's examination. The posts of Accountants and Assistant Accountants in the lowest selection grade will be filled according to seniority combined with fitness, by officials who have passed the Accountant's examination.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: May I know why the examination was first announced and then abolished at such short notice?

Mr. T. Ryan: An examination was introduced in the hope that it would furnish a satisfactory means of testing the fitness of the members of the clerical staff for promotion. It has been found in practice that it has not served that purpose and it is practically impossible to devise an examination which will serve that purpose having regard to the age and other disabilities of the men who aspire to promotion to the lowest selection grade.

THE RAMAKRISHNA MISSION
INSTITUTE OF CULTURE

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: What were the reasons which led the department to abolish the examination. Why were not these things considered when they announced the examination, because by this method the department loses its credit?

Mr. T. Ryan: At the time that the examination was introduced, Government were not in possession of experience which subsequently led them to reconsider the matter.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: There was the whole of the Education Department at their disposal. If the Postal Department had not experience of the examination, they ought to have utilized the services of the Education Department.

Mr. T. Ryan: I do not think the Education Department would have been able to give much valuable advice in connection with a purely departmental examination of this kind.

EXAMINATION FOR APPOINTMENT OF INSPECTORS AND HEAD CLERKS OF POST OFFICES.

793. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Is it a fact that Government have decided to introduce an examination for appointment of Inspectors of Post Offices and R. M. S. and Head Clerks to Divisional Superintendent of Post Offices, in the Post Office and R. M. S.?

(b) If so, what will be the syllabus of examination and what will be their pay after their appointment?

(c) When will the examination be held and whether all clerks or sorters who have not exceeded 35 years of age will be eligible to appear at the examination? If not, why not?

(d) What would be the qualifications of the candidates for appearing at the above examination?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) Yes.

(b), (c) and (d). The rules and syllabus for the examination are at present under consideration, but the introduction of an examination has nothing to do with the pay of the posts.

ALLOWANCE FOR STAFF ENGAGED IN SORTING FOREIGN MAIL IN CALCUTTA.

794. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Is it a fact that in Calcutta inward foreign mails are being sorted by auxiliaries drafted from several departments of the Calcutta General Post Office, and some of the town sub-offices without payment of any allowance?

(b) Is it a fact that although they are required to attend to their duties before 6-0 A.M., they do not get any conveyance allowance?

(c) Is it a fact that in Bombay and Madras inward foreign mails are sorted on payment of overtime allowance and it is only in Calcutta the payment of the allowance has almost been stopped?

(d) Is it also a fact that only about 70 clerks working in the Calcutta General Post Office, and some of the town sub-offices are required to do this work on alternate Sundays while there are many who, although they remain off duty on Sundays, have been exempted from this duty?

(e) Will Government be pleased to supply a statement showing the number of clerks who remain off duty on Sundays in (i) Bombay, (ii) Madras, (iii) Calcutta and (iv) Rangoon including their T. S. Os. and what is the total clerical strength in each of the above cities?

(f) Is it also a fact that some of the clerks, one Supervisor, one Assistant Presidency Postmaster of the Calcutta General Post Office, get overtime allowance while others work without getting any allowance? Do they work at the same time and under the same condition?

(g) Do Government propose to inquire into the matter and arrange to pay them overtime allowance as was done before in order to remove this hardship? If not, why not?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a), (b), (c), (d), (f) and (g). Information is being collected and will be placed on the table of the House in due course.

(e) Government regret that they are unable to furnish the statement called for as the labour required for its compilation would be excessive.

NUMBER AND COMMUNITIES OF STAFF IN EACH DIVISION OF THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

795. Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad: Will Government be pleased to place on the table of this House a statement showing the latest available figures in regard to the number of the present staff by communities, viz., Hindus, Muslims, and Christians or Anglo-Indians holding the under-mentioned posts in each Division of the North Western Railway?

- | | |
|---------------------------------------|---|
| 1. Office Supdt., Divl. Office. | 7. Hd. Clerk, Loco. Foreman's Office. |
| 2. Hd. Personnel Clerk, Divl. Office. | 8. Hd. Clerk, S. D. O.'s Office. |
| 3. Chief Controller, Divl. Office. | 9. Hd. Clerk, I. O. W.'s Office. |
| 4. Confidential Clerk, Divl. Office. | 10. Hd. Correspondence Clerk, S. M.'s Office. |
| 5. Acme Clerk, Divl. Office. | 11. Chief Goods Clerk, S. M.'s Office. |
| 6. Reig. Clerk, Divl. Office. | 12. Chief Parcel Clerk, S. M.'s Office. |

Mr. P. R. Rau: Government regret that they are not prepared to supplement with figures for individual offices the information in regard to communal representation given in the Annual Report by the Railway Board on Indian Railways.

MUSLIMS APPOINTED AS OFFICE SUPERINTENDENTS AND HEAD CLERKS ON THE NORTH WESTERN AND EAST INDIAN RAILWAYS.

796. Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad: (a) Will Government please state how many Muslims have during the last 2 years, viz., 1930 and 1931, been posted permanently as Office Superintendents stating the Divisions of the North Western Railway and East Indian Railway and how many Head Clerks, stating the Branches and Divisions of the North Western Railway?

(b) Will Government please state whether these Head Clerks were merely designated as Head Clerks in the same grade which they were already holding, or whether they were given the very grade of the post which their predecessors were holding; if not, why not?

(c) What was the nationality of the predecessors of these Head Clerks?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) The information available shows that on the East Indian Railway 14 posts of office Superintendents and Head Clerks were held by Muslims in 1930 and 16 in 1931 and on the North Western Railway 39 in 1930 and 40 in 1931.

(b) On the East Indian Railway these Head Clerks were given the same grade as that which their predecessors held and the position in understood to be the same on the North Western Railway.

(c) Government have no information.

APPOINTMENT OF INDIANS AS SUPERINTENDENTS OF POST OFFICES IN KASHMIR.

797. Shaikh Sadiq Hasan: (a) Will Government please state when the post of Superintendent of Post Offices was created in Kashmir Province?

(b) Has any Indian Superintendent ever been posted there; if not, why not?

(c) Are Government prepared to see that Indians are also posted there in future?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) The post was created in 1897.

(b) Yes.

(c) The postings in question are made by the Postmaster-General, Punjab, and Government do not propose to interfere with his discretion as regards future postings. A copy of the Honourable Member's question and of this answer will however be sent to him.

REPORT OF THE RAILWAY COURT OF INQUIRY.

798. Mr. N. M. Joshi: (a) Will Government be pleased to state on what date they received the Report of the Court of Inquiry into Railway Retrenchment?

(b) When will Government be able to publish the Report mentioned above?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore: (a) On 29th February, 1932.

(b) The Report has already been published.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: May I ask what the Government propose to do in order to give effect to the recommendations of the Report?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore: Sir, I think the Report is under the consideration of the Departments of the Government of India concerned at present.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: May I ask whether Government will consult the All-India Railwaymen's Federation before giving effect to the recommendations of the Report?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: It is quite impossible for me, Sir, at this stage to say what the Government will do.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: May I ask why it is impossible?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Because there has not been sufficient time for the consideration of the Report.

INJUSTICE TO MUSLIMS IN THE POSTAL DEPARTMENT.

799. *Khan Bahadur H. M. Wilayatullah: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the article which appeared in the daily Hamdam of Lucknow, dated the 29th February, 1931, page 3, column 3, under the caption "Injustice to Muslims in the Postal Department"?

(b) Is it a fact that recently there were 11 vacancies in the office of the Postmaster General, Lucknow, for which applications were invited from candidates?

(c) Is it a fact that only one Muslim who is a graduate was selected?

(d) Is it a fact that ten non-Muslim candidates were selected?

(e) Is it a fact that some of these ten candidates who were selected are non-matriculantes?

(f) Is it a fact that some of the Muslim candidates who were not selected had passed the Intermediate examination and also the examination held by the Department?

(g) If so, will Government please state why non-Muslim candidates were taken in preference to Muslim candidates who were better qualified?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore: (a) to (g). Government have seen the article in question but information on the points raised by the Honourable Member is being called for and a complete reply will be placed on the table of the House in due course.

CONFIRMATION OF PROBATIONERS IN THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY ACCOUNTS DEPARTMENT.

800. *Pandit Satyendra Nath Sen: (a) Are Government prepared to ascertain from Mr. Sankarā Iyer, late Chief Accounts Officer, East Indian Railway, at present Chief Accounts Officer, Great Indian Peninsula Railway, as to whether he gave a ruling on the eve of his transfer, to the following effect, after reviewing the case of the probationers in the East Indian Railway Accounts Department:

"What has 'Seniority List' got to do with the confirmation of the probationers? Did not the Controller of Railway Accounts tell us to confirm these probationers and treat them as supernumeraries till their final absorption in the Department"?

(b) Will the Honourable Member be pleased to state why the probationers, though they are senior to all other classes of temporary staff, are not being confirmed against existing permanent vacancies?

(c) Is the Honourable Member aware that letter No. 26-C. R. A.—E./32/8141-F., dated the 18th February, 1932, from the Controller of Railway Accounts, to the Chief Accounts Officer, East Indian Railway, on the subject of discharge of staff, was issued without regard to the provisions contained in paragraph 1 (i) of letter No. 336/C. R. A./E./30, dated the 1st November, 1930, from the same authority?

(d) If so, do Government propose either to rescind or amend the instructions conveyed in letter No. 26-C. R. A.—E./32/8141-F., dated the 18th February, 1932, cited above?

(e) If Mr. Iyer gave the above ruling, do Government propose to take suitable departmental action against those responsible for disregarding that order?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) No. Any note recorded by Mr. Sankara Aiyer on the subject is a purely departmental document, the contents of which Government are not prepared to make public.

(b) Government are not aware that this is the case, but are making enquiries into the matter.

(c), (d) and (e). There is no inconsistency between the two letters. In the matter of discharge, temporary staff with over 12 months' continuous service have been regarded as having equal rights with permanent employees.

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

APPRENTICESHIP TRAINING IN THE RIFLE FACTORY AT ISHAPORE.

167. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Will Government be pleased to state and place on the table the particulars regarding, (i) the syllabus of the subjects, (ii) the strength of the whole-time teaching staff with their names and duties, (iii) the system of conducting examinations, and (iv) the rules and regulations under the new scheme of apprenticeship-training which is to be introduced in the Rifle Factory at Ishapore?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state how they propose to utilize the services of the three whole-time teachers for the apprentices under the new scheme of apprenticeship-training in the Rifle Factory at Ishapore?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state whether under the new scheme of apprenticeship-training the existing apprentices in the Rifle Factory at Ishapore will as well attend during factory working hours the lecture rooms and laboratories for their technical and practical training? If so, for how many hours and how those trainings are to be conducted? If not, why not?

Mr. G. M. Young: Inquiries are proceeding and replies will be laid on the table in due course.

APPRENTICESHIP TRAINING IN THE RIFLE FACTORY AT ISHAPORE.

†168. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Will Government please state whether, in view of changing the method of apprenticeship-training in the Rifle Factory at Ishapore, they had consulted the pioneers of the present scheme of apprenticeship-training in that Factory, viz.:

- (i) General Atkinson, former Master General of Supply and late Principal of Roorkee Engineering College,
- (ii) Colonel Sturrock, former Director of Ordnance Factories and Manufacture,
- (iii) Major L. De. Lenfesty, C.I.E., former Superintendent, Rifle Factory, Ishapore, and now Director of Contracts (Army Headquarters, India, Simla), and
- (iv) Mr. H. I. Mathews, B.Sc., A.M.I.Mech.E., former Apprentice-in-charge in Rifle Factory, Ishapore, now Superintendent, Gun and Shell Factory at Cossipore?

(b) If the reply to part (a) be in the affirmative, what were the opinions of the respective pioneers named above?

(c) If the reply to part (a) be in the negative, will Government please state the reasons?

†For answer to this question, see answer to unstarred question No. 167.

APPRENTICESHIP TRAINING IN THE RIFLE FACTORY AT ISHAPORE.

†169. Mr. S. C. Mitra: Will Government be pleased to place on the table, the last five years administrative or annual report on apprenticeship-training in the Rifle Factory at Ishapore? If not, why not?

APPRENTICESHIP TRAINING IN ORDNANCE FACTORIES.

†170. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Is it a fact that the apprenticeship-training in the Ordnance Factories and particularly in the Rifle Factory at Ishapore was introduced in view of:

- (i) the great importance of efficiency in Ordnance Factories and for their development to full output in war time;
- (ii) the industrial development of India, and
- (iii) a development of first rate military importance?

(b) Are Government aware that the apprenticeship scheme had been emphasised in the Indian Industrial Commission's Report (Chapter X, especially paragraphs 151, 152 and Appendix IV)?

(c) Is it not a fact that the apprenticeship schemes have been in operation in the leading industrial firms in England for many years and no one questions their absolute necessity and a very efficient one has been in operation in Woolwich Arsenal (known as the Woolwich Trade Lads Scheme) since 1904?

(d) Is it not a fact that Foremen, Assistant Foremen, Draughtsmen and others are recruited from the Woolwich Arsenal and many of the Assistant Foremen in the Ordnance Factories in India have of late years been men who were Woolwich Trade Lads?

APPRENTICESHIP TRAINING IN ORDNANCE FACTORIES.

†171. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Is it a fact that the Ordnance Factory Committee which reported in April, 1919, was under the Bengal Committee, and that it was presided over by the Honourable Sir Rajendra Nath Mookherjee?

(b) Is it a fact that the Committee suggested that the apprenticeship aimed at must in any case not be lower in nature and quality to that of the Trade Lads at Woolwich and that the Indian Ordnance Factories must maintain as high a standard as the Royal Ordnance Factories at Woolwich?

(c) If the answer to above is in the affirmative, will Government please state the reasons and justifications for their reducing the technical training in Ordnance Factories, and particularly in the Rifle Factory, Ishapore?

(d) Is it a fact that Sir R. N. Mookherjee's Committee recommended that a continuation course at Sibpur might eventually be adopted for Ordnance Factories' apprentices and that the duration of this course will be for two years so as to qualify the students for the Foremen's grade in service? If so, what steps were taken and how far was this recommendation carried out?

†For answer to this question, see answer to unstarred question No. 167.

POSTAL INCOME AND INCREASED POSTAGE.

172. Rai Bahadur Lala Brij Kishore: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether their postal income has been more or less or stationary since the increased rate came into operation, as compared with the corresponding months of the previous years?

(b) Is it a fact that since the increased postage rate came into operation the public are spending a less amount on postage than what they used to do before?

(c) If the reply to part (b) above is in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to supply to this House a monthly figure of the sale of stamps for the last six months and the figure for the corresponding months of the previous year?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a), (b) and (c). The increases in postal and telegraph rates were brought into force from various dates, and January 1932, was the first month in which all the increases were effective for an entire month. As will be seen from the accompanying statement, the postage and message revenue of the Department has been more since October, 1931 than that in the corresponding months of the last year.

MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT.

EXCESSES OF THE POLICE IN DELHI AND DESECRATION OF THE MOSQUE OF KUCHA RAHMAN.

Mr. President: Order, order. I have received a notice from Mr. Maswood Ahmad and also from Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur that they propose to ask for leave to make a motion for the adjournment of the business of the House to-day for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, as follows:

"The excesses of the police in Delhi on Saturday last and the desecration of the mosque of Kucha Rahman."

I have to inquire whether any Honourable Member has any objection to this motion.

As no objection is taken, the motion will be discussed at 4 o'clock.

ELECTION TO THE STANDING ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION, HEALTH AND LANDS.

Mr. President: Order, order. I have to inform the Assembly that Rao Bahadur Patil has been elected to the third vacancy on the Standing Advisory Committee for the Department of Education, Health and Lands. (Cheers.)

THE GENERAL BUDGET—LIST OF DEMANDS.

SECOND STAGE.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): Order, order. The House will now proceed to take up the second stage of the consideration of the Budget—Demands for Grants. In this connection the Chair has been approached with a suggestion in which, the Chair is informed, there is general agreement of the House, that a special procedure should be adopted on this occasion. The procedure suggested is that, out of the six days which are allotted for the discussion of Demands for Grants, the first day should be allotted to the Nationalist Party, the second day to the Independent Party, half of the third day to the European Group and the other half to the United India Party, and the fourth day to those Honourable Members who do not belong to any party. The remaining two days should be devoted to economy cuts, and not to censure motions. On the days which are allotted to the respective Parties and to the unattached group, a representative of such party or group will move a cut motion raising a question of policy, and if further time is available, another cut motion will be moved on that day. In order to give effect to this suggestion, it is further proposed that the discussion of Demands for Grants should not proceed in the order as it appears on the Order Paper, but that a special Demand should be taken up out of its turn and that cut motions should be moved to it. The Chair has now to ask Honourable Members whether they are all agreed that the suggestion which I have explained to the House should be adopted for the discussion of the Demands for Grants. (Voices: "Yes, yes".) I take it the House is unanimously agreed. (Voices: "Yes.")

[Mr. President.]

According to this arrangement the Demand which is to be discussed is the votable grant for the Executive Council; and I would therefore ask the Honourable the Finance Member to put before the House the Demand under item 28—"Executive Council".

DEMAND No. 28—EXECUTIVE COUNCIL.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster (Finance Member): Sir, I beg to move:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 85,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1953, in respect of the 'Executive Council'."

Mr. President: I understand that the Honourable the Leader of the Nationalist Party wishes to propose a cut motion to raise the constitutional issue. I call upon him to move it.

The Constitutional Issue.

Sir Hari Singh Gour (Central Provinces Hindi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I wish to move that the Demand under the head "Executive Council" be reduced by Rs. 100 to raise the constitutional issue. Honourable Members will observe that in this connection we have to consider the two stages of the constitutional issue, the constitutional development of India under the present constitution and the constitutional development of India under the constitution to be given in the near future. As regards the constitution of the Government of India under the present constitution, I would recall to Honourable Members the epoch-making pronouncement of the 9th April, 1917, at the Imperial Conference at which we found that the assembled delegates at the Imperial Conference unanimously passed the following resolution:

"That the Imperial War Conference are of opinion that the readjustment of the constitutional relation of the component parts of the Empire is too important and intricate a subject to be dealt with during the war, and that it should form the subject of a special Imperial Conference to be summoned as soon as possible after the cessation of the hostilities.

They deem it their duty, however, to place on record their view that any such readjustment, while reserving all existing powers of self-government and complete control of domestic affairs, should be based upon a recognition of the Dominions as autonomous nations of the Imperial Commonwealth, and of India as an important portion of the same. We recognise the right of the Dominions and India to an adequate voice in foreign policy and in foreign relations and to provide effective arrangements for a continuous consultation in all important matters and for such necessary concerted action founded on consultation as the several Governments may determine."

Honourable Members will be pleased to see that this declaration made at the Imperial Conference may be resolved into three distinct parts. First, that it should recognise and preserve all existing powers of self-government in the Dominions wherever it exists. Secondly, that the readjustment should be based upon a full recognition of the Dominions as autonomous nations of an Imperial Commonwealth, and of India as an important part of the said Commonwealth. Thirdly, that the readjustment should recognise the right of the Dominions and of India to an adequate voice in foreign policy and in foreign relations. And a Committee was to be appointed to give effect to this declaration.

Honourable Members will thus see that so far as the Dominions were concerned, the readjustment was to recognise the autonomous character of the Dominions, and a Committee was to be appointed for the purpose of making a readjustment. So far as India was concerned, the declaration was that India was to be an important portion of the Imperial Commonwealth, and secondly, (mark these words) that the readjustment should provide effective arrangements for continuous consultation on all important matters of common Imperial concern and for such concerted action founded on consultations the several Governments may decide. These are the two fundamental rights conceded to India by the Imperial Conference of 1917. The full effect of these rights was the subject-matter of discussion in the House of Commons on the 6th August, 1918.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Why not go back a little further?

Sir Hari Singh Gour: On the 6th August, 1918, Mr. Chamberlain, who was a member of the Imperial Conference of 1917, and who was a special member of the War Cabinet in 1918, explained as to what had been the new position of India under the Imperial Conference Resolution of the previous year. He said:

"In the light of the discussions which took place last year and this year in the Imperial War Conference, a new recognition has been given to the equality of status of India and to a right of reciprocal treatment as between the Dominions and India or Great Britain and India of their respective citizenship. In these matters within the last few years India has leaped suddenly into a place of equality with the other great dominion portions of His Majesty's Dominions and her representatives sit within them in regard to Imperial Council."

Later on he said:

"It is but right that that great progress in Imperial status and position, that admission to partnership in the Empire for India, should be accompanied or followed, as soon as may be, by a revision of the share which Indians take in their own Government and by an effort to set them upon road which will lead them steadily forward in the paths of progress and reforms."

Honourable Members will remember that on the 20th August, 1917, a declaration was made in the House of Commons defining the ultimate goal of British policy in India as the establishment of responsible government in this country. Now, Honourable Members will remember that the evolution of the British constitution has from time immemorial proceeded upon not only the written letter of the law, but also upon conventions, treaties, usages and practices which implement, and to a very large extent supplant, the narrow frame-work of a written constitution. That being the case, we have for the first time the recognition of India as a partner in the British Commonwealth, and certain defined rights as regards external policy and external affairs are conceded to her in her own right, and it is further declared that effective arrangements will be made for the purpose of giving India's representative an adequate voice in the determination of her foreign policy. Honourable Members will thus see that in 1918 two confluent currents were flowing in the direction of the emancipation of India, one was preceded by the declaration of Mr. Montagu in the House of Commons on 20th August, 1917, and the other took its origin at the Imperial Conference Resolution of 9th April, 1917, to which I have referred. If we really wish to understand the present constitutional character of the Government of India to be obtained from the official documents, we cannot look at the one without the other, and when my Honourable friend Sir Cowasji Jehangir interjected a remark, "Why don't you go backward," that is exactly the lament of myself and those who think with me that the short memories of people are responsible for forgetting the advance that has already been made, and that when they went to the Round Table Conference, they suffered from that shortness of memory and completely made a clean sweep of the past and began to write upon a clean slate. (Cheers.) I shall presently point that out to the Honourable Members and to the Honourable Member who interrupted me, Sir Cowasji Jehangir, for his own satisfaction. The Honourable Member will find that when, in 1918, Mr. Montagu published his memorable Report, and in the discussion that took place in the House of Commons upon that Report, Mr. MacDonald, now the Prime Minister of England, made certain suggestions which were afterwards acceded to and which were to be regarded as a part of the conventional constitution to implement the statutory Act of Parliament enacted in 1919. Mr. MacDonald in referring to the future constitution of India said :

"It should not be a beginning,"

—that is to say the new constitution must not merely be a beginning,—

"but shall be a real substantial beginning that organisation and machinery will be created which will go by its own momentum from stage to stage, and at each stage it reaches, will carry to a fuller extent the complete ideal of self-government within the Empire."

That was to be the first condition. The second condition was :

"The Secretary of State should be in the same position as the Secretary of State for the Colonies."

Speaking on this subject, Mr. MacDonald said :

"The Secretary of State here and in fact the whole of Indian Government still retains the features of the East India Company. It has been modified from time to time but the parentage of our system is the East India Company. I would suggest to my Right Honourable friend that he should enquire as to whether the Secretary of State and the Council here are to be maintained. It is a pure anachronism, the survival of the trading company with the Court of Directors, and so on, and not at all suited to a Government Department. If my Right Honourable friend has any intention to making him a responsible Parliamentary Minister, then, I hope this House will not tolerate the existence of a Council of non-representatives and largely personally interested people."

The third point that Mr. MacDonald drew attention of the House to, was :

"I think we ought to make our minds perfectly clear that the elected sections of both provincial and Imperial Legislatures will be in the majority, to that extent we support the report, but I think there is much that we shall have to discuss in the suggestion made in the report in consequence of this, for instance this is a very simple dilemma in which such legislatures can get, you get the majority of the legislatures elected, you get the executive officials and nominees. That means you at once invite conflict. You cannot run a legislature the majority of which is elected with an executive consisting of nominated or official Members. Therefore, we ought candidly to admit that the elected majorities in the legislature must have, at any rate, a substantial representation of the legislature on the executive. There can be no half-way house in that, and the Government should openly accept it."

Later on he says :

"Show the Indians straightaway that we are trusting them and do not put them into the position of being free and irresponsible critics."

Honourable Members will find that these suggestions, made by the present Prime Minister of England, were substantially given effect to immediately on the enactment of the Act of 1919. Before that Act was enacted, the Joint Parliamentary Committee had implemented the terms of that Act by recommending—and their recommendations were declared to be read as part of the Government of India Act itself—that in the matter of fiscal autonomy, India was to possess the same right as the other self-governing Colonies of Canada, Australia and South Africa, and secondly, that in matters of purely Indian interest, where the Government of India and the Legislature were in agreement, the Secretary of State should ordinarily stand out. Therefore, when that Act was passed, Honourable Members will see what the intention of the framers of the Act and the founders of the new constitution was, that there should be a substantial dyarchy in the centre. As Mr. MacDonald pointed out, we cannot have a responsible Legislature without that Legislature being represented on the executive. You cannot have a majority Legislature unless the two sides of the Legislature are in substantial harmony and are not brought into constant conflict. In order to harmonise the two sides of the House, it was decided that at least three Members of the Executive Council should be drawn from the Legislature, and the first three appointments to the first Executive Council formed after the first Legislative Assembly were Members of the late Imperial Legislative Council. Secondly, successive Secretaries of State have reaffirmed the convention known as the fiscal autonomy of India; and thirdly it was provided that whenever there is an agreement between the Government of India and the Legislature, the Secretary of State should stand out, and in order to enable him to do so, section 19-A of the Government of India Act was enacted for the purpose of enabling the Secretary of State to relax his control. This was the position of the Government of India in 1921. Honourable Members will thus see that the sum-total of the powers which the people of India enjoyed in 1921 was a large measure of sovereignty designated by the words "Control of India in matters of foreign policy and foreign affairs", in matters of internal administration the convention was that the Legislature should be represented upon the executive, that the Legislature should possess fiscal autonomy, and that in matters of general Indian interest where the Executive Government of India and the Legislature were in agreement, the Secretary of State should relax his control.

It is for the Honourable Members to see to what extent there has been a departure from this constitution initiated by the Act of 12 Noon. 1919. I shall deal with the two sides of the question separately. Dealing first with the newly acquired rights of India in matters of external policy and external affairs, the Resolution of the Imperial Conference was that there should be a readjustment, and that India's voice should be adequate in matters affecting her foreign policy and foreign relations. In 1922, really speaking on the 23rd March, 1922, one of us drew the attention of this House to this new international character of India established by the Conference, and we desired that in the future Conferences this House should be represented by its elected delegates. That Resolution was opposed on behalf of Government, but at the same time Government gave us an undertaking to the following effect. The then Home Member (Sir William Vincent) speaking upon the debate, at page 3635 of the Debates, dated 23rd March, 1922, said:

"For obvious reasons it is necessary for us to appoint men who will command the support of this Assembly."

[Sir Hari Singh Gour.]

That was the pledge given by the Home Member as regards the representation of the Legislative Assembly in the future Conferences of the Empire. Now Honourable Members will recall that the Conference of 1917 had recommended the establishment of a committee for the purpose of working out the purpose of the Resolution which was passed there. A committee was to have been appointed in the Imperial Conference of 1926, and in 1922, as I have said, the Honourable the Home Member had assured the House that the representative of India would be such as would command the support of the Legislative Assembly. But if we turn to the Imperial Conference proceedings of 1926, what do we find? We find that India was represented by three gentlemen, Major-General Kirk, Deputy Chief of the General Staff, Mr. H. A. F. Lindsay, the Trade Commissioner in India and the Maharajah of Burdwan. But as the last-named failed to appear, he sent his son as a Private Secretary to himself to represent India. Such was the Indian representation in the Imperial Conference of 1926, when the external rights of India were to be determined by the appointment of a committee, the result of which, as Honourable Members will presently see, has created a new situation so far as the rest of the Dominions of the British Commonwealth are concerned. But though India was represented in the manner I have described, the Imperial Conference did not omit to hark back to the Resolution, Resolution No. 9, passed in 1917. And referring to that Resolution we find at page 15 of the Imperial Conference Report of 1926 the following sentences:

"It will be noted that in the previous paragraphs we have made no mention of India. Our reason for limiting their scope to Great Britain and the Dominions is that the position of India in the Empire is already defined by the Government of India Act of 1919. We would nevertheless recall that by Resolution 9 of the Imperial War Conference of 1917 due recognition was given to the important position held by India in the British Commonwealth."

So that Honourable Members will thus see that while the question was raised as to how the committee should consider the case of India in the readjustment for which a Committee had been appointed, India was dismissed with this short statement, that the case of India had already been disposed of by the Act of 1919. But Honourable Members will find that the case of India was not disposed of by the Act of 1919 which merely dealt with questions internal to India and did not deal with questions as regards her external rights. India's case therefore went by default in the Imperial Conference of 1926. That Conference appointed a Committee presided over by Lord Balfour, and that Committee gave a decision, the result of which was enacted in an Act of Parliament known as the Statute of Westminster, passed in November last. The effect of that Act known as the Statute of Westminster is to make the Dominion Parliaments sovereign Parliaments, and to give them the right of extra-territorial legislation which they did not possess before. A very large number of Acts limiting their rights of absolute sovereignty and co-equal partnership with the mother-country were recommended for repeal, and they were then repealed or are on the eve of repeal now.

I submit, therefore, that so far as India is concerned, India's external rights have not been safeguarded in the manner they were intended to be by the Conference of 1917. Nevertheless the Conference Resolution of 1917 was not a war measure, as will be apparent from the fact that India was called upon to be a co-signatory with the other self-governing Dominions to the Treaty of Versailles. India was admitted as a foundation member of the League of Nations in 1919, and India has been invited in her own right to attend the Imperial Conferences held from time to time; and ancillary to that India has become a member of the Washington Labour Conference. She was a party to the Labour Conference; she has been a party to the Locarno and Kellogg Pacts and various other international Conventions entered into by the self-governing Dominions and other self-governing nations that went there. My submission, therefore, is that in the eye of the constitutional lawyer the external sovereignty of India as an international State is beyond dispute, and I think it was inadvertence to the rights of external sovereignty which India has been enjoying for a decade past that Mr. Wedgwood Benn speaking from his place as Secretary of State in November, 1929, described India as a Dominion in action. More recently when the same question was troubling the mind of Mr. Winston Churchill in the memorable debate on the White Paper on the 3rd January of the present year, Mr. Churchill with all these facts passing through his mind said that India was a Dominion for ceremonial purposes. So that you have the statement by two great statesmen, one calling India a Dominion in action, and the other calling India a Dominion for ceremonial purposes.

A third intermediate place was sought to be assigned to India, namely, that though India has got the status of a Dominion, it lacks the functions of a self-governing Dominion. This aspect of the question was applied not only to India but also to the self-governing Dominions before 1926; and referring to it on page 14 I find the following passage:

"Equality of status so far as Britain and the dominions are concerned is thus the original principle governing our inter-imperial relations; but the principles of equality and similarity appropriate to status do not universally extend to functions. Here we require something more than immutable dogmas."

The fact, therefore, is that this dissociation of the status with the functions was a matter of a lively grievance in the self-governing Colonies and that has been set at rest by the Statute of Westminster, to which I have referred. My submission is that India, so far as her external relations are concerned, has not only the theoretical attributes of a sovereign State, but those attributes have been recognised and given effect to from 1918 down to the present time. Only the other day when the question about fiscal autonomy of India was under debate and I raised this debate, the Honourable Sir George Rainy, speaking on behalf of Government, in a considered statement which he read out to the House, said that the question of fiscal autonomy, so far as India was concerned, is recognised, but the fact is that India lacks the machinery for giving effect to her rights; and then he suggested that such machinery might be set on foot by the Round Table Conference, which was then in session in London. This is a plain recognition of the fact that the attributes of sovereignty which India has enjoyed and which have been accumulating since 1917 are incapable of enjoyment without setting up an autonomous internal machinery for the self-government of India. These are the facts, therefore, which I wish to draw the attention of the House to, and I think these are the facts which must be regarded as the fundamental rights of India upon which the superstructure of the future constitution should be constructed.

But when I read the proceedings of the Round Table Conference, both the first and the second, I find no reference to any of these historic facts, and I am not surprised at my friend Sir Cowasji Jehangir just now interrupting me, when I was dealing with the question, he having said "Why do you not go further back than 1917?" He wanted to make clean sweep of India's past, and in the Round Table Conference make a fresh contract, as if India had never acquired any rights which India claimed, and which India had been enjoying during a decade or more, as I have pointed out already. I, therefore, submit that that was an inherent weakness in the Round Table Conference. Honourable Members will, therefore, find that when Lord Reading made a statement saying that he was in favour of granting responsibility in the centre on two main conditions, one of which was that there should be an Indian Federation, and the association of the representatives of the Indian Princes in the Federal Chambers, and, secondly, there must be reservations and safeguards. When His Lordship was making that statement, I venture to submit with the utmost respect to him, that he had for the time being forgotten that so far as reservations in regard to external policy and external affairs were concerned and which he wanted under the scheme which he adumbrated in his speech, and which has since been accepted by the Round Table Conference, that had already been conceded to India in 1917, and, therefore, they could not be withdrawn, and that any constitutional development of India must recognise this fact and all that was relevant was to set up a machinery in consonance with the accepted rights which India had been enjoying during all these years. That is my first submission.

My second submission is that as regards the principle of federation with the Indian Princes, that is the second condition precedent stated by Lord Reading and accepted by the Round Table Conference. Now let us examine what that means. Reading the proceedings of the two Conferences and what has subsequently taken place, we find that the Indian Princes are sharply divided upon the question of a Federation itself; but so far as there is any agreement at all, that agreement is with a few States who want a representation and a weightage out of all proportion to their population in relation to British India.

I shall very briefly give the salient features of the conditions upon which the Indian Princes are prepared to join the Indian Federation. It was suggested that the Council of State or the Upper Chamber, as it is described in the Round Table Conference, should consist of 100 or 150 members, and the Indian Princes want a representation of a moiety, that is, fifty per cent. I understand that it has been agreed to that they should get 40 per cent. there. The second point is that the Indian Princes demand, and it has been agreed to, that the representation of the Indian Princes both in the Council of State and the Federal Assembly shall be the representation of the rulers and the States, in other words, the Governments of the States and not of the States themselves, including the Government and the people; and the third point that they have made very clear is that a federal contact between the two Indias shall be only upon subjects of common interest to be categorised and enumerated in the constitution. And lastly, which is very important, that their relation to the Crown and their treaties must remain in other respects inviolate. These are the conditions upon which the Indian Princes are prepared, at any rate some of them, to come into the Indian Federation. So far as the Federal Assembly is concerned, it is recommended that it should consist of about 250 or 300 members, and that the Indian Princes should have representation of $33 \frac{1}{3}$ per cent.; that is, one-third. On a population basis they are entitled only to 23·8 per cent. of representation in either House. Now, if that were all, that would be sufficiently disquieting, but the Indian Princes demand, and their demand has been conceded, that the executive, that is to say, the ministry shall be only removable by the two-third votes of the two Houses in a joint session, which means that the ministry cannot be removed unless the Princes' representatives in the two Houses agree to its being turned out.

Then it has been said that there will be representatives of the Indian Princes in the two Houses who should have a voice not only in matters affecting the two Indias, but also in matters of domestic concern, and what is most important is, and it has been expressly laid down, that where a vote of no-confidence is moved against a ministry even on a matter of purely British Indian interest even then the rule of two-thirds in which the Indian States will participate would apply. This is very briefly the constitution of the two Houses and the power of the executive; but that is not all. Apart from the Princes' block, of which Lord Reading made no secret, that it would act as a steadying influence upon the activities of the two Legislatures, we have a very large number of reservations and safeguards besides Defence and Foreign and Political Relations.

Only the other day we had to deal with the question of a Statutory Railway Board. That is the first reservation or safeguard, added to which we have reservations as regards finance, currency and exchange and commercial discrimination. So that, what is left after these reservations and safeguards Honourable Members can easily see, and even that residue would be subject to the control of the Indian Princes, where they will have large weightage, and the ministry would be irremovable except upon the joint vote of the two Houses in which the Princes' representatives will take part. But that is not all. At the present moment this House has got the sole right of voting supplies, but in the new constitution we are told that this should be a power given to both the Houses. I do not wish to give Honourable Members of this House other details far too numerous for discussion in a popular Chamber, but I rest content by saying that if the future development of the Indian constitution is to depend upon this conception of federation of the Indian India and British India, I despair of its success. Honourable Members will see that, so far as the Indian Princes are concerned, they have taken no part in being parties to the declaration of fundamental rights; they have taken no part at all in safeguarding good internal government within their own States; they have absolutely emphasised that, so far as their treaty rights are concerned, so far as their relations to the Crown are concerned, they must remain inviolate. Consequently, while at the present moment this Assembly is in conflict with the British Crown, I foresee in the near future under the new constitution that would be established on the lines I have indicated a struggle in British India not only with the Crown, but also with the representatives of the Indian States. Thus, while British India has now a hard struggle, having to fight with the British Indian Government alone how much more difficult it will be for her if she is confronted with the Crown and her allies, the Indian Princes.

[Sir Hari Singh Gour.]

Such, then, Sir, is the prospect that we see before us in the fruition of a new constitution. I was reading the other day, and I have no doubt that Honourable Members must have done the same, that while some Princes are prepared to come into this constitution upon their own terms, other Princes are not at all willing to fall into line with the rest. The result is that the question of federation is receding more and more into the background, and people in British India are feeling apprehensive that if the question of federation is a condition precedent to the evolution of reforms, the question of the development of a self-governing constitution for British India might be unduly delayed. Therefore, what we desire to impress upon the Government is, that whatever may be the question as regards the federation of the two Indias, the British Cabinet should immediately take in hand the question of the future constitution of British India, and that is the line along which Honourable Members will find the States of Central and Western Indias have combined and formulated a scheme. They say, let Government come into closer contact with Indian India through the medium of a Council of united India in which matters of common interest will be debated and discussed. Well, Sir, whatever may be the point of contact between the two Indias, what we on this side desire is that the future constitution of India should no longer be delayed.

The second point to which I wish to draw the attention of Honourable Members is that it was stated by the Prime Minister in his speech on the 19th January, at the close of the first conference, that he would not wait for the coming into force of the new constitution but that he would see if he could not introduce changes immediately in the administration of India in consultation with persons possessing administrative experience. That pronouncement was made more than a year ago, but I am sorry to find that no such advance has yet been made, which makes me fear that even a temporary advance being so long delayed, the future constitution of this country might perhaps be relegated to the Greek kalends. I, therefore, submit that, whatever may be the advantages of an all-India Federation, we on this side of the House should impress on the Government the desirability of losing no time in setting on foot such constitutional changes as were forecasted by the present Prime Minister in the speech to which I have referred. I further submit that no time should be lost in launching a new constitution for British India and providing therein a machinery for bringing into contact the two Indias, if and when possible. That, in short, is the demand that I wish to make, and I hope that the House will support me. (Applause.)

Dr. F. X. DeSouza (Nominated Non-Official): Sir, in rising to address the House on the constitutional question raised by the Leader of the Nationalist Party, I wish to confine my remarks as far as possible to the history of the Round Table Conference from its inception up to the present time and the possibilities of a solution of the present crisis. When the future historian of the constitutional development of this country writes about the progress of free institutions in this land, I venture to submit that he will have to record that the history of the Round Table Conference has been a tragedy of errors. It took its origin in the blunder of a great English statesman, who did not realise that a self-respecting India would refuse to accept a constitution unless some representative Indians were associated in the Statutory Commission and which was to frame that constitution. The all white Simon Commission which he sent out, marched through the country amid scenes of disorder and civil disobedience, amid scenes of non-co-operation, till then unexampled in the history of India. It is true that the caravan passed and the dogs barked, but when the caravan reached home, it had no other merchandise to offer to its master at the India Office than a still born document in the shape of the Simon Report. The dogs that barked took to themselves the credit that it was their loud barking that made this document still born. I have called this document still born, because the Government of the day who sent out the Commission consigned it to oblivion. Even the very authors of that document refused to mention it in public. It was not even given a decent burial; it was consigned to the dust bin.

When attempts were made by the Labour Government to rectify the error which its predecessor had committed in selecting the representatives of the Simon Commission, misfortune seems to have dogged their steps in making the selection; for who were the men who were sent out to represent India at the Round Table Conference? Men of eminence no doubt in their respective walks of life, but men who, unfortunately, turned out to be die-hards in communal matters, men who believed in the policy of fortiter in re without cultivating the art of suaviter in modo (Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: "Does it include Mr. Gandhi also?") (An Honourable Member: "He was talking of the first stage.")

Sir, what are the results of the two sittings of the Indian Round Table Conference? The whole world was watching its progress, but it revealed scenes of discord and disunion which were probably unexampled in the history of conferences which had assembled for the purpose of framing a constitution for a great country. After a labour of two sittings, it succeeded in giving birth to two monsters. The first monster was the Minority Pact. (Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: "Question.") What is this Minority Pact? A combination of the most heterogenous elements that it is possible to put together (Hear, hear), a combination of Europeans, Anglo-Indians, Indian Christians, Mussalmans, and Depressed Classes. Is there a common bond of unions between these people who formed this Minority Pact? Is there any common working plan possible between such heterogenous elements? (An Honourable Member: "Minority is the bond") The only common bond, so far as I can see, between the framers of this Minority Pact is the fear of the Hindus. (Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: "Not a bit.") Can a pact established on hatred, on fear of the majority community, ever work in peace? Was it constituted for the purpose of working a peaceful constitution, or was it established for the purpose of creating and perpetuating disunion in the country for ever and ever? Sir, I read the other day of a happy family consisting of a tiger, a monkey, a dog, and a cat. (An Honourable Member: "Who is who?") At one time persons who kept animals were rather proud of the different types they could bring together in a cage. The happy family drew people to zoological gardens or to the circus, but a happy family of the kind I have described, which constituted the Minority Pact, outside a circus or a zoological garden, seems to me to be entirely impracticable. We have heard of the lamb and the lion lying down together. They lie together only in story books, and in real life I think the place of the lamb is inside the lion. (Laughter.) That, unfortunately, happens to be the position in which the community to which I belong finds itself in this Minority

[Dr. F. X. DeSouza.]

Pact. (An Honourable Member: "What is that community?") I will tell you,—I belong to the Indian Christian community, a community which numbers nearly six million people according to the last census,—the third largest in India. (An Honourable Member: "Fourth largest.") If you look at the table of representation provided for this Indian Christian community

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division: Muhammadan Rural): You admit that the depressed classes have gone away from your cage and family.

Dr. F. X. DeSouza: You will find that the Indian Christian community is to be represented as follows. While there are 4 representatives in the Upper Chamber for Europeans numbering about 120,000, one representative for Anglo-Indians numbering about 160,000 I think, and 6 representatives for the Sikhs numbering about 2½ millions, there is only one representative for the Indian Christian community numbering six millions.

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Nominated Non-Official): What was your Pannirselvam doing?

Dr. F. X. DeSouza: If the lamb wishes to live with the lion, its only place is inside the lion, and Mr. Pannirselvam found himself inside the lion. (An Honourable Member: "What about Buddhists and Parsis?") Take the Lower Chamber. The Europeans numbering 120,000 have 12 representatives in that Chamber, Anglo-Indians get 3 and Sikhs 10 and the Indian Christians have 7 representatives with a population of 6 millions. (An Honourable Member: "How many have you got now?") Christians in this Assembly have only one nominated representative, owing to the difficulty in forming a constituency for a community which is scattered all over India.

Now, I proceed to the provinces and Bombay is the province with which I am best acquainted. In the City of Bombay and the City of Karachi, which forms part of the Bombay Presidency, there is a large influential and educated Indian Christian community. Honourable Members familiar with Bombay cannot deny that. What is the representation provided by this minority pact for the Indian Christian community in the Bombay Legislature? The total population, according to the latest census of Indian Christians in the Bombay Presidency, is more than 300,000. The proportion of literacy, taking not only primary, but also secondary and higher education, is more than 60 per cent., and the number of representatives provided is just 2 out of a total number of 200. Is it possible to speak with moderation of a pact which allows such iniquities to be perpetrated in its name?

I said that the second Round Table Conference gave birth to two monsters. One was the Minority Pact and the second was the federation between British India and Indian India, on which my Honourable friend the Leader of the Nationalist Party descanted with such eloquence. Is it possible to form a working federation between extreme autocracy and extreme democracy? As was pointed out by Lord Reading himself in the course of his speeches at the Round Table Conference, previous history has shown that when extremes of this kind federate together, unless there is great tact and discretion, the result probably in the long run will be a civil war between the two federating elements, or if there is no civil war, a complete subjection of the one by the other, and Heaven help British India when it is confronted with the possibility of a conflict with Indian India. Sir, this is the result of the second Round Table Conference.

Now, various committees such as the Franchise Committee, the Federal Finance Committee and the States Committee are scouring the length and breadth of the country as a preparation for the third sitting of the Round Table Conference and the dogs continue barking, while the caravan shows signs of shedding some of its important elements. My Honourable friend the Leader of the Opposition said that the Princes of Western India are gradually realising what the implications of the proposed Federation may be and are showing signs of restiveness. Again a large proportion of the Moslems of India have said that as it is impossible to settle the communal question, they would leave it to the British Government to settle it and will accept its verdict.

Sir Abdullah Suhrawardy (Burdwan and Presidency Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): The Moslems never said that they would accept the verdict of the British Government.

Dr. F. X. DeSouza: Anyhow they submitted the matter to the arbitration of the British Government. Until that is done, they refuse to co-operate with the working of the Round Table constitution. Now what is the other side of the picture? We find that the Congress has declared open war with the Government established by law and the Government established by law has no other alternative but to bring all its powers to bear on crushing this movement. Sir, the Government is at war with the country, that is the condition of things we see today. Disorder prevails everywhere. Those who do not sympathise with the Congress are in a state of deep and sullen discontent on account of the delay in promulgating the reforms. We live under Ordinance Raj and lathi Raj. I entreat the British Government with all the force at my command not to wait till the Round Table Conference prepares its report to inaugurate the new constitution. Their report will not represent the voice of United India: because the leaders of the intelligentsia are never behind prison bars. It will necessarily take a long time before the conflicting interests are reconciled by agreement. In the circumstances I think the country will accept a constitution framed by the British Government. The country has great confidence in the Premier. The British Government has already decided how far it will go. With all the emphasis at my command, I ask the British Government to give us that constitution soon and put an end to this repression, the sullen discontent and disorder and then only will there be peace in the country.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney (Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I had no desire to intervene in this debate, but the remarks made just now* by my Honourable friend Dr. DeSouza have compelled me to speak. Sir, I listened to the very eloquent discourse of the Leader of the Opposition on this motion. I noticed not with much difficulty evidence of a personal element, showing a strong conflict between appointment and disappointment. I have no doubt that the Honourable Member is very very disappointed; he was not a member of the Round Table Conference, and I found no difficulty in discerning in his speech a note of personal disappointment that he was not on this Committee.

Sir Hari Singh Gour: On a point of order. Is the Honourable Member in order in ascribing to any speaker a personal motive, namely, that his views are tainted by the fact that he was not appointed to the Round Table Conference. It is a personal reflection.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Chair holds the view that it is unparliamentary to attribute personal motives to Honourable Members.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: The intention of my observation was not a personal motive, but it may have been a personal gain. Apart from his eloquence Sir Hari Singh Gour: I rise to a point of order, Sir. My friend has now aggravated the position; instead of calling it a personal "motive", he said it was a personal "gain".

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Sir, I really used the word "gain", i.e., "political gain"—I did not mean "personal gain" or "personal aggrandisement", but political gain, i.e., connected with his leadership of the Nationalistic Party. I never meant anything personal.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member will have to choose his words properly.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Thank you, Sir.

Mr. President: Honourable Members are here not for any personal gain.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: I am sorry I have been misunderstood, I shall be more careful, Sir. Apart from the remarks made by the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition in which he seemed to me to ridicule—to use a very mild word—the whole of the activities of the Round Table Conference and the assistance rendered to it by the Government of India and the Simon Commission, he seemed to think that he alone has the perquisite of intelligence and to him alone has been given the ability of constitution-making. I think some other Members on the Opposite Benches are also suffering very badly from that obsession, but I see that their numbers are today added to by my friend, Dr. DeSouza. Dr. DeSouza I am sure initiated this discussion, for one main reason with which I am in entire accord and sympathy. This reason being, he considers the representation of Indian Christians agreed upon in the Minority Pact to be inadequate. I certainly have every sympathy with him, and I wholeheartedly support him in his complaint. But does Dr. DeSouza realise that in presenting this point of view he is condemning not only this Minority Pact but his own representative Mr. Pamir Selvam? Sir, that Minority Pact, in my opinion, was the principal constructive work of a practical nature that the Round Table Conference did. (Hear, hear.) Sir, the Simon Commission's Report is supposed to have been shelved. Honourable Members however will not be surprised to hear that the Simon Report is very much alive and still holds the field, and that it is the most exhaustive, the only authentic and the only reliable document in the field, despite the satirical remarks made against it by the Leader of the Opposition,—and may I say, Sir, it is the only document that is today being seriously considered by all schools of political thought even including Sir Hari Singh Gour. (Hear, hear.) Sir, the Honourable Member was a member of the Indian Central Committee but he is remarkably silent on that Report. Why? I would like to know what his opinions were on the anticipated and suggested conference while he was on that Committee and in the confidence of the Simon Commission. Has he forgotten that? Did he not as a member of the I. C. Committee co-operate with the Simon Commission, and was not the Round Table Conference the outcome of its Report? Did he in his Indian Central Committee Report object to the creation of a Round Table Conference? Let him answer that question to this House. Anyhow we have had two Round Table Conferences and each one has made its Report. The Minority Pact that was presented to the last Round Table Conference was a pact to which some minority communities were driven by the attitude of that much-respected leader of the Congress Party, Mahatma Gandhi. (Hear, hear.) Sir, it was Mahatma Gandhi who drove these minorities to this pact. Had it not been for his stubborn and, to my mind, illogical refusal to recognize the rights of certain minorities, we would never have made that pact, holy or unholy, acceptable or unacceptable as it may seem to my Honourable friend, Sir Hari Singh Gour, and other Members of this House. The puzzle to my mind was while Mahatma Gandhi was prepared to recognise the communal rights of Muslims and Sikhs and Hindus in those Provinces in which they are in the minority, he refused this to depressed classes, Indian Christians, Europeans, Anglo-Indians and others. Indeed it was this mental somersault that converted the last scene before the curtain fell on the stage of the final Plenary Session of the second Round Table Conference into a tragedy—or shall I call it a comedy—may be “final enactment” would be a better description. Sir, let me try and tell this House how I visualised that last scene. On the one side of a gulf dividing the two sets of players, I felt I could see the revered Mahatma Gandhi, clothed in the garb of—let me say—Emperor Chandra Gupta, and close by his side were his Lieutenants Pandit Malaviya and Dr. Moonje, the latter clothed in the shredded raiments of Shivajee. Not far from his side was discernible the doughty Sikh champion, the worthy shadow of Ranjit Singh. On the other side of the gulf I could see the other set of players led by His Highness the Aga Khan, himself clothed in the garb of Aurangzeb and huddled around him were the minorities driven by Mr. Gandhi to his side for succour and help. Between these sets of actors as they played their game of political chess—my friend Sir Hari Singh Gour would prefer to call it “political bluff”. I saw the Prime Minister of England with his two Lieutenants, the Lord Chancellor and the Secretary of State for India occupying the position of Referee or Umpire. While the Mahatma held the Queen piece and the Aga Khan operated the King piece, we the minorities were represented on that board in the shape of pawns. But as the game progressed the holder of the Queen piece, Mahatma Gandhi, refused to play with the pawns and so these pawns declined to play or remain on the board and so decided to enter into a pact among themselves—in other words to play their own game without the Mahatma. But the most unfortunate part of this game was that Mahatma Gandhi who I said held the Queen piece and His Highness the Aga Khan who held the King piece, instead of mating with each other, expended their tactics and energies to checkmate each other, and the final result was that the Minority Pact with His

[Sir Henry Gidney.]

Highness the Aga Khan was formed, and in that pact was included the representative of Dr. DeSouza's community Mr. Pamir Selvam. Unfortunately for us there was a schism in the Indian Christian community, one member representing the Roman Catholics joined the Pact while the other representing the Protestants did not do so and that was the reason why there was a division in their ranks. Dr. DeSouza in his criticisms certainly does not pay any compliment to his representative on the Round Table Conference, on the contrary he tries to discredit his efforts. It was Dr. DeSouza's duty holding the views he does to have held meetings in the country and to have cabled his demands to his representative in England on the Round Table Conference. Had he done so, I am sure Mr. Pamir Selvam and the Minority Pact would have been influenced and guided (Hear, hear), but to complain now is hardly playing the game. Sir, I tell this House that this Minority Pact is no numbug. This Pact is going to stand, and I confidently hope that my Moslem brothers will support me in my statement. (Voices: "Yes.") Sir, I take this occasion to thank the Muslim Group at the Round Table Conference some of whom are in this Honourable House today, for their steadfast loyalty to the other minorities. They refused to be tempted by the clever baits that were offered them by Mahatma Gandhi and others in London to desert us and they stood by their word of honour, and they stood by the pact. All honour and credit to them, but let us not relax the intentions of this Pact, let us strengthen and cement it. After all, what has that Pact done? That Pact has shown to the British Nation as also to India that there is a body of people totalling one hundred and sixty millions, more than one-third of India's total population, including Indian Christians, which my friend, Dr. DeSouza, said is the third largest community in India, but which I think is the fourth largest,—thus: Hindus, Muslims, Depressed Classes and Indian Christians

Dr. F. X. DeSouza: The Depressed Classes are included among the Hindus?

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: The Depressed Classes are a separate community and have demanded separation from Hindus so they are the third largest community. I repeat that the Minority Pact represented one hundred and sixty millions of people, who demand that their voice be heard by the rest of India and who will see that their voice is listened to, despite being called a monster by Dr. DeSouza. This House will yet know the power of that monster. That child was neither a monster nor anything that Dr. DeSouza might describe it, and I want him to appreciate that the Indian Christians go to form part of that monster. Sir, I was very sorry to hear Dr. DeSouza call into question the representative character of the delegates who constituted the Round Table Conference. Sir, on the floor of this House I flatly contradict that charge—I submit the Round Table Conference was fully representative of all communities and political parties in India. If Dr. DeSouza still thinks otherwise I call upon him or any Member of this Honourable House to answer me: Was Mahatma Gandhi the sole representative in the Round Table Conference of the Congress? Can anyone in this House deny that? If he does, let him say who else was considered by the Congress as its sole or additional representative? Indeed that Party would have no other voice but that of Mahatma Gandhi's to represent them at the Round Table Conference. That is question No. 1, answered against Dr. DeSouza's charge. Next, will anyone deny that the late revered Sir Muhammad Shafi and His Highness the Aga Khan and such stalwarts as Mr. Ghuznavi and Mr. Fazal Huq from Bengal and Dr. Shafaat Ahmad were representative of the Muslims? I hear no denial not even from Dr. DeSouza and so question No. 2 is answered. Again, will any one deny that Sir

1 P.M. Ali Imam was the elected representative of National Muslims? Will he deny that Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru was a most efficient representative of the Liberal Party?

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru is not a Liberal; he himself has stated that publicly.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: I am not anxious to know Mr. Joshi's opinion as to whether Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru is a Liberal or a Labourite, but this much I do know that the representative of labour in this House is not only not Liberal in his labours but he never fails to belabour the illiberality of his views on opinions expressed against him. I ask was not the Right Honourable Mr. Srinivasa Sastri the representative of the Madras Liberal school of thought? Was not Sir C. P. Aiyar also the representative of Madras Liberals? Was not Sir A. Patro the representative of his community? Was not Dr. Moonje the representative of the Hindu Mahasabha? Was not Sir Hubert Carr the representative of the European community in India and Sir Cowasji Jehangir one of the leading representatives of his community and the Liberal Party? And last but not least, was not Feudatory India truly represented by the Indian Princes who attended the Round Table Conference? Does Dr. DeSouza or this House need any further proof of the truly representative character of the Round Table Conference. I ask how can any one in this House say that the Round Table Conference was not truly representative of all the representative political thoughts and parties in India including Mahatma Gandhi. For any one to turn round now and say that that Conference was not representative of India is an insult to the representatives who were there and also to those associations and bodies who were consulted by His Excellency the Viceroy and in response to whose invitation they submitted certain names for his selection. The Round Table Conference was certainly a representative body. As to whether that body was successful in the achievement of a Federation or a Confederation in India, is quite a different matter. But this much I must say it is wholly wrong for any Honourable Member in this House more especially on the part of Dr. DeSouza to stand up today and say that the Round Table Conference was not a representative body.

Dr. F. X. DeSouza: I rise on a point of personal explanation, Sir. I did not say that, although I might have said that, they were not representatives of the people. What I did say was that the leaders who attended the Round Table Conference were men who, however eminent they may have been, were not elected by the nation.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: I am very glad to have his amplification but it makes Dr. DeSouza's position more awkward and untenable. The fact remains that he did say that the Round Table Conference was not representative of India, surely it was not because Dr. DeSouza did not represent his community there. Why should he at this time decry his own representative who joined us in the Minority Pact? Sir, Dr. DeSouza concluded his remarks by saying "Withdraw the round table". Sir, it was not a round table; it was an oval-shaped table and goodness knows what shape it will be when the Conference meets for the third time. May be, should Dr. DeSouza and Sir Hari Singh Gour be representatives at the next Conference, the table will be shapeless. (Laughter.) Does Dr. DeSouza want to put the Report of the Conference into the dustbin as the Mover said had been the fate of the Report of the Simon Commission? Remember there are many valuable things found in dustbins. He said that he did not want reforms. Then, what does he want? Does he want the Indian Central Committee's Report to be accepted?

Mr. President: Order, order. The Honourable Member is addressing the Honourable Member (Dr. DeSouza) directly; he ought to address the Chair.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: If he does want that report, then the only gift India will receive as a measure of reform will be a Supreme Court for India which has become the baby of the Leader of the Nationalist Party. Does he seriously mean this House to believe that Indians will accept a constitution framed by the Prime Minister and the British Government? Surely, nobody on the opposite side will join with him in this request. If that is to satisfy Indian aspirations, then there would be no need for this Assembly and no need for this cut motion of Sir Hari Singh Gour. Sir, there has been a lot of idle talk and there has been a lot of nonsense talked about the composition and achievements of the Round Table Conference and when one stops to enquire who the critics are, it is found that these complaints generally emanate from those who were not represented on it. Those who criticise this Round Table Conference must realise that the delegates went there with a full purpose and determination to serve India; if they have not been able to complete their task, it is not entirely their fault. It is the result of an accumulation of various matters, particularly the unsettled communal problem. No one deplors that unsettled condition more than I do, for I consider it to be the foundation stone on which the future constitution of India can be framed. Without that foundation stone well and truly laid, no structure, no new India, can be built. It is admitted that that was one of the chief reasons why the Round Table Conference could not come to any final conclusion. But, Sir, even if the Conference has not come to a final decision on all points, if the Princes are still unsettled on the question of a Federal India, if responsibility in the centre is still in the balance, if finance and defence are still reserved subjects and if Paramountcy of Power is still to be retained in the Crown in perpetuity and lastly even if minorities are still unsatisfied, none will deny that if we did not come to a settled plan we brought back to India, a plan for settlement which the present committees are trying to settle. And this House is certainly the proper place for this settlement to be discussed. I can assure the House that no gain will be achieved if we indulge in such criticisms at this late hour as to the representative character of the members of the Round Table Conference. Let us stop this bickering and together set to work to gain for India her goal on constitutional lines. The Minority Pact is out to achieve this end with your help or without it, but let us all work together to attain this end.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Twenty Minutes Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Twenty Minutes Past Two of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: The Honourable the Leader of the Nationalist Party made a fairly long speech. But I must confess that I do not know still what is his main point. His speech did not raise any definite issue. He did not tell us what his constructive proposals were for the future constitution of India. He began by giving us a bit of history, commencing from 1917. He told us that the Imperial Conferences had already recognised the claim of India as an independent Dominion. Then he told us that Mr. Churchill states that India is a Dominion for ceremonial purposes. He also quoted from Mr. Wedgewood Benn, saying that India is a Dominion in action. But my own view is that India is not a Dominion only for ceremonial purposes, nor a Dominion to-day really in action. India to-day is growing into a Dominion. The Round Table Conference was intended to mark the stage which India should reach immediately towards that goal. The Leader of the Nationalist Party made a complaint that the Round Table Conference had forgotten the previous history of the case and that the Conference should have insisted upon India being made really and truly a Dominion immediately. The Honourable Member was a Member of what is called the Central Committee. As a member of that Committee I thought he would have put forward proposals which would convert India immediately into a Dominion. But I found he did nothing of the sort. I was therefore much disappointed with his speech. It is quite true that the Round Table Conference did not contain a good representation of the Legislative Assembly. I myself feel that that was a very great defect of the personnel of the Round Table Conference. At the same time it is not true that the Conference was not really a representative body. We would have all preferred a larger representation of the Legislature. Although that is a defect, yet that defect is not so serious that we should allow people to challenge the representative character of that Conference. The Round Table Conference had proposed a Federation for India. I am one of those who feel that the proposed Federation is not a perfect one. It may not even deserve the name of a Federation. The proposed Federation does not even provide for a common citizenship for the whole of India. Indian States are insisting that their citizens should be only citizens of the respective States and they should not acquire by the States joining the Federation a common citizenship; even after the Federation, Indians from British India will not have a right to move into an Indian State as citizens of the Federation. They will have no right to acquire property in an Indian State by right of common citizenship. There will be no common criminal law nor common civil law for the Federation. It is quite clear therefore that a Federation of this kind is not a perfect one. The Honourable the Leader of the Nationalist Party stated that, although some Indian States were ready to join the Federation, many of the States were now trying to back out, or at least many of them were hesitating to join the Federation. I do not know why the Indian States should at all hesitate to come into the Federation. What do they stand to lose thereby? If you study the proposals which are adumbrated for this Federation, you will find that the Indian States do not propose to give up the slightest power which they at present possess. There is not a single proposal which is placed before the Round Table Conference or accepted by the Conference which will deprive the Indian States of any functions which they are at present performing. Secondly, the Indian States do not propose to sacrifice even a bit of the revenue which they are at present collecting. They do not sacrifice any power or function, but on the other hand the proposals for Federation are such that the Indian States are going to get representation in the Federal Legislature and also in the Federal Executive. The Indian States are also asking for the retrocession of their territories, the retrocession of certain revenues and also jurisdiction. Under these circumstances, I do not know why the Indian States should be at all hesitating; on the contrary they should be very glad that they are going to get power over British India, and if you go into details you will find that, although railways are going to be made Federal, it is the British Indian Railways which are to be Federal, and if the Indian States possess any railways, they are to be State railways. It is the British Indian Post Offices which are to be Federal; if there are any Post Offices maintained by the Indian States, they are to be controlled by the Indian States themselves. It is the British Indian currency which is going to be Federal. If any Indian State has its own currency, that currency is going to be controlled by that State. It is the British Indian revenue on Customs which is going to be federalised, if any Indian State possesses Customs revenue, that State, I am told, is to be compensated for the loss of that revenue. Under these circumstances, I do not know why the Indian States should at all hesitate. It is true that we hear in newspapers that certain States, especially those States which have got ports, are making a noise, that they do not propose to join the Federation. The reason is obvious; they get revenue from Customs, and they want to negotiate with British India for compensation for that revenue. If they at once say that they would join the Federation, their hands will be weakened. They are in a very strong position and they are placed in that strong position by the Britishers and by the Government of India or at least by the British Government. It is the British Government and the representatives of the British Parliament that stated that there will be no central responsibility in British India or in India unless the Indian States join in the Federation. That has given the Indian States the strongest position. They feel that there cannot be any constitutional reforms in British India unless the States agree to join. Under these circumstances it is quite natural that the States should dictate their terms to us. They have dictated their terms, and we under pressure and perhaps under difficulty have accepted, or at least some of us have accepted, because there is absolutely no other way.

Mr. President, the Honourable the Leader of the Nationalist Party also went into certain other details, such as the representation of Indian States in the Federal Legislature. I quite agree with him that the Indian States are asking for representation in the Federal Legislature much more than they deserve, and there were voices raised in the Federal Structure Committee against the grant of that representation, and that question has not yet been finally settled. Then he also mentioned several other details of the constitution, such as, that no ministry should be dismissed unless a vote of a two-thirds majority is carried against it. I myself do not agree with such a proposal. If a ministry cannot have a majority in the House, it cannot remain in power if it has got self-respect, and to attempt to keep a ministry in power unless there is a two-thirds majority against it really means that you are going to get a ministry which has absolutely no self-respect, because that ministry will not be able to carry its legislation in the House. That Ministry will not be able to get the supplies which it wants. Then, Sir, he also mentioned one or two other details into which I do not wish to go.

My Honourable friend Dr. DeSouza raised the question of the minorities pact. I do not wish to go into the details of that pact. I quite agree with him that the Indian Christians have been let down in that pact, but that is not the object with which I am referring to it. I refer to the minorities pact for this reason, that that pact makes no sound proposal for the representation of the working classes. They make one proposal in that pact about the representation of various interests which perhaps in their view includes the labour interests. Their proposal is that each community, Mussalmans, Europeans, depressed classes and Anglo-Indians, should provide for their own workers as they like. Mr. President, this is not a statement which is likely to please either the Hindu or the Mussalman or the Anglo-Indian or the depressed class workers. In the first place if you accept the proposition that each community must provide for the representation of its workers, then I myself feel and many workers including Hindus and Mussalmans feel, that their ranks are bound to be divided. Whatever the middle classes and the richer classes may desire, the working classes in India—and I speak in the name of the working classes, both Mussalmans and Hindus—do not want their ranks to be divided. We are at present working very harmoniously in our trade union movement. We have no differences as regards religion, because we do not recognise any religion in our economic questions. Mr. President, we feel that if we try to secure representation by various communities, our ranks will be divided. I feel that the representation of the working classes in the Legislature is a very valuable right for the working classes. But if you ask me to make a choice between having representation in the Legislatures and having the ranks of the working classes divided, I shall have no hesitation in stating that I shall rather sacrifice representation in the Legislatures rather than have the working class movement divided into Hindus and Mussalmans. Mr. President, that is the defect of the minorities pact. I quite agree that so far the work of the Round Table Conference has not yet been completed and there are still several defects. But we all stand for the work of that Round Table Conference for one reason, and that reason is this. The time has gone by when the present constitution can work satisfactorily. The present Government of India can only carry on its work by means of Ordinances, and I am sure the Government of India themselves will agree that a constitution in which the Government have to carry on their ordinary work by Ordinances is not a constitution that is fit to last even for a day. We therefore feel that a Federation, which may be even imperfect, is acceptable to the present constitution and to the present Government of India. We want a change in the constitution. We shall be quite glad if we get a constitution which is very satisfactory to us, but even if we cannot get a constitution which is very satisfactory to us, we want a constitution which will make a change in our present Government of India. We know this Government of India cannot last even for a day. It can only function by Ordinances, and therefore although the Federation is an imperfect Federation, we will have to accept that Federation.

Mr. President, there is only one word more which I want to say. I have stated very clearly that the present Government of India can only function by Ordinances and it is a wrong thing. It is perhaps an unpleasant thing for them that they should continue in existence hereafter. Therefore the best thing which the present Government of India and the British Government can do is to bring the new constitution into existence without any delay. Let there be no delay in the work of the committees; let there be no delay caused by any other matter, such as the decision on the communal question. Let these things be done immediately and let the new constitution be heralded in without the least delay. Mr. President, I have done.

Sir Abdur Rahim (Calcutta and Suburbs: Muhammadan Urban): Mr. President, I am in agreement with a great deal of what was said by the last speaker, who is himself a member of the Round Table Conference. He recognises that the Legislature in this country should be allowed an opportunity to express its views on the momentous constitutional questions pending decision. But if I could understand the drift of Sir Henry Gidney's speech, he seemed to resent any expression of views on the work of the Round Table Conference at all. Sir, I am rather surprised that a well-known Member of this Assembly should question the right of the Assembly to express its views and to criticise the proceedings of the Round Table Conference. The whole future of the Government in India is in the melting pot, including the fate of this Legislature and other Legislatures throughout the country. That being so, it is inconceivable to me why a proper opportunity should not have been allowed to us to express our views on the issues now pending for legislation. Sir, after every sitting of the Round Table Conference, an opportunity was afforded to the British Parliament to debate on the proceedings of that Conference. The proceedings of the two Conferences affect us far more intimately than they do Great Britain, and yet the Legislatures of this country have not been afforded a proper opportunity to discuss these questions. One should have expected that the Government would take the earliest opportunity after each sitting of the Conference to place the proceedings before this House and invite discussion on the views expressed in those Conferences. That not having been done, the only course left for us was to avail ourselves of such opportunity as discussion of the Budget affords. It is not the same thing. In these discussions it is possible that we shall not hear the views of the Government of India. They might take up an attitude saying, "The whole matter has passed from our hands; it is in the hands of the British Government and the British Parliament and we have no concern with it." I do not know whether any members of the Government of India will take part in this discussion. Probably not. If not, we shall not know what their views are on the issues which are agitating the country.

I am not one of those who seek to criticise the personnel of the Round Table Conference, but I say it was unjust on the part of Sir Henry Gidney to suggest motives to the Honourable the Leader of the Nationalist Party. I hold it was wrong on his part, because he must remember that on the break-up of the first Conference, we welcomed the delegates here in this House, and we did our best to help them in their further deliberations. The Conference, however, has reached a stage when it is necessary for us, and we find it extremely desirable in the interests of the country, that we should make a review of the proceedings of these Conferences and express our opinion on the subject.

Many of us at the end of the First Round Table Conference, when there was a debate in this House, had doubts, grave doubts as to some of the proposals, the tentative proposals that were made then. But we suppressed those doubts and encouraged the members of the Round Table Conference to the best of our powers to go on with the deliberations and evolve a satisfactory constitution for the country. Since then, however, I am constrained to say no further progress has been made by the Conference. This is not my opinion alone; it is the opinion of everybody that I have talked to; it is the opinion of the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State themselves. In the Second Round Table Conference all that has been done on the important issues before it was to repeat the declaration that was made on the previous occasion by the Prime Minister. No definite conclusions have been reached on any of the important issues. When I heard Sir Henry Gidney—I was listening to him with great attention—I thought he would tell us what had been the decisions of the Conference on the important questions that have been raised, the more salient points that have been considered there. I remember well that the Prime Minister, when he spoke in Parliament on the results of the first Conference, said more than once that everything was provisional; even now everything remains provisional. That is the position. I think the Secretary of State, Sir Samuel Hoare, made it quite clear in his speech in Parliament that no definite conclusions had been reached. If something happens, something else will happen. That is to say, if an all-India Federation is brought about, if a practical scheme can be worked out in that direction, then there will be some responsibility in the centre; but not otherwise. The matter is left there. Then a number of Committees have come out to India and are touring the country—the Franchise Committee, the States Inquiry Committee, the Consultative Committee, the Federal Finance Committee and so on. From what we have been able to gather from such reports of the proceedings of these Committees as have been published, there does not seem to have been any agreed decision arrived at on any of the important questions that were being considered by the Consultative Committee, which I believe is the most important Committee of all. On all important questions there has been no agreement and the matter has been left for the decision of His Majesty's Government. There seems to be some sort of general idea that the only possible solution of the constitutional position is to have an all-India federation, a federation of what is known as British India with what is called Indian India, that is, the India ruled by the Ruling Princes and Chiefs.

Now, I wish to remind the House of the fact, that the constitutional inquiry which began with the appointment of the Simon Commission was held under a section of the Government of India Act, section 84A, which applies only to British India, and the terms of reference as well as the directions contained in that section referred only to the need for a constitution for British India. That was the entire scope of the inquiry as contemplated in section 84A of the Government of India Act. I do not wish to read it; every Honourable Member is aware of and familiar with the provisions of that section. It is to find out how far the people of British India have advanced in education and in other ways to be able to carry on a responsible Government in the country. If that were found in the negative, that is against them, then there is an alternative also suggested, namely, to restrict responsible Government in India. It was on that basis, and with those terms of reference, that the Simon Commission came out and toured India for two years, and with the help of the Central Committee and other subsidiary and auxiliary committees, they made a report. Whether that Report has been thrown into the wastepaper basket or not, as suggested by one Honourable Member, or it is still a live thing, as Sir Henry Gidney says, I am not concerned with that. But that is the only Report now before the British Government as regards the inquiry that was held under section 84A of the Government of India Act. We know how this Round Table Conference was brought about. When the Simon Commission was appointed, most of the prominent politicians protested against its composition, because it excluded all Indians from that body. There was a boycott of the Commission, and the Congress of course refused to take any part in it. Then after the Report was made, it was considered desirable by the British Government—I take it on the advice of Lord Irwin and the Government of India—that there should be a Round Table Conference. It was at that stage, for some reason or other, that the Princes were also included in the Conference. The Conference was held in London. The deliberations were followed by us with intense interest, and I must admit I was one of those whose imagination was seized by the proposal of an All-India Federation at that stage. Sir, we thought, at least I thought, that what was meant was that the future Government of this country was to be handed over to the Princes and the people of British India and that there would be no further control of the British Parliament over the government of this country. That was why a very large number of us, if not all, were inclined to welcome the idea. It was in a tentative stage, but even then we welcomed the idea, because it was worthwhile exploring whether it was possible to have such a constitution.

The second Conference in which Mr. Gandhi represented the Congress was to come to grips with the definite issues involved in the idea of an All-India Federation. Sir, I am not concerned with what part Mr. Gandhi took, whether he was justified in taking up the attitude that he did, whether that led to the failure of the second Conference, or even whether the second Conference was generally a failure or not. I am not concerned with all that; but what I say is this, that no definite conclusions were arrived at on the important questions. That was the position at the second Conference, and we know how Mr. Gandhi was induced to take part in the second Conference, the Irwin-Gandhi pact and so on. When the second Conference was over, immediately afterwards Ordinances, the nature, character and the scope of which have been discussed in this House, were issued. Those Ordinances are still in operation, and I believe to-day we shall hear something of their operation in the city of Delhi itself. It is in these circumstances that the constitution is being made. What is the result? I do say, so far as this country is concerned, the whole political atmosphere has become unreal, and vital constitutional issues are being considered by the Committees now in India in a very unreal atmosphere. Even this House has ceased to take itself seriously in the matter, not because it is not as keenly interested as ever in the future of the country, but because every one of us feels that it is idle for us to make any suggestions or to discuss anything; everything will be decided over our heads, and whatever we may say will be utterly ignored, perhaps ignored with contempt.

Now, Sir, Mr. Joshi, who was a Member of the Conference, and is perfectly familiar with its proceedings, far more familiar than we outsiders can be, has pointed out the difficulties in the way of a Federation. He says the attitude of the Princes or those who represent the Indian India is, "You give us power over British India and we shall retain our power over our own territories and you shall not interfere with the administration of our territories". That is shortly the position which Mr. Joshi has so graphically described just now. I for one am not opposed to the Princes taking part in our future Government, if I am convinced that their participation in that Government will redound to the good of India and will help us to advance. The question is whether we can entertain any such hope or whether a constitution such as is contemplated by some Princes or by some representatives of the Indian States is workable at all.

Now, Sir, there are three parties in the constitution, that is, the people of British India themselves, into whose future inquiry is being held under the Government of India Act, the Indian States, and last but not the least, the British Government and the British people. Let us take the position as it exists, the actual facts and the realities of the position with reference to what is called British India and the Indian States. We and our ancestors have been living for 150 years and more under British rule. That means we have been governed by a people used to Parliamentary institutions imbued with democratic instincts, and since the inauguration of British rule in India, they have been taking pains to spread Western education and, to some extent, Western institutions. Every one of us from our childhood has been used to these institutions which have been grafted on British India from the West, and we have been accustomed to what is called the rule of law. There can be no doubt, whatever our

3 P.M. differences may be with the representatives of the British people here, we must admit that we have become so accustomed to British institutions, to European institutions, which are mainly of a democratic character, that it would be impossible to expect us now to change our mentality and to go back. What about the Indian States? Their government is government by personal rule. The people have no voice in that government. It is the ruler who is the source of all law, the head of the administration; he can do anything he likes. Under such a system of government of close personal rule,—I am not decrying the character of that rule at all—no politics can grow, and I do say without fear of any challenge that in no Indian State is there any such thing as politics,—even any newspapers. I know some of the bigger States, but whether the people there are contented or not, they have no political life whatever. Thus, there are two diametrically opposed systems, institutions, mentalities, and I ask with all earnestness, is it possible to work them together under one Government as it is proposed? I do not know what will happen, but I am certain of this, that in the immediate future the utmost confusion will prevail. You cannot bring together such diverse and opposed elements, and retaining their character intact, amalgamate them into one Government. If it were proposed on one side or the other. "We are going to change the nature of our Government, the nature of the institutions in which we have been brought up and to which we are accustomed and bring it into line with the other side", then I could understand that there was a chance of approach, a chance of amalgamation. But no. I do not think any of the representatives of British India has been asked. "Are you willing to introduce an element of autocracy in the Government to which your affairs will in future be subjected?" But the Princes have made their position quite clear,—that they will retain intact, unaffected in any way, their internal sovereignty, which means personal rule. If they are going to introduce any changes in their own territories, that they say is no concern of ours, that is, of the people of British India. They will do what they like. Therefore there is no real intention on the part of either party to approach the other and to devise something midway between autocratic rule and democratic Government. We want to travel along the path of democracy, as we have been doing for so long. I do not want to give up an iota of my liberty; on the other hand, we want further development of liberty of person and property, rights of association and meeting, and development of political life in the country. Have the Princes shown any inclination to allow political life to grow in their own territories? So far as I have read the proceedings, they have not. Then, what do they claim? They claim one-third of the representation in the Lower House, half or at least 40 per cent. in the Upper Chamber, and they further claim representation in the executive. They want, as has been pointed out by Mr. Joshi himself, that at least two-thirds majority must support a vote of no confidence before any ministry goes out. I ask—there are many Members here who are familiar with the working of the constitution which we have now in the provinces under diarchy,—whether it is possible under those circumstances to change any ministry. The ministry will be an irremovable one just like the Government of the present day.

Now, Sir, let us examine their case a little more closely. One-third, the Princes want in the Lower Chamber. The Muhammadans of British India as well as the Indian States—I do not know whether the Muhammadans of Indian States had any voice except through their rulers in the deliberations of the Round Table Conference, but the Muhammadans, as we all know, want one-third of the seats. What is left? Two-thirds are gone. One-third is left. It is something ridiculous. It cannot be accepted by anybody. And you cannot work it. I challenge any one to work out a definite constitution on that basis. As regards the executive, they must be assured of representation in the executive, by Act or convention, I do not know which. There will be two divisions of subjects, federal as well as central,—central concerning British Indian provinces, because so far as the Indian States are concerned they will be the concern of the rulers themselves, we shall have nothing to do with them. Now, supposing that the members of the future Legislature wanted to move a vote of no confidence in the ministry on a central subject, the Princes or their representatives will have a vote. May I know why? How can they have any vote? And mind you, they must have a vote; otherwise, joint responsibility that is bargained for disappears. But we, in British India, will have no voice at all in the administration of the Indian States. Supposing the members of the future Legislature wanted to agitate on any important question of policy regarding customs, railways, courts, all-India finance, and they wanted to influence the votes of the representatives of the Princes. Will they be allowed to go into their territory and agitate there? I am sure they will not. No Prince will allow that. Now, is that the sort of arrangement which you expect the people will accept? No doubt you are hearing no voice now. All voices have been stifled. The Congress, who have been the most vocal people in the country, their voice has been removed. The Legislature is left with matters which are of very little importance and their voice is of little account. But the thousands of Congress people will not be in jail for ever, and the temper even of moderates like ourselves may not be always the same as it is. Anyway when the constitution is framed, it has to be worked, and then is it going to be worked in the atmosphere of Ordinances? Surely the Ordinances will have to be removed. There will be freedom of expression then. I do not know who started this idea of an all-India Federation. I have tried to ascertain this from many friends, but no one has been able to give me that information. It was sprung upon the country all at once when the first Round Table Conference met and speeches were delivered there. I do not say that it is not an alluring idea. Some day or other, it may materialise, but at present when the Conference is faced with these difficulties, I do not see that any answer has been given, and I do not know whether there could be any agreement on these outstanding questions.

Then, I come to the third factor in the constitution that is the British people as represented by the European community here. Naturally they are anxious from their point of view to have as many safeguards as possible. It is proposed that the Governor General, not the Governor General in Council, is to have special powers, not merely emergency powers, but special powers in addition. What these special powers will be have not been defined. We know to some extent what the emergency powers are. Those powers are to be retained. That is the proposal. Then there must be financial safeguards, and the Viceroy is to have power for borrowing to save the credit of the country by balancing the Budget and so on. The question of balancing the Budget has been before us, and we know how Budgets are now balanced. The Viceroy is to retain special powers to balance the Budget. We cannot be trusted with these tasks. We are not a responsible people. We have no stake in the country, but the Princes undoubtedly have. Why cannot they be trusted? They cannot be trusted either. Then there are to be reserved subjects. These will be defence and foreign relations. So you have three distinct classes of subjects, Federal and Central subjects, reserved subjects and special powers of the Governor General. We all know how difficult it has been for us to work diarchy. What is going to be the name of this new constitution—triarchy? (An Honourable Member: "Anarchy.") Whether it is triarchy or anarchy, whatever the name, this is the constitution which is propounded and foreshadowed. Who can work that? I should like to know how many Honourable Members are here who can boldly say that they are equal to the task. Then, Sir, what about the relation of the Princes to the Crown or what is called the question of paramountcy. From the very first day of the Round Table Conference, the Princes have been very loudly protesting against the paramountcy of the Crown being interfered with. What is the meaning of that? The paramountcy of the Crown, as I understand it, is exercised through the Political Department. I should have liked some of the Princes to tell me whether they are so fond of the Political Department that they do not want to part with it. On the other hand I have heard in private conversations that that is the very first thing they desire to get rid of. That is not in the proceedings of the Conference. If that sort of paramountcy is not to be retained, then the British Government must be prepared to remove all their Residents and Political Agents. Are they going to do that, and do Government really think it is in the interests of the people of those States that Residents and Political Agents should be removed altogether or their powers should be taken away though vested in the Viceroy? If it is vested in the Viceroy, it must necessarily be exercised by the Secretariat of the Department concerned through agents. Now, has that question been fully and properly considered at the Conference, and has any conclusion been reached? Supposing the Princes remain under the paramountcy of the Crown under the same conditions as now, and they nominated one-third of their representatives in the Lower House and 40 per cent. in the Upper House. Will not those nominees be at the beck and call first of all of the Princes, or rather of their ministers, and then of the Political Department? Who will ultimately prevail, we all know. The Princes may profess not to know. What is the difference between that and the present system of diarchy? As a matter of fact we are better off now. We have many quarrels with Honourable Members opposite, but at any rate we deal with men whom we know, with whom we have been dealing, who have been working in British India and whom we can tell face to face what we think of them. Under such a system as is envisaged, where will be the possibility of all that? I venture to assert that a system like that will be much worse, Sir, than the present. (Hear, hear.) Mr. Joshi thinks it will be good for the Princes. I am afraid I cannot agree with him. It will not be good for the Princes either. The Princes will be plunged into a struggle of which it is very difficult to see the end. The result really will be, as I have been saying, that there will be confusion all over the country. No constitution like that can be worked smoothly, and the enactors of the Government of India Act of 1919—the British Parliament—were wise enough to confine their attention to British India alone, because British India alone has been progressing along certain lines, and what we want is the natural development of the way in which we have been going. Mr. Joshi asked, what is the constructive proposal? To my mind, Sir, the constructive proposal is perfectly clear. Legislate first for British India. I am aware there are a number of common subjects—subjects in which the Princes are interested and will continue to be interested. They are being dealt with now, I take it, by the Government of India mainly in the Political Department. Some disputes arise but I have heard of arbitrations which led to satisfactory settlement of those disputes. Why must we change all that? Why plunge into darkness? Cannot we proceed along these lines? Have a constitution for British India; then have a Council if you like where representatives of the Chamber of Princes, and the Legislative Assembly of the future will meet and discuss and try to come to an understanding. If they cannot, the further course would be quite easy; you would leave the ultimate decision to the Supreme Court, or to the Viceroy if you like; I have no objection to that. Sir, that is the easy way and that is what was suggested, I imagine, by the Simon Commission; and I understand that there is a very large body of Princes, I think of Central India and Kathiawar and the Western States, who are searching for a solution along those lines. If you do that, there ought to be very little difficulty. At any rate what I do submit is that a search for a constitution on the lines which have been suggested at the Conference is not likely to lead to any fruitful results. We have already wasted a considerable time over these constitutional deliberations. The Simon Commission started I think some time in 1927. Lakhs and lakhs of the country's money have been spent. There were two Conferences. A number of Committees have come out. Sir, you know what the net result has been on the country. There has been unrest, agitation, intense agitation. Why? Because no decision has been arrived at. The sooner you can arrive at a decision, the better undoubtedly will it be for all the parties. (Hear, hear.) I submit one proposition. Let the constitution be as simple as possible. Do not introduce unnecessary complications into it. If you do that, then the constitution will work, and nobody's real interests will be injured.

This leads me to the question of responsibility at the centre. I think everyone is convinced that, without some responsibility at the centre, the constitution really cannot work. If you say, "Have fully autonomous provinces, but leave the centre, the Central Government, absolutely irresponsible—let the responsibility at the centre rest only in the hands of officials without any responsibility to the Indian Legislature", then I say it cannot work. We know the present state of things, and that will be the state of things in the future.

Now what are the difficulties from the British point of view? Let us see that. Defence, we are all agreed, should be a reserved subject until the Army is Indianised substantially, which must necessarily take time. Then foreign and political relations will be a reserved subject. We do not quarrel with that. Then what remains? Finance. Undoubtedly that is a very important subject; and unless finance is made responsible and unless the Legislature has the final say in all questions of finance affecting the country, then in that case the same difficulties as we are now experiencing will go on. Sir, as regards safeguards, I do not think any definite proposals have been made; if we knew what were the definite points on which safeguards are wanted, and if we found that on those points the interests of the country would not be injured by these safeguards, that those safeguards would not hamper the future development of the country, then in that case there would be no difficulty for us in accepting such safeguards; but if it be proposed that the financial safeguards must be such that on all important questions—for instance, currency and exchange—the Legislature will have no voice or no effective voice, that the economic development of the country must wait and must take the second place so that the commercial interests of Great Britain in India may have the upper hand, if it is the idea that there is a conflict between the commercial interests of Great Britain and the economic development of India, then in that case it would be very difficult for us to accept such safeguards. But I do not think for one moment that there is any real inconsistency between British commercial and trade interests and the economic development of India. If you frame and conceive your safeguards in that spirit, you will have our fullest support. Such a constitution as I have just suggested may still of course be objected to on the ground that there will be dyarchy. But that cannot be helped at this stage; but make the rules such that dyarchy can be worked as smoothly as possible. No doubt it will have ultimately to give way to one uniform system of government at the centre: you must be prepared for that. By that time experience during which this dyarchy has lasted will be available to you. Now I wish to put it to my Indian friends at the Round Table Conference and point out that the real reason why they accepted an all-India federation was that, without it, there would be no responsibility at the centre. I want them to take their courage in both hands and point out to the British people that there is no sense in this.

[Sir Abdur Rahim.]

Why put in these restrictions, limitations and conditions? Supposing, for instance, the subjects of Education, Health and Industries, which are now in the hands of Indians, are made responsible to the Legislature, is there any danger of the system not being worked properly or that the Government will not be stable? I submit all such fears are groundless. Sir, I must make it perfectly clear in concluding that I am not one of those who think that nothing good has come out of the British connection or that we want to cut off the British connection. I have never said that and never thought of it. I do think that it would be disastrous for the country if there be a sudden disruption. It must end in confusion and anarchy. But short of that, people must be allowed to advance along the path on which they have been advancing, and India must have a proper status, and the only status possible for India is that of a Dominion, the most important Dominion in the British Empire.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Member for Commerce and Railways): Sir, I do not propose to speak for more than a very few minutes. Honourable Members will no doubt realise that on this particular cut it is not possible for any Member of the Government to adopt the usual procedure and to deal seriatim with the various arguments and views advanced. I do not know whether the House will recall that, when the proceedings of the first Round Table Conference were under consideration last year on a motion, which I moved myself, that the Parliamentary papers laid on the table regarding the Round Table Conference be taken into consideration, I compared myself to the local magnate who starts a foot-ball match by kicking off, and having said so much I sat down.

Whether I am on this occasion more like the referee who blows the whistle at the end of the game, I cannot say, but at any rate, I have not had the honour of initiating this discussion.

I was a little surprised that my Honourable friend the Leader of the Independent Party complained that the House had had no opportunity for discussion because I remember very well that last year we were approached on the subject by the Benches opposite. In the first instance the late Mr. Roy moved a Resolution that the papers be laid on the table. When on behalf of the Government I at once agreed that that should be done, it was then settled by mutual agreement that there should be a discussion on the motion of which I have just reminded the House. But, I do not recollect that this year anybody put down any Resolution on this subject, or that I was formally approached from any quarter of the House and asked to allot time. I do not know that any practical inconvenience arises from the fact that the matter has been brought up on the estimates, because last year it was found, on the whole, the best course to discuss the matter on a colourless motion which has much the same effect as a token cut.

I have listened, Sir, with great interest to the discussion which we have heard. I was a little bewildered, I must say, by the speech of the Honourable the Mover, because after he had entered rather fully into the history of the subject, I was left, like my Honourable friend Mr. Joshi, completely at a loss to know exactly what the practical plan was which he recommended for the consideration of the House. That speech was followed before lunch by—I will not call it an altercation—but a certain 'exchange of compliments between the Anglo-Indian lion and the Indian-Christian lamb. I am glad to say that their intercourse did not end in the absorption of the lamb by the lion, and I hope that it may prove a good augury for the relations of the two communities in India in the future constitution.

I will certainly undertake that the discussions which have taken place will be conveyed to His Majesty's Government. I wish to make it clear that there is no desire on the part of the Government of India in any way to strangle discussion on this subject, and we recognise that this House is fully entitled to discuss it. But, I will also add this that when, after the Honourable the Mover sat down this morning, an interval of 30 seconds passed before any Member rose to follow him, I began to doubt whether the House was quite as anxious to discuss the question as at one time I had supposed it to be. That, Sir, I think, concludes all that I can usefully say, and I repeat my promise that today's proceedings will be forwarded to His Majesty's Government for their consideration.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: Mr. President, lest it may be said that nobody got up within 30 seconds, I rise to do so, although I had no intention of speaking. Mr. President, my friend the Leader of the Nationalist Party who introduced this motion gave us past history and I was rather surprised to see empty benches to listen to his words of wisdom.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Why surprised!

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: Well, Sir, the sum-total of his criticism in the beginning was that everyone, including Lord Reading, could not have been acquainted with the past constitutional history of India since at least 1917, for if they were the history of the last two years would have been written differently. Personally, I can only express my regret that my Honourable friend was not a member of the Round Table Conference and that according to his own version we should have had a constitution by now, or even perhaps a year ago. Whether that constitution would have lasted for himself to bless today, I am very doubtful. But leaving that aside, there has been considerable, and, I may say rather unnecessary, criticism of the work done for the last two years. My friend, Dr. DeSouza, said that it had brought forth two monsters. One was the Minority Pact, but he does not seem to realise that that Minority Pact had nothing directly to do with the Conference. It was an arrangement made by certain members of the Conference outside the Conference. He went on to explain why he called it a monster. It was a monster because his own community had not got the lion's share. Well, Sir, I call that rather exaggerated language to describe an agreement as a monster because he does not happen to have the share he expected. Then he criticised the representative character of the delegates of the Round Table Conference. We all know that they were nominated by His Majesty's Government. Nobody has ever pretended or contended that it was anything else. But, I understand that my Honourable friend represents the Indian Christians in this House. Has he been elected? He is a nominated Member, and with all the strength and emphasis in his power he claims to represent the Indian Christians in this House to-day. Considering his own position, I think he might have reflected a little more before he called into question the representative character of the Round Table Conference.

Dr. F. X. DeSouza: May I point out that it was not the representative character that I called into question, but really their method of work. So far as I remember that was what I said.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: What he really said was different. His memory is a little faulty. He said the Members to the Round Table Conference were not elected, nor is he to this House. I venture to suggest that he might have treated the real representatives of his community who were at the Conference with a little more respect. I further venture to suggest that if he had been an elected Member he might have spoken with some justification.

Dr. F. X. DeSouza: I said nothing in derogation of anything that had been done by the representative of my community at the Conference. All I said was that he was helpless like a lamb in the presence of lions. He was a victim of force majeure.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: But what he did imply was that the representative of his community let him down. Let that pass.

What was it that the Conference accomplished on the second occasion? I quite realise, and no one realises more than those who were present, that on the whole we might have been able to accomplish more than we did. We fully realise, and I think every one realises, that no definite conclusions were arrived at. But the great difference between the first Conference and the second Conference was that at the first Conference the policy laid down was the policy of His Majesty's Government, which was after all, although His Majesty's Government, in a minority in the House of Commons. The second year saw that policy of advance confirmed by the House of Commons with a huge majority of Conservatives and that was the main achievement of the second Conference.

Let me once more revert to my Honourable friend Dr. DeSouza to illustrate a point. He said let the Government carry out their policy. They have told us how far they are prepared to go. Now, let them go ahead and frame a constitution without further consultation with the people of India, and he made bold to say that the people of India would accept it. What authority had he to say that? But the point that I want to make out from that statement is that had it not been for the Round Table Conference, His Majesty's Government would never have had an opportunity, would never have been able to lay down a policy for India, would never have been able to announce how far they were prepared to go, and how far they were not. That was the gain and that was what was accomplished by the second Round Table Conference.

It may be that the restrictions and the reservations they have laid down may not be acceptable to all of us, but one would imagine from the speeches delivered here that the chapter had been closed. The financial safeguards are still under consideration. Even the question of the Federation is under consideration. I have no doubt that when two men sit opposite to each other to settle an important matter in which both are interested, they do not always lay all their cards on the table. We know that the Indian Princes have made certain demands, we also know that the representatives of British India have contested those demands. I am not going into details, but I must say that the chapter is not closed. We have not got an Upper and a Lower House with a huge majority of men whom we will not trust. We have not yet got an Upper and Lower House with 40 per cent. and 30 per cent. Indian Princes' representatives. All that is being considered. There will be time enough, but until we refuse to concede those demands and until we continue to point out, and our arguments are being heard, that such a House would not be fair to British India, I think my Honourable friends may hold their souls in patience for a little longer. We fully realise that one-third representation of my friends, the Muhammadans, and one-third representation of the Indian Princes will leave very little for us who happen to be after all in the majority.

An Honourable Member: But are you in the majority?

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: Yes, I am in the majority. Surely it did not require anybody here to remind us of that very unfair position. But we have not yet, as far as I know, conceded those demands. I trust that our friends in the Committees will see that they will not agree to any constitution which on the face of it will be unworkable. But as my Honourable friend Mr. Joshi pointed out that rather than continue to live in a land which is governed by Ordinances and which looks as if it is going to be continued to be ruled by Ordinances, it is worth taking a little risk here and there to get a new constitution as soon as possible.

I realise that time is flying, and there are so many more questions that have been referred to which would really require a reply. But I am not going to undertake that task. All I can say is that the problem before the country is not an easy one, and if the scheme of Federation has great attractions and is being studied because it has great attractions, that study is justified, because you are never going to get a real self-governing India unless you have a Federation; and I do not know how many Honourable Members of this House realise that without a Federation in India, you can never hope to get control over your fighting forces,—over the Army. It is only with a Federation, that there can in the future be a prospect of this House having control over the Army. And if for nothing else, is it not worthwhile trying to persevere to get a constitution—may be 10 years or 15 years or even 50 years hence,—which still holds out prospects of having a real self-governing India? That is one of the main reasons why not only the Consultative Committee, but every one of us, should try to persevere in trying to attain what looks most difficult but may become possible,—a federated India.

There is just one more point that I should like to allude to, and that is the question of finance. The financial question is now being studied by a Committee called the Federal Finance Committee; but it is extraordinary to find that on that Committee there is not one representative of British India. That is a Committee which is working out the destinies of the provinces and India with regard to finance, on which the only Indian representation happens to be two gentlemen from the Indian States. That Committee is to adjust the financial relations not only between the centre and the provinces, but between the new Indian federated States and the centre. Sir, surely when that Committee was being appointed, a little more foresight might have been used. I do wish that Committee every success notwithstanding its constitution. I do sincerely hope that they will be able to evolve a scheme that may bear examination, but it does start with a handicap in not having on it a single representative of British India.

Mr. President: Sir George Schuster.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Sir. I do not wish to exercise my right of reply

Sir Hari Singh Gour: Sir, I have very few minutes in which to reply. I have been confronted with a battery of Round Tablers, Sir Cowasji Jehangir, Mr. Joshi and Sir Henry Gidney, all of whom seem to have been three brothers in the dock chained together and trying to secure their liberation from the accusations that have been made against them. But, Sir, let me give them this comforting assurance that I have made no charges against any of them. What I feel and what I wish to repeat is that what we want now is an immediate advance in the centre within the spirit and letter of the present constitution and that we want with the least possible delay a final constitution, whether it is with federation or without it. That, Sir, is the sum total of our demand. I have no doubt criticised the Sankey Federation scheme; I have pointed out also that since then there have been, at any rate, half a dozen other schemes. There is the Patiala scheme, there is the Central India cum Western India scheme, there is the Indore scheme, there is the small Princes' scheme and there is the nondescript scheme. (Laughter.) In the midst of this confusion I feel that the Government of India should use their good offices in prevailing upon His Majesty's Government that, before the cloud of this controversy of federation lifts, there should be an advance in British India on the basis of a federation of British India, and that a point of contact is possible, and might be established with Indian India through the medium of a Council such as the Statutory Commission have recommended, such as the Central India and Western India States have recently promulgated and such as the Central Committee itself had recommended. If, therefore, federation is a distant dream, if federation is at the present moment impracticable, I beg to ask why should His Majesty's Government wait for the completion of that federation? Sir, there is a feeling abroad that His Majesty's Government are thinking of introducing provincial autonomy. If I have raised this debate and if Honourable Members on this side of the House had more time to speak, I and they would have joined our voices in informing His Majesty's Government that nothing short of responsibility in the centre will satisfy the immediate wants of the people of this country. (Hear, hear.) Whatever advance you may make in the provinces, whether you call it provincial autonomy or provincial responsibility, it would not only be inadequate but unworkable so long as the Governor under the present constitution is subject to the direction, supervision and control of the Government of India and the Government of India in their turn are subject to the supervision, direction and control of the Secretary of State in Council. These difficulties were seen by the present Prime Minister in the speech from which I have freely quoted, and it is the present Prime Minister's speech of that day that I wish to recall and which I wish further to wish the Government of India to recall for the purpose of showing what they should have done in 1921, and which though late they may still do as a temporary measure before a final constitution is threshed out by the British Parliament. That, Sir, is all that we demand. That is all that we have been asking; and the Honourable Members on the opposite benches must have known that throughout the length and breadth of this country all voices have joined in asking that there should be a progressive realisation of responsible government in the centre, progressive in the sense that it does not lead from point to point but that there is a steady growth and that it grows of its own momentum and organic power. That is what we want and that, I submit, is how the Government of India Act of 1919 should be construed. And, Sir, if I have spoken on this occasion, it has been with the single purpose of drawing the attention of the Government of India to the requirements of my country on this occasion. Within a few minutes we shall be launched into a discussion of another topic, that topic which the Government of India know must be distressing them as often as it comes up directly or indirectly for discussion. Sir, nothing is more painful to us than to refer to that topic; but the fact is that we and the Government of India would be able to avoid these distressing contingencies if the Government of India were to press upon His Majesty's Government one bold advance, one bold step forward in the direction of liberalising the constitution as we have asked and further to push on with the ultimate constitution that might be settled for the Government of India.

I am afraid, Sir, I shall not have the time to reply to my Honourable friend Dr. DeSouza, but I am perfectly certain—and I feel happy—that my Honourable friend Sir Abdur Rahim has amply dealt with the question of the Round Table Conference. He has also pointed out that the scheme, as it is settled by the first and the second Conference or by the Consultative Committee, would in the end be unworkable. Then, Sir, Mr. Joshi has lent his support to the main theme of our arguments. As regards Sir Henry Gidney, he is Sir Henry Gidney and nothing need be said about him.

Mr. President: Order, order. The House will now take up the motion for adjournment.

MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT.

EXCESSES OF THE POLICE IN DELHI AND DESECRATION OF THE MOSQUE OF KUCHA RAHMAN.

Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad (Patna and Chota Nagpur cum Orissa Muhammadian): Sir, I move that the House do now adjourn.

4 P.M. Before proceeding with the main question of the violation of sanctity of a mosque, I would like to give the history of the occurrence on Saturday last. My Honourable friend the Home Member may correct me if he finds any matter incorrect.

According to my information, a day prior to this occurrence, that is, on Friday last, Mufti Kifayatulla, President of the Jamiat-ul-Ulema-Hind after his Juma prayer in the Juma Masjid, started from the Mosque and went towards Queen's Gardens to hold a meeting there. All that the men with him were doing was occasionally calling "Allah-o-Akbar", which means God is the greatest of all, also calling "Islam Zinda Bad". This peaceful gathering or procession reached the Queen's Garden and sat there. Before any speech was made or any illegal act was committed, a certain police officer tried to rush towards Mufti Kifayatulla and then some disturbance took place. There are two versions of the following narration: some say that the officer was running to warn and others say that he was running to arrest the Mufti Sahib. However, there is no denial of the fact that up to the time of the lathi charge the Mussalmans were peaceful and no speech was delivered up to that time. On presumption only actions were taken and many people were injured and the Mufti Sahib was arrested.

Then, according to the Statesman, the mob was shouting slogans: a lathi charge was made as a result of which a man named Abdulla had to be taken to hospital: five or six others received injuries; the lathi charge effectively dispersed the crowd and Mufti Kifayatulla was arrested: three other men who were also taken into custody were later released. In the whole story, I do not find anything to show that the gathering was not peaceful. I will here add that the slogans were "Allah-o-Akbar", "Islam Zindabad", "Sarhad ki Azad Tahqiqat Karo", and "Ordinance Wapas Karlo". The Statesman also does not make it clear what were the slogans: it is quite clear that these slogans were not very objectionable or fit for any notice to be taken of them.

Now the occurrence of Saturday last begins. A procession started from the Juma Masjid shouting "Allah-o-Akbar", "Islam Zindabad", etc. By the orders of the Magistrate, the banners were seized at the clock tower, and a minute later lathi charges were made by the police. No fault is mentioned here also. Then a sort of disturbance started on Saturday and passers by fled in different lanes about which the Statesman says, (this is the main occurrence):

"At three o'clock a procession numbering two thousand under the instructions of the Majlis-i-Ahrar started from the Juma Masjid shouting different slogans. The procession passed through Chowri Bazaar, Hauz Qazi, Lal Kuan, Farrash Khana, Fatehpuri and had reached the Clock Tower when, it is understood, on instructions from the City Magistrate a police official seized the banners. A minute later the police made a lathi charge on the crowd which by now exceeded six thousand."

Here also there is no mention that there was anything not peaceful, rather the only fault mentioned is that the mob exceeded six thousand. It is alleged that these lathi charges on innocent and peaceful citizens infuriated some Muslim boy. I do not want to discuss this at this stage, because the case is under trial. However the crowd fled in different streets and police chasing them reached to the mosque in Kucha Rahman. Further the Statesman says:

"The City Magistrate saw stones being thrown from the mosque though the mosque authorities deny it. The police entered the mosque and made a lathi charge inside it. They then went to the top of the Masjid and dispersed people who were standing there. Some slight damage was done. Five people were arrested inside the mosque."

The official version also is that brickbats were thrown from inside the mosque. I challenge the Treasury Benches on this point, to prove that brickbats were thrown from the mosque. There is absolutely no window or door towards the lane from which brickbats could be thrown from the mosque. I myself went today to see the mosque and saw that there was absolutely no hole towards the lane from which brickbats could be thrown. Many other Members also have seen the mosque. The lane is to the west of the mosque. It is known to you, Sir, and to every one else that there are no windows or doors in the western wall of a mosque. It is quite clear and known to every Muhammadan that in the western wall of a mosque there can not be any window or door. That is the case with this mosque in question also. In another place the Statesman also writes in this way:

"As the lathi charges were going on some brickbats, stones and earthenware were hurled at the police from a house adjoining the mosque in Kucha Rahman, a by-lane in Chandni Chowk."

So it is clear that no brickbat was thrown from the mosque, rather it was thrown from some adjoining house: it might be possible, Sir. The police who were making lathi charges rushed into Kucha Rahman and rushed into the mosque. The main gate of the mosque was closed by the Muazzan that the crowd might not come in, but the police broke the door. I myself saw about hundred spots of lathi charge on the door leaf. The peaceful Muazzan and some other Muslims who were inside the mosque for Asar prayers were beaten, Wazu pots were broken, glasses of lanterns were smashed, and the police entered the mosque with shoes on. Is this not a barbarous mentality? Whatever may be said by the Honourable the Home Member about the position and plan of this mosque is only hearsay and it cannot satisfy me. I have myself seen the position of the mosque. The facts are clear, that brickbats cannot be thrown from the mosque, and at the same time there were no brickbats in the mosque. The mosque was in perfectly good condition; the floor is paved with stone everywhere and there was no possibility of having brickbats even in the mosque.

From what has occurred in Delhi during the last three days, it appears that the authorities, and especially the police, are bent upon making mischief in the garb of restoring law and order. It has been pointed out repeatedly that they should first gauge the situation and then take action with a view to ease the situation as far as possible. But contrary to this the police are bent upon committing as many excesses as they possibly can, and for which there can be no justification. The greatest cause of complaint to the Mussalmans is that the police entered the mosque in the Kucha Rahman by forcibly opening the doors, smashing the window panes and breaking the earthen pots there. To whatever school of thought the Mussalmans may belong, they cannot possibly tolerate even for a second the violation of the sanctity of their religious buildings. During the past few years there have been hundreds of examples where Mussalmans have resorted to every means in order to uphold the honour of their religious places. May I enquire from the Treasury Benches, what right the police had in entering a religious place of worship and causing damage to it? The Government and the authorities are fully aware of the fact that the Mussalmans are always ready even to shed their blood to keep up the sanctity of their mosques and other religious buildings. It is a well-known fact that anything that touches their religion goes to their heart. But in spite of this, the police resorted to this, which has greatly injured the feelings of every Mussalman in this country. I cannot possibly understand how the police, knowing what the consequences of their actions would be, did a thing which the Mussalmans will never tolerate.

Mr. President, unless the Government punish those who are found guilty, after due enquiry, of thus entering the mosque and thereby injuring the feelings of the Mussalmans, and compensate the mosque authorities they will never sit at rest. I warn them to do this at once in order to avoid any further trouble, otherwise the responsibility will be theirs. If I win or lose this motion, it will not change the situation at all. I did not move the motion to carry the day, but I wanted to warn the Government in time. I warn the Government to respect the religious feelings of all communities in India, to respect all the places of worship and sacred places such as Mandirs, Gurdwaras, Churches, Imambaras, Karbalas, Mosques, and graveyards, etc. I urge upon the Government to hold an independent inquiry very soon, to compensate the mosque authorities and to punish the responsible men who will be found guilty. Mr. President, India is an Asiatic country; for Indians religion is above all. We can bear all sorts of hardships; we are prepared to sacrifice our wealth, our children and even our very lives, but we cannot allow any one to interfere with our religion or to desecrate our mosques or other places of worship. You can play with our blood but we cannot allow you to play with our religious sentiment.

Sir, with these words I move.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar (Home Member): Mr. President, when I first had intimation that my Honourable friend proposed to move this motion, I could not but feel that he did so under a complete misapprehension of the facts. I have, Sir, been keeping myself in very close touch with occurrences in Delhi during the last two or three days, for the scenes of disorder which have occurred have been matters which have given both the local authorities and to myself some very considerable cause for anxiety. That being so, I have, from day to day, been receiving from the authorities of the Delhi Administration information as to what actually occurred: and today, as the Honourable gentleman appears to have relied almost entirely upon a Press report for the facts which he has recited, I think it would be proper on my part to take the earliest opportunity of placing the House in possession of the facts as they have been reported by the responsible officers of the Delhi Administration. I will deal first with the occurrences on Friday, the 11th March 1932. This is the report of the City Magistrate, a well known and highly respected Muslim Officer:

"A procession, organised and led by Mufti Kifayat Ullah, started from the Jama Masjid at about 3 P.M. and reached the Clock Tower at 4 P.M. where I, Mr. DeGale, S. S. P., A. S. P., Mr. Bakhtawar Ali, and R. B. Malik Devi Dayal, Deputy Superintendent of Police, were present with the police force. The processionists numbered about 3,000 to 4,000 and they were shouting at the top of their voice "Inqilab Zindabad", "Down with Ordinances", "Government Barbad Ho", etc. Just entering the Queen's Gardens, the crowd stopped for a moment and shouted defiantly at us. The leaders then asked the crowd to proceed onward and they accordingly went to the ground behind the Town Hall, where a meeting was arranged. This meeting consisted of a gathering of about 2,000 people, and the rest of the crowd, numbering about 3,000 to 4,000, were standing behind the hedges and were watching the show. Mufti Kifayat Ullah took his seat on a Municipal bench lying there. As soon as the people in the crowd took their seats in the meeting they again shouted the same anti-Government slogans, "Inqilab Zindabad" "Government Barbad Ho", etc. It was then announced to the gathering that if they continued to shout anti-Government slogans or any speech were made to promote the object of an unlawful association, they would be dispersed. Thereupon some 40 to 50 people who were sitting in the centre of the crowd shouted back "We shall, we shall; disperse us if you like." The meeting was then dispersed with a light lathi charge by the police. A man from amongst the crowd also assaulted the S. S. P. with the bamboo of a banner. Some policemen who saw him assaulting the S. S. P. intervened. The S. S. P.'s head was saved by his Topi. Mufti Kifayat Ullah stuck to his bench and did not move from there. He was consequently arrested. The injured man was sent to the hospital at once."

It will be observed that only one injury was caused to a man who made a very dangerous and violent assault on the Senior Superintendent of Police who was saved by the prompt intervention of the men under his command.

I now pass on, Sir, because, I think, it is important that the House should have the fullest account of the facts, and I trust that you will if necessary give me a slight latitude over the time normally allowed, to the report of the City Deputy Superintendent of Police on the events of Saturday the 12th March:

"A procession under the auspices of the Majlis-i-Ahrar, Delhi, started from the Jama Masjid today at about 3 p.m. About 2,000 Muslims joined it. About 3,000 spectators also accompanied it. They were carrying two red flags and three placards on which was inscribed "Long live revolution, Mufti Kifayat Ullah Zindabad", etc. They were shouting "Inqilab Zindabad", "Government be ruined", "tyrant Government be ruined" "Martyrs of Peshawar and Frontier zindabad", etc. The procession after passing through Chawri Bazar, Hauz Qazi, Lal Kuan, Fatehpuri, reached the Clock Tower at about 4 p.m., where I, along with the City Magistrate and the police force, was present. The processionists were very much excited and were shouting anti-Government slogans. The banners and placards they were carrying were seized by the police under the City Magistrate's order and the procession was dispersed after it had been declared unlawful. A person, reported to be a resident of Hauz Qazi ilaga, stabbed two of the constables and was arrested on the spot with a knife in his possession. One of the constables received a serious injury on the right side of the chest".

The House will note these facts in view of the suggestion made in the Press report quoted by my friend that the conduct of this gathering had been strictly peaceful.

The report further says:

"He was removed to the Hospital at once. A good many of the processionists, who had entered Kucha Rahman, started throwing brickbats on the police. The police then dispersed the crowd in the lane and when they were coming back, a good many brickbats were thrown at them from the balcony of a room above a mosque. Some policemen got on the balcony through the common main entrance of the mosque and dispersed these men. In the meantime, the S. S. P. also reached the spot. The rifle of one of the police armed guard, which was in Chandni Chowk, went off accidentally in the air."

I mention that, because there has been a widely prevalent rumour that firing had been opened by the police and serious casualties had occurred, which is dispersed by the report of the S. S. P. No casualty resulted from this accidental discharge.

"(Note by S. S. P. "I checked all ammunition on my arrival and found that only one round had been fired. The Head Constable concerned said it was an accident while loading"). The police returned to the Kotwali at about 7 p.m.

It is reliably learnt that the man who stabbed the constable had come with the intention of stabbing Sub-Inspector Abdul Wahid.

Foot constable Bhagwat Singh, No. 448, posted at New Delhi police station, who was going towards Hauz Kazi in a tram car in uniform was assaulted by some Muslims. He received some slight injuries.

One Mr. G. A. Heron with his wife was coming from Khari Baoli on his motor cycle. When he reached the corner of Fateh Puri he was struck by one of a crowd. On receipt of this information the police was sent there to disperse them, but the crowd had disappeared.

Later information was received that some tram cars were stopped by some men in front of Katra Nil and Ballimaran."

"The police were twice sent there and dispersed the crowd. Besides the above constables some other constables also received injuries. The condition of one of the constables who was stabbed with a knife is somewhat serious. A case under section 307 Indian Penal Code has been registered against the assailant."

I do not propose, though I have the reports in my hand, to read an account of what occurred yesterday, that is, Sunday, the 13th. Assaults did continue to take place, and the atmosphere is still tense, but I trust that it will shortly subside. I may at this stage make this observation, that while a mood of great tension and excitement is unfortunately still prevalent in some parts of the city, I trust that if the debate on this motion is proceeded with, any Honourable Member who takes part in it will be very careful not to say or do anything which might add to the tension and possibly lead to very unhappy results.

Now, Sir, I propose to deal more fully with the incident relating to the mosque, because I realise that both the Honourable Member himself and all the gentlemen on his side of the House, as indeed I may say, every Member of the House, will be greatly concerned with any question in which a suggestion is made that a place of worship, of whatever creed or whatever religion, has been wantonly desecrated. But I propose first to make some comments merely on the police action which has been referred to in the first part of the notice of motion. The reports which I have laid before the House have been very carefully scrutinised by the higher officials and responsible officers of the Delhi Administration, and I am fully confident that they can be accepted as reliable and trustworthy accounts of the events to which they refer. I think that no candid judge will be prepared to deny that in circumstances of great danger and difficulty the police officers concerned and the other members of the Delhi Administration acted with the greatest restraint and discipline. Now, Sir, I come more particularly to the incident relating to the mosque. I have here a report by the Senior Superintendent of Police himself who came on the spot almost immediately after the incident referred to by my Honourable friend. This is his account of the matter:

"Having arrived in this small lane from which stones were being hurled, the police were dispersing the crowd in the lane when from a small balcony—"

It will be evident from the other report I have read to the House that this balcony lies over the mosque itself:

"—another shower of stones was thrown upon them. The men—who were mostly from the police lines and not well acquainted with the city—turned and charged up at the stone throwers on the balcony. The direct way to do so was to enter a gateway which proved to be also the gateway to a very small mosque, and from the court yard of this mosque they found a staircase leading to the balcony from which stones had been thrown. It is very unlikely that any of the police realised at the time that there was any question of entering a mosque. The entrance (this is an important fact) is a common entrance to both the mosque and the house in question. Inspector Fateh Mohammad Khan and Sub-Inspector Abdul Wahid were present, though not with the advance party of police who first entered.

This was a mixed batch of police, of whom the majority were Muhammadans. It is true that they were wearing shoes"—(he is perfectly frank in the matter) "but they entered the mosque courtyard unwittingly; but, beyond that, nothing that could possibly be alleged as desecration occurred.

The action taken was to bring the stone throwers down from the balcony and to pack them off.

The lane or kucha was littered with bricks and stones where they had been hurled, so the S. S. P. saw, on his arrival, and a number of police had received minor injuries and bruises."

That, I think, is a perfectly reliable account of what actually took place, and if it is a question of the general policy of the Government of India, as indeed of all Governments in India, in this matter—though I can hardly suppose that that could really be in question—I cannot do better than quote from a statement recently made by the late Viceroy of India, Lord Irwin. What he said was this:

"Since the advent of British rule it has been a fixed tradition of the Government of India to recognise and respect the sanctity of places of worship. This policy has been faithfully and continuously pursued; and I need scarcely dwell on the numerous acts of Government which testify to it; for they are well-known to you. Suffice it to say that the kind of acts I have in mind are the inclusion of special provision for their protection in the penal law, the continuance under British rule, in favour of many shrines, of jagirs, grants and muafis originally granted by rulers of the faith with which they are connected, and the elaborate arrangements which are made for the comfort and convenience of pilgrims to the places they hold in veneration.

This attitude has not been dictated by reason of self-interest, but springs from genuine conviction. It is a cardinal item of policy; and the spirit which underlies it is expressed in the proclamation of Queen Victoria relating to the freedom of religious beliefs, a passage from which I may quote to you:

'Firmly relying ourselves on the truth of Christianity, and acknowledging with gratitude the solace of Religion, we disclaim alike the Right and the desire to impose Our Convictions on any of Our Subjects. We declare it to be Our Royal Will and Pleasure that none be in any wise favoured, none molested or disquieted by reason of their Religious Faith or Observances; but that all shall alike enjoy the equal and impartial protection of the Law.'

Let me assure you that I and my Government stand steadfast in those convictions. We regard as matters of the first importance the protection of all communities in the free exercise of their religious beliefs and the preservation from disrespect of the sacred places which they hold in reverence. My Government will, in future, as in the past, be scrupulous in condemning and preventing any action which may give genuine offence to religious sentiments or interfere with the use, for purposes of worship of sacred buildings, by whatever community they may be venerated.

Nevertheless, I must necessarily attach to this assurance a qualification which you yourself recognise as just. Indeed it is the essence of the matter that a sacred building should be devoted and preserved for the purpose of worship. All men condemn as unseemly the misuse of a building set apart for the service of God for the purpose of giving provocation or committing excesses. While Government always desires to respect the sanctity of places of worship, it must be a point of principle that the public should not by any action detract from, or sully, their sacred character."

Now, Sir, from the facts I have recited—and I will conclude my remarks in two minutes—it is clear that, in so far as the police entered the doorway of this mosque, it is a common doorway, and that they were greeted with a shower of brickbats. It is quite clear that no disrespect to the mosque was ever intended. A large number of the police party were themselves Mussalmans. Two of the officers immediately in charge of the party were themselves Mussalmans, and I think that that will be accepted as a reasonable assurance that no deliberate disrespect was intended to the mosque, and that in fact, no act of desecration took place.

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division: Muhammadan Rural): What about the smashing of the lantern mentioned by the Mover?

The Honourable Sir James Orerar: I have no information about the smashing of a lantern. I am perfectly confident that the official reports on the subject which I have read out to the House give a trustworthy account of the matter. Taking, then, the series of incidents to which my Honourable friend has referred on the day previous to this occurrence, and taking this incident itself, I think that the House will be prepared to recognise that the Administration of Delhi and their officers were confronted with a danger of very great difficulty indeed, in which one tactless act, and what is more important, the slightest failure to discharge their duty, might have resulted in a very great catastrophe. My own view is that the action which the police and the Magistrates had to take throughout these unfortunate occurrences—now, I hope, rapidly drawing to a close—was carried out in a spirit of great devotion to duty, and of the strictest discipline and restraint, and with a desire, in carrying out their duty, to inflict as little injury as possible. That, I submit, is the verdict which the House ought to pass on this motion. (Applause.)

Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur (South Madras: Muhammadan): Mr. President, you are alive to the fact that I generally end my speech with a Persian couplet, but today I will begin my speech with Persian couplets, so that they may give cogent advice to the Government. The first runs thus:

"Bitars az ahe muzlooman ke hangame dua karden Ijabat az dare huq bahre istiqlal mi ayed".

This is the advice given by a Persian philosopher to the then Government. It means, "Be afraid of the intense and heartfelt feeling of the oppressed, when they give expression to that feeling and want to launch a complaint before the Supreme Court. The angle of acceptance comes in advance to take it to the Divine Durbar". This is an occasion when the House cannot expect me to give expression to my feeling with restraint, and I hope you will pardon me. I am one that attaches great importance to religious affairs and there is our Christian friend the Home Member who tries to assure us that they who represent the Christian Government also attach importance to that fact. The Home Member said on the 1st February 1932 that the powers given to the agents under the Ordinances are being administered and exercised with strict discipline and utmost moderation and restraint. I will refer the House to his exact words. He said:

"It is the view of the Government of India, a view fully shared by the Local Governments that these extraordinary powers (he refers to the powers under the Ordinances) must be administered (not will be) with strict discipline, as I said and with the utmost restraint and moderation and it is in that spirit that they will continue to be administered so long as they may unhappily be found to be necessary."

Sir, the Mover of the Resolution began his speech with what transpired on the 11th. So I need not enter into any details regarding it. The meeting on the second day was with the object of protesting against the high-handedness of the police who, without warning the people to disperse, began to belabour them, so much so that they were about to belabour even Mufti Kifayatulla Sahib, the President of Jamiyat-ul-Ulema-e-Hind, Delhi, who is held in great esteem by the whole Muslim public. But for his son, who offered him shelter by falling upon him, he would not have escaped a lathi charge. He is a lean and aged gentleman who is not keeping good health. The Home Member also might have seen him; but unfortunately he does not attend Government parties. Such a gentleman was about to be belaboured, and one Maulvi Abdul Halim Sahib Siddiqi, who was about to propose the Mufti Sahib to the Chair, and who was sitting by his side on a bench, which is described as a municipal bench, was actually belaboured. I have seen with my own eyes the wounds he has received in his left hand. Sir, the Jamiyat-ul-ulema and Majlis Ahrar are organisations that are politico-religious and they have nothing to do with the Congress civil disobedience movement. What they wanted on this occasion was to request the Government to withdraw the Ordinances and to permit a committee to go to the North-West Frontier Province to make an independent inquiry, so that the communiqué issued from time to time by the Chief Commissioner who is about to be made Governor of the Frontier Province and the several statements made by the reliable gentleman belonging to that province may be gone into deeply and a sifting, honest and independent inquiry may be made by them which will strengthen the hands of the Government also to a great extent if the allegations against them are untrue. The Government have not been good enough to grant this mild request. Even the Moslem Conference at the meeting of the Working Committee held recently has passed a Resolution requesting the Government to constitute an independent committee to present to the N. W. F. to go into the question affecting the Province. These are the requests that the above organisations also are making. They have not taken to the civil disobedience movement. But they may be driven to the necessity of so doing hereafter.

Sir, as regards the mosque referred to both by the Mover and the Home Member, I am in possession of a photograph of the mosque, which will dispel all doubts of even the Government. It shows the gateway which was broken into by the police on the 12th. It is a double storeyed mosque. Our friend the Honourable Member has confounded the balcony, which has been set apart for the Congregation leader (Imam) and the mosque. The balcony referred to by him is a small room, but there is a balcony which is a place of worship above the lower building. It is a double-storeyed building. Our friend might have taken the trouble of visiting the place which is not far off from here. Even now it is not too late for these gentlemen or the Members of the European Group or other non-official Members to visit the place and satisfy themselves as to whether sacrilege has been committed by the police or not. The explanation of the Government has been propounded with great sagacity and tactfulness in order to throw dust into our eyes. This morning I visited the mosque to make a sifting inquiry and to see those who were actually belaboured by the police. When a student was reciting the Koran there, he was belaboured to such an extent that he fell unconscious over the holy Koran itself and it fell down. It is astonishing that a civilised Government can tolerate all this. But can we put up with such things, Sir, any longer? If there was actually anyone who stabbed a constable, it is said the police have arrested him, and if he happens to be the real culprit, let him be brought to book and dealt with according to law. But how are the police justified in entering a mosque with shoes on, I cannot imagine, or how this kind of high-handedness can come to pass here. If my Honourable friend will take the trouble of visiting the mosque even now, he will see that there is a balcony set apart for the Pesh Imam, who is an aged gentleman of 70 years, a Maulvi, a professor of the Arabic College here, and even the balcony occupied by the old Maulvi Sahib has received a lathi blow—fortunately for him he was not charged with a lathi, but one can see the number of glass panes broken. Now if my Honourable friend, the Home Member—who is to retire soon—will take the trouble of seeing the balcony, he will see the lanterns broken, the doors damaged, etc., etc.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh (Muzaffarpur cum Champaran: Non-Muhamadan): Give it to the Statesman to publish it.

Mr. President: Order, order. The Honourable Member knows that on an adjournment motion there is a time-limit of 15 minutes.

Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: Had I known that, Sir, I would have finished my speech long ago.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member has four minutes more.

Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: The Statesman, Sir, was the forerunner of the statement which is made by the police officers and endorsed by the Honourable the Home Member. My Honourable friend Mr. Arthur Moore will excuse me for saying so. The Statesman, dated the 13th March, says:

"The crowds who were stoning the police—and not who were alleged to have been stoning the police—from a mosque were soon dispersed, and several arrests were made."

I see of course my Honourable friend has been misled by his reporter. He may also take the trouble to go with me and satisfy himself as to whether there is any physical possibility for any man to throw stones from within the mosque. There are huge buildings in front of the mosque. The mosque itself is located in a narrow lane on Kucha Rahman. The word "kucha", my Persian-knowing friend, the Honourable the Home Member, need not mistake for a big street: it is a narrow lane. Then, Sir, had there been any stone-throwing, as reported by the police officer, those that were arrested must have been—not only might have been, or should have been,—but must have been dealt with according to the law, but they were let off after a few minutes by the same officer. If the allegation be true, where was the necessity for letting off five or six persons who were arrested from within the mosque? They were actually let off. So, Sir, the case which my Honourable friend, the Home Member, has tried to make out cannot stand for a moment. It has fallen through and it cannot but fall through. So I would request even the Government Members to sympathise with these grievances, which, Sir, have much to do with various unfortunate matters today. Today they desecrate a mosque, tomorrow they desecrate a temple, a third day they desecrate a Gurdwara, and so on! What is the use, Sir, of reading out the Queen's Proclamation; we have read that over and over again.—Do the Government act up to the terms laid down therein? That is the question. (Loud Applause.) So, Sir, I shall conclude my speech also with the following pregnant words:

*"Bitars az ahe muzlooman ke hangame dua karden
Ijabat az dare huq bahre istiqbal mi ayed".*

"For the stability of any Government it is quite necessary that it should see that no community which has a religious bend of mind is injuriously affected and its religious feeling wounded".

With these words of warning and advice I resume my seat.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Sir, I should like to offer a few observations on this motion; and my only justification for doing so is that I was an eye-witness to some of the incidents related here by some of the previous speakers. Sir, I went to the city yesterday and the day before in the evening. But before coming to the incidents of which I have been a personal eye-witness, I should like to refer for a moment to the speech of my Honourable friend, the Home Member. It was very refreshing to find my Honourable friend giving an assurance to this House that he has put himself in the closest touch with the incidents which happened in the city during the last three or four days. I would like to know from him whether he ever took the trouble of visiting the scene of the occurrence, and of witnessing the mosque in question. Evidently, Sir, he has not seen the mosque, and he relies upon the information which has been supplied to him by his subordinate officers who in fact are the accused in this case, and who cannot expect that their version must be accepted as necessarily true by this House or by the country outside. (Hear, hear.) Sir, during the course of his speech my Honourable friend was interrupted, and asked whether he saw the lantern broken in the mosque; and my Honourable friend not having seen the place of occurrence could not reply. Sir, I saw the mosque, and the lantern that was broken. I should now like to refer to that part of the speech of my Honourable friend in which he has stated that anti-Government slogans were shouted by the people who had assembled in the Queen's Garden for the purpose of holding a meeting. My Honourable friend the Mover of this motion has quoted extensively from the Statesman, and so far as I can remember, the Statesman does not refer to any anti-Government slogans having been uttered at the meeting. Everybody knows, Sir, the attitude of the Statesman with regard to incidents like these, and the soft corner it has for the Government: but I have failed to notice any sort of reference made to anti-Government cries at the meeting.

Mr. C. C. Biswas (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadan Urban): That might have been due to "softness" for Muhammadans!

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: I have in my hand, Sir, another paper, the Hindustan Times, from which I make this one quotation:

"Exactly at 4 p.m. all the officers headed by Mr. deGale made their way to the place where the meeting was being held. Sub-Inspector Abdul Wahid communicated to the people assembled that if in the meeting anything was said against the Ordinances, the meeting would be declared unlawful. The conveners had hardly time to reply when some among the audience replied that they would speak against the Ordinances. This was the signal for a severe lathi charge on the audience."

It was not the light lathi charge as stated by my Honourable friend, the Home Member. Sir, I proceed further:

"The armed policemen who were standing by rushed to the scene of the meeting and began showering lathi on the crowd. People ran in a panic, but the Police chased them on all sides for many furlongs. Many people received injuries."

This narration of facts also does not refer to any anti-Government cries that are said to have been raised by the people. Mufti Kifayatullah Sahib who, I understand, is the President of the All-India Jamiat-i-Ulema, was arrested; and he was marched off to the lock-up. This gentleman occupies a very high and honourable place in the Muslim world. I have no doubt that when my Honourable friend Maulvi Shafee Daood-Nagri gets up to speak on this motion, he will pay a high compliment to the position which the Mufti Sahib occupies as the President of the Jamiat-i-Ulema; because I remember some years ago . . .

Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi (Tirhut Division: Muhammadan): It is dragging an irrelevant matter into this question.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Can I not refer to you?

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): Order, order. The Honourable Member should address the Chair.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Sir, my Honourable friend Maulvi Shafee Daood-Nagri—he comes from a village called Daood-Nagar in my own district of Muzaffarpur in Bihar—used to swear by the name of the Jamiat-i-Ulema, and the name of Mufti Kifayatullah. That is why I said . . .

Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi: I object to this sort of speech of my Honourable friend.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: I therefore thought, Sir, that my Honourable friend had still some respect and regard for this gentleman.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): Why is the Honourable Member bringing up the name of Maulvi Shafee Daoodi so often in his speech? If he holds any views he will give expression to them.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: However, I will proceed with the subject-matter of this motion.

Yesterday in the evening I went to the city, and I had a keen desire to see the mosque. I went up to the front of the mosque, but I was hesitating to go inside it. Amongst the crowd that were collected there, three or four respectable Muhammadans asked me whether I wanted to see the mosque. I replied that I would like to if they had no objection. I told them at the outset that I was a Hindu, and I did not know whether I should be allowed to go inside the mosque. On being taken into the mosque, I took off my shoes as every body else who enters into a mosque has to do. I saw the remnants of broken earthen pitchers littered all over the place, and it was represented to me that they were the vessels from which our Mussalman friends do Wazu or the ablutions before performing their Namas. Some glass panes were also broken. I was led upstairs into a room. There I saw a big lantern which was hanging down. It was also broken and smashed. It was stated to me that a boy who was reading the holy Koran was assaulted and beaten as well as a few others. I also saw the lathi marks on the adjoining wall. It was represented to me that the constables who entered into the mosque with shoes on had battered down the gate at the entrance of the mosque, and when they went upstairs another panel of doors was also broken down which I saw with my own eyes. It was stated to me that the posse of constables who entered were led by Sub-Inspector Abdul Wahid. Sir, this was what I actually saw with my eyes. Then I went into the neighbouring gali which is called Kucha Rahman, and there I was told that a shopkeeper who deals in laces and other things, out of the fear of the police ran away, and the police carried away the bundle of the laces with them. The fact that I am not drawing upon my imagination will appear from a short statement which has appeared in the vernacular paper called The Kaumi Gazette, dated the 14th March, 1932, in which it is stated that the shopkeeper fled out of the fear of the police and the police carried away his gathri (bundle). The police pursued the people from the Clock Tower right up to Ballimaran and administered lathi blows on them. I saw, Sir, many people running away in panic in Kucha Rahman, and I was also asked to run away with them. (Laughter.)

But I chose the opposite course. I said to myself: "Let me take a little bit of risk and see how things go on". I went on to the main thoroughfare; and on the other side of the road near about the red building of the Town Hall, I saw a large posse of constables running after people and chasing them at random and beating some of them. I quietly went up to them, but I did not talk to any one. I am very thankful to the Police that, although I went so near them, I escaped unhurt. Sir, these lathi charges of the police constitute a very disquieting feature in the situation at the present time. This policy has been adopted by an order, I am afraid, which has emanated from the Government of India and which has been communicated to all the Local Governments for guidance. Sir, Government apparently think that the nationalist activities of the people would be subdued and cowed down by the threat of these lathi charges and the policy of terrorism. Sir, I have nothing to say about the Police, which is a mercenary force. I am sure it will be as ready to turn against the Government at one time as it is ready to support them now. But, I am afraid Government will be mistaken if they think that these lathi charges are going to subdue the people. The Congress manœuvred the whole position, and it has succeeded in its attempt. The Congress wanted to put the Government in the wrong. The Congress thought that the flagging zeal of the people would be aroused most effectively if the Government adopted a repressive policy against them, and the calculation of the Congress has come true. I beseech the Government in their own interests and in the interest of the country, to refrain from indulging in a policy which may have disastrous consequences. To-day, Sir, it is the Hindus who are subjected to these lathi charges, and the Government relies upon the Mussalmans and members of other communities to support them. Tomorrow it will be the turn of the Mussalmans, and the Government will rely upon other communities. Sir, it has been said by a well-known statesman, "You can fool some people all the time, and all people for some of the time, but you cannot fool all the people all the time". (Cheers.)

Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi: Sir, in the short space of time, we have to discuss this motion for adjournment. I want the Honourable Members of this House to concentrate their attention on the most important question out of all that has been described here. I submit there are lots of incidents which happened during the two days of which we have heard the description, but the one which took place on Saturday when the mosque was desecrated was the most important of all questions. It concerns every Honourable Member of this House, to whatever community or religion he might belong. I would therefore confine my remarks to this question. I would have finished after saying that, but for the provocation which my Honourable friend, Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh, gave me which, however, I would not take it in that light. •

There is no denial of the fact that the mosque was desecrated.

The Honourable Sir James Orerar: I take strong exception to the statement that the mosque was desecrated.

Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi: The Honourable the Home Member has so far admitted that some of the policemen entered the mosque with their shoes on. He has admitted that. He has further admitted that a few men were arrested in the mosque. So far it is admitted. We have got information that those few men who were arrested were released soon after arrest. The further information that we have got—and I do not doubt it at the present moment,—the further information is that the door of the mosque was shut from inside and the police broke open the door. There are signs of the door having been broken open. It is not a myth which I am saying, it is a fact, the broken doors are there. The police entered the mosque, there is no doubt about that. Now, of course, the fact whether they belaboured the men who were inside the mosque or not, that is not admitted by the Honourable the Home Member. Also, there was a student who was reading the Koran, whether he was disturbed at the time of reading the Koran or not, that is of course not admitted by the Honourable the Home Member. But the very fact that the police entered the mosque in the way they did is a desecration, and I would ask the Honourable the Home Member to consider whether the police had any justification for that act. Now, as the Honourable the Home Member has said that the crowd was being dispersed and some of the men in the crowd fled towards that lane and some of them entered the mosque. God knows what had happened, but it appears that the police thought that some of the crowd had entered the mosque, and when they entered the mosque, they closed the door from inside. Now, I would ask the Honourable the Home Member to consider whether there was any necessity to follow the men and to pursue them inside the mosque.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: Because stones and brickbats were being thrown from the balcony on to the police below.

Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi: The Honourable Member has already said that. I must say as regards the throwing of brickbats, that it is physically impossible to throw any brickbat from the mosque on to the people or the police who might be passing through that lane. Absolutely impossible.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Or even on the police in the main thoroughfare.

Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi: It is to the interest of the police to show that brickbats were being thrown from the mosque.

Mr. C. C. Biswas: Supposing that brickbats were thrown from the mosque, would you not still justify the action of the police?

Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi: I am dealing with facts. I say that brickbats could not have been thrown from the mosque. It is impossible to believe that for one moment. Therefore it is a fact that requires an enquiry and investigation and I should think that Government would be well advised to enter into these questions and institute an enquiry by independent men. I would suggest you should take some of the Honourable Members of this Assembly and entrust them with the duty of seeing the mosque and enquiring into these facts. Unless the Government do that, I submit the feeling amongst the Muslims would grow every day to a very dangerous extent. I am not in the habit of threatening Government; it is not in my way of doing things. I say what I feel. I find the whole country is up against this act of sacrilege ever since it has been brought to the notice of the public. It is for the Government to show what led to this entry into the mosque with shoes on. Of course, it is for the men to show that they were belaboured in the mosque and that the student who was reading the Koran was obstructed in his study. It is for the people to show all that. But, facts must be brought to light by independent men. It would not do to ignore these facts.

The next question is this, supposing some brickbats were thrown from some portion of the mosque at the police—I am sure they cannot prove it—but supposing that to be the case, I should have thought that to enter a mosque, they should have hesitated a hundred times. Entering a mosque for the purpose alleged is a very serious matter. It is not said that anybody among the police was injured by the brickbats.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: The Superintendent of Police reports that on his arrival he saw a number of police who had received injuries and bruises.

Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi: Does he say that these brickbats injured some of the Police?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: He saw brickbats and stones lying about in the lane and a number of policemen who had received injuries.

Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi: Let us see whether they are correct or not. It is a question of fact. This is my first point. My second request is this. At once there should be standing orders issued throughout the country that no places of worship should be desecrated in the way they are alleged to have been desecrated. Immediate orders should be issued throughout the country that this should not be done. I hope the Honourable the Home Member will take my advice and see that it is done at once. In spite of provocation, unless that provocation leads to bloodshed, places like the mosque should not be desecrated; they should always be respected.

Then, my Honourable friend Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh had something to say against me. I do not want to retort to him. He asked me to tell him what I thought about Mufti Kifayatullah. I would only answer facts, but not jokes which my Honourable friend had been causing in this House, as they should be naturally ignored. When Mufti Kifayatullah is now in jail, I should not have spoken one word in regard to him. But my Honourable friend has put me a direct question, and I must say what I feel on that. Sir, my friends should know that Mufti Kifayatullah has thrown in his lot with the Congress and is trying to drag the Muslim community in to support the Congress movement.

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadan): What is wrong in that?

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: You were in the Congress once.

Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi: I say that this is what he has done, and I do not share his views on that question. On the contrary, I oppose him on that point. Mufti Kifayatullah may have found for that reason a strong advocate in my Honourable friend, Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh, who is a great Mahasabhaite in India. If the Mufti Sahib has got any support, I do not grudge him that. But I am not going to say anything as to whether the Mufti Sahib was justified in taking the action he did or whether the police made excesses at the time of dispersing the assembly, because I have not made any inquiries on those points. I have confined myself only to the question of the mosque on which I feel very strongly, and confined myself to that alone.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan (Agra Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I have always held very strong views about keeping law and order, and I have never supported nor will ever support any one who breaks the law, whatever may be his position in society and whether he be a religious head or a political head or without any head at all.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: What will you do about people who break heads? (Laughter.)

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: That is the position, Sir. If the law was broken by any one or a procession was taken out by any one in contravention of the law,—whether the law be good or bad,—that man will never find any support from me. But here two questions have been mixed up. The real motion of adjournment was intended to bring to the notice of Government the happenings in the mosque, and Mr. Maswood Ahmad incidentally referred to the question of the procession, and I think . . .

Mr. K. C. Neogy (Dacca Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): He referred also to police excesses.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: About that point I do not want to say anything or to test it or to discuss it.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: It is not safe to do so.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: I do not see eye to eye with Mr. Maswood Ahmad when he says that the procession which was going to hold a meeting in Queen's Garden was peaceful as he describes it, or that it retained its peacefulness till the last. But the point which I have in mind—and it was ignored by Mr. Maswood Ahmad and also by the Honourable the Home Member—is whether it should or should not be allowed to the police force to enter any place of worship in the manner they did in this case. Whatever might have been the report of the Senior Superintendent of Police or of the City Magistrate, the photographs which we have seen just now belie those reports; and I find from the photographs that the earthen pots which are used in the mosque for ablution purposes are littered all over the floor in a broken condition. No explanation has been given as to how they were broken. If the police entry into the mosque was peaceful as alleged by the Senior Superintendent and the City Magistrate, I fail to see how these things could have been broken and scattered all over the floor. How was it possible for the lanterns to have been broken and damaged as I saw in a photograph just now?

Mr. C. C. Biswas: Might have been done by the men in the mosque?

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: The men in the mosque would be the last persons to do any damage to the property of the mosque. No true Mussalman would ever do it even for exhibiting a photograph and accusing other people. I do not believe that a Hindu or somebody else would have thrown these things or that Mussalmans brought these things from outside. Here in this photograph we find that the lanterns are hanging with broken glasses and the earthen pots used for washing purposes are broken and scattered all over the floor. That shows that the police entry was not as peaceful as has been alleged in the police report. They have minimised the guilt of their subordinate officers, and I cannot attach any value to such a report. However, Sir, I think it will add to the prestige of Government to come forward and make a full inquiry in a matter like this. It is a very serious affair, and whoever commits such an act of desecration,—whether he be a Government servant and however highly placed he might be—deserves to be dealt with properly. I think the prestige of Government will rise if they do not allow any wrong done by their officers to escape their attention. I am a strict disciplinarian and would never permit a serious act like this to be minimised. In the eyes of all peaceful citizens who have respect for law and order those officials who break the law are equally to be condemned as those who violate it. From the evidence which we have got, it is clear that the entry into the mosque was not as peaceful as they want to make out, and the only proper remedy is that Government should rise to the occasion and make an independent inquiry instead of trusting the superior officers of those people who were really concerned in the affair. They should have a committee of unbiassed people who will place before Government the facts in their true light. And if it is found that these people have done something which brings the Government into ridicule, these persons should be dealt with properly; and this will raise the Government in the eyes of all law-abiding citizens. This excuse that the men did not know that it was a mosque is absurd. He could have seen from the gate that it was a mosque. When a man enters a mosque he must know that the floor is of a mosque; he knows that there is a raised pulpit. Can my Honourable friend the Home Member say that if a Christian goes to a church and sees the pulpit and other things he does not know that it is a church? Nothing of the kind. No Muslim can make a mistake about this.

Another matter is the reason for the ladder being shown in the photograph because he went up to the balcony by means of it. If a man says when he comes to the Assembly, "I want to go to the Press Gallery and I will do so by putting up a ladder from the floor of the House, because I understand the entrance to the House is from the lobbies", can any one believe him? It is an absurd idea. Government will never increase their reputation by this kind of reports: they will only lower themselves and their officials in the eyes of people who have been supporting them. If they find that Government are going on wrong versions, it will bring discredit on the reports which come to them from time to time from different quarters in India. So I think Government will be perfectly justified, and they will add to their prestige if they do not ignore this thing which has happened at a very short distance from here, but to make an impartial and full inquiry into this matter and not to let this feeling grow or a suspicion lurk that Government do not care for the religion of the people which is very near their heart. With these words I support the motion only so far.

Mr. W. A. Cosgrave (Assam : Nominated Official): Mr. President, although I have been a Member of this Honourable House off and on for seven years I have not had the privilege yet of addressing the House since you have become President. I therefore take this opportunity, when speaking perhaps in the last session that I will be in this House, of thanking you for giving me an opportunity of speaking in this important debate.

I fully realise the sincerity with which some Members in this House have taken up this subject. I refer particularly to my Honourable friend, Maulvi Shafee Daoodi and the Honourable Mover, Mr. Maswood Ahmad. I realise that in this case they do feel most seriously that their religious places have suffered some harm, and I only wish that the same high standard had been kept up by speakers on all sides of the House. When I heard the speech of the amateur detective who comes from Bihar and Orissa,—my Honourable friend Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh,—I do not know how he managed to disguise himself so well as a sleuth that he escaped the notice of the Police—but when I heard his speech, I was really sorry that the level of the debate had been somewhat lowered from what it had been at first.

Now, my Honourable friend, Mr. Yamin Khan, has made it perfectly clear, and I think other Members in the centre of the House have also made it perfectly clear, that they, unlike some of the gentlemen on the opposite Benches, have no quarrel as regards the action of the police taken in dispersing a procession which was declared unlawful, not by the Sub-Inspector of Police, but by the City Magistrate; and the issue has been narrowed down, I think, perfectly fairly by my friend, Mr. Yamin Khan, to the incident in the mosque. I for one have got the very greatest respect for all religious places, and I take off my shoes on entering a mosque, just as I know my friend, Mr. Yamin Khan, will take off his topes when he comes, if he ever comes, with me to a church.

As it seems to me that this House has rather lost its sense of proportion in dealing with this case, I may perhaps be allowed to draw attention again to the statement of the actual occurrence which has been so lucidly put forward by the Honourable the Home Member. The police in dispersing a procession had been attacked by rioters who ran down a narrow lane and two constables had been stabbed, one seriously injured—and a case under section 307 of the I. P. C. to which I do not want to refer is pending against the man who stabbed the two constables: the police naturally had to clear the narrow lane. They went down to this place called Kucha Rahman to clear the narrow lane. I submit that if the police, when clearing a narrow lane, saw stones being thrown from a balcony or gallery above a narrow lane, or what we call a cul de sac, if the police saw stones being thrown from that balcony

Mr. K. O. Neogy: If.

Mr. W. A. Cosgrave: I say "if"—I know my friend, Mr. Neogy, quite well and I know he is always fishing in troubled waters

Mr. E. C. Neogy: That is what you do, the whole lot of you.

Mr. W. A. Cosgrave: When I say "if" I admit that I am accepting the official report: I will deal later on with the question as to whether more attention or value should be attached to the report of the very competent and very experienced officer who is at present the Deputy Commissioner of Delhi and who will shortly become its Chief Commissioner, as we are all very glad to note, or whether more attention ought to be paid to that newspaper which I sometimes read with my breakfast—the Hindustan Times. To go back to my argument, I say, assuming as correct—and I or one accept it as correct—the report of Mr. Johnson, the Deputy Commissioner based on the report of a perfectly independent European Senior Superintendent of Police who had an experienced Muhammadan Deputy Superintendent of Police with him.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: May I ask whether Mr. Johnson made enquiries himself personally?

Mr. W. A. Cosgrave: Mr. Johnson wrote the report which has been quoted by the Honourable the Home Member. I say that after the police in that narrow lane had two of their men stabbed, if they had stones thrown on them, I suggest they were quite justified in trying to clear the balcony from which the stones had been thrown. I have seen these pictures and I wish that my friend Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Sahib had laid his cards or rather his photographs on the table a little earlier, because then we could have seen how many stair cases or how many steps there are up to the balcony or gallery: according to the photograph as I saw it in a very cursory manner craning my neck over the necks of two other gentlemen, there was only one stair case up to the gallery which is apparently the balcony from which the stones were thrown.

An Honourable Member: Were any thrown?

Mr. W. A. Cosgrave: There again I accept the report of the District Magistrate: I think it is quite clear Khan Bahadur H. M. Wilayatullah: Is it stated anywhere in the report that entry into the mosque was unavoidable and absolutely necessary in the circumstances? The men arrested were released immediately by the police.

Mr. W. A. Cosgrave: I think that it is clear from the photograph that it was the only approach to the balcony. Naturally when the police were attacked they were bound to go the shortest and quickest way to get to the gallery from which they had been stoned, and I think that they were justified in going there. It may be that the constables ran ahead of the Sub-Inspector. But I think that they had every justification in going up to clear the gallery, and I for one cannot believe that there was any deliberate intention to desecrate the sacred building. Here I address myself particularly to my friend, Mr. Yamin Khan, who is an old friend of mine,—I have known him for the last 7 years, and he is a barrister of experience. Hear, hear, from the Nationalist Benches—I am not addressing myself to the sympathisers of the Congress on the opposite Benches

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Honourable Member has to address his observations to the Chair.

Mr. W. A. Cosgrave: The point I wanted to put was this. My friend Mr. Yamin Khan put his case extremely well and moderately but I would like to put this point. Supposing there was a balcony above the mosque and a bomb was thrown from that balcony or a pistol was fired from that balcony,—I believe and I hope that pistols are never fired from mosques,—would not the police have been justified in going into the mosque to arrest the culprits? All that has really emanated after all this thunder is, as far as I can see from this report, that the constables in the heat of the moment ran ahead of their superior officer,—and mind you, some of them were Muhammadans,—and ran into the mosque. Now, Sir, I thoroughly share all this respect for religious feelings, but I do think that some allowance must be made for constables who were being attacked with stones, especially just after two of them had been stabbed with knives, and I do think,—I know, Sir, I am addressing the whole House, but if I may say so I think my words may appeal more to the Members in the Centre of the House than to some of the Members sitting on the opposite Benches,—I do think that this is not a matter for censure of Government as a whole, and I hope that this Honourable House will not see any reason to adjourn as a mark of censure considering the difficult situation with which the Delhi police and the Delhi Magistrates have had to deal during the last week end.

Several Honourable Members: The question may now be put.

Sir Abdur Rahim (Calcutta and Suburbs: Muhammadan Urban): Mr. President, I will say just a few words about this matter. It was difficult for me to follow the last speaker. Whether he considers the occurrence as a serious one or not, I do not know exactly what his view is or the view of the Government. There can be no doubt whatever that this occurrence has aroused a very great deal of feeling in the community; in fact, I might say it has caused excitement and a great deal of unrest among the Muslims of this city, and I am afraid that this feeling will be reflected throughout the country. The view I take about this incident is that it is a natural consequence of the enforcement of the Ordinances and of the way in which they are being worked. Now, for instance, Mufti Kifayatullah is a very well known man, and he is certainly regarded as a religious head of the Muhammadan community throughout India (Applause). He is held in the very highest esteem and respect, and I am sure, whatever explanation Government may give about his arrest, the arrest of a man like Mufti Kifayatullah, will be resented very bitterly by Muhammadans throughout India. The Jamiat-i-Ulema, of which he is the President, is a body of theologians who are held in the highest respect by the community and whose advice is implicitly followed in all religious matters by the Mussalmans. I should like the Honourable the Home Member to consider whether the arrest of a man like that is not an event which is bound to excite very serious feelings in the Muhammadan community? Was it inevitable? This gentleman had gone to preside over a meeting. Whether he was actually proposed to the Chair or not, I do not know, but he had not certainly delivered any speech nor did any other member make a speech. I should have thought that under the circumstances the least that the police could have done was not to take action until something had been said by a man of Mufti Kifayatullah's position to justify the police in arresting him. Some of the processionists might have shouted slogans of an undesirable character, but Mufti Kifayatullah did not do so. Surely before the police arrested a man of his standing and position, they ought to have waited and seen what he was going to do. Supposing any Honourable Member of this House holding a position similar to anything like the position which Mufti Kifayatullah holds wanted to speak on the subject whether the North-West Frontier Ordinances were justified or not, is he liable to be arrested before he says anything which can come within the purview of the Ordinances or the ordinary law? Surely not. As regards the desecration of the mosque, it may be that desecration was not intended, but the facts do amount to desecration in the opinion of the Mussalmans who are concerned. Now, supposing some brickbats were thrown from the balcony, even then the duty of the police, unless they lost their heads, was to ask the men in charge of the mosque to stop the men inside from throwing brickbats and to see that they did not throw brickbats. That is the least they could have done before entering the mosque and assaulting the people inside the mosque. Conduct like this on the part of the police is bound to be resented by the community, and I therefore think that the least the Government can do in a matter like this, when some of the facts are disputed, is to institute an impartial inquiry. If they do that, and if the facts that may be elicited support the Government version, well and good, otherwise Government ought to take action against the officers concerned in this affair.

Several Honourable Members: The question may now be put, Sir.

Mr. President: I accept the closure.

The question is that the question be now put.

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: Sir, I think that generally speaking I may say that the remarks of the Honourable gentleman behind me to the effect that during the greater part of the debate the action of the police in dispersing the unlawful assembly has not been challenged and that the greater part of the debate concentrated upon the question of the mosque. The only subsequent speech which would tend to alter that general view is that of the Honourable and learned gentleman who has just resumed his seat. He referred to what he regarded as the impropriety on the part of the executive authorities of Delhi in arresting Mufti Kifayatullah before he had given any indication of the nature of the speech which he was about to make. I should like to say that on the day on which these occurrences took place Mufti Kifayatullah did make a very strong and a very violent speech attacking the Government, and subsequently the behaviour of the procession which he headed on the way to the Queen's Garden was certainly of such a character that it could not be regarded as a peaceful procession. It was duly warned by the City Magistrate before the police took action. Therefore, I do not think that there is any ground for suggesting that the action of the police was illegal or had anything whatever to do with the Ordinances. Action was taken under the ordinary law, the Criminal Procedure Code. I say, therefore, that, so far as that incident is concerned, there is no ground for the contention that the action was precipitate or unjustified.

I will pass very briefly to the question relating to the mosque. With regard to that, Honourable Members I think have been impressed by what was said by my Honourable friend Mr. Cosgrave with the executive experience that he possesses. It should be very carefully considered by the House in dealing with disorders of this kind the police have a specially difficult task when they have to enter narrow and confined lanes in order to check them with the utmost promptitude. Let me remind the House that, because the police were not able to do that with sufficient rapidity, only a year ago a very grave tragedy took place in another city in upper India. My point is that, when the police have to enter these narrow lanes, one of the greatest dangers to which they can possibly be exposed is that of missiles, brickbats, etc., thrown from above causing them serious injury, and sometimes even causing death—that is one of the greatest dangers to which they are exposed, and they cannot perform the duty or discharge the orders that are given to them until points of attack of that kind are cleared. And that, I think, was the unfortunate duty which fell upon the police in this case.

The Honourable and learned gentleman asked me whether Government considered this a serious matter. Most certainly Government considered it a serious matter. They considered it a serious matter that the police should have to disperse an unlawful assembly at all. They considered it a very serious matter that action had to be taken,—speedy, rapid, and if necessary, somewhat drastic action,—in order to prevent such an extension of disorder as might have involved the city of Delhi in a great calamity. I quite agree that the matter was very serious, and I sympathise myself very much indeed with the great concern which has been expressed on this subject by Honourable Members in the Centre Benches. (An Honourable Member: “That is only lip sympathy.”) But when I have to weigh the actual record of the occurrences, when I have to weigh the deliberate report of an officer of the experience and of the integrity of the present Senior Superintendent of Police, I am bound to give a greater degree of credit to the report of such a responsible officer than I can possibly give to a newspaper report, the authority of which is entirely unknown. Therefore, I am bound to hold, although the police officers in this case unfortunately had to enter this mosque, in view of the fact that the greater part of this police party were themselves Mussalmans and were under the direction of Mussalman officers, I cannot believe that anything was done in the way of deliberate and wanton damage, still less of desecration. I shall consider the views which have been expressed by my Honourable friend Mr. Shafee Daoodi in careful consultation with the Chief Commissioner, and I shall consider in consultation with him whether any further action is necessary in this matter. But I am bound to adhere to the views which I have already expressed, and if I am asked to compare the credit of a responsible report of a responsible officer, which has been communicated to me through the higher officers of the Administration, with that of a newspaper report, I am bound to accept the former in preference to an irresponsible report in the Press. Therefore, I ask the House to affirm that, in the unhappy, difficult and dangerous situation with which the Delhi authorities had to deal in the last two or three days, they have acted well in the discharge of their duty, and that being so, I submit that they are entitled to the confidence and the support of this House. (Applause.)

Mr. President: The question which I have to put is:

"That the House do now adjourn".

The Assembly divided:

(As the Division results were about to be announced, an Honourable Member came to the Secretary's table asking for permission to record his vote.)

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Leader of the House): It is a very important matter on which the House would like to have the considered ruling of the Chair, as to whether a Member who had not passed through the lobby at the proper time is entitled to vote?

Mr. D. K. Lahiri Chaudhury: On a point of information. It was the custom of the House that votes were counted before declaration in your predecessor's time

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Chair wishes to follow at present the precedent which was laid down before, namely, that votes are accepted at the table, but the Chair wishes to make it clear that it reserves to itself the power to reconsider the matter in all its aspects before giving its considered ruling. On the present occasion following past practice, it allows the votes to be recorded.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Tuesday, 15th March, 1932.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at Eleven of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

RATES FOR COMMON LABOUR IN THE DELHI PROVINCE.

791. Mr. E. F. Sykes: (a) Will Government please say what rates are being paid for common labour in the various Government Departments and Municipal bodies in the Delhi Province?

(b) If Government have any information as to the rates paid by private employers, will they be good enough to give them?

Mr. A. G. Olow: (a) and (b). I presume that the Honourable Member means by common labour unskilled labour. An endeavour will be made to ascertain the level of earnings for such labour on building work for Government and private employees. If reliable figures can be secured, they will be placed on the table.

Mr. E. F. Sykes: May I ask the Honourable Member if he means to say that he does not know what is being paid at the present moment?

Mr. A. G. Olow: Not by private employers, certainly. Sir.

Mr. E. F. Sykes: May I ask how long he will take to ascertain this?

Mr. A. G. Olow: I hope it will not take very long.

†792—800.

DISREGARD OF THE CHILD MARRIAGE RESTRAINT ACT.

801. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: (a) Will Government please state if they are aware that the Child Marriage Restraint Act of 1929 stands only in name on the Statute Book and is being utterly disregarded in practice?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state what steps, if any, they or the various provincial Governments to their knowledge have taken for the strict enforcement of the above Act?

(c) If the reply to part (b) be in the negative, will Government please state what measures they now propose to adopt in this matter?

The Honourable Sir James Ozerar: I would refer the Honourable Member to the reply I gave in this House to parts (b), (c) and (d) of starred question No. 72 on the 9th September, 1931, on the same subject.

†These questions were included in the list of questions on the 14th March, 1932.

NUMBER OF CONVICTIONS UNDER THE CHILD MARRIAGE RESTRAINT ACT;

802. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: Will Government please state, after enquiring from the various local Governments, the total number of convictions made in their respective provinces on account of disobedience of the Child Marriage Restraint Act?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: 34, according to the information available.

COST OF BRITISH AND INDIAN SOLDIERS AND OFFICERS IN INDIA.

803. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: (a) Will Government kindly inform the House of the approximate expenditure incurred on the maintenance of the British troops in India?

(b) Will Government please state the starting salary of an Indian soldier and also that of a British soldier?

(c) Will Government please also state the highest salary at present drawn by an Indian military officer and also by a British officer?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) About Rs. 13 crores a year.

(b) The minimum pay of an Indian sepoy is Rs. 16 a month; that of a British private Rs. 1/8/- a day.

(c) The most highly paid combatant Indian King's Commissioned officer so far is drawing Rs 975 a month, less a temporary cut of 10 per cent. The most highly paid British officer is His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, whose salary is Rs. 1 lakh a year, less a temporary cut of 15 per cent.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: I am sorry I could not catch the Honourable Member's answer: what is the pay of the Indian soldier and of the British soldier per month?

Mr. G. M. Young: Rs. 16 a month, and Rs. 1/8/0 a day, respectively.

RETRENCHMENT IN MILITARY EXPENDITURE.

804. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: (a) Will Government please state the total number of representations received by them urging the necessity of making drastic retrenchment in the military expenditure?

(b) What response do Government propose to make to the above representations and when?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) I am afraid that no count has been kept of such representations.

(b) Government have already responded. A memorandum showing the latest reductions in full was circulated to Honourable Members on the 7th March.

CENSORSHIP OF FOREIGN NEWSPAPER CORRESPONDENTS IN INDIA.

805. Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if the speeches delivered by the Right Honourable Sir Samuel Hoare in the British House of Commons on the 29th February last in the course of the debate on the India Office estimates were based on facts supplied by the Government of India?

(b) If so, will Government refer to his statement that "no check to-day was placed on any foreign newspaper correspondent in India in sending news to his country or any part of Europe", and say whether the restrictions regarding censorship to which Indian newspapers and Indian news agencies are subject do not apply to foreign newspaper correspondents?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) The Secretary of State is kept fully informed by the Government of India of all important matters and the Honourable Member may assume that the speeches referred to were made in the light of information in his possession.

(b) There is no censorship or interference with messages addressed to reputable newspapers or Press agencies outside India.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: May I know if Indian newspapers are subjected to a greater restriction in the matter of sending telegrams than English newspapers in this country?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I think there is a difference between the publication of a possibly alarmist or false report in Cawnpore, where it might immediately lead to disorder, and the publication of the same report in, say Carrickfergus where it would be innocuous.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Do I take it that the Indian correspondent is placed on the same footing as the European correspondent in this country in the matter of sending telegrams to newspapers in foreign countries?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: That, I believe, is so.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Do I take it that nothing depends upon the nationality of the correspondent but that everything depends upon the destination of the telegram?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: And the responsibility of the news agency or correspondent.

Mr. Jagan Nath Aggarwal: The Secretary of State is reported to have said—vide clause (b) of the question that "No check to-day was placed on any foreign newspaper correspondent in India in sending news to his country or any part of Europe". Is there any particular point in the phrase "foreign newspaper correspondent". Would any national of this country be placed in the same position?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I think this particular observation was intended to refer to correspondents of newspapers out of India.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Do I take it that the Indian correspondent of a foreign newspaper is in the same position as the foreign correspondent of a foreign newspaper working in India?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: Yes, I think that is so.

Diwan Bahadur Harbilas Sarda: Do the words "to his country or any part of Europe" exclude America?

The Honourable Sir James Orerar: Geographically, Sir, I think they cannot.

INCONVENIENT TIMINGS OF TRAINS AT ALIGARH.

806. Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad (on behalf of Haji Chaudhury Muhammad Ismail Khan): (a) Is it a fact that for the last four or five years, the 16 Down East Indian Railway express used to give connection to the Agra-Bareilly Passenger, No. 69 Up. at Aligarh?

(b) Is it also a fact that with effect from March 1st, 1932, this 16 Down express reaches Aligarh only a few minutes after the departure of this Agra-Bareilly passenger?

(c) Do Government know that it was the only convenient train for third class passengers specially who wanted to travel in the evening from Delhi to Bareilly? If so, what special necessity arose to discontinue this arrangement?

(d) Are Government prepared to consider the desirability of bringing this matter to the notice of the Agent, East Indian Railway, with a view to removing this new inconvenience to the travelling public at an early date?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) Prior to 1st March 1932, 16 Down was timed to pass through Aligarh before the arrival of 69 Up at that station. I have, however, not been able to verify how long this arrangement was in force, but am prepared to accept the Honourable Member's statement on this point.

(b) Yes. 16 Down arrives at Aligarh 15 minutes after the departure of 69 Up.

(c) According to the East Indian Railway Time Table in force from 1st March, 1932, a train leaves Delhi at 18-15 by which passengers can travel via Moradabad arriving at Bareilly at 3-19. Government are not aware of the reasons for the changes in the timings of 16 Down and 69 Up.

(d) I will send the Agent, East Indian Railway, a copy of the Honourable Member's question and of this answer for such action as he may consider necessary.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Why are the Commercial Managers changing the timings so often, to the great inconvenience of the public? Is it not due to the fact that they have nothing else to do?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I hope not, Sir.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: What is the meaning of negation? Do they not change the timings for no cogent reasons but simply to while away their time?

Mr. P. R. Rau: At present I believe the railways are always considering the possibility of reducing the number of trains owing to the fall in traffic.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: But you do not reduce the number of trains by changing the timings 10 minutes forward or backward?

Mr. P. B. Rau: If you alter the number of trains, you have necessarily to alter the timings also.

PROMOTION OF CERTAIN TOWN INSPECTORS OF POST OFFICES.

807. Mr. Muhammad Azhar Ali (on behalf of Mr. Uppi Saheb Bahadur): (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the posts of Town Inspectors attached to first class Head Post Offices in India which were time-scale appointments were converted into lower selection grade posts in 1927, and the then existing incumbents of the said posts were promoted to selection grade in preference to their seniors?

(b) Will Government be also pleased to state whether it is under contemplation to reconvert these posts into time-scale posts? If so, what are the reasons for it and will the existing incumbents, who were specially promoted for their qualifications as Town Inspectors, be allowed to remain in selection grade in other vacancies or revert to time-scale?

(c) If they will not be reverted, will Government kindly state the reasons for it?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) The facts as stated are substantially correct.

(b) This is one of the items of possible economies awaiting further investigation as suggested by the Posts and Telegraphs Retrenchment Sub-Committee, and Government are not in a position to anticipate their future line of action.

(c) Does not arise.

CLAIMS OF INDIAN HOLDERS OF ROUBLE NOTES.

808. Mr. Jagan Nath Aggarwal: (a) With reference to the answer given by Government to my question No. 1234, dated the 7th November, 1931, regarding the claims of Indian holders of rouble notes, will Government kindly inform the House if they are in a position to state whether the claims of such holders of notes have been referred to the Anglo-Asiatic Debts and Claims Committee sitting in London and if the same have been admitted?

(b) Are Government aware that considerable hardship has been caused to a large number of Central Asian traders in British India who had their funds locked up in these notes and have been patiently waiting for the settlement of these claims ever since 1917?

Sir Evelyn Howell: (a) The claims were so referred, but the negotiations have proved abortive.

(b) Government are aware that there may have been hardship in individual instances but can suggest no remedy.

Mr. Jagan Nath Aggarwal: Do I take it that this is now a closed chapter, and that there is no possibility of any relief being given?

Sir Evelyn Howell: The negotiations may of course be resumed at some future date.

NUMBER OF PERSONS DISCHARGED FROM THE OFFICE OF THE CONTROLLER OF MILITARY ACCOUNTS, LAHORE.

809. *Mr. Jagan Nath Aggarwal: (a) Will Government kindly inform the House of the number of persons recently discharged from the office of the Controller of Military Accounts, Lahore?

(b) What are the principles on which such discharges have taken place?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) It is presumed that the Honourable Member refers to the individuals who have been served with notices of discharge under the Retrenchment terms. If so, the number of those selected for compulsory retirement is 33, and of those who have volunteered for retirement is 21.

(b) Since the establishment of the Military Accounts Department is on an all-India list, the final selection was made on an all-India basis. To provide the material for this, Selection Boards were constituted in every Military Accounts office, and these Boards were required to submit classified lists of personnel with details as to age, length of service, community, etc. From these classified lists the final selection was made, following the general principles laid down by Government for the selection of personnel for retirement. In accordance with those principles, retrenchment was carried out in the following order:

(a) by the acceptance of voluntary resignations or retirements;

(b) by the compulsory retirement of those classified as persons whose work was so consistently unsatisfactory that their retention, while others were discharged, would be unjustifiable;

(c) by the discharge of selected men with 25 or more years' service or less than 10 years' service.

In the application of these principles the condition laid down by Government regarding communal proportions has been fulfilled: that is, on an all-India basis, the ratio between the various communities represented by their numbers as they stood before retrenchment has been maintained to the nearest practicable figure.

EMPLOYEES OF THE BENGAL NAGPUR RAILWAY.

810. *Mr. S. C. Mitra (on behalf of Mr. B. N. Misra): Will Government be pleased to state the number of employees in the Bengal Nagpur Railway drawing a salary of (a) Rs. 500 and above, (b) Rs. 50 to 499, and (c) Rs. 49 and below?

Mr. P. R. Rau: The information available will be found in Appendix F of Vol. I and Appendix C of Vol. II of the Report by the Railway Board on Indian Railways for 1930-31, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

PASSES ISSUED DURING HOLIDAYS ON THE BENGAL NAGPUR RAILWAY.

811. *Mr. S. C. Mitra (on behalf of Mr. B. N. Misra): (a) Will Government be pleased to state the number of passes issued by the Bengal Nagpur Railway in 1931:

(i) during the Durga Puja holidays,

(ii) during the Christmas holidays and

(iii) during the whole year 1931 besides the above mentioned occasions?

(b) If Government have no information, are they prepared to enquire and lay the information on the table of the House?

Mr. P. B. Rau: (a) Government have no information.

(b) The compilation of the information asked for would involve a very considerable amount of labour disproportionate to any use to which it could be put, and I regret, therefore, that I am unable to agree to obtain these particulars.

FEES CHARGED FROM VISITORS TO STEAMERS.

812. Mr. S. G. Jog: (a) Is it a fact that Government have authorized the various shipping companies to recover a fee of Rs. 3 per permit to allow visitors on board a steamer?

(b) If so, is the authority given to all companies or only to a few?

(c) If only to a few, will Government please state to which companies the authority is given?

(d) Is it a fact that such authority is given to companies on the understanding that such collections should be used for charitable purposes?

(e) Will Government state the amounts recovered by the companies during the last two years?

(f) Will Government state how these collections have been utilized by these companies?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: The Government of India are not in possession of complete information on the subject. Enquiries are being made from Local Governments, and on receipt of the information a reply will be laid on the table of the House.

NAMES OF ROADS IN NEW DELHI.

813. Mr. S. G. Jog: (a) Is it a fact that the different names given to different roads in New Delhi were given in consultation with somebody or any committee appointed for the said purpose?

(b) If so, will Government please state the name of that body or committee or department whatever that may be?

(c) Is that body or committee still functioning?

(d) If not, will Government please state which body at present is dealing with this matter, that is the naming of roads and associating them with some important personages of the past or present?

Mr. A. G. Olow: (a) and (b). An informal Committee consisting of the Chief Commissioner, the Chief Engineer, the Superintending Engineer and the Consulting Architects went into the matter and made various suggestions in 1919. These were adopted with minor alterations by the New Capital Committee at their meeting on the 24th December, 1919, and given effect to.

(c) No.

(d) The Government of India, in consultation with the Chief Commissioner, Delhi, and the Chief Engineer, Central Public Works Department, without prejudice to the rights of the New Delhi Municipal Committee in this matter, under section 179 of the Punjab Municipal Act, 1911.

REFUSAL TO EXHIBIT CERTAIN JEWELLERY AT MOHENJODARO.

814. Mr. K. P. Thampan (on behalf of Mr. Lalchand Navalrai): (a) With reference to the answers of Sir Frank Noyce to parts (d) and (e) of my starred question No. 58, given on the 26th January, 1932, in which it was stated that "There is no ground for the suggestion that there has been differential treatment between Indians and Europeans" in the matter of exhibiting the jewellery to visitors at Mohenjodaro, has the attention of Government been drawn to a signed article by Mr. A. S. Iyengar published in the Hindustan Times of 22nd and 24th February, 1932, under the heading "The Message of Mohenjodaro"?

(b) What steps have Government taken on the complaint of the writer that although Mr. Mackay, the officer in charge of explorations at Mohenjodaro, protested innocence as to the charge of racial discrimination contained in my question, he refused to exhibit the jewellery even when Mr. A. S. Iyengar made a specific request therefor to him? If not, why has no action been taken?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state if on this occasion when the jewellery was refused to be shown to Mr. Iyengar, the key of the safe was available or not?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) Yes.

(b) As no definite instructions had at that time been issued in regard to the exhibition of jewellery to visitors to Mohenjodaro and, as Mr. Iyengar did not press the point, the jewellery was not shown to him. Instructions have however since been issued that the jewellery should be shown to any visitors or students of archaeology who are genuinely interested in it. It has also been impressed upon the staff attached to the Museum and excavations that every courtesy should be shown to visitors.

(c) The key of the safe containing the jewellery was available.

ACCOUNTS OF DISCOVERIES AT MOHENJODARO.

815. Mr. K. P. Thampan (on behalf of Mr. Lalchand Navalrai): (a) Has the complete collection of writings on the Mohenjodaro discoveries by Sir John Marshall arrived in India and are any of the new volumes available in the Library of the House?

(b) Is it a fact that the cost of each new volume is over Rs. 150?

(c) Do Government propose to take up the suggestion of Mr. A. S. Iyengar that accounts of excavations and discoveries together with photographs be published in popular language in English and in principal vernaculars? If not, why not?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) Copies of Sir John Marshall's work on Mohenjodaro, which is in three volumes, have only recently been received in India. A set will be placed in the Library of the House.

(b) No, the price of the complete set is £12-12-0.

(c) The suggestion will receive the careful consideration of Government.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Is it a fact that Sir John Marshall gets a share from the sale proceeds of the book?

Sir Frank Noyce: No, not from the sale proceeds of this book.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Who has paid the cost of the printing of this book?

Sir Frank Noyce: The publishers, Sir.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: And not the Government?

Sir Frank Noyce: No. The book is published by Messrs. Probsthain and Co.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: And they have paid the cost of printing?

Sir Frank Noyce: Obviously.

ABSENCE OF THE SUPERINTENDENT OF THE WIRELESS BRANCH OF THE OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR GENERAL OF POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS.

816. Mr. Muhammad Anwar-ul-Azim: Will Government be pleased to state:

- (a) the total period of absence of the Superintendent in the Wireless Branch of the Director General, Posts and Telegraphs' office after the retirement from the service of Mr. deMagry;
- (b) whether any Superintendent was employed in the Wireless Branch during Mr. deMagry's leave; if so, whether he was a man of the Postal Branch or Telegraph Branch of the Department; and
- (c) what the reasons are for his absence from the Wireless Branch?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) The Wireless Branch dispensed with a Superintendent from the 18th July to the 23rd December, 1931.

(b) Yes; a senior assistant of the telegraph traffic branch officiated as Superintendent.

(c) It was considered that he could be more usefully employed as officiating Superintendent in the branch where he had previously been working.

EMPLOYMENT OF A SEPARATE SUPERINTENDENT FOR THE WIRELESS BRANCH OF THE OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR GENERAL OF POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS.

817. Mr. Muhammad Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Is it a fact that the Wireless Branch of the Director General, Posts and Telegraphs' office is now located in a room in which the Engineering Branch of the same office is also located?

(b) Is it a fact that besides the Director, Wireless, who is in charge of the Wireless Branch, the major portion of the wireless technical matters is the concern of the Chief Engineer, Telegraphs, who is in charge of the Engineering Branch more than any other Branch Officer of the Department?

(c) If the reply be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state the necessity for re-employing a separate Superintendent from the Postal Branch instead of placing the Branch under the supervision of the Superintendent of the Engineering Branch?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) Yes, as regards the clerical staff.

(b) The meaning of the question is obscure. The Director of Wireless is the head of the Wireless Branch and is primarily responsible for all Wireless technical matters. He refers certain questions to the Chief Engineer who is naturally more concerned than non-technical branch officers with engineering technical matters.

(c) The Wireless Branch is a distinct section of the office which requires its own Superintendent, especially now that the officer strength of the branch has been reduced owing to retrenchment.

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

RETRENCHMENTS IN THE MILITARY FINANCE DEPARTMENT.

173. Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the total number of men in the ministerial as well as the officers' staff in the Military Finance Department as it stood before and after the retrenchments were given effect to?

(b) Is it a fact that, generally speaking, when carrying out retrenchments, care is taken to safeguard the interests of the permanent men as compared with those who hold temporary appointments in the office concerned or are on deputation from other Departments?

(c) Is it a fact that the above principle has not been followed in the Military Finance Department and that not a single man who is on deputation from the Military Accounts Department has been axed and that all the retrenched men belong to the substantive staff of the Military Finance Department?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a)

	Before retrench- ment.	After retrench- ment.
Officers	11*	10*	*Excludes the Deputy Financial Adviser (Royal Air Force), who gets Rs. 150 only from civil estimates, the balance of pay being borne by Military Accounts Department.
Ministerial establishment including Gazetted Superintendents.	108	98

(b) In carrying out retrenchment consideration is given to the interests of all classes who may be affected, and an endeavour is made to find the solution which will cause the least hardship consistent with the maintenance of efficiency. In the Military Finance Branch, the establishment includes, as a regular element, a proportion of personnel drawn from the Military Accounts Department and the interests of that class require consideration equally with the interests of the ordinary Secretariat element.

(c) No. One of the Military Accounts staff was reverted to his Department. The number of the ordinary Secretariat personnel who were retrenched is 7. On the basis of the total numbers in each category the Military Accounts element took a proportionately larger share of the burden than the Secretariat element. It must be remembered that heavy retrenchments are being made in the Military Accounts Department and that the reversion of personnel from the Military Finance Branch merely transfers the burden to that Department.

RECRUITMENT OF ASSISTANT FINANCIAL ADVISERS FROM THE MILITARY ACCOUNTS DEPARTMENT.

174. Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: (a) Will Government be pleased to state why one of the appointments of Assistant Financial Advisers is reserved for an individual of the Military Accounts Department in addition to the Deputy Financial Advisers who are also recruited from that source?

(b) Will Government kindly say whether in view of the fact that one of the posts of Assistant Financial Advisers has been abolished, it is still proposed to reserve one such appointment for a Military Accounts man? If so, will Government please state reasons?

(c) Is it a fact that no Indian Assistant Financial Adviser has ever been appointed to the superior staff of the Military Accounts Department? If not, why not?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) The reservation of one post of Assistant Financial Adviser for a gazetted officer of the Military Accounts Department is in accordance with the view that the efficiency of the Military Finance Branch is increased by a leaven in all grades of personnel who have had practical experience in a Military Accounts office. Moreover, the reservation of this post is some measure of compensation for the fact that Assistant Financial Advisers of the Secretariat category are eligible for promotion, by selection, to the Superior Service of the Military Accounts Department.

(b) The reasons for the reservation of one post for a Military Accounts officer are not affected by the reduction by one of the total number of posts of Assistant Financial Adviser.

(c) The reply is in the affirmative. Vacancies in the Superior Service of the Military Accounts Department are filled to the extent of two-thirds by direct recruitment and to the extent of one-third by promotion. Assistant Financial Advisers have no claim to promotion to the Superior Service but are eligible for consideration along with gazetted officers of the Subordinate Service of the Military Accounts Department. Promotions are made on the recommendation of a Selection Board. No Indian Assistant Financial Adviser has so far been recommended by the Selection Board for promotion.

MILITARY ACCOUNTS DEPARTMENT MEN ON DEPUTATION IN THE MILITARY FINANCE DEPARTMENT.

175. Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Is it a fact that there are persons in the Budget Section of the Military Finance Department on deputation from the Military Accounts Department? If so, what rates of pay and allowances are they drawing?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: The reply to the first part of the question is in the affirmative. As regards the second part, I lay a statement on the table.

Statement showing rates of pay and allowances drawn by the Accountants and Clerks of the Military Accounts Department on deputation in the Budget Section of the Military Finance Department.

			Rs.

APPOINTMENT OF UNDER SECRETARIES IN THE MILITARY FINANCE DEPARTMENT.

176. Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is contemplated to create some posts of “Under Secretaries” in the Military Finance Department? If so, what is to be the grade of pay of the officers and how are they to be recruited?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state whether at the time when the officer holding the post of Assistant Financial Adviser was axed, there were two vacancies in that grade? Are the posts referred to still filled up temporarily?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) The reply to the first part of the question is in the negative. As an experimental measure of economy one post of Deputy Financial Adviser is being reduced in status and pay to that of a Junior Deputy Financial Adviser. The post is to be filled by an officer of class II of the Superior Service of the Military Accounts Department, who will draw his substantive departmental pay with additional pay at Rs. 200 a month.

(b) The reply is in the affirmative.

APPOINTMENT OF MUSLIMS TO VARIOUS APPOINTMENTS IN AJMER-MERWARA.

177. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Is it a fact that out of half a dozen or more judicial gazetted appointments in the grade of Rs. 300—20—600/40—800 in Ajmer-Merwara none is held by a Muslim, and that all the gazetted revenue appointments in Ajmer-Merwara are held by non-Muslims?

(b) Is it a fact that all the posts of clerks in the English line in Ajmer-Merwara in the grade of Rs. 275—15—350, the grade of 200—10—270, and the grade of 150—7—185 are held by non-Muslims?

(c) Is it a fact that of the 21 posts in the upper division of clerks in the English line in Ajmer-Merwara only two are held by Muslims?

(d) Is it a fact that out of 43 posts in the lower division of clerks in the English line in Ajmer-Merwara only four are Muslims?

(e) Is it a fact that all the posts of clerks in the vernacular line in Ajmer-Merwara in the grade of Rs. 200—8—240, the grade of Rs. 150—5—200, the grade of Rs. 150—7—185, and the grade of Rs. 90—5—120—^a—150 are held by non-Muslims?

(f) Is it a fact that there is no Muslim holding a post of above Rs. 20 per mensem in the service of the Ajmer-Merwara Forest, Jail, and Income-tax departments, except one jamadar in the jail?

(g) Is it a fact that out of six appointments in the Excise Preventive staff in Ajmer-Merwara only one is held by a Muslim?

(h) Is it a fact that Muslim graduates are kept in the lower grade of clerks in the English line, viz., Rs. 40—2—60—3—90, in Ajmer-Merwara whereas non-Muslim non-graduates are holding posts in the higher grades, including the grade of Rs. 275—15—350?

(i) Is it a fact that the Muslims form about 35 per cent. of the total population of Ajmer-Merwara?

(j) If what are stated at parts (a) to (i) above are facts, what steps do Government propose to take to secure an adequate representation, on the population basis, of the Muslims in Government service in Ajmer-Merwara?

Sir Evelyn Howell: (a) None of the 5 Judicial and 3 Revenue gazetted appointments in the grade mentioned is held by a Muhammadan, nor does a member of this community hold either of the other two revenue gazetted posts in this District. The highest judicial post, that of Additional District and Session Judge on Rs. 1,000—50—1,250, is held by a Muslim.

(b) Yes.

(c) Yes.

(d) No.

(e) Yes.

(f) Yes, so far as the Forest and Income-tax Departments are concerned.

No, as regards the Jail Department.

(g) Yes.

(h) No distinction is made between Muslims and non-Muslims in making promotions from the Lower to the Higher grades. There are two Muslim graduates in the lower grade, one of whom has taken his degree since he was recruited. On passing the prescribed tests they will be promoted in the ordinary course.

(i) No. Seventeen per cent.

(j) The questions contain material omissions and mis-statements. 28 per cent. of the posts in the various branches of the clerical cadre (44 out of 156) are held by Muslims. A Muslim holds the highest judicial appointment. Three of the eight posts of Tahsildar and Naib Tahsildar are held by Muslims, and these will be eligible in due course for promotion to the higher (gazetted) posts. Muslims are well represented in the higher appointments in other departments such as Police and Education. It so happens that at present none of the 8 Revenue and Judicial appointments in the Rs. 300—800 grade is held by a Muslim. The incumbents of these posts are senior officials whose services obviously cannot be dispensed with merely to create a vacancy for a Muslim.

RECRUITMENT OF TWO UNQUALIFIED NON-MUSLIM CLERKS IN AJMER-MERWARA.

178. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: Is it a fact that two non-Muslims, one under-graduate and the other an unpassed Commercial Diploma candidate have been directly recruited in Government service in the Upper Division of clerks in the English line in Ajmer-Merwara, and that the rules allow the direct recruitment of only graduates in the said Upper Division? If so, why were the two candidates referred to directly recruited?

Sir Evelyn Howell: This question apparently relates to one appointment made in 1925 and another in 1928. The persons appointed had special qualifications, and their recruitment did not involve the infringement of any rule.

NON-APPOINTMENT OF QUALIFIED MUSLIMS IN AJMER-MERWARA.

179. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Are Government aware that a large number of Muslim graduates and LL.B.'s have been unsuccessfully trying for appointments in Government service in Ajmer-Merwara, whereas the local Administration has been defending its policy of not giving the Muslims adequate representation in Government service by the argument that competent Muslims are not available?

(b) If so, what action do Government propose to take in the matter?

Sir Evelyn Howell: (a) and (b). The appointments in this small district are very limited in number and there is a very large number of graduate candidates for any vacancy that may from time to time occur. There have been a few Muslim graduates and LL.B.'s among the unsuccessful candidates, but the claims of all suitable candidates of all communities are fully considered when appointments are made.

APPOINTMENT OF MUSLIMS TO THE OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER, AJMER-MERWARA.

180. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Is it a fact that the post of the Superintendent of the office of the Commissioner, Ajmer-Merwara, has never been held by a Muslim?

(b) Is it a fact that the non-Muslim who holds the post of the Head clerk of the office of the Commissioner, Ajmer-Merwara, is only a matriculate?

(c) Is it a fact that the present Superintendent of the office of the Commissioner, Ajmer-Merwara, has already been given several extensions of service?

(d) If what are stated at parts (a) to (c) above are facts, do Government propose to give no further extension to the said Superintendent and to appoint a Muslim graduate on his retirement?

Sir Evelyn Howell: (a) Yes.

(b) Yes. He is an exceptionally experienced and capable clerk with a record of over 28 years of excellent service to his credit.

(c) No.

(d) It is not possible to earmark the selection post of Superintendent, which requires very special qualifications, for any particular community.

NON-APPOINTMENT OF QUALIFIED MUSLIMS IN AJMER-MERWARA.

181. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Is it a fact that under the present Commissioner of Ajmer-Merwara the claims of the Muslims to increased representation in Government service have been repeatedly disregarded?

(b) Is it a fact that the said Commissioner has appointed a matriculated non-Muslim Girdawar to the post of a Naib-Tehsildar overlooking the applications of Muslim L.L.B.'s and graduates?

Sir Evelyn Howell: (a) No.

(b) The appointment to which this question apparently relates was made in accordance with seniority and no candidates' claims were overlooked.

APPOINTMENT OF CERTAIN STATION MASTERS ON THE BOMBAY, BARODA AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY.

182. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: With reference to the Government's reply to starred question No. 1033, on the subject of the appointment of certain Assistant Station Masters on the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway, given in the Legislative Assembly on the 20th March, 1931, will Government please state whether the Agent of the said Railway has taken any action in the matter? If so, what?

Mr. P. R. Rau: Government have no information.

TERMINATION OF THE SERVICES OF CERTAIN EMPLOYEES ON THE BOMBAY, BARODA AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY.

183. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: With reference to the Government's reply to part (c) of starred question No. 1032 (relating to the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway authorities utilizing clause 2 of the service agreement of the employees of the Traffic Department in the said railway in terminating the services of the employees who have put in many years' services), given in the Legislative Assembly on the 20th March, 1931, will Government please state whether they have received any report on the subject from the Agent of the said Railway? If so, will Government please place the report on the table of the House?

Mr. P. R. Rau: Government have neither asked for, nor received any report.

TERMINATION OF THE SERVICES OF CERTAIN EMPLOYEES ON THE BOMBAY, BARODA AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY.

184. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: With reference to the Government's reply to parts (d) and (e) of starred question No. 1032 (relating to the termination of services of employees of the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway), given in the Legislative Assembly on the 20th March, 1931, will Government please state:

- (a) what are the rules which empower the Administration of the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway to terminate the services of an employee without assigning any specific reason;
- (b) what are the reasons that justify the giving of such arbitrary powers to the authorities of the said Railway of terminating the services of their employees without assigning any specific reason;
- (c) whether the authorities of the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway possess the same powers of terminating the services of an employee of theirs even after the enforcement of "the rules and regulations of discharge and dismissal of subordinates" published in Memo. No. E./60/C.-2, dated the 12th June, 1931, of the Agent of the said Railway; and
- (d) if the reply to part (c) be in the negative, whether Government are prepared to instruct the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway authorities to re-instate the employees of the said railway whose services have been terminated without assigning any specific reason?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) It is not a matter of rules, but of conditions in the service agreements.

(b) All railways have similar conditions in the service agreements of their employees. They are necessary to secure the commercial working of railways.

(c) The rules referred to do not remove the power to discharge without assigning reasons.

(d) Does not arise.

TERMINATION OF THE SERVICES OF CERTAIN EMPLOYEES ON THE BOMBAY, BARODA AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY.

185. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: With reference to the Government's reply to part (f) of starred question No. 1032 (relating to the termination of services of the employees of the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway), given in the Legislative Assembly on the 20th March, 1931, will Government please state the reasons for refusal to instruct the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway administration to re-instate the employees whose services have been terminated without assigning any specific reasons in the order terminating their services?

Mr. P. R. Rau: The matter is entirely within the competence of the Railway Company.

BILL PASSED BY THE COUNCIL OF STATE LAID ON THE TABLE.

Secretary of the Assembly: Sir, in accordance with the provisions of rule 25 of the Indian Legislative Rules I lay on the table a Bill to validate certain suits relating to public matters which was passed by the Council of State on the 14th March, 1932.

THE GENERAL BUDGET—LIST OF DEMANDS—contd.

DEMAND No. 28—EXECUTIVE COUNCIL—contd.

Retrenchment.

Mr. S. C. Mitra (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I move:

"That the Demand under the head 'Executive Council' be reduced by Rs. 100."

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): On a point of order, Sir. Before Mr. Mitra moves his motion, I should like to know what has happened to the motion that was moved yesterday which was not terminated.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Honourable Member is aware of the arrangement which the House unanimously agreed to. Yesterday was allotted to the Nationalist Party, and if the motion that was put before the House could not be carried to vote, it dropped. Today is the day allotted to the Independent Party and the Chair has called upon Mr. Mitra to move his motion.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: Sir, I have been put in charge of this motion on behalf of my Party to initiate discussion about the general question of retrenchment. My duty will be in my speech to do the spade-work and I expect other Members of my Party and other friends belonging to other Parties will develop the general proposition. My leader, Sir Abdur Rahim, who was the Chairman of the most important Sub-Committee namely, the

[Mr. S. C. Mitra.]

General Purposes Sub-Committee, will deal with the general principles and higher questions of finance. Sir, this is the first time that I am taking part in a Budget discussion, although I have been in this House for more than five years, because I belonged to the Swaraj Party of which I was the Chief Whip. The Party followed the principle of obstruction because they maintained that, without political control in the general administration, it was futile attempting to have any control over finance. As a matter of fact, it has been said by a great Bengali leader of public opinion that "a subject nation has no politics" and unless we can get rid of the subjection, it is no use to try to control the finances of the country. I shall wait and see as to what will be the result of my change of policy by trying to criticise the Government on their Demands and asking them to mend their way. Sir George Schuster in the concluding portion of his speech said:

"On a broad review I think we may feel satisfied with the position. We can face next year with a prospect of a fairly substantial surplus."

Later on he says:

"If one looks round the country and at the outward signs of its economic and financial position, while I fully recognise that the difficulties are still immense and that large sections of the people are in dire straits, owing to the present low level of prices and trade depression, nevertheless there is not a total absence of encouraging signs."

Further on he says:

"Even if the sales of gold may to some extent represent a forced realisation of savings, yet as against this there are indications that the masses in India still have a considerable amount of money available for investment."

Then he illustrates this by a reference to the case of Savings Banks. My reading of the situation is that the prosperity of this country should not be so easily guessed by the fact of the mere investment of a few crores of rupees in the Savings Banks. We have found that there has been a serious fall in the Customs revenue all-round, and the railway earnings have gone down to a considerable extent, and in a large part of the country people had even recourse to non-payment of taxes and rents. The purchasing power of the people is very low. This shows the real condition of the people and not the mere investment of 6 crores of rupees by the middle-class people in Postal Cash Certificates. I wonder what it is that is common between India and the other countries, so far as the Government are concerned. In every self-governing country the primary purpose for which the Government exists is to look after and administer to the social and the beneficent services for the people. In any country if we look for the main functions of the Government, we will find that its first concern is the national well-being of its people. Every free country has its system of free education, not only primary, but in many cases secondary, also; there is ample provision for medical relief; there is provision for old-age pensions, sickness, insurance, and above all it looks to the solution of the unemployment question as one of the most important of its various functions. What do we find in India? When we look to India, we find the Government here are primarily concerned with law and order first, and next they look after the scales of pay of officers and civil servants, and next they try to lessen the burden of England to as great an extent as possible. We pay for Persia Rs. 6,95,000, for Kabul Rs. 3,63,000, for China £12,000 and for Aden £150,000 and these large sums go to lessen the burden of England to some extent apart from the military burden that India bears for Imperial purposes. These are more the concern of the Government of India than the vital issues that affect the people of India. We see that all other countries in Europe and America are anxious to solve their unemployment question. Here we have never heard this question even being raised. When we see countries like Germany and England are in dire necessity for funds, and when they speak of a financial crisis, it is to solve their unemployment problem which is increasing and they take recourse to retrenchment. What do we find in India? Do the Government in India ever care to consider it as their duty to solve the unemployment question? If anybody ever intended to try to solve this great national problem, it was that "naked faqir", Mahatma Gandhi, now rotting in jail. He suggested that by the introduction of the spinning wheel, to a certain extent the unemployment question could be solved. I consider that the true functions of a Government, a Government that really cared for its people, and any Government worthy to be called a Government should look after these social and beneficent activities for the people. It won't do in future for the Government only to care for the law and order and payment for the police and the soldiers and for lessening of the burden of England and then declare in the House that the condition in India is satisfactory and the country is prospering. The other day it was really a lamentable thing to see my Honourable friends Mr. Das, Mr. Mody and Mr. Joshi quarrelling amongst themselves as to on whom the additional burden of taxation should fall. They are patriotic gentlemen and they must know that the limit of taxation both for the rich and the poor has already long ago been reached. You always find that when the Government put some tax on luxuries, the law of diminishing returns operates. You do not get more money by extra taxation. So it was no use on the part of Honourable Members on this side of the House to quarrel amongst ourselves as to who should be taxed more. The other day my Honourable friend Mr. Das was saying that we should devise some means, some additional sources of taxation. Has it not been already proved, have not the Government themselves known that the limit of taxation has long ago been reached in this country where the average income of a man according to all calculations is less than two annas a day. The Honourable the Finance Member threw out an indirect hint that he had some chance of getting more money from salt and kerosene. Everybody knows and it is an elementary thing in economics that some money may be had from inelastic demands where the primary necessities of life are taxed. But is it fair taxation, is it good finance which any Honourable Member should be proud of mentioning in this House? I do not wish to level any personal charge against the Honourable the Finance Member who has had experience of three Continents. I know that had it been a free India and if we could get the services of a gentleman like Sir George Schuster, he would have given us a different Budget. Every year he goes on changing his views and principles. Every day he knows our position better and he feels his own helpless position, that whatever he may think to be for the good of the country, he will not be free to enforce it, in this unfortunate country. There is the Secretary of State for India who will pull him from the back at every stage on higher financial questions when England's interest is at stake; there are the Local Governments on the other side, and above all there is the Civil Service, all these in their turn will put obstacles in his way. The very astute and the keen intellectual man that he is, he is doing his best under the circumstances. I say that really the true functions of a Government are not being discharged in this country and so it is useless to compare the Government of this country with that of any other country. As a matter of fact when this Government agreed to retrenchment, they felt that there was no way out of it and that there was no chance and no avenue for fresh taxation. As regards retrenchment, I shall read out to the House from the speech of the Honourable Sir George Schuster, showing that he himself did not put much faith in retrenchment. In his speech on 9th March, 1931 he said:

"I maintain that we have gone as far as we could go in the making of cuts, which would not interfere with the efficient working of the machinery of Government, I want to satisfy Honourable Members opposite on this, and Honourable Members opposite, I take it, want to be satisfied, and this is where the difficulty comes. Honourable Members say,—I refer particularly to what my Honourable friend Sir Abdur Rahim said in his speech. 'You have got to satisfy as that you have done all that is possible to cut down expenditure before we listen to your demands for new taxation'. Quite a reasonable attitude, and I am quite prepared to admit that we have got to satisfy this House. But, how are we going to satisfy them? They do not accept our general statements, and that is one of the reasons why I thought that a Retrenchment Committee, on the lines which I had proposed, would be of great value. I come before this House and say, 'I have done all that is reasonably possible now, but I think that to meet abnormal circumstances something more might possibly be done, and I want to have the support of non-official Benches in further demands for economy. I want to give non-official Members a chance of satisfying themselves that everything has been done, because I quite agree that it is only after they have done that, they, in the discharge of their public duties, are justified in voting for new taxation.'"

My leader, Sir Abdur Rahim, agreed to serve on these Committees and I do not know whether he will not repent years afterwards the result of his action. This country has felt the curse of these Retrenchment Committees. I say not in anger, but I feel when my countrymen tell me that these retrenchment proposals meant only the dismissal of a large number of lower paid officials in this distressing time. I will have to say a great deal about this later on. The Government have not really touched the sources where from they can get some money for this poor country. They have gone about the business in the wrong way. Now, as regards the compensation that was given to some of these retrenched people, I see that even on the last occasion when people were retrenched on the Incheape Committee's Report, they were allowed 20 per cent. enhanced pension subject to full pension of the grade. I will quote from the circular:

"Those who have completed ten years or over will be granted the pension admissible under Article 474 of the Civil Service Regulations together with an additional percentage which will be decided on the merits of each case but will not in any case exceed 20 per cent. The total pension will be subject to the limit of the full pension admissible under the ordinary rules."

As a matter of fact they were given 20 per cent. additional pension up to the limit of the full pension which is 50 per cent. of a man's pay. But now under our present scheme these people are given only half a month's gratuity for each year's they have served in addition to their pension. I have made some calculations on some figures, and this is what I find. Suppose a man gets Rs. 300; he is a Second Division clerk, his grade being up to Rs. 350. Now according to the Incheape scheme he would have got Rs. 150 plus 20 per cent., i.e., Rs. 80. But his maximum pension being half of his pay it will go up to Rs. 175. But according to the present scheme if he is a man with 25 years' service, then for the five years loss of career he will get $2\frac{1}{2}$ months' pay which is roughly about Rs. 750. But the commutation value of this Rs. 25, i.e., Rs. 175—Rs. 150 of pension would have been approximately Rs. 2,500 or Rs. 3,000. Now he gets only Rs. 750 on the present scale of compensation. Then also as regards travelling expenses the present rules are very harsh. They get only repatriation T. A. and not ordinary transfer T. A. which is on a higher scale and includes incidental allowances. These people came into your service knowing full well that they could only be discharged for gross negligence of duty or some such major fault. Now for your purposes you have to do away with their services, and in consideration of this the General Purposes Committee made particular suggestions for compensation for people getting a lower scale of pay or people getting Rs. 200 or 300. But some of our recommendations, which were of use in retrenching these people, were accepted, but in giving them compensation not a word has been said about our recommendation.

Then, Sir, I shall show from the figures how they are manipulated by the Finance Department for their purposes. At the time of the supplementary Budget it was necessary to show that by retrenchment Government will get less money and for compensation while they will have to pay more, so that the effective result of retrenchment will be lost. The figures will presently show how an expert body like the Finance Department have miscalculated them or have intentionally misled this House. Sir George Schuster in his speech at page 169 gives the figures. He says:

"In my speech on first introducing the Emergency Finance Bill in September I indicated that as regards civil expenditure we hoped to achieve retrenchment measures providing for a reduction of Rs. 3.25 lakhs, against which we allowed for terminal charges, compensation, etc., about 75 lakhs."

What are the actual figures now as he presents them?

"The net figure (to be compared with my earlier figure of Rs. 2.50 lakhs) is increased to 4.00 lakhs."

He accounted for 2.50 lakhs for the next year at the time of the supplementary Budget, but he actually found that the retrenchment was to the tune of 4 crores. While for compensation he thought that he would have to pay 75 lakhs, actually, according to his own figures, it is 33 lakhs. I am quoting his own figures. So you see he cuts both ways. As regards retrenchment Sir George Schuster's figures go in one way. He gave this House to understand that it will be in round figures 2.50 lakhs, he finds it 4 crores. While for compensation, where our people are concerned, he said he would have to pay 75 lakhs, he actually pays for all retrenched people only 33 lakhs. That shows that when it is necessary for a supplementary Budget the officers of the Finance Department are masters of jugglery. They can make a deficit Budget turn into a surplus Budget and vice versa, if they so like.

Now I shall go to these figures from the report of the Special Retrenchment Officer, Mr. Nixon. I am glad he is present here and he will be able to point out the wrong figures if I quote any. In the second summary of the result of retrenchment operations, in the first four pages he has covered these points. Sir, the General Purposes Committee alone in their first Report suggested retrenchment of 121.21 lakhs; in the second report 168.57, and in the third Report 133.18. In all, the General Purposes Committee recommended retrenchment of 423.18 lakhs. I find that in the third page of Mr. Nixon's report he says that in our second Report we have recommended retrenchment only for 153·8 lakhs. That is not correct because he has not taken account of 15 lakhs on the Lee concessions. Government in their wisdom may decide that they will not touch a pice of that, but when they speak of the General Purposes Committee's recommendation, they should include these 15 lakhs also, that is of the Lee concessions. Out of this Mr. Nixon takes out 31 lakhs for Ecclesiastical expenditure. Then it leaves 124 lakhs, of which they have accepted 86 lakhs, to which they added another 19½ lakhs, making a total of 105½ lakhs and out of our third Report, Government accepted a reduction of 72 lakhs. So we find that in the supplementary Budget, Sir George Schuster says that he accepted only further retrenchment of 90 lakhs from the Demands that were to be examined by the General Purposes Committee. But, as a matter of fact, of these 90 lakhs, 23 lakhs are automatic, because of the Census operations which have largely ceased from this year. So really he accepted only 70 lakhs, but according to their own figures they have given effect to about 177 lakhs. I give these figures to prove conclusively that an expert body like the Finance Department commits such gross mistakes. They also, in putting forward their supplementary Budget, minimised the amount for retrenchment and put in compensation, which they now find to be 33 lakhs for all and 22 lakhs concerning the General Purposes Committee, at 75 lakhs, i.e., more than 3 times as much. From this I think I have proved that these figures, in the way in which they have been calculated, are manipulated. Of course the Government have carried out reductions in addition to what we suggested, because law and order must be maintained, and the expenditure for defence and police must not be touched. This is the principle on which they have acted. The General Purposes Committee definitely recommended that no reduction should be made in educational, medical and public health expenditure, but reductions in the extravagant scale have been made in the beneficial Departments, and police expenditure has not been touched. Government have crippled these beneficial subjects and departments. This is how even the 65 per cent. of reductions they have accepted is made up. Of course the Lee concessions cannot be reduced. The police must not be touched. The expenditure relating to defence, part of which is cleverly debited to civil charges, must not be cut. Ecclesiastical establishment must be maintained, because part of the expenditure is military expenditure and part of it benefits vested interests. So the only heads left are education, medical and public health and some other Budget heads.

As regards how far retrenchment has been carried out amongst Indians, some figures of the total number have been given: it is said that 299 officers and about 5,279 clerks have been reduced. If we look to the Demands, we get some indirect evidence as to how many Indians are affected. Of course it is not mentioned here how many Indians and how many Europeans have been affected; but from page 619 of the Demands for Grants, we find that that Demand—No. 764—Expenditure on Retrenched Personnel charged to revenue—gives the expenditure on retrenchment of personnel by leave salary in India and in England and repatriation charges. From that I find that the total under non-voted comes to Rs. 275,000, of which Rs. 104,000 is to be spent in England: that is to say, the European retrenched personnel will get Rs. 104,000 as against

Rs. 1,71,000 for the Indians; which means that a larger number of Indian non-voted officers has been reduced. The spokesmen of Government have on more than one occasion stated that Indianisation will not be retarded as a result of retrenchment. But this is not all. Against the Rs. 1,04,000 required for European officers, the total amount required for Indian officers and clerks is Rs. 20,96,000. Honourable Members will thus observe that, against the insignificant number of European retrenched personnel, a large number of Indian officers, voted and non-voted, have been sent away, because it may be taken for granted that though the amount is Rs. 1,04,000 for Europeans, the scale of pay for them is so high that when we come to know the actual number of Europeans retrenched later on, the House will be in a position to judge whether the progress of Indianisation has been maintained.

Before I come to the details of these Demands, to show how far the Government have accepted the advice of the Retrenchment Committees, I would like to say something about the method by which retrenchment has been carried out. I understand that they have passed certain orders for retrenchment—and here I am speaking subject to correction: I understand in the first category come people who are incompetent or not quite up to the mark; secondly, officers who have put in more than 30 years' service; thirdly, officers who have put in more than 25 years' service, and then fourthly, officers who have put in less than 10 years' service. Now these classes are not mutually exclusive. That is to say, it is not as if when the first category is exhausted, you come to the second; and when the second category is exhausted, you come to the third, and so on. That is not the case. These are the four classes from which any one can be chosen for the purpose of retrenchment. I understand there has been a committee composed of two or three men of the department to select the persons to be retrenched, but in the committee the words of the senior officer always prevailed. What happens? I find from the Report of the Railway Enquiry Committee that they also found a similar state of affairs there. I quote from their report:

"Victimisation and favouritism can best be avoided by having a single clearly defined ground for discharge."

If the Government lay down certain rules and say that of these few categories, first you will exhaust all the people who come under the first rule for retrenchment, then you go to the second; and after exhausting those, you go to the third; then alone justice may be expected, if the rules are strictly followed; but now Departments retrench anybody they like who comes under any of the rules. What happens is this: anybody who is for the time being not in hot favour with the head of the department is found to be the most incompetent after a service of excellent work for 20 years or more. A man might have worked strenuously for a number of years and pleased his superiors; but if he now happens not to be pulling on well with a particular man, he is under this method found incompetent by the particular man and he is sacked. I say this gives room for much jobbery and corruption and it has happened.

The second category deals with people who have put in more than thirty years' service. I have collected some figures hurriedly from the history of the gazetted officers—a Government publication; and from that book I find that there are many people who have put in more than twenty five years' service and some over 30 years service and they are still happily enjoying their posts, while people who have put in less than 10 years have been discharged. It is usual that people who have been for a long time in Government service know all these tricks, how to please the official heads; and so all these old men are retained; and though there is a rule that men with over 30 years' service should be pensioned off, that rule is not binding: under the present retrenchment rules such men need not be retrenched—their list need not be exhausted before they touch men with less than ten years' service. I also find it stated in one of the speeches of Sir George Schuster that by these indiscriminate discharges the pension liabilities of the Government will be highly increased and that he will look into the position. Now these old and superannuated people who are at the head, have a chance to influence the higher officials, and the junior officials who have put in only 7 or 8 years are being discharged. I will give the House some idea of what this means. I have taken at random some departments showing some of the men with their service:

I could not complete the list. I was going through it only this morning, but this list will show that there is a number of people who come directly under either the first or the second category, and still they are not touched, while poor junior clerks who have put in less than 10 years have been discharged. (My point is, if Government make any rules, why don't they follow those rules? You have laid down certain categories, why don't you select men according to those categories, because only when the list of men who come under the first category is exhausted, you should deal with men who come under the second category, and if such a method of selecting men for discharge is followed, there cannot be much room for injustice or hardship. As a matter of fact, as a general rule men with 25 and 30 years' service should first be selected for discharge; instead of that, you are selecting men with less than 10 years service, with the result that it will tell heavily on the pension liabilities of the country. The rule is all right, but favouritism and corruption prevail in some of the departments. That was the reason why my friend Pandit Satyendra Nath Sen moved the Resolution here. Unfortunately Members on this side are always absent, and so we cannot carry any motion, but that is no reason why the facts of the case should not be disclosed here or why Government should not do justice in this important matter. The Honourable the Finance Member should explain why, when in all other matters Government strictly try to follow their rules, in this matter they have departed from the rules they have made in regard to selecting men for discharge. If you make a rule, you should follow it without showing any partiality for this or that man.

Now, we know that in the Government of India whatever is done by any departmental head, holds good. If a case is initiated in a branch, it is sent up for approval, and thus the case goes to the head of the department and it comes back with his signature without any alterations, and then it is said that the decision is of the Government of India or that it is the deliberate and considered opinion of the Government. But what happens is, the departmental head who may in some cases be very fair-minded, cannot always be expected to do justice in many of these cases, because how can we presume that he will always do the just thing, that he will have no favouritism or no partiality for some people who are just near about him? What I say is, the rules that you make should be very rigidly enforced irrespective of any personal consideration.

Now, Sir, with your permission I shall deal with some of the items referred to in the summary of the results and show how the recommendations of these Committees have been given effect to. I shall take up the first Demand under the head Customs, because it is one of the big items which deal with 12 lakhs and odd rupees—Abolition of the entire system of overtime allowances for future entrants and the reduction of 50 per cent. in the case of those who are already in service, and 50 per cent. reduction in the payment of Seamens' and other welfare institutions. Here the Customs head deals with 12 lakhs of rupees, and I read from the General Purposes Committee's Report, page 31:

"The 1931-32 grant contemplates receipts of 12-35 lakhs by way of overtime fees realised from merchants and shippers and shipowners (6-52), penalty fees levied for work on Sundays and special holidays (4-73) and bond and other fees realised from merchants for work done during ordinary working hours (1-11). Out of this 12-35 lakhs the 1931-32 budget provides for the following payments, namely, (a) 5-47 lakhs to officers out of merchants' overtime fees; (b) 3-39 to officers out of the penalty fees including crown overtime (c) 1.34 plus .57 brought forward from 1930-31, i.e., 1.91 lakhs which is the amount available for grants out of penalty fees to seamen's and customs welfare institutions.

We have examined very carefully the theory and practice of the system of levying penalty fees and overtime charges. We have no doubt that shippers and shipowners find it convenient to pay these rather than let their cargoes remain uncleared. We therefore propose that the system of charging such fees should remain unaltered in essence. We consider this case to be somewhat analogical to the case of "late fees" and "double charges" in the Posts and Telegraph Department.

We are not, however, convinced that it is necessary to pay to customs officials the whole or even a large part of the fees so realised. A large proportion goes to preventive seamen, who, we consider, are already well paid. Their duties correspond to the duties of police officers and the men used at one time to be drawn, to some extent, from the police. The scales of pay are, in our opinion, extremely liberal when compared with those in force for the corresponding grades of provincial police services operating in the ports concerned."

We proposed that the whole of this 12 lakhs was due to the Government, and our main argument was that these customs officials are also, like other Government officials, whole-time Government servants and there was no justification for paying these people extra money for overtime work. But fortunately or unfortunately the Customs Department is manned by gentlemen belonging to my Honourable friend Sir Henry Gidney's community. Is that any reason why, in these days of financial stringency, these 12 lakhs should be kept for paying overtime allowances? The police, who are the greatest favourites of Government, are also required to work sometimes for 24 hours; similarly there are the Posts and Telegraphs people, who also serve Government for 24 hours, and these people are not paid anything by way of overtime allowance. So what justification is there for showing favouritism to these people in the Customs Department? It is not a question of a few thousands, but it is a question of some 12 lakhs and odd which should be appropriated by Government. But now Government have condescendingly accepted the 10 per cent. reduction in the rates of overtime fees paid to the staff and also a reduction in the Demand for the Grants in aid due to welfare institutions and so forth, but they only accepted about Rs. 97,000 out of a total sum of Rs. 5,88,000. Government have discharged people with very large families, getting small salaries, on the ground of financial stringency, but here in the Customs Department they are throwing away a precious 6 lakhs: while the Committee were of the opinion that the Government were entitled to the whole of these 12 lakhs.

Sir, there will be no time to dilate on this matter at great length, but I merely refer to it. In this Customs Department they have already reduced two Indian I. C. S. officers, and thus the future for Indian I. C. S. officers to occupy the higher posts in the Customs Department will be barred for a long time.

The next item is 'Taxes on Income'. I do not like to say anything here because the Honourable the Finance Member has said that the Department requires extension due to lowering of the taxable limit to Rs. 1,000, so the question of reduction does not arise now.

As regards Salt, the Committee recommended the abolition of the post of the office of the Commissioner, Northern India Salt Revenue, Rs. 80,000. The Government say in their reply that this proposal has been negatived, and they have given their reasons. I shall discuss the question so that the House may consider who is right. The Committee in their decision was helped by the evidence of Sir Chunilal Mehta, who was the President of the Salt Survey Committee. He was of opinion that, if the manufacturing divisions were in charge of fairly good men, the Commissioner's post and his office were not needed. The Committee further say, "We understand that the question of its abolition was at one time considered in the Finance Department. We definitely recommend that it should be abolished."

At page 5 of the Summary of the results of retrenchment operations you will find the reasons why it has been refused. The first ground of the Committee was that an important part of the Commissioner's duties can be transferred to the General Managers. The Government say:

"In view of the lower status and lack of administrative experience, the General Managers cannot be invested with the powers of the Commissioner."

Now, the Committee suggested that, instead of this Commissioner of Salt Revenue, a European I. C. S. officer getting very high pay, the two Managers should be entrusted with his work. What is the status of these Managers? The Managers get a pay of Rs. 1,100—1,400, plus overseas pay £30, which means Rs. 400, free house and electricity, in all about Rs. 2,000 per month. Therefore, the Managers get Rs. 2,000 as total emoluments. They are men of lower status and they lack administrative experience! Another ground on which the Government turn down the proposal is:

"The Commissioner has to maintain official relations by correspondence and in personal negotiations, with Indian States, Local Governments and Railway Administrations. These require an officer of a definitely superior position. . . ."

As if the I. C. S. are the only superior people who can hold any good post! As regards Native States, Government have their political officers in all the Native States, and the Managers can negotiate with the States through the political officers. Then, what is the difficulty in dealing with Local Governments and Railway Administrations? They are not mere clerks and Superintendents getting Rs. 400 or Rs. 600 pay.

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division: Muhammadan Rural): Who are those Managers?

Mr. S. O. Mitra: They are all Europeans, they are not Indians. Again, the Government say:

"The Commissioner has to devote much time to interviewing merchants, etc., employed in the salt trade."

As if the Managers who are actually managing these big salt manufactures and getting such emoluments, are not in a position to deal with these merchants, and it requires men in the Secretariat to do the job! Then, they say:

"The problems of manufacture by solar evaporation are entirely different from those of mining, and also vary from source to source."

As if every I. C. S. Commissioner knows either of the two systems,—that is, the solar system of evaporation, or the other system, namely, mining! One could understand if the Commissioner was a person who knew all the different systems so that he would be in a better position to know which was which. That is the argument advanced when the post of a high European officer is concerned.

[Mr. S. C. Mitra.]

Let us come now to Opium. The Committee recommended the withdrawal of the concession of giving free medical attendance to the families of the officers at Ghazipur, and abolition of the allowance of Rs. 100 a month to the medical officer there. The Committee said:

"We see no justification for the continuance of the exceptional amenity which opium officers at Ghazipur enjoy (viz., free medical attendance on their families) and which costs Government Rs. 100 per mensem by way of an allowance to a medical officer at Ghazipur. We recommend that it should be cut. Savings will be Rs. 1,200."

Then we recommended the abolition of the factory allowance of Rs. 250 to the Factory Superintendent and of Rs. 150 to the Assistant Factory Superintendent, if rent-free quarters are provided, but, if not, the amount of allowance to be reduced to 10 per cent. of pay. The Government's reply is "Under consideration as a general question". Again the Committee said that the question of the retention of personal allowance of Rs. 100 each to three officers for war service should be scrutinised. That is also not accepted, but no reasons are given.

Then, we come to Stamps. That was left to Mr. Nixon to visit the different places and suggest his own recommendations.

The next is Forests. Here the Committee suggested that the present Timber Testing Expert, who is drawing a pay of Rs. 2,000 per mensem, is expensive and his post should be retrenched. The reply is, that is under consideration. Whenever an European is concerned, that is "under consideration," but when an Indian is concerned, their consideration takes little time. Another of our suggestions was that one gazetted post in the Cabinet Making Section should be abolished.

There has been a mistake in this summary. What the Committee said was this:

"Seasoning and timber testing should be placed in charge of one officer. As an alternative, timber testing might be placed in charge of the Wood Technologist, who, it is understood, received special training in this class of work in America in 1929. Such an arrangement would be conducive to economy and work efficiently. The Inspector General's scheme proposes to retain the present Timber Testing Expert whose pay is Rs. 2,000 per mensem. This post is not now necessary and should be abolished."

That is the recommendation, but in this Summary—item No. 5—it has been wrongly put as Cabinet Making Section. That is not our suggestion. It is wrong there.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster (Finance Member): May I ask the Honourable Member to look at page 188 of the Report, item (vii), which reads as follows:

"What is generally known as the cabinet making section can and should be subjected to retrenchment more than the other sections. As contemplated in the Inspector General's scheme one gazetted post in this section should be abolished."

Mr. S. C. Mitra: That is quite correct, but what I complain about is that in page 10 of the Summary, it is wrongly put under item No. 5; it should be 7.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: We are not trying to follow the numbers in exact order.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: Mr. Nixon will understand better that it is wrongly entered here. It will take more time for Sir George Schuster to understand the details. Really there is no reply as regards our proposals regarding the Wood Technologist, the timber testing expert, whose pay is Rs. 2,000. Then I come to the Inspector General of Forests. We recommended unanimously that the post of this officer and his office should be abolished, the Government getting whatever help they required from the Chief Conservator of Forests of the North-West Frontier Province. Government say that nothing should be done pending the inauguration of the new reforms. I know Forests is a provincial subject and in some places it is a transferred subject. If everything is to be postponed pending the inauguration of the reforms, then the question of retrenchment will suffer very much. Government have accepted the abolition of the I. F. S. College, and so the duty of the head of the College is now over and it is not necessary to have such a highly paid officer there for the purpose of any help that the Government of India may require. I do not like to deal with Irrigation and Posts and Telegraphs. Then I come to the house rent concession to the Honourable Members of Council in the matter of paying the full economic rent. The existing rate for each of these houses is Rs. 539 and Rupees 8 annas 4 for a tennis court. I think before we ask anybody else we must ask Honourable Members of the Executive Council to pay proper rents for their tennis courts. The next item is abolition of the post of President of the Council of State. This is also under consideration.

Then comes the question about the Secretariat and the exodus. Mr. Nixon takes trouble to show that it will be very difficult in this summer in Delhi to provide for 2,000 men extra. The result of the inquiry indicates that it might be possible to leave in New Delhi staff to the extent of 17 officers, 255 clerks and 114 inferior servants, and the estimated saving here would be $1\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs out of a total cost of $9\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs. Now, the population of old Delhi is $4\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs and of New Delhi during the winter months is 66,000 but in summer it comes to 56,000, that is 10,000 people less. Then it is argued that in summer people to the extent of 5,000 come to occupy the vacant places in New Delhi. Now there is a Joint Water Board. The argument of the Government of India is that there is enough water for $4\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs of old Delhi and 60,000 people here, but not enough for 2,000 people more and that if these are kept here there will be great scarcity. Why did not they anticipate this when they spent crores and crores on New Delhi? When the Government of India was transferred from Calcutta to Delhi, it was said that the Government would be out of touch with the Indian people, but the Government said that Delhi will become a great city and they will not be out of touch. Now my point is that when the Government of India spent 18 crores on the New Delhi city, they could not make provision for water for 2,000 people more. They say that another 12 lakhs of rupees is necessary to provide for the necessary additional water supply for this additional 2,000 men and they expect us to swallow all these stories. Why could not they anticipate that there will be this scarcity? What is the P. W. D. for? They have a hierarchy of officials, from the Honourable Member and the Superintending Engineer downwards, and so many Engineers, and they could not anticipate this small thing, and they now expect us to be convinced on these flimsy grounds.

Then there is the Secretariat re-arrangement. This subject will be taken up by some other Member, and so I do not like to deal with it, but without divulging any secret, I may say that we had a sub-committee, of which Mr. Nixon himself was a member, and we discussed the question of devising some method by which this process of sending notes from one officer to another, from the clerk to the assistant, from the assistant to the Superintendent and Assistant Secretary, from the Assistant Secretary to the Under Secretary and from the Under Secretary to the Joint Secretary, and so on, could be curtailed and we even suggested our own scheme, but the Government did nothing. Apparently the Government, when they brought in the Supplementary Finance Bill, thought that they would get enough money by taxation and no more retrenchment was necessary. And then I do not know whether it was by chance or otherwise, beneficial departments and scientific departments like Archaeological Survey, Geological Survey, Civil Aviation, Agricultural Research and things like these came up first for immediate retrenchment. Afterwards the Finance Department did not seem so anxious about retrenchment. The Honourable the Finance Member himself says that next year there will be a surplus of 5 crores or 2½ crores at least. That may be the reason for the Finance Member saying that they have accepted up to 65 per cent. of our recommendations and even then, as I shall show later, this percentage is misleading. We recommended that the educational and medical institutes and the grants to scientific research institutes should not be interfered with, but, going beyond our recommendations, they have not spared any of these institutions.

As regards the Secretariat reorganisation, they say:

"As regards the first question, the Sub-Committee's recommendation admittedly relates to a standard which will be suitable under normal conditions of Secretariat."

I do not know, Sir, what is the abnormality in the conditions now.

Then under the Foreign and Political Department, the Committee suggested that there should not be two Secretariats, because the Department is really one; and I think Sir Charles Watson himself agreed that really the Department is one. There is no clear-cut division in the Departments. Then, I ask, why cannot there be two Deputy Secretaries and one Secretary who can be responsible for the work of the whole Department. Then they accepted the cut about pay of officer on special duty. That of course was only temporary, so it was automatically abolished. The permanent post of Attache filled by an Indian was, however, very easily abolished in pursuance of our recommendation.

Then under Home Department, we suggested the abolition of the post of Joint Secretary, but they say that it is not possible to abolish the post of Joint Secretary as the present conditions render its retention very necessary.

Then we come to the Public Service Commission. The Committee recommended the reduction of the number of Members from five to three and the reduction of the status of the post of Secretary to that of Assistant Secretary and the reduction of the special pay of Rs. 200 for the incumbent recruited from an all-India service. As regards the first question of the reduction of the number and pay of officers, that is still under consideration. Now the Committee knew at the time that a gentleman in the Police Service, who had earned his full pension, was going to be appointed, and so they hurried to make their recommendation that five men are not necessary and they examined the President of the Public Service Commission, who told us that there is not work even for three, and that he personally was of opinion that even one could do the work. Now as a matter of fact in some of the Dominions, the Public service Commission work is done by one man. Yet the Government say, "This is under consideration". In the meantime they fill up every vacancy! And they say "No, it will not be possible to retrench these people". But I think, Sir, as regards the pensioned officer, it should be possible that a man who is enjoying his pension may be asked to retire if Government find it necessary even now.

Then under Legislative Department, the organisation of the Solicitor's Branch is stated to be as follows:

"This Branch is manned by three officers—a Solicitor on Rs. 3,000, a second Solicitor on Rs. 1,200—1,800 plus overseas pay, an Assistant Solicitor on Rs. 1,200. The present Solicitor also gets a personal pay of Rs. 350, a special pay of Rs. 200 for work connected with the Local Clearing Office. The Solicitor is due to vacate his office in March 1932. This establishment consists of 2 clerks and half a dozen men."

The recommendation regarding retrenching one of the Solicitors has not been accepted.

Then there was a recommendation for a 10 per cent. reduction under Contingencies, but there is not a word said about it. I think my Honourable friend, Sir Lancelot Graham, who is in charge of the Department, is evidently too strong for any retrenchment officer. (Laughter.)

Then coming to the Department of Education, Health and Lands, here we suggested the abolition of the posts of Joint Secretary, Additional Deputy Secretary and Officer on Special Duty, but they have accepted for the present one recommendation, namely, that the post of the Under Secretary (which is filled by a Muhammadan gentleman, Mr. Akhtar Hussain), should be retrenched, and they say that the question of the strength of officers will be further examined.

Then we come to the question of the great Finance Department itself. (Hear, hear.) They agreed to abolish the post of Assistant Secretary, but now want mere conversion. They themselves suggested this. "The Department's final offer consists of the following items:

"Abolition of the following posts, namely, Assistant Secretary and six Assistants, and seven posts in the Second Division."

That was the offer of the Department. Now that there is sufficient money—perhaps that is the reason—they say, "Let the Assistant Secretary go but let there be a conversion of the post into that of a Chief Superintendentship". As regards the offer of the abolition of 6 Assistants, the abolition of only one Assistant will do; and no further reduction is possible". Sir, if that is the ideal that the Finance Department itself holds up for other Departments to copy, we can easily understand the fate of "retrenchment". I hope the Government will explain as to why their own offer of retrenchment in the Finance Department has not been acted upon. (Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: "Hear, hear.")

As regards the Commerce Department, if anybody refers to page 167 of the Detailed Estimates for Grants, he will find in respect of retrenchment that there are three items.—additional permanent staff Rs. 48,000, temporary establishment Rs. 3,000, staff for registration of accounts Rs. 3,000". Actually, all this is increment.

As regards the Central Board of Revenue, there was a recommendation for the reduction of one Member of the Board. The Government's reply is that both the customs and the income-tax work of the Board involve the disposal of a large number of complicated and technical cases. As a matter of fact, though the present incumbents are one from the income-tax side and the other from the customs side, what will immediately follow? For a time Mr. Lloyd and Mr. Hardy, both from the customs side, were the Members at that time and there was no difficulty then in discussing questions concerning these highly technical problems coming up.

Then under Ports and Pilotage, we suggested the abolition of the post of Nautical Officer saving Rs. 60,000. They show as if they have accepted the reduction to Rs. 14,500, but really it means that a junior man has come on a lower salary on transfer; so they take credit for that. But they have been prompt in abolishing one post occupied by an Indian, a Parsi gentleman, in the Shipping Office, Bombay. So even a Parsi is not spared.

As regards the Survey of India, here we suggested that the people that are from the Royal Engineering side of the Military Department should be paid from the military funds and that should not be borne on the civil estimates. As a matter of fact, that recommendation has not been accepted. Government have considered various schemes of retrenchment and now they have adopted a way, but here the figures are also misleading. So far as I know, in Class I there were 50 officers. Out of these, 19 posts were not filled up, but kept in abeyance for a long time, and only one man has been retrenched, but as a matter of fact it has been shown that the posts not filled up of these 19 men are all shown to have been retrenched. Even then, 4 men with 30 years' service were retained and they were promoted to Class I, and 5 men—3 Hindus and 2 Muslims—were promptly retrenched, but not a single Anglo-Indian in the service was retrenched. Even Anglo-Indian probationers have been retained. (Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: "Which Department?") Survey of India Department.

As regards Botanical Survey, we suggested that the post of the Director be abolished and in the first summary of the retrenchment we found that this suggestion was tentatively accepted by Government. But now we find that because he is a European and draws a special pay, only his pay has been reduced by Rs. 100 and his allowance of Rs. 50 has been altered perhaps after his return from England, but his service has been maintained.

Sir Frank Noyce (Secretary, Department of Education, Health and Lands): I am sorry to interrupt the Honourable Member, but may I point out that the Directorship of the Botanical Survey is a part-time appointment. The sole allowance attaching to it as salary which is paid from the Government of India revenues amounts to Rs. 300 a month only.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: That is quite true. He is part-time servant, but the gentleman is in the service of the Government of Bengal. His duty is to supervise the cultivation of cinchona in Burma. There is another gentleman, Mr. Russell, who is a highly paid officer and he does not require a man from Calcutta to supervise his work and there is further some little plantation in Madras. We have gone through all these questions and the General Purposes Sub-Committee said that there was no necessity for the Government of India to pay this gentleman Rs. 400 and the Government of India in the Department of Education, Health and Lands accepted that suggestion tentatively. If a reference is required, I will read from the first Report; Botanical Survey, first Summary (page 15):

“The post of the Director be abolished”. Now they have refused to do so because the gentleman has come back from England and has brought some pressure to bear on the Government of India.

Then I come to the Archæological Department. I think there are other Honourable Members who will argue out the case. The Committee suggested the discontinuance of the special duty allowance of Sir John Marshall. I do not like now to discuss in detail the principle of giving allowances to officials who are kept in service for 28 years and then employed for 8 years more on special duty with extra emoluments and full pension. They do not allow other scientific researchers to come into the field and utilise the archæological funds for historical researches for the benefit of the country. When they are pensioned off Government recommend the extension of their service to write out the reports which takes several years. Sir, this practice is wrong in principle from all considerations.

Then, as regards Demand 56, Education. Here there was no recommendation from the Committee, but I find an additional fourth item of cut has been introduced which amounts to Rs. 67,000.

Then I come to the question of Medical and Public Health. Here the Committee suggested the abolition of the appointments of the Director General, Indian Medical Service and the Public Health Commissioner. The reply in this connection is that this recommendation raises an issue which Government have more carefully considered. They have considered both the Committee's plan and earlier recommendations of the Retrenchment Committee for the amalgamation of the two posts of the Director General, Indian Medical Service and the Public Health Commissioner. I think, Sir, they want to wait for the new constitution. It seems that the Government have a sort of premonition that the future constitution will be a very sickly one and it will require expert medical men and some nursing as well. That is the reason why everything is postponed in this Department for the future.

Then I come to Agriculture and the Imperial Council of Agricultural Research. We suggested that there was no necessity for this duplication of work. They said that the main ground why the agricultural side of the Secretariat could not be reduced was that there were some European experts in the Pusa College who were not expected to be put under the control of the Agricultural Council. We see no reason why these two departments should work separately and not be amalgamated, thereby saving a large sum of money, the departmental side of Agriculture being replaced by the Imperial Council of Agricultural Research.

As regards Aviation we find that the Direction cost is Rs. 2,55,000 instead of Rs. 1,26,000. Even in the last Budget it was Rs. 2,27,000. So, in spite of recommendations for retrenchment, it has gone up. Further down they say that the services of a new Aircraft Inspector will be necessary as it is impossible for one man to inspect all the aircraft in India. I do not know how many aircraft we have in India and why it is impossible for one man to inspect all the aircraft once a year.

Then comes Commercial Intelligence, Demand No. 64. Here we suggested the abolition of the I. C. S. post of the Deputy Director General and some other posts. This suggestion was not accepted. Then we suggested the reduction of the establishment by 10 per cent. and the cancellation of certain schemes. We suggested a reduction of Rs. 2,56,000, out of which

[Mr. S. C. Mitra.]

Rs. 2,26,000 is required for the internal statistics scheme. The Committee suggested that it should be temporarily suspended because it is a very useful institution and should be revived as soon as possible. Sir, in all these matters Government are very keen and they even went beyond the recommendations of the Committee and accepted a cut to the extent of Rs. 2,30,000, which covered the whole statistical scheme and only Rs. 4,000 out of Rs. 26,000 recommended by the Committee.

Then, I come to the Indian Stores Department. In this connection I wish to read out from the Report of the Incheape Committee itself (page 216):

"We are informed that this Department has been recently constituted in order to encourage the development of the industrial resources of India and to effect economies by co-ordinating purchases for the Central and Provincial Governments, thus eliminating competition between Governments and Departments. At present its activities are confined to the purchase of textiles for the Army Department and to the control of the Metallurgical Inspectorate and of the Superintendent, Local Manufactures and Government Test House, Alipore. We understand, however, that it is contemplated gradually to extend the work."

Finally, they say:

"A system of central purchase may have theoretical advantages, but we recommend that no provision be made for further expansion of the department until it has been ascertained that the provinces collectively are prepared to utilise it for their transactions and that such expansion will be financially justified. The present establishment has been framed with a view to the expansion of the department's activities and is now costing about Rs. 4,00,000 annually. We recommend that the provision be reduced to Rs. 3,00,000, saving Rs. 83,000."

Sir, it is clear from this Report that the department was contemplated to continue if all the Local Governments supported it and the purchases were available from the Army and other departments. As a matter of fact I find from the latest report of the Indian Stores Department that it ran at a loss in 1927-28 of Rs. 5,76,000; in 1928-29 of Rs. 10,61,000; in 1929-30 of Rs. 6,85,000 and in 1930-31 of Rs. 96,24,000. So, it has been all along run as a deficit department costing about 8 or 9 lakhs of rupees annually. It was urged all along that it should be either self-supporting or it should show that its activities help a great deal in encouraging indigenous industry. It has done neither. I think the difficulty is that the superior staff is all manned by Europeans. It is not to their interest to see that the indigenous products are encouraged. I give the figures in this Department:

	Rs.
Salaries above . . .	3,000	No Indians	1 European.
Salaries above . . .	2,500	No Indians	3 Europeans.
Salaries above . . .	2,000	No Indians	3 Europeans.
Salaries above . . .	1,750	No Indians	9 Europeans.
Salaries above . . .	1,500	1 Indian	9 Europeans.
Salaries above . . .	1,200	6 Indians	15 Europeans.
Salaries above . . .	1,000	7 Indians	16 Europeans.

The salary of Europeans drawing more than Rs. 500 a month is four lakhs annually. That shows why this department has not developed in the way for which it was inaugurated. It has failed to justify its existence either by encouraging indigenous industries or by making the department itself self-supporting and purchasing stores for the Government of India at a cheaper rate.

Under Demand No. 76-Allowances, reduction in lump sum payments to Reuters, Rs. 10,000. This matter is still under consideration. I do not know why it requires so much time to curtail this subsidy to Reuters by Rs. 10,000. There was a recommendation about Committees and Commissions and we suggested that the amount should be reduced by Rs. 10 a day and I think there is no mention about it in this report.

As regards the Local Clearing Office, here is a department where a special pay of Rs. 250 is paid. It is 14 years since the War came to an end, and still the enemies' debts are being paid and the staff is necessary.

In the North-West Frontier Province, Demand No. 78, we find under the Medical head there is a reduction of Rs. 1,64,000, though we recommended only a sum of Rs. 4,000 to be reduced.

In Baluchistan for education we suggested no reduction, but I find Rs. 71,000 has been reduced from this grant according to page 84 of the Summary.

In Delhi under education we suggested a reduction of Rs. 2,000 only, but it has been accepted as Rs. 1,12,200.

Item No. 19. Public Health, is still under consideration.

In Ajmer-Merwara the same thing happens. We did not recommend any reduction, but under education a sum of Rs. 64,000 has been reduced and under Medical, Rs. 23,000.

Sir, I have taken too much of the time of the House, and I feel myself that the discussion had been discursive to a great extent, because I have had to do spade work. But I expect that the main points dealt with by me will be discussed by other Honourable Members. I have not dealt with the Military Budget or the Postal Budget at all and I think my other Honourable friends will discuss retrenchment on these questions.

Mr. President: Motion moved:

"That the Demand under the head 'Executive Council' be reduced by Rs. 100".

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad (United Provinces Southern Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, out of the six Committees that discussed the question of retrenchment, the work of the Railway Sub-Committee and the Army Sub-Committee had been of a perfunctory character. Their reports remind me of the story of an Oxford freshman who was given £100 by his father and was asked to submit an account. At the end of the term the new undergraduate submitted the following account—new collar, one shilling; one tie, one shilling six pence; miscellaneous, £99-17-6. This is practically what the Railway Sub-Committee and the Army Sub-Committee have done. Out of 52 crores annual expenditure, which is really incurred by the railways, the Railway Retrenchment Committee only scrutinised the expenditure like Oxford undergraduate of under two crores, and about the remaining 50 crores they only put down that the expenditure should be scrutinised by some other Committee. Practically the same was done by the Army Sub-Committee. It only examined a very small proportion of the expenditure, I think 7 crores altogether, and it left the balance to be scrutinised by some one else. I think it was a little wiser than the Railway Sub-Committee in that it did not bring itself into non-existence, but it still exists though it may not be functioning. I do not know whether it will finish its work before the life of the Members of that Committee ceases to exist as far as this Assembly is concerned. I do not want to take up the railway question today in detail because that has already been discussed. But, in view of the fact that this contributes a large sum of money, about 8 crores every year, to the general revenue, especially in view of the fact that the report of the Court of Inquiry did not come into our hands at the time when we discussed the Railway Budget I want to touch upon one or two salient features now. The other day the Honourable Member for Industries and Labour, when asked about giving us an opportunity to discuss this report, clearly said that he was not willing to give time for that purpose. I thought that the reply was rather impolite to Honourable Members of this Assembly, but I find now that the Honourable Sir Joseph Bore was perfectly right, because there are no points in this report to discuss for any length of time. The Railway Board issued certain definite instructions, and the really crucial problem is this. Is there any machinery by means of which they can find out whether their instructions have been carried out, and if not whether they have got machinery to see how they can be enforced? This is really the crucial point in the whole of the retrenchment enquiry as far as the railways are concerned. This particular point, which I thought they would deal with, was never touched upon by this Court of Inquiry, and if the Railway Board could only solve this particular problem most of their difficulties would disappear. The only recommendation, which the Court of Inquiry made, was that only one principle should be applied in the case of retrenchment, and that principle should be that those persons who have got less service ought to be retrenched irrespective of the question of efficiency, less efficiency and irrespective of any other consideration. If this principle is applied—I am sorry that the Court of Inquiry never went into the figures—what would be the result of this? We all know that Indians entered into the railway service in larger number only after the Convention of 1924, and the Muhammadans joined still later, and the result of their recommendations will be that Indians in general and the Muslims in particular will all be retrenched from the railway services if the principle enunciated by the Court of Inquiry is accepted by the Government. While making this recommendation, it was their duty to have considered the figures and show how the communal inequalities would work out if the recommendations were given effect to. But they were easy going people and adopted an easy method. This question of least service is very easy to calculate and very easy to apply. What would be the result, they never took the trouble to find out. They wasted time and money in considering individual grievances and then gave it up as a hopeless case and asked the Government to appoint some other Committee to go through such grievances.

Now, Sir, coming to the military, which is really the subject-matter of my discussion, I first mention at the outset three points. The first is one to which I have drawn attention repeatedly, that the question of the strategic lines ought to be settled once for all. We know that we spend about 2 crores on the strategic lines, and this amount should either be absorbed in the losses of the railways, or it should be shown in the General Budget as income received from the railways, and afterwards handed over to the military. This method of invisible budget of the military, as I called it, is bad accountancy. It is against all principles of accountancy, and I think it ought to be shown very clearly in the General Budget. Sir, we should adopt either of the two methods. Either it should be shown as a definite loss of the railways, who should be responsible for it, or it should be accepted as a loss to the general revenues and should be debited in the accounts of the military.

The second point to which I wish to draw attention, though attention has been drawn to it repeatedly by the different Retrenchment Committees, is about the Lee concessions. Now the Lee concessions were very rightly given in 1924-25 when the index of prices was very high. The cost of living had gone up very much after the war and some relief was absolutely necessary. The price index in 1924 rose to about 176, but we should now realise that these high prices of 1924 are not in existence in 1932. The price index has fallen as low as 96, i.e., it has fallen by about 45 per cent. When the cost of living has fallen by about 45 per cent. from 1925 onwards, it is legitimate to consider whether the concession that we allowed on account of high prices in 1924-25 should still be continued in 1932 and whether it should not be temporarily withdrawn, to be given back when the index price rises again to the level of 175, as it did in 1924.

The third point is that every Retrenchment Committee recommended that the cuts should be gradual. But contrary to the recommendations of all the Sub-Committees the Government adopted a uniform cut of 10 per cent. I think it is rather unfair to treat everybody in the same way. Those who get a higher salary can really sacrifice a little more than those who earn just enough to make two ends meet. Therefore the principle of a graduated cut should have been adopted by the Government of India. It is a principle which the whole country demanded, which every Retrenchment Committee recommended, and which really has the general support of the Assembly; and in the teeth of opposition from everybody, Government adopted a uniform cut of 10 per cent.

Sir, coming now to the Budget of the military, I find that the Budget in the year 1913-14 was 29·84 crores. Then it rose up during and after the war to 67·75 crores. This abnormal expenditure and the losses in the revenue led to the appointment of the Inchcape Committee. It attributed the rise of the military expenditure to five causes. The first was the rise in prices. I have already said that it does not hold true now because the prices, instead of rising, have actually fallen below the level of 1913-14. The second ground was the enhanced pay granted to all ranks. This is really a consequential effect of the first and I think it does not hold true now. The third is the improvement in the comforts of the troops, large expenditure on houses and various other things. Now, with regard to that, I think we should try to give as much comfort to our troops as we possibly can, but it should be done within our means, and we should not go beyond that. Their fourth ground was the increase in the non-effective charges. Here we find that it increased from 5 to 9 crores, but of course by reducing the non-effective charges, we do not increase the efficiency of the Army. I am really very strongly in favour of keeping up the efficiency of the Army, but I am equally strongly of opinion that we ought to reduce those charges which do not make for the efficiency of the Army. Their fifth reason, and the only cogent reason, was the improvement in the equipment and standard of training. Any expenditure under this head is justified and legitimate and would have general support, but any expenditure under the first four heads is not justified, and I think I will examine these points in detail. Before I examine them, I should like to give some quotations from the report of the Inchcape Committee which are as cogent and relevant today as they were eight years ago. They said about military expenditure:

"In our opinion the repeated huge deficits of the last few years, in spite of the imposition of heavy new taxation, have made it abundantly clear that India cannot afford this expenditure.

So long as peace conditions obtain, the first essential is for India to balance her budget, and this can only be secured by a very substantial reduction in the military estimates."

That is to say, the only way to balance the Budget is to reduce the military expenditure. That is not my opinion, it is not the opinion of the Assembly or of the Retrenchment Committee; it is the opinion of the Incheape Committee, who knew their business and who were as strong supporters of the Army policy as any Englishman can be. Then again they said :

"We recommend that a close watch be kept on the details of military expenditure with the object of bringing about a progressive reduction in the future."

And then later on they said :

"Though revenue may increase through a revival of trade, there would, we think, still be no justification for not keeping a strict eye on military expenditure with a view to its further reduction."

They recommended reduction even if the revenue increased, but we find that the revenue, instead of increasing, has diminished. We know very well that during the last seven years we increased taxation on import duties by 22 crores, but the net result has been a definite loss of 75 lakhs. Therefore we have really reached the limit of taxation, beyond which we cannot go, and the only way by which the Budget can be balanced is to follow the recommendations of the Incheape Committee and apply the principle of reduction to the principal item which they mentioned, namely the military. And unless we reduce the military expenditure, it is absolutely impossible for India to balance the Budget by any other means.

Now, Sir, I just briefly want to mention a few items in which the reduction can be made without loss of the efficiency of the Army. First I take up the non-effective charges. In the year 1913-14 the non-effective charges were 5 crores; in 1922-23 when the Incheape Committee met they rose to 9 crores and in the present year's Budget we find that they are 7.62 crores. Therefore there is no reason why this expenditure should not be brought to the level of 1914; and there can be a saving of 2½ crores under this item. The reduction of non-effective charges does not mean the inefficiency of the Army and there is no reason why we should not apply this reduction immediately.

The second item which we can take up for reduction is what I call military works and military engineering. Under this heading in 1913-14 they spent 1.3 crores. In the year 1922-23 the expenditure rose to 4.54 and before the Incheape Committee, the military authorities recommended an expenditure of 3.3 crores in future, which the Government of India reduced to 9.3 crores. Here in the new estimates now before us, they have provided 4.65 crores. There is no reason why we cannot reduce this expenditure further; This can also be reduced by 2 crores of rupees. Before the war the estimate was 1.3 and now it is 4.65. I only demand a reduction of about 2 crores of rupees, and even then the expenditure will be double of what it was in 1913-14.

The next point where reduction is possible is to reduce the number of men in each regiment. This particular question was discussed by the Incheape Committee and I also pointed out last year in connection with the Army cut that it is still possible to reduce the number in each regiment according to the recommendations of the Incheape Committee. What I said was that the Incheape Committee suggested that during the war time the number should be 766 in each regiment and during peace time the number should be further reduced by 20 per cent. If we apply this principle, then

1 P.M. there is still great room for economy. Sir, we do not want to reduce the efficiency of the Army, but at the same time we do desire that it should be kept in peace time at a level like the one which the Incheape Committee recommended.

The next phase of retrenchment which I press is the question of the Indianisation of services. I am not pressing it from the point of view of policy, or from the point of view of getting all the services for Indians, but merely in connection with economy. This point of view we will discuss tomorrow. We know that the cost of an English soldier is about five times the cost of the Indian soldier. At present we have got 60,000 English troops, excluding officers; and the number of Indian troops is 249,739 altogether. If we begin Indianisation of the troops and the Indianisation of the officers, then it is quite possible to have substantial reductions in expenditure; and for each English soldier replaced by an Indian, the expenditure will be reduced by about four-fifths. Of course I do not advocate here that we should reduce the English Army or the English officers at once. I think their maintenance is absolutely necessary for the efficiency of the Army; but at the same time we should lay down certain principles by means of which Indianisation may proceed, not only in the rank and file but also in all classes of the officers' grades. If the principles are adopted, then it will be possible that we shall have a substantial reduction, under this heading alone, of, say, about 5 to 10 crores after some years. Of course it is difficult for me to fix a date, but I do strongly advocate, as a measure of retrenchment, that we should adopt some kind of policy of Indianisation of services, both in the officers' grade and in the rank and file, so that our expenditure may gradually be reduced.

It was pointed out by the Finance Member in his speech, I think last year, that there are two ways of reducing the Army expenditure: one is a change of policy and the other by economising expenditure. Unless we have a change of policy, he said, we cannot have a substantial saving. I entirely agree with him, and I think our Retrenchment Committee ought to examine very carefully whether we do require so large an army as we are maintaining at present. I understand that there are three functions which our army has to perform: one is for Imperial defence, that is, to meet the attack from any outside power; the second is really to keep peace on our Frontier, that is, to save the people from attack of the frontier tribes and adjoining power; and the third is internal peace. We ought to reckon the minimum size of the army which we require for each of these purposes, and after determining these things we should determine how large an army we are required to maintain.

As regards the question of imperial defence, this question will have to be worked out in conjunction with the Imperial Defence Council or the War Office, and India should contribute her quota for Imperial defence. India alone should not be considered as a training ground for the Imperial forces. No doubt if the British Government decide to choose India as the training ground for the Empire forces, then England should pay for the training; we can only contribute our quota for the general defence, and this ought to be settled once for all. For the purpose of general defence it should be decided how large an army India is to maintain in a state of efficiency not inferior to the efficiency of the army in any other country. The second question is about the army for our frontier. At present, one-third of our army is located on the other side of the Indus; while the remaining two-thirds are distributed over the rest of India. The question is whether we require such a large army to maintain order and peace among these trans-border tribes. This really depends upon the policy which we adopt about the North-West defence. This was pointed out by the Inchcape Committee, and I shall quote what they say:

"We are informed that there is no idea in the mind of the Government of India of continuing a forward policy of military domination up to the Durand Line at the present time—that the idea has been abandoned."

I do not know whether the Committee was correct and whether the idea of the forward policy has been abandoned, but at any rate it is very desirable that we should define what the border line is, whether the border line of India is the border of the settled districts or whether the border line is the Durand Line; and after settling this problem, we should determine the amount of military strength which is required to keep order in that part of India. The whole population of the trans-border tribes is something like 25 lakhs, out of which there cannot be on active service at any time more than 8 lakhs of people. In order to keep 8 lakhs of people in order, is it necessary for us to maintain an army of about 1 lakh—that is one soldier for every eight persons to keep them in order? I personally believe that on account of the development in our air force and partial development of civilisation it is not necessary to maintain such a large army today as was perhaps necessary about 8 years ago, and this question should be considered by experts and we should keep just as small an army as may be necessary.

While I therefore advocate strongly that we should settle once for all the exact size of the army which is necessary for peace time, we should also gradually try to Indianise the army in the interests of economy and we should also encourage more and more the auxiliary and territorial forces, on whom we could fall back in time of war as a second and third line of defence, as these are not very expensive things, and as at a time of strain we can always have these soldiers ready for active service.

There are one or two small points to which I would like to draw attention. One is the capitation tax. This question has been raised year after year by the Assembly. The expenditure amounts to 186 lakhs and we have been pressing year after year that this amount is too much and should be settled; but no efforts have yet been made to settle it. I thought this was the legitimate duty of our Retrenchment Committee to take up this particular question and to press for its settlement.

Another question which requires to be considered is the question of transport. The Welby Commission recommended that as a measure justifiable in the circumstances half the cost of transport of troops to and from India should be defrayed by the Imperial Government. This was their recommendation, and I think it ought to be the duty of the Retrenchment Committee to see that this recommendation is enforced.

If all the measures of economy I have mentioned are carried out, I am perfectly confident that our Budget will be reduced by at least 15 crores, and we will come down to what it was before the war, that is, about 30 crores; and unless we reduce our Military Budget to this amount, no amount of taxation and no other measures will balance our Budget. No doubt general administration is an expensive item and we can retrench the expenditure thereon by about 3 crores; but this forms a very small part of the entire expenditure; as Mr. Aggarwal pointed out last time our military expenditure is about 67 per cent. of the total expenditure, that is about two-thirds of the whole, and therefore we should apply our axe particularly to an item which involves the major portion of the expenditure.

Then, Sir, the last thing that I should like to mention is about the policy of an Indian Navy. We have provided 67 lakhs for the Indian Navy. I think either we should have a navy of our own or we should not have a navy. If we really want an Indian navy, then we should seriously take up the question and establish a navy of our own, otherwise we should, as part of the British Empire, depend upon the British Navy and make only a contribution as our quota for the defence of the Empire.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Twenty minutes Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Twenty Minutes Past Two of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadian): When discussing the Railway Budget, I stated that the Honourable the Railway Member was only tinkering with retrenchment in the railways. If I am asked to give my opinion about the retrenchment policy in the civil administration and the Army side, I will say that the Government of India have only scratched the surface regarding retrenchment. They have not gone deeply into the matter, and if they do not go deeply into the matter, they will have to go on mounting up taxation in subsequent Budgets, and they will never be able to grapple with the situation. As a member of one of the Retrenchment Committees, I am grateful to the Honourable the Finance Member for the bouquet he offered to the members of these Committees for the help that they had rendered. (An Honourable Member: "But was it sincere?") But I do think that the Committees would have been able to assist him further had they been allowed the liberty to do so. We have heard from our revered leader, Sir Abdur Rahim, that the recommendations of his Committee have not been given effect to, and my Honourable friend, Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad, was himself a member of the Railway Retrenchment Sub-Committee, who, like all scholars and professors, does not mind lashing himself and inflicting upon himself wounds like Jesuit monks as long as it helps to clarify the issue—of course, I differ from my Honourable friend, Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad, as I differed from him while he spoke on the Railway Budget, and I do not know why he did not take that opportunity to examine the administration of the various railways. But in the matter of general retrenchment my

[Mr. B. Das.]

Honourable friend, Sir Abdur Rahim, has made it clear that they have pointed out various items of retrenchment which the Government have not yet considered. And they cannot consider them because there are many obstacles in their way. I know that the Members who sit in the front Benches opposite are very loyal to their colleagues and to the officials who work under them. But loyalty to one's colleagues and one's officials is one thing, and loyalty to one's country is another. What does the country's interest require? Does it require the heavy expenditure that is at present incurred? As my Honourable friend the Finance Member said in his Budget speech while we were discussing the Indian Finance Supplementary and Extending Bill, the Government of India pay Rs. 120 crores in pay bills to the Army, and the civil, including the railways and the Provincial Governments. If I take off Rs. 16 crores, which is the salary bill of the railways, it comes to Rs. 104 crores, which is the pay bill of the Central Government and the Provincial Governments, out of a revenue of Rs. 200 crores,—it may be a little less than Rs. 200 crores at present. It is an enormous expenditure, and what is the reason of these heavy pay bills? Accident and circumstances brought the English to rule over India. Then the English civil servants were given high salaries. They were never content to get themselves those salaries, but they created services, and they went on paying even to the Indians similar salaries. They themselves did little work and allowed the work to be done by the Indian provincial civil servants in the provinces and also in the centre. The time has come when we are on the eve of great constitutional changes, and we shall have to revise the basis of salaries of all services, whether Imperial or provincial. Every post should carry a basic salary, and if an European is recruited from abroad, he may be given an allowance. The Indian and the European will get the same scale of salary. Five or six years ago I was opposed to that, because it brought an inferiority complex to the Indian recruit, but at present when we expect to get greater control—it may not be full control in the centre, but full control in the provinces (An Honourable Member: "Why not in the centre?") and adequate control in the centre, the time has come when the salaries should be on an Indian basis. Let the European draw even Rs. 500 or Rs. 1,000 extra allowance per mensem, but this idea of paying the Indian officers and the Indian staff in the Secretariat such high salaries is beyond the compass of the Indian taxpayer. The salary should be based as it is based in Japan and in England. Do the civil servants in England get such high salaries? Do the clerks and office assistants get such high salaries? Nowhere else in the world, as my Honourable friend Mr. Mitra points out, does anybody get such high salaries. But here the civil service went on blindly groping in the darkness, they went on raising their own salaries, demanding overseas pay, and demanding Lee concessions, and at the same time they wanted to be faithful and loyal to their Indian colleagues in the services and they went on raising their salaries also. So, the time has come when we must revise the basic salary of all posts. If that is not done, mere touching the surface of retrenchment will not do any good. The spirit should be Indian. At present the administrative plant that has been transplanted into India is a hothouse plant. It is kept in the hothouse, it does not grow. The official Members of Government must forget everything else before the interest of the country. I do not suggest appointment of another committee. I think if the General Purposes Committee is asked to lay down the basic rate of pay for all these posts, they will lay it down; but even if they are not asked to do so, I do hope that they will in their final report make some such recommendation. Sir, when the Retrenchment Committee first met in the month of May, 1931 at Simla, the Honourable the Finance Member told us that there was a conference of Finance Members of the Provincial Governments and the Central Government to discuss what should be the basic pay of future recruits for posts, both provincial and Imperial, and we were given to understand that the Finance Member would at one time circulate that report to the members of the Retrenchment Committee. I must confess that I did not ask the Finance Member in a committee meeting to circulate that report, but that scheme was never circulated to the Members of this House, nor to the members of the Retrenchment Committee unless the members of the General Purposes Committee had a chance to look at it. We were given to understand that the Finance Members of the Central and Provincial Governments wanted a specially low scale of salary for all future recruits. Whether that scale of salary will be in harmony with the revenues of the Central and Provincial Governments, I cannot say, but I do hope that if that report was not circulated to the General Purposes Committee, it may be done now, so that the Committee will express its views whether the scale of salary is high for future recruits or whether they could suggest a different scale of salary.

In talking of retrenchment, we may think that if we cut down the salaries, we have saved the Government from bankruptcy, and that future Finance Members will bring out surplus Budgets. I am very doubtful about it and I will bring out a few instances to illustrate it; I will refer the House to the Demand, "Interest on Miscellaneous Obligations", which is found on pages 134 and 135 of the Detailed Estimates. All provident funds, all investments in the post office, Postal Cash Certificates are supposed to be deposited with the Government of India, but at present the Government of India have no special funds to meet withdrawals. All this money goes to the ways and means of the Budget, and the Government have spent it. Of course every year Government allocate so much to meet obligatory demands. This year they have allocated about 9 crores of rupees as interest charges on miscellaneous obligations. That is so far true, but Government have taken this money in trust. They have spent it away, and we know the solvency position of Government. A time will come when there will be a change of Government or the transfer of Government from that side to this side, and we will then find only certain paper transactions and certain huge obligations which the successor of my Honourable friend the Finance Member will have to meet, but my friend cannot say that he has invested so many crores out of this miscellaneous obligations on productive debts. The money has gone to reduce the debt position of Government to a certain extent. He did not incur a loan of 50 crores per annum, but incurred a loan of 20 crores, say, and that no doubt reduces our debt position. When my Honourable friend became Finance Member, in his first Budget speech he drew the attention of the House to the gravity of the situation of the Savings Bank deposits and the Postal Cash Certificates to cover payments for which no provision had been made. If the Government are carried on as they are now, the Honourable Member will show in paper that the money is there, but the money will have really been spent away, and future Finance Members will have to meet all these obligations and will not be able to provide money for developing the resources of the country, or even for reducing taxation in the country, because all these obligations will have been incurred by previous Finance Members. My Honourable friend may say that he has spent all this money on the productive side, but I cannot say the same thing of his predecessors. I cannot say that his predecessors in the past looked into that aspect of the question, but all the same India's public debt has increased. I want to draw attention to another aspect of the question, that is grant No. 96, "Commuted value of Pensions", on page 907. There is an insistent demand on this side of the House to retrench, but we find that more money is being paid in commuted value of pensions. All these have to be provided for. The pensionary charges which the Government of India keep in deposit is only a book deposit and never funded separately. To-day owing to the retirement of these officers, the commuted value of pensions has also increased. Also the gratuities which will be paid to the men who are retrenched forcibly will commit the Government to the expenditure of so many crores. I think the very retrenchment policy has created more anxieties for the Finance Member. I am asking that the Finance Member should keep these pensionary charges and other deposits, as also the service funds, in interest bearing deposits, so that these are not always a charge on the revenue of the country. I consider that the time has come when the Finance Member will have to shape out his policy so that he must make provision for these obligatory debts and pensionary charges that the country incurs and which become a statutory obligation of the country.

My Honourable friend Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad discussed the Army side of retrenchment. Sir, everybody knows that the constitutional changes have been long delayed. Whether they have been delayed by us or the Government, the fact remains that they have been delayed. When the Government of India wrote their despatch to the Secretary of State in 1930, they must have come to a certain definite decision as to whether the Army expenditure would be stationary at the present figure of 46 crores odd. Supposing then that the constitutional changes take time—as everybody knows, they are going to take two or three years' more time because nobody wants to hand over power, and it is so difficult to hand over power—why, I ask, does not the Honourable the Finance Member, in the present difficult circumstances, address the Secretary of State and the British Government with a view to settling this particular aspect of the question, namely, as recommended in the Government of India's despatch, let India pay a lump sum charge for defence, of say 25 crores or so, or even 30 crores to the British War Office? Then, let the British Army be separated from the Indian Army, and let that be a fixed charge on India for ten years till the Indian Dominion Army has come into being. Sir, if that is not done, if no big cut is made in the Army expenditure, what is the use of our tinkering with the retrenchment problem and driving out a water carrier here from a foot battalion or retrenching a few mules there from the artillery or cavalry? And yet the Honourable the Finance Member asks us to accept his version that His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has done his best and to endorse the remark that the Commander-in-Chief considers that this retrenchment that has been effected in the Army cannot be held to be a permanent reduction. Sir, if these constitutional changes had come, as everybody was expecting them to come, in 1931, I am sure the Government of India and the British Government would have had to come to some definite views in that matter. I ask, why do they not give effect to their own declared views today? Instead, Sir, they make us fight on the communal issues and on the depressed classes issue and on the issue regarding the federation of the Indian States and British India, and thus they go on playing with abstract and academic questions instead of tackling the immediate practical problems. And then they ask us to give them suggestions as to how further retrenchment can be effected in the Government of India! Sir, let us, I say, face the main issue, namely, that military expenditure must be reduced; and anticipating the remarks from my friends of the European Group, I would at once say that I am quite prepared to concede the maintenance of a European Army up to a certain number in India, but I am not prepared to give them more than 30 crores of rupees for the present; and if those 20 crores are released, India will then build up a Dominion Army in five years such as will be quite sufficient not only for internal defence but also to render help to the British Empire in case there is a war outside India; and therefore, I say, if England remains our friend, I am quite willing to send out an Indian Army abroad, as we so gladly did to France and to the many other theatres of war, where I daresay we acquitted ourselves so well.

Sir, then there are certain invisible items of military expenditure which it is high time we should all—including my friends of the Round Table Conference who were discussing the actual military expenditure—take careful note of. Sir, my friend, Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad, made some pertinent remarks about the strategic railways. That is one item of expenditure which involves us in an incessant loss. Then there is the other issue.—the Military Department receives huge concessions from the railways amounting to as much as a crore of rupees per annum. They get concessions in travelling, in freights and so on and so forth, and when I gave evidence before the Railway Retrenchment Sub-Committee, I brought that to the notice of my friend, Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad, and others. Now that crore of rupees should be debited to the military side of the expenditure. Then there is this huge expenditure on the Frontier Watch and Ward. What is the use of this huge Army, and at the same time of spending all this money on the Frontier Watch and Ward? Sir, all this is nothing but concealed military expenditure. If my submission is accepted and an Indian Army is created, I am sure it can look after the Frontier Watch and Ward side of the work without incurring any additional expenditure.

Mr. B. V. Jadhav (Bombay Central Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Simply to provide training for the Indian Army.

Mr. B. Das: But what is the use of this additional expenditure? We are now talking of finance; the country, Sir, cannot go on bearing any more taxation. This expenditure should not be thrown on to the civil side. Then there is the expenditure on civil works incurred for the Frontier Watch and Ward Department. I raised the point often before the Public Accounts Committee. Now if the Military Department requires for its military purposes these military roads, then let the expenditure be debited to the Military Budget. Why should it be debited to the Civil Budget, thus mounting up the taxation of the country? Sir, incidentally, as a member of the Stationery Stores Retrenchment Committee, I want to bring to the notice of the Army Secretary one aspect of military extravagance that we noticed. Now the Stationery Department receives orders from the Military Department to print any number of forms and books and booklets; these are never indented upon, or requisitioned, and if anybody visits the Stationery Stores Office in Calcutta, he will find these are lying in heaps. Then there is another thing we gathered from the Superintendent of Stationery that, although the other Government Departments agreed in the policy of retrenchment, and use one type of papers and stationery, the military officers are never satisfied with the ordinary stationery issued out for their ordinary office work. Sometimes officers stationed at different places requisition for most costly stationery! Although this is a small item, it may bring out a saving of Rs. 30,000 to Rs. 50,000 in the Military Department, and requires looking into. They sometimes even, I am told, specify the supply of particular types of stationery, even giving the names of the manufacturers or firms of stationery! Why should the Honourable the Finance Member and other Members on the Treasury Benches and their respective Departments alone talk of conforming to one standard of stationery and use that alone in the Government of India, when there is all this waste and extravagance on the military side?

Then my friend, Mr. S. C. Mitra, dealt in detail with the recommendations of the General Purposes Committee of which he was such a worthy member. I wish to draw the attention of the House to one aspect of the question. I gave evidence before his Committee and I pointed out that the size of the Secretariat of the Government of India had grown beyond all proportion. Not only is there one Honourable Member for each portfolio, but there is a Secretary, a Joint Secretary, an Additional Joint Secretary, one or two Deputy Secretaries, one or two Additional Deputy Secretaries, one or two Under Secretaries, and Assistant Secretaries by the dozen! What is the real, tangible work of the departments which affords any excuse for this huge officer-staff? Sir, if the departments are put to the test of being considered as commercial departments, I think those officers should not at all exist. Why, for instance, should the Department of Industries and Labour, the Department of Education, Health and Lands should have the same uniform number of officers, of Secretaries, Additional Secretaries, Joint Secretaries, Additional Joint Secretaries, Deputy Secretaries, Additional Deputy Secretaries as the Finance Department itself? Of course my friend, Mr. Mitra, says that I always have a soft corner for the Finance Department, due to the fact that that Department after all handles huge expenditure-problems to the tune of four hundred of crores which require careful watching and scrutiny, but why should this precedent be blindly copied by other departments, which have practically no work or work of the nature of post office work, one paper going from the office Superintendent up to the Assistant Secretary, then to the Under Secretary, then to the Deputy Secretary, then to the Additional Deputy Secretary, then to the Joint Secretary, then to the Secretary, then to the Honourable Member marked "H. M.". (Laughter.)

Of course, I do not wish to criticise my friend the Home Member's Department because the Home Department is above God, above Government and above everything. If the Home Department makes a requisition on the Honourable the Finance Member and says I need such and such Secretary for the maintenance of law and order, the poor Finance Member cannot help it. He will have to provide finance somehow. But whether the exigencies of law and order really demanded so many additional ornaments in the staff of the Home Department, is quite a different matter. At present the Cabinet system of administration of the Government of India has no control over the individual Honourable Members of the Executive Council. I think the time has come for revision of all these as the country is on the verge of ruin and the country has no additional money to pay to the Finance Member. The country was expecting that in the year 1933 the Honourable the Finance Member would bring forward reduction in taxation. Sir, it is high time that these problems are faced squarely and fairly, but nobody wants to do so because it is a matter of prestige. The Honourable the Finance Member had two Secretaries six months ago. Well, it is very nice to have so many Secretaries, but can the country bear the expense? Of course, I am ready to concede to the Finance Member certain extra staff, because he needs it in order to have adequate control of the finances of India. But the other departments must reduce their staff. I think some of the departments ought to have one Secretary and one Under Secretary and the rest of the officers must be taken away. Most of the Superintendents during the reorganisation were made Assistant Secretaries. I do not grudge them their new comfortable rooms, new comfortable chairs and salaries, but who pays the piper? It is the country that pays and the country cannot stand any more this huge burden. This is a matter where the Honourable Member is very touchy, so I ask him to appoint a Retrenchment Committee consisting of the three Honourable gentlemen who are sitting now on the Front Treasury Bench (namely, Sir George Schuster, Sir George Rainy and Sir James Crerar). Let them decide finally what retrenchment should come in Secretariat officers. The real cause for this bloated expenditure is that we asked for Indians to be taken in in the Secretariat as officers. They have done so, but have they decreased the number of highest officials in the Secretariat? That is the point which must be looked into. Whether it is faced by the present Treasury Benches or the future Treasury Benches, it has got to be faced. These Secretariat ornaments should not continue any longer.

Sir, everybody thinks that the Secretary of State, sitting 6,000 miles away, is a mere post office. It is true that for the last few years the salary of the Secretary of State has come out of the British exchequer; but what about the huge staff that sits in that dark building known as the India Office, where so many people sit and manufacture schemes against India and against Indian aspirations? Why should these people be paid from the Indian tax-payer's money at such a high scale of pay? Indeed, the Secretary of State's office should no longer be a burden on the Indian tax-payer. What is the practice in the case of the Secretary of State for the Colonies? The Colonial Secretariat staff is not paid by Australia or the Dominions; it is paid by the British Government. If the Secretary of State thinks that he needs all the staff, let that staff be paid by the British Government and I will have no quarrel with it. It is the most surprising thing indeed that, even after the creation of the High Commissioner's office, the Secretary of State's office should spend so much money.

Then, my friend Mr. Mitra referred to the case of the Indian Stores Department. When this department was created in India, it was expected that the Indian Stores Department in London would be abolished. But then the prestige goes a long way. There was the Auditor in the Secretary of State's office and the High Commissioner's office. He does not want to work under the instructions from the Auditor General here and the High Commissioners are very chary to reduce the staff in the London Stores Department and they have not reduced it at all. I find, however, that this time there is some reduction in the office of the High Commissioner, but that does not meet the situation. Why should there be duplication of the staff, and why should the Indian High Commissioner have such a big staff, I cannot understand. Let the Honourable the Finance Member get the items of expenditure that Australia spends on its High Commissioner's department. Do they have so many Secretaries, Assistant Secretaries, Trade Commissioners and Assistant Trade Commissioners at London? I think the staff should be reduced. It seems to me that there is a conspiracy. When we put a man into a post, he wants to build up his department to show that he is doing some work, and the staff gets multiplied, but poor India cannot any more support such extravagances. I think the General Purposes Subcommittee made a very mild recommendation regarding the reduction of the staff of the Secretary of State and the High Commissioner. There ought to be a drastic cut in the case of these two departments.

Sir, my friend Mr. Mitra did not like to touch the Postal Department. I do maintain that every department should be a paying proposition. The criticisms that I level against the mal-administration of the railways apply equally to the mal-administration of the Postal Department. It is not a benevolent society, that the tax-payer should always contribute to pay high salaries to the staff of the Postal Department. Government must lay down the law that the Postal Department should be self-supporting, and if the salaries were raised, say, five or six years ago, they must be cut down. I shall hear a tirade from my Honourable friend, Mr. Joshi, who is a labour leader, but I do not understand how the Postal employees can be called labourers. Sir, every commercial department must be self-supporting, and if the Postal Department cannot pay its own way, then either the staff should be reduced or the salaries should be lowered. Another aspect of the Postal Department is the vested interests of my friend Sir Henry Gidney in the Telegraph Department.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney (Nominated Non-Official): I have no vested interests in that department at all

Mr. B. Das: Now that my friend is so much interested in the vested interests of railways he has dropped his former love, the Telegraph Department. I am glad that he agrees that he has no vested interests in the Telegraph Department and I hope my Honourable friend, Mr. Ryan, will see that he will do away with all the favouritism in the Telegraph Department where a certain number of posts are reserved for the members of the community to which my Honourable friend Sir Henry Gidney belongs. Those posts should now be thrown open to all.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: So they are.

Mr. B. Das: Then why should the Bombay Office and the Calcutta Office have so many posts which must be recruited from a certain community; and why should these high salaries be paid to them?

Now, I come to the Report of the Public Works Retrenchment Committee, over which my Honourable friend, Mr. Neogy, sat as the Chairman. My friend, Mr. Neogy, who was in a hurry to go to the Round Table Conference, finished it in a week. He recommended only the

3 P.M. reduction of one Superintending Engineer in the large number of engineering establishments that the Government have got at Delhi. This morning I said, sack the whole lot of the members of the Public Works Department. Now we have spent 16 to 18 crores on the Delhi capital. What is the use of maintaining this huge staff when there is no necessity at all for it, and even as my Honourable friend, Mr. Mitra, pointed out, they are not even able to supply drinking water to 2,000 extra souls if they are left here in the summer season in Delhi. The former Member for Industries and Labour, Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra, with whom I used to have tussles on the floor of this House used to say that he had reduced the staff in the Public Works Department. I have gone over the list, and I find there is a very little reduction in the staff. Today the P. W. D. deals with the Delhi Province, and they have very little work except to look after the maintenance of these buildings. Why then this huge expenditure of a Chief Engineer, two Superintending Engineers and so many Executive Engineers and so many Assistant Engineers? If I am to formulate a scheme, I say, sack the whole lot of officers, including the Superintending Engineers and even the Chief Engineer. I do not mind if the whole work is delegated to one Superintending Engineer (he may be called the Chief Engineer, but his salary should be of the grade of Superintending Engineer) to look after the roads and buildings of the Delhi Province. Instead of having merely two Executive Engineers, and a few Assistant Engineers, what do we find? We find that the Chief Engineer is so hard worked that he has got a Personal Assistant on Rs. 1,800. He is not recruited from the Engineering staff, but he has been recruited from the Secretariat of my Honourable friend, the Home Member's Department. I do not understand why a Chief Engineer wants a Personal Assistant who is a non-technical man! That is indeed a surprise to me. After looking into the administration of all the provinces I find the Chief Engineer, everywhere, has got a Personal Assistant who is always an Executive Engineer or an Assistant Engineer.

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Nominated Non-Official): Why an Engineer?

Mr. B. Das: I must stand for my profession. This non-technical assistant of the Delhi Chief Engineer is paid Rs. 1,800. A Superintending Engineer who has to preside over the whole of the Delhi P. W. D. ought to get Rs. 1,800. Why should we continue this extravagance? There is a Superintending Engineer looking after the Horticultural Department. I know every Honourable Member of the Executive Council has got beautiful gardens and flower beds, but does that justify the poor tax-payer to maintain a huge Horticultural Department so that Honourable Members could have button-holes in their coats? I am not going into detail, but I think my Honourable friend the Finance Member should refer back again to the P. W. D. Retrenchment Committee this question, because that Committee has not done adequate justice in that matter and we cannot maintain such a high salaried staff. The P. W. D. Committee recommended the abolition of the post of non-technical Assistant but it has not been given effect to. They also recommended the abolition of the post of the Roads Engineer. The contention of the Government is that the Roads Engineer is paid from the funds of the Roads Committee, and so we should not worry our head because the Central revenues will not be debited with any money. That is not the right way of looking at the subject. As we know, my Honourable friend, Mr. Shillidy, made a statement last session, that owing to the financial insolvency of the Provincial Governments, Government have decided that the Road Fund will be utilised for the maintenance and repair of the roads in the province for the present. That means that no Roads Engineer is at present necessary to remain with the Central Government to look after that Fund, because the Roads Committee of this House will allocate that Fund to the Provincial Government and they will take it and spend it on repairs and maintenance of roads. The Honourable the Finance Member will say that he is expecting the financial solvency of the provinces next year, and so the services of a Roads Engineer is necessary. But I strongly differ from him. There is no chance of solvency in the near future, and so I feel that the recommendation of the P. W. D. Committee should have been accepted.

I have indicated certain lines where retrenchment has been very inadequate and I feel that retrenchment must be adequate—not only in the salaries paid by the Government of India which are to the tune of 120 crores and these should be reduced by at least 33 per cent. or 40 per cent. but also there should be a complete change in the outlook and in the future recruitments. If the Honourable the Finance Member either refers to the General Purposes Committee or to any other Committee to look into the future scales of salaries, he will do justice not only to himself but to the country. I was not a party to the ten per cent. cut as a measure of retrenchment. The Honourable the Finance Member was himself the Chairman of the Retrenchment Committee where we unanimously recommended a graduated scale of cut rising from 3½ to 20 per cent. Unfortunately the Chairman of the Retrenchment Committee, though he happened to be the Honourable the Finance Member, was overruled by the Government of India and the Government of India, taking the cue from the Army Department and the War Office, decided that there should be no cut beyond ten per cent. To pamper and satisfy a few officers today, the whole country has been made to suffer. I think a cut of 20 per cent., and even higher, was necessary, and today looking into the financial conditions of the country, a cut of even more than 20 per cent. is all the more necessary. I think Government should look into the matter again and there should be even a 30 per cent. cut. Another suggestion of mine is that in the case of future recruitment to the services of the Government of India and also in the provinces they should not be paid the same scales of salary in the future as exist at present.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: I have listened very attentively to the Mover of this motion and I have made a close study of the reports that have been submitted by the various retrenchment Sub-Committees. Referring to the last speaker, my Honourable friend, Mr. Das, I do not think he showed much gratitude to the opposite Benches when after accepting the Finance Member's bouquet he denied him even the wearing of a button-hole. While I listened to the Mover of this motion, my mind went back to an amusing remark made to me by a railway servant shortly after the railway report had been submitted. He said, "Sahib, who are these Sahibs who are travelling all over India to cut our pay. We work the trains in which they travel; they get their daily allowance and their travelling allowance out of our taxes and they now want to cut our pay", and with a coy smile he added, "Do you think it would be wrong if we removed fish plates from the rails and derailed the train in which they travel?". This remark was made in jest but I must congratulate the Retrenchment Sub-Committee on having so far had a safe journey all over India.

Mr. B. Das: So, the Honourable Member is in conspiracy with the railway employees for the purpose of removing fish plates.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Apparently! but the Honourable Member's life is quite safe, Sir! I really do not understand what is behind this motion. As far as I am concerned, I am prepared to accept and stand by the sobriquet given to me by the Honourable the Finance Member. In his Budget speech he called me a whole-hogger; I frankly admit I am a whole-hogger because I am dead against retrenchment as advocated by the various Retrenchment Sub-Committees. On close examination of the work of these Retrenchment Committees I feel I can aptly describe them as itinerating hydra-headed cobras roaming over the country putting their stings into the purse of every employee and in emptying them shouting "Down, down with the public servant and save the public".

Mr. H. P. Mody (Bombay Millowners' Association: Indian Commerce): That's a mixed metaphor.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: My interrupter can have the metaphor if it is suitable; if it is not, he can have the mixture. He can please himself, but I shall be pleased if he will not interrupt me again. Sir, let us look at the composition of the General Purposes Retrenchment Sub-Committee; there was not a single workman on it. I believe it consisted mainly of legal men. If the gentlemen who formed the Sub-Committees had belonged to the working classes and had their pay retrenched as they have advocated, I wonder what speeches we would have heard from them today. Sir, I was co-opted as a member of two of these Committees, "Railways" and the "Army". But I am glad I did not help to cut the wages of the lower paid employee. My intention in joining these Committees was to operate as a dose of anti-venom so as to be an antidote to the poisonous effects of these hydra-headed reptiles. In my efforts I also supported many of the points to which my Honourable friend Mr. Mitra referred, particularly to adequate retrenchment of higher paid appointments and also to what my friend Mr. Das demanded, namely, that these Retrenchment Committees should in addition have undertaken the task of revising the new scales of salaries for new entrants. My conflict with him is that they should not have retrenched the salaries of present employees. I have often wondered, Sir, what the legal members of these Retrenchment Committees would have done if a Government had issued an ordinance retrenching their incomes by limiting their legal fees to Rs. 50 a case or per diem. I feel sure they would have been up in arms at once, boycotted law courts and raised their voices in loud protest even as I am doing today. What I cannot understand, Sir, is why the Finance Member ever consented to the creation of these retrenchment monsters and further why he has been a party to the ruthless application of their retrenchment axe. He asked for these Committees and he is now faced with their impossible demands, some of which are impossible of acceptance, while others, if accepted, will be against the ordinary canons of justice and vested rights and interests. Does he not realise, or is he blind to the hand writing on the wall that by this ruthless retrenchment he was creating a very serious labour unrest all over the country? Surely the Railway Department, surely the Finance Member and surely the members of these Retrenchment Committees are not absolutely blind to what is happening among labourers in India today? Again surely it does not need any great persuasion from me to show Government that the Railways are today seething with discontent and unrest and by this ruthless application of the retrenchment axe they are simply driving them to open revolt. Does Government desire to extend this unrest to other Departments as the Telegraphs and Customs? I would be the last man to countenance or encourage any such policy on the part of any employee or association or union protecting their interests. But there is a limit to the hardships these employees can stand, and surely Government is not blind to that fact. The Finance Member has made a definite statement that this 10 per cent. cut will be restored on a certain date next year. I only hope this promise will be carried out. Sir, I said just now that I agreed with what my friend Mr. Das said that these Retrenchment Committees would have served a more useful purpose if they had devoted their energies to establishing new rates of pay for new entrants and even creating new grades and new Departments for future employees instead of cutting down the salaries of subordinates. Certainly have new rates of pay for new entrants but why harm those who are already serving you, and serving you well and faithfully. I warn the Government to stop this policy before it is too late. Sir, in this epidemic of retrenchment which has infected these various Retrenchment Committees, both the Government and these Committees have forgotten one very important point and that is this. Broadly speaking, one can divide all forms of labour into two categories. The first category includes the labourer who gets a substantive or grade pay with nothing else or may be a few minor allowances as house allowance. He may work for 4 or 6 or 8 hours; still he gets his full pay and no allowance or very few. If he works overtime or undertime he gets nothing more nor less than this pay. These employees are to be found in the Government of India and Provincial Government offices and other such ministerial appointments. In the second category are those employees who receive a basic pay but a basic pay which is calculated or which is assessed according to the nature of work and the hours of work performed. Anything over that contracted period is called overtime and this is variously calculated and valued according to mileage or over hours spent on labour which is generally obtained at the sweat of a man's brow and by depriving him of hours of rest or leisure. That, Sir, is called "overtime". These are the two different classes of labourers. I ask Government and I ask the Retrenchment Sub-Committees, can they or should they treat these two classes of employees alike in their retrenchments? They cannot and yet this is exactly what they are doing with the result that such employees as overtime workers on Railways, Customs, Telegraphs, etc., are being more seriously retrenched than other employees. By working overtime Government is saved the employment of additional staff at a higher cost. But what have these Retrenchment Committee's done? Those employees who have a lower basic pay and who depend for a decent wage on their extra pay earned by overtime at the expense of their health are the very men who have been most retrenched and suffer the severest. Sir, in previous speeches I dealt at length with the Railways. I do not propose again to refer to them except to say I entirely agree with my Honourable friends, Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad and Mr. Das, in that strategic Railways should be debited to military estimates and not to general railways.

I desire now to deal with one or two of the many departments referred to by the Mover. The Opposition Benches have accused me of having a very large heart. I admit quite frankly, Sir, that I have got a very large heart for the oppressed and retrenched workmen; and however much my Honourable friends, Mr. Mitra and Mr. Das, may point the finger of scorn and ridicule and even attempt to ridicule that loyal and patriotic little band of Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European workmen who have for centuries served India so well, for that scorn, for that satire and for that ingratitude I return a smile and say—I thank you for nothing but I am happy in the conviction that I have served India well, may be better than the Honourable Member, but I desire to tell him

Mr. President: Order, order. The Honourable Member has got into the habit of addressing the Opposition instead of addressing the Chair.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: I beg your pardon, Sir, but I was endeavouring to address it through you.

Certain remarks have been made about the Telegraphs. The Telegraphs certainly deeply concern the community which I represent here and I do think the Telegraphs have been very hard hit. I may inform my Honourable friends that the hardest hit employees in the Telegraphs are certainly members of the Anglo-Indian community who as a result of years of hard, honest and efficient labour are today in appointments drawing fairly high salaries most of which appointments the Posts and Telegraph Retrenchment Sub-Committee has axed. I need hardly refer to the serious prejudicial effect the recent competitive entrance examination into this Department has already had on Anglo-Indian recruitment. But I am not crying over that. I will leave the Telegraphs alone and deal with the Customs.

I regret to note that my Honourable friend Mr. Mitra never refers to any retrenchment measures without thickly tincturing his remarks with some sarcasm aimed directly to the community I have the honour to represent. I cannot understand why he does this and why he should always refer to the Anglo-Indian community in these biting and bitter terms. To him, the word "Anglo-Indian" is an anathema. But, Sir, let me tell this House that till a few years ago the entire Customs Preventive Service was exclusively manned by Anglo-Indians and Domiciled Europeans who by their loyalty, honesty and devotion to their service have so developed the Department that today it annually supplies to the Government Treasury from 30 to 40 crores of rupees—almost the cost of the Army in India and certainly more than the cost of maintaining the entire Government administrative staff. Sir, that is the Department whose interests I am trying to defend and protect in this House against the Retrenchment demands made. Sir, certain charges have been made by previous speakers against Government, and if you remember, Sir, when I spoke on the Railways I also made certain charges against Railway administrations. I then absolved the Railway Board from any blame, but I did blame the Railway administrations. I think every Member of this House will agree with me when I say that the Court of Inquiry report now in our hands has substantiated those charges. It has proved beyond doubt that the Railway administrations do not carry out the instructions of the Railway Board. I levy the same charges against the Heads of certain other Departments of the Government of India. I will take up only one out of many points raised by the Mover—"Superannuation". Sir, superannuation as it is put in Government's order of priority of retrenchment takes the last place. Superannuation as it is put into practice takes no place. There are many instances today of Government servants who have served far beyond the superannuation age but who for varying reasons are being kept on. The Customs is one of the Departments that is guilty of this disobedience of Government instructions. Why even today in the Calcutta Customs servants are being kept on beyond 55 years of age, while young men are being retrenched.

[Sir Henry Gidney.]

Mr. B. V. Jadhav: Do they belong to any particular community?

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: The Customs today, as the House will no doubt be aware, is being recruited on very liberal lines, two Indians to one non-Indian recruit and there is no communal preference shown at all—Sir, I think that answers my friend's question. But the Customs Department in recent years has had additional responsibility thrown on their shoulders. Take the port of Calcutta for instance. It has recently been very much enlarged. Again one of the chief duties of Customs preventive officers is to prevent the smuggling of arms and drugs—a very responsible duty indeed—one which cannot be adequately assessed in terms of Rs. as. pies. Another duty that has been imposed on them is heavy work associated with the constant changes of rates and tariffs. Now my friend, Mr. Mitra, reading from the report of the General Purposes Retrenchment Sub-Committee regarding the Customs Department, said that these Preventive Officers were overpaid; and in support of the retrenchment recommended of 50 per cent. of the overtime, said that formerly these Officers were originally recruited from the Police Department and as the Police of Calcutta were not in receipt of such liberal overtime he saw no reason why the Customs should get it. I am surprised at that line of argument. To argue that because the Calcutta Police have no overtime the Customs must today be deprived of a vested right it has enjoyed for years is to say the least, reductio-ad-absurdum. Does the Retrenchment Committee realise that this is a vested right of this Department, that the money is earned at the sweat of the brow and loss of rest and injury to health, that these employees have been engaged on the terms that they will receive overtime and to deprive them of this right would be a break of contract? Does it not realise that while the Customs is a revenue-earning Department, the Police is a money-spending Department? Did the Retrenchment Sub-Committee forget the indisputable fact that of all Departments of Government the Customs is the one that supplies the major part of its revenue? To come nearer home it is the means of giving each one of us our halting allowance of Rs. 20 a day and the 1 3/5 first class travelling allowances we get to attend this House. The Customs Department is the bank which supplies the finances of the present Government and the new Federal Government to be. Deprive the Government of this source of revenue and where are you? In the sea. Ruin this Department and the finances of your new Federal Government will be killed. And yet the Customs is the one Department that has been so hotly attacked by the Mover and the Retrenchment Committee. This is surely killing the goose that lays the golden egg and cutting one's nose to spite one's face. I call this suicidal retrenchment—not beneficial and I cannot find strong enough language with which to condemn it wholesale. Sir, let me tell this House a few home truths about this overtime on which the Retrenchment Committee is remarkably silent. Owing to world wide trade depression and from 1927-28 this overtime has considerably reduced, till today it is 44 per cent. of what it was before. I ask members of the General Purposes Retrenchment Committee to remember this fact and I challenge them to deny it. In addition these officers have suffered 10 per cent. of their pay as also 10 per cent. reduction of the staff. I now want to ask where does the overtime come from? It comes from the merchants of the port of Calcutta. Who receives this overtime? The answer is it is shared between Government and these Customs officers.

Sir Abdur Rahim (Calcutta and Suburbs: Muhammadan Urban): No Government do not get anything.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: I am open to correction, but I will take the correction from the official Benches—not from you, Sir, as Chairman of the General Purposes Sub-Committee.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: Take your lead and inspiration also from there.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Sir, I refuse that invitation for I should then be misled. I do not want to weary the House with figures—which prove that whereas in the year 1927-28 the total overtime earned by this Service—and which I again say subject to correction is shared between the men and the Government—was Rs. 3,46,123, in 1931-32 it amounts to Rs. 1,89,266—a reduction of 44 per cent. What has been the result? The result is that the men have been deprived of nearly half their overtime. Furthermore a staff depleted by 10 per cent. is called upon to work over hours. May be all night at a return of 44 per cent. overtime less than normal times and less 10 per cent. in salary and on the top of this the Retrenchment Committee demands a further 50 per cent. less overtime. And what is happening today in this Department? These underpaid men, overburdened with the high cost of living and education of their children, as also a reduction in uniform allowance and increased income-tax are today flocking for financial help from the mutual help association, co-operative society, etc., and so are sinking deeper and deeper in debt. Sir, I submit if you attack the chief revenue-earning department of the Government of India with this severe measure of retrenchment, you will not only throw open the door to corruption, but what is more serious, reduce the morale of the Department. Does the House desire this? Do Government court this? In my opinion if there is one Department in the Government of India that should not have been touched by the retrenchment axe it is the Customs Department. May I also tell the House that there is no difference in pay between the various communities employed in this Department. They are all on the same basic pay. And so I am not appealing on behalf of my community only. I am speaking for a Department that today recruits two Indians to one Anglo-Indian. One word more before I sit down. What are the advantages of this system of paying overtime to these officers. Let me tell you. By the merchants paying these men overtime Government is saved the expense of engaging additional larger staff which would otherwise be necessary. Again the fees that are received from merchants have saved this expense to Government, otherwise Government would have had to pay them and finally this overtime is earned at a loss of rest and leisure to the workmen.

[Sir Henry Gidney.]

Sir, when I began my speech I said I was a whole-hogger. I will end by saying that I hope I have proved myself a super-wholehogger. Sir, I am absolutely against any retrenchments whatever. I am certainly in favour of reducing expenditure by forming a Committee to initiate new grades and new rates of pay for new entrants. I certainly do think there are a number of appointments which are in receipt of high salaries. Retrench those. I am also in favour of setting up a Committee to consider retrenchment of even the Lee concessions. I do not care what else you do; but I do state this, that this House is wrong in indulging in a campaign of ruthless retrenchment of its public servants and so saving the public. There are one or two other points to which I shall refer before I sit down.

My friend Mr. Mitra talked about the Indian Medical Service. May I tell members of that Retrenchment Committee that the question of health before wealth is a very good motto for them to practise and follow. The retrenchment suggested in the field of medicine and public health is to my mind almost impossible. For after all, surely members of that Committee have noticed that for the last ten years the expenditure on medicine and sanitation has been reduced to a dangerous degree in India. No Government and no country that desires to advance on scientific lines and to improve the country's health, especially the prevention of spreading epidemic diseases, can work without an efficient medical and health department and this means adequate money or hands off by the Retrenchment Committee.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: But it is a transferred provincial subject.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: I do not desire to refer to any department. My friend Mr. Mitra has done that. My one desire has been to defend the Customs Preventive Service against the cruel, unjust and inhuman retrenchments recommended by the General Purposes Sub-Committee. I hope I have proved my points to this House and that the Government will not bow to these retrenchment demands. Sir, I oppose this Motion.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur Mian Sir Fazl-i-Husain (Member for Education, Health and Lands.): Sir, there has been such a great deal of talk about retrenchment that it is worth the while of the House to hear an aspect of this problem which, so far as I know, has not been presented to the House up till now. We who have to administer the various departments of the Government have been a long-suffering people. One of our colleagues, the gentleman on my left, has long been known as the watch-dog of the State finances. Since the financial stringency, he has developed into a wolf, and we really have a real bad time with him. Our only protection against his wolf-like habits was the threat we held out to him, "Here are the non-official Members of the House; they want to know what we are doing in the interests of the beneficent departments". What we are doing to keep the status of India high up in the civilized world? Sir, as luck would have it, Honourable Members of the House agreed to the Honourable the Finance Member's suggestion of forming themselves into a Committee. I never thought last year that that Committee would bring so much trouble to us. (Laughter.) I do not know whether the House is familiar with one of the numerous Committees this Committee divided itself into, but there was one that I came across very often, and that was the General Purposes Sub-Committee. What its purposes were, I do not know, except that it has left hardly any work for me to do. I seldom opened a pamphlet published by this Committee,—and it issued very many,—without seeing that some activity or other was curtailed. I wonder whether any Retrenchment Committee will be functioning next year to see to what extent money has been spent by this Committee, but I assure you there is hardly any activity of the Government of India's beneficent departments which has not been most ruthlessly attacked by my own people, the non-official Members of the House. And I have no protection now—enemies to my left—enemies to my right. (An Honourable Member: "Not in front?") Now, take a very simple thing, a thing that did not cost very much. I will give the House by way of illustration the department which came into being only recently, the Department of Archaeology. That is the one Department, Sir, in which India in the East and even in the civilized world including the West can hold its own and contribute to the knowledge of the past. Now, what did the Retrenchment Committee say? They said, "We do not want any exploration, we do not want any work whatsoever to be done". Not only that, they said, "You must stop the work that has already been done and not let the work already done be made available to the Indian public and the civilized world". Now, Sir, knowing the futility of one Member standing against his own, a colleague on one side and his own constituents so to speak on the other, I had no option but to bow my head to this decision of the General Purposes Committee. If my own colleague was a wolf, there was a band of wolves much more bloodthirsty (Laughter), but I put a limit to it when they said that not only that no work should go on but that the work already done should not be written in order to be presented to India and made available to the world. That is the one charge that has been brought against me this morning. Why did I not, so to speak, throw into the waste-paper basket all the knowledge collected during the last 20 years by its officer who is retiring, and why did I dare to say that that man should record and publish those things? Well, Sir, it took me some days to meet him even in that matter. I assure the House that those were not pleasant negotiations into which I entered with the officer who was preparing that material and with whom, on behalf of this House and the Government, we had entered into a contract. It will perhaps satisfy the House, whatever it may have cost me, to know that a part of the payment has been deferred till such time as those books which he produces are sold and the Royalty obtained which goes to liquidate his claim against Government. I trust the General Purposes Committee or any other purposes committee that may be constituted, Sir, in the future will not be so hard on the departments which really do something towards raising the dignity and status of this country in the civilized world.

Then, Sir, there was research work being conducted in India in the Forest Department, in the Medical Department and in the Public Health Department. The General Purposes Committee does not believe in the purposes of research at all. (Laughter.) It is a luxury which must be given up because we are hard up, nor have they spared research in agriculture. Grants under all heads have been practically withdrawn or reduced to a figure extremely low. Well, there again it only shows how the same thing can be looked at from different aspects or from different points of view. Those of us who place before themselves retrenchment as a sort of God or Goddess, whatever you may like to call it, lose all balance of mind in the matter of what is right and what is wrong. We have on this side of the House heard a great deal from Honourable Members opposite who consider that every order passed by us for expenditure incurred by us is nothing else but sheer extravagance indulged in with the sole object of squandering the treasures of the country. Well, Sir, it would perhaps be equally correct for me to say that every axe struck at the root of this department had but one object, and that was to kill the beneficent activities that this Government has been carrying on. I trust Honourable Members will forgive me if I speak with some feeling on the subject, but having entered under the reforms the British Government in a province with the sole object of doing what I could in the matter of beneficent departments, I could not but resent these activities of the General Purposes Committee when I had accidentally found myself to be a victim of their fanaticism.

Then, Sir, not only researches have been more or less successfully killed for the time being, but other departments like the Survey of India have been reduced to very nearly half in point of expenditure, and what is more, today I understand a more serious charge has been brought against my Department that while they thought that this cut would get rid of people of all communities, by some device I have kept the English and the Anglo-Indians and only done away with the Indians. Well, Sir, I confess I had not seen the figures till now, because I thought that this sort of criticism was the peculiar preserve of communal vernacular newspapers. But since on the floor of this House this very serious charge has been made, I assure the House that it is not well founded. On the other hand, only this morning I got a representation from an officer, who from his name appears to be certainly neither Hindu nor Muslim, so presumably either he was a European or an Anglo-Indian, saying that he has been unlawfully axed by my department. The statistics which I have been able to get within the last few hours show that retrenchment has by no means been limited to Indians. In the higher grades only Europeans—and it is only in the higher grades that they generally are—have been retrenched. That was due to the fact that there were no Indians in higher grades, but it is enough to refer to this fact to assure the House that the allegation made on this subject is not well founded.

Then, amongst other recommendations, one was to the effect that there should be no Council of Agricultural Research Secretariat, that as a separate department it should cease to exist, and that it should be combined with the Department of Education, Health and Lands, as was the case before. I will not enter into the merits or demerits of that controversy, but I will appeal to the House to remember that the department was not of my creation, and therefore there is not the very human tendency of supporting what one has done, but it was the result of the recommendations of another Committee like the General Purposes Committee, called by a different name—the Royal Commission on Agriculture. It also worked for a long time and also produced as many big volumes as the General Purposes Committee have produced small ones. But I trust that Honourable Members will not think that the Royal Commission on Agriculture, whose recommendation on the subject was accepted by the Government of the day, and I believe was generally approved by the House—that when this department was a baby of about three years standing I should be called on to slaughter that infant without having given it a chance to show what it could do, I trust that in not having committed infanticide, I have not done anything of which the House disapproves. (Applause.)

Sir Abdur Rahim: The Honourable Member who spoke last has complained of the wolves in his own Government and of the wolves on this side of the House. Sir, if he only bore in mind under what circumstances we took up this task, he would have realised who are the real wolves and the real victims. The victims are the people of the country, and we wanted to save the people of the country from absolute ruin. The Government of India, or any Government which has control of the revenues of a country, has to be economical in the expenditure on themselves. My Honourable friend has been away from India for some time, and I am not sure that he is quite up to date in his information. I think he has been misled, if he will allow me to say so, as regards some of the points which he wanted to make before us. The General Purposes Sub-Committee had to deal with a very large number of subjects, including the subjects in the charge of the Honourable Member. If the Honourable Member had carefully read the Report and had the time to do so, he would have found that throughout our deliberations we have been most anxious not to cripple in any way the activities of the scientific or educational departments. This is expressly laid down in our Report in the very introduction, and we stuck to that throughout. If there have in fact been retrenchments in education or research beyond our Report, then in that case it is not the General Purposes Sub-Committee that ought to be taken to task. One point specially I ought to mention, and that is the Council of Agricultural Research. We never recommended that that Council should be done away with. On the other hand, we had to resist a great deal of pressure put upon us to abolish that Council. We recommended that the Council should be retained and should be allowed to carry on its work according to the Report of the Royal Commission. I do not know who gave information to a contrary effect to the Honourable Member, but that is the fact. I think the Honourable Member was mixing up the Council of Agricultural Research with the Agricultural Department. That is a different story. It is not the Council of

The Honourable Khan Bahadur Mian Sir Fazl-i-Husain: I quite understand.

Sir Abdur Rahim: It is not the Council of Agricultural Research that we wanted in any way to abolish or whose operation we wanted to curtail. On the other hand, we give it our fullest support. All that we wanted to see was that there was no reduplication of work and that there was no employment of unnecessary staff simply because they are called experts. When the Honourable Member in charge of the department has at his command a number of experts in the provinces, for instance in Pusa, when he has got under his disposal, to give him advice, a large number of experts, a well paid and highly qualified staff, we thought that under the circumstances it was not necessary, when the finances of the country were in such straits, to have an unnecessary staff again at the headquarters. Then, as regards medical and health, we have been extremely anxious, quite as anxious as the Honourable Member for Education, that any legitimate activity of Government in the cause of sanitation and health should not suffer. But we found that at the headquarters we have an unnecessarily large staff, which could not be justified in these hard times. For instance, we know that the Indian Medical Service is primarily recruited for the Army, and in the Army itself we have officer who, among his other duties, has the supervision of the medical services. This is what the department itself admits:

"It will be seen that as stated by the Department of Education, Health and Lands 'only a portion of the Director General's work is done for the civil authorities'."

We say in our Report:

"The I. M. S. and I. M. D. are essentially military services. The expenditure on the Medical Store Depots and their profits are found among the Army Estimates. The principal minor administrations (e.g., North-West Frontier Province, Baluchistan, Ajmer-Merwara) have their own Chief Medical Officers. The State Railways have just reorganised their own medical arrangements."

We therefore came to the conclusion, which was amply justified by the evidence and the facts that we had before us, that it was unnecessary to retain such a highly paid staff at the headquarters of the civil department, when you have a fully organised department in the Army as well. But at the same time we were careful to lay down that the Government of India should have at their command competent medical advice on questions of sanitation and the like. We simply wanted to reduce unnecessary expenditure. Now, as regards the Medical Research Fund, evidence was given before us that no less than 50 lakhs was there in the Fund for promoting research, and we had evidence from which we drew the conclusion that under those circumstances it was not necessary during these times of stringency for the Government to make any annual contribution. Then as regards Archæology, the chief complaint of my Honourable friend opposite seems to be that we have recommended the abolition of the post of Sir John Marshall whose services have been requisitioned after he had retired in order to write a book on certain explorations. Sir John Marshall had been in the service of the Government of India for a very long time, 28 years, and it was expected that during this long term of office he would have been in a position to publish the results of his own work and the work of his department. We were also satisfied that, whatever publication was necessary in order to give information to the world as regards the archæological finds in India, the department was not without men in order to carry out such duties. Again, the terms on which Sir John Marshall had been re-engaged were extremely onerous, and we thought that in the interests of economy the requisitioning of his service after his time had expired was not justified. As I began by saying, we hesitated a great deal in making recommendations which would in any way impair the beneficent activities of the Government, for we have always been champions of the cause of such activities and if the colleagues of my Honourable friend have gone beyond our recommendations we cannot be blamed for that and I am sure Sir George Schuster will be able to reply to any such criticism.

Now, I come to something that was said by Sir Henry Gidney regarding the Customs. He said, "Touch whatever department you like but do not touch the Customs".

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh (Muzaffarpur cum Champaran: Non-Muhamadan): Because there are Anglo-Indians there?

Sir Abdur Rahim: The Honourable Member did not say so, and I am not going to impute any such motive, though what the peculiarity of the Customs Department is in this respect it is difficult to understand. All that he said was that it earns revenue. Therefore am I to take it that you can overstaff the department as much as you like? After all if that department is earning revenue, it is from the public and for the public. It is not for themselves. If there is overstaffing of the Customs Department and if the men are overpaid, it was the duty of this Committee, as a Committee of this House, to investigate the matter and make such recommendations as might seem proper. He was specially excited over the question of overtime allowances. We affirm our conviction that these allowances, which amount to no less a sum than 12 lakhs of rupees, could not be justified. The position as regards overtime allowances is this. These gentlemen are employed in the Customs Department for clearing cargoes and duties of that kind. They are wholtime servants of Government just as much as policemen, Magistrates and Judges and Members of the Executive Council.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Do they work 24 hours?

Sir Abdur Rahim: There are many officials who have to work much more than their allotted official hours and they do not claim any extra remuneration for that. I do not know how this system of overtime payments came in. I could quite understand the case for overtime allowances if the contract with these men was that they were to work only certain limited hours and no more. If as a matter of fact these overtime allowances were justified by a special contract with these men, the Committee would have applied to them the general principle which they had laid down, namely, that the terms of any contract should not be affected. 12 lakhs of rupees is a very large sum in these days, and to make a present of this sum to a certain class of Government servants, we thought, would not be justified. But having regard to the fact that the practice has been prevalent for some little time, we recommended that 50 per cent. should be deducted. One Honourable Member, Mr. Ramsay Scott, a Member of this Committee, thought that 25 per cent. would be a proper retrenchment to begin with but the Government have accepted only 10 per cent. We are still of the opinion that these overtime payments, which amount to such a heavy charge, are not justified. (Lieutenant-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: "Then do you propose to stop them for the railways too? Just try this".)

4 P.M. Sir, as regards the Posts and Telegraphs, I am not in a position to say anything. Those Members of the House who have dealt with the subject will be in a position to deal with that Department. I am afraid, Sir, I have already taken more time than I had intended in order to deal with the general principles on which we have based our recommendations. One thing we must make clear to the House. We have felt, and felt very keenly, as keenly as the Honourable the Finance Member himself, that the financial position to which this country has been reduced from various causes is such that the expense of the "government" should be reduced to the minimum for carrying out its duties compatibly with reasonable efficiency; and we felt that if that could be done, the difficulty of balancing the Budget would be far less than it is at present. If the expenses of the Government of India could be reduced to that minimum, then in that case there would be less of that crushing burden of taxation which at present is interfering with the industrial development of the country and cutting at the very root of the economic resources of India. Sir, we further felt, and felt very keenly, as keenly as Sir Henry Gidney, that many men would have to be thrown out of employment. We felt that, as a matter of fact not only men of his community but many more men of the Indian community, we fully expected, would be thrown out of employment. That was a hardship which from the very beginning we had in mind, and we laid it down that our recommendations must be subject to giving the men that have to be thrown out of employment, through no fault of their own, ample compensation so that there might be as little hardship as possible. Sir, we are not satisfied that in the case of such men sufficient compensation has been given, and we would press the matter on the attention of the Government so that they may receive proper compensation.

Now, Sir, there are one or two more matters which I wish to mention, and one of them is this. I find that even the recommendations of our second Report have not been fully considered by the Government. As regards the third Report rather our recommendation as to the third batch of the Demands which we had to deal with, the Report could not be got ready in time, but we gave the Honourable the Finance Member, as he desired, a summary of our recommendations, with a brief statement of the reasons in support of the more important recommendations. That was all that we could within the time at our disposal do, and Mr. Nixon, who was the representative of the Finance on our Sub-Committee, was present throughout the discussions and we were in fact satisfied from what he said that he would supply the Honourable the Finance Member with all the information that was necessary in order to make our recommendations intelligible. Sir, we consider that there is much room for retrenchment in the higher staff of the Government of India; none of us have any doubt on that point; I shall give one instance here—the case, for instance, of the President of the Council of State. We had evidence which showed that the duties required of that office are of such a character that the Government were not justified in incurring the charge of the payment of a high salary throughout the year. (Mr. C. C. Biswas: "Rs. 50,000 for less than 50 hours!") Yes, that I believe accurately represents the position. May I ask the Government if a state of things like that can be justified when the finances of an extremely poor country like India are in this difficult and precarious plight? Now we have made that recommendation, and we also suggested an alternative, a perfectly reasonable alternative, according to which, if accepted by the Government, the duties of the office of President of the Council of State can be discharged without any extra cost whatever to the Government. That is still under consideration we believe and I do hope the Honourable the Finance Member and his colleagues will see their way to giving proper effect to our recommendation in this respect

Now, take another case,—that of the Public Services Commission. The Members of that Commission are a very well-paid body of men, each Member getting Rs. 3,500 a month, the President getting Rs. 5,000 a month—and we had unanimous evidence from them in reply to our questionnaire, showing that 3 members, which was our suggestion, would be quite adequate for discharging the duties entrusted to that Commission. We therefore made a strong recommendation to that effect. (Mr. C. C. Biswas: "It is an asylum for infirm children".) But so far that matter also has not been disposed of. We thought, having regard to the evidence given by Sir Ross Barker before us and the unanimous report of the Commission itself, that there would be no difficulty on the part of Government in accepting our recommendation; and we hope no further time will be lost by Government in giving effect to the recommendation we made in this connection. Sir, the small volumes or big volumes which we had to write in the discharge of our duties as members of this Committee have been circulated to Honourable Members of this House, and I presume they have had the time to go through them. The Government have also circulated a summary of the results of the retrenchment operations in the civil and the military departments, and Honourable Members will see for themselves how far effect has been given to our recommendations. So far as the recommendations of the General Purposes Sub-Committee are concerned, Government up to now have I believe been able to give effect to our recommendations to the extent of about 50 per cent. or so; I believe I am correct. We recommended that the expenditure of the departments should be reduced by Rs. 4 crores 23 lakhs, and so far as I gather from the information supplied to us, Government have accepted about Rs. 2 crores 40 lakhs of retrenchment. I am not taking the other civil departments but confining myself to the field covered by the General Purposes Committee. I think it amounts to about that. We are satisfied that the Honourable the Finance Member will do all that he can to see that the recommendations which these Sub-Committees have made should be carried out as closely as possible.

I wish to say, Sir, one word more, and that is with regard to the question that has been raised as to the dismissal or discharge of the employees of different communities. We bore this fact in mind as it is one of the most important questions that is troubling the country and the Government and we therefore in the very beginning made our recommendation that in carrying out retrenchment Government should bear in mind the principles which they have laid down regarding the composition of the services. That is to say, we have recommended that the policy of Indianisation should not be effected in any way so far as it can be helped and, further, we laid down that the policy which the Government have enunciated as regards the redressing of communal inequalities should also be observed as far as possible. We recognised also that it must be left entirely to the Government in carrying out their policy of retrenchment to give effect to these principles. It was not possible for the Retrenchment Committee to make any specific recommendations with regard to the members of particular communities to which certain employees in the Government belonged. If any injustice has resulted from the actual operations in the departments which had to deal with the carrying out of retrenchment then in that case we cannot in any way be asked to bear the blame. Sir, we know what the financial position is even now, it is a very serious position and we must still press therefore upon the Government that they should go on with the policy of retrenchment till sufficient economies have been effected to enable the Honourable the Finance Member to balance his budget without resorting to taxation which the country can no longer bear. It is quite clear that with the opportunities that we have had we could not go into many details which we would have liked to do. But we did our best under the circumstances and I should like to ask the House to take up the attitude that the Committees appointed from this House have done their best in order to carry out the duties entrusted to them. We have made recommendations for economy which are all set out in these Reports and I should ask the Honourable Members, including the Members of the European Group, who, I know, are equally anxious to effect economies in the administration, to give all the support they can to these Reports.

Several Honourable Members: The question may now be put.

Mr. President: I accept the closure. The question is that the question be now put.

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Sir, I think that the House may perhaps be grateful to me for one thing in connection with this debate and that is that I gave them an opportunity of looking behind the scenes and seeing what has been going on behind the scenes on our side in connection with this matter. I was fortunate in being able to get my Honourable colleague, the Member for Education, Health and Lands, to present his side of the picture to the House. Perhaps he was in a sense indiscreet, but I was grateful to him for his indiscretion in revealing to the House the sort of difficulties and even differences that exist on our side on this very difficult question of retrenchment. I wanted the House to appreciate that, and that actual position does, of course, make my task in replying to this debate a somewhat embarrassing one. To a certain extent, it is almost true to say that I, as a Finance Member, must find myself almost more in sympathy with those who have moved and spoken for this Resolution than I am with the Government if it takes up the attitude of resisting the demands for retrenchment. Therefore I wish to make nothing in the way of a debating speech to-day. I wish to make it clear that our attitude is one of listening to suggestions; our attitude is one of anxiety to carry this matter as far as it possibly can be carried consistently with the public interest. And the last condition is really the key to the whole difficulty. Retrenchment unfortunately has two sides to it. If you look at it from the point of view of reducing the expenditure and relieving the burden on the tax-payer's back, then it is a very desirable object. But unfortunately when you come to see it translated into action, it has undesirable and often almost tragic results. The difference which exists between my Honourable colleague, in his anxiety to protect the services for which he is responsible, and myself as responsible for the finances of the country, reveals the real difficulty of the situation. In fact, "You cannot make omelettes without breaking eggs" and the process of breaking eggs in the particular case is a very unpleasant one. It is in that connection that I want to say something about what fell from my learned friend the Leader of the Independent Party. He resented, or professed to resent, some of the things which Sir Fazl-i-Husain in his speech had said and he protested and said that his own Sub-Committee in their recommendations had always been most careful to make it clear that they wanted to do nothing to interfere with the activities of the scientific departments or the beneficent activities of Government. That may, indeed, have been their desire; but unfortunately their recommendations had a very different effect, and it was of their recommendations that my Honourable colleague tried to give the House some account. I would like to refer just to one particular example, the case of the grant for Agricultural Research under Demand No. 60, Imperial Council of Agricultural Research. There, it is true that the economies accepted by the Government are shown as Rs. 5,96,000 as against Rs. 4,22,000 recommended by the General Purposes Sub-Committee. But the big item in the Rs. 5,86,700 which we have accepted is the temporary suspension of the annual grants of five lakhs. We suggested and we have agreed to suspend the whole of that five lakhs, whereas the Sub-Committee only recommended a suspension of 2½ lakhs. We felt that the whole of the five lakhs could be suspended because that would not mean, in this particular year, any reduction in the sums available for expenditure, inasmuch as the Imperial Council of Agricultural Research has a large endowment fund on which they can still draw. If you deduct that item, the recommendations of the General Purposes Sub-Committee for cutting down the activities under this head come to Rs. 1,72,000 as against our recommendation of Rs. 86,700. Therefore, they recommended almost double the economy in that particular form of activity which the Government have accepted, and as an example of what they have done, I may say they have recommended the abolition of both the posts of scientific experts attached to the Imperial Council of Agricultural Research. We felt that if both those experts were to go, the Imperial Agricultural Council would be left unable to perform the most useful part of its functions. I quote that as an example for the purpose of showing that when my Honourable colleague spoke of the recommendations of the General Purposes Sub-Committee as in some respects having gone so far as almost to kill the activities of the scientific departments, he was not speaking beyond the truth, he was not exaggerating the picture. In a debate of this kind, it is always difficult to avoid the danger of being led into too much detail. One is in danger of "failing to see the wood for the trees". I sympathise very much with the Honourable the Mover of the motion in the difficulty of the task which he put upon himself this morning. He tried to take the House through the whole of the various heads, or all the most important heads, and, having had some experience myself of trying to go through a large number of figures, one after the other, before this House, I felt a good deal of sympathy with him in the difficulty of the task which he had undertaken. In some respects, if he will excuse my saying so, he was right in trying to deal with this matter in this way, because it is only when you come down to practical details that you can really test what has been done. At the same time, it would obviously be impossible for me to attempt to follow him in that detailed task of counting the trees, and I would ask the House to allow me to stand back for some time from the picture and try to convey some idea of the wood of which those trees are the constituent parts. If we consider the position from that point of view, what does it really amount to? If I try to look back to the position in this Assembly about a year ago, or a little less than a year ago when the question of the appointment of these retrenchment committees came up, I remember that I, being anxious that we should have some form of co-operation in this work, wooed the Opposition Parties very assiduously.

[Sir George Schuster.]

They required a very great deal of wooing. To start with, they recoiled from my advances, and at one time I thought I was going to have no success at all. However, in the end, "protesting that they would never consent", they did in fact consent to join us in this work of retrenchment. On our side—and as differences on our side have already been revealed to the House, I need not be afraid of going up a little further and revealing still further the differences on our side,—there was a great deal of anxiety as to what this scheme of mine might lead to. Many people felt that to have the administrative departments of the Government reviewed by Committees of this Assembly who were in no way experts on administration, or who, perhaps with very few exceptions, could not claim that designation,—many people felt that that was a very dangerous experiment indeed. In fact, Sir, looking back on the prospects of a year ago, it is hard to imagine any marriage which on the opinions expressed at the time was less likely to be successful than the one which I attempted to promote. Nevertheless, I think if we stand back from the picture,—and I ask my Honourable friends on the Opposite side not to be unfair in this matter,—if we stand and look back and consider how we have worked together during these past twelve months, I think we may, on both sides, congratulate ourselves on the measure of success which we have achieved. I gave the House certain figures in my speech last Monday in which I put the position in this way: that out of the total recommendations of the various Retrenchment Sub-Committees on the civil side amounting to 499 lakhs, we have actually accepted economies amounting to 433 lakhs; that is to say, economies to the extent of 87 per cent. of the recommendations. My Honourable friend the Leader of the Independent Party has put the position in a somewhat different way, and working on the figures, as he had them, he said that we had, as regards his own Committee, only accepted his recommendations to the extent of 50 per cent. I think that that is not quite a fair statement of the position. The position, as regards his own Committee, according to my figures is as follows: his Committee's total recommendations, excluding the 15 lakhs about which the Honourable the Mover spoke arising out of the Lee concessions, and which I treat as rather a separate matter, his Committee's recommendations amounted to 410 lakhs. Now, included in that 410 lakhs is a sum of 30 lakhs involved in the total abolition of the Ecclesiastical Department and, as I pointed out when we were debating this subject last November, it really is hardly fair to treat that as an ordinary retrenchment. As a matter of policy, you may say, "Abolish that Department" or as a matter of justice, you may say "This is a burden which ought not to fall on the Indian revenues", but it cannot be treated as an ordinary measure of retrenchment, nor could it be added to the total on which we have to show our results. Therefore, if I deduct that 30 lakhs, the total manageable retrenchment recommended by my Honourable friend's Sub-Committee comes down to 380 lakhs. Now, as against that, we have, as part of the measures of the retrenchment recommended by the Sub-Committee accepted measures producing economies of 249½ lakhs or say, 250 lakhs out of 380 lakhs. But that is not the whole picture. Honourable Members, who have studied this Summary which we circulated, will find on page 6, where all the figures are summarised, that in addition to the actual measures which represent the acceptance of recommendations of the various Sub-Committees, we have got the departments to accept economies this year totalling Rs. 87,81,000. Now, those savings are not in all cases permanent economies but we can regard them as savings which will be effected this year, and which, in a sense, will hold the position until perhaps we have a chance of building up more permanent economies behind them. They must certainly be added to the total of our achievement and I quite justifiably included them in the total when I gave to the House the figure of 4,38 lakhs as the savings against the recommendations of all the Sub-Committees on civil expenditure. If I add a proportionate part of those 87 lakhs odd of additional economies to the 2,50 that we have achieved against the General Purposes Sub-Committee's recommendations, I get something like 3,20 lakhs against 3,80 which I call the sum of their effective recommendations. And that, I venture to put to the House, is a very effective response to the recommendations which they have made, especially when it is considered that in certain respects we have not yet had time to go fully into their recommendations, particularly under those headings which will be covered by their third Report, a Report which we have not yet received. That, Sir, I venture to put to the House, is the general picture. Economies of about 4,30 lakhs against recommendations of about 5 crores on the civil side, and on the military side total savings for the next Budget of 5½ crores, against recommendations as regards permanent economies which did not so far amount to quite 3 crores. I think we can say that if last year anybody had known that we were going to come before this House with results of that kind, I think it is fair to say that 90 per cent. of the Members of this House would have refused to believe that it was possible; and I do feel, as I have already said, that looking back on the broad picture of our achievement, that is something on which both sides of the House may congratulate themselves.

Now, Sir, among those who have criticised us, I think one may divide their criticisms under two heads. There is what I call the generally phrased criticism, which bases itself rather on well-known clichés such as "fat salaries at the top" and "top-heavy administration" and that sort of thing; and on the other side we have the very detailed criticisms such as some of those which my friend the Leader of the Independent Party made in the speech to which I am just replying. He for instance took two small examples, the case of the President of the Council of State and the case of the Public Services Commission. Well, I freely admit that these are both cases on which it is possible for an impartial observer to make very easy criticisms. On the face of it, there obviously is room for economy under these two heads, and I may tell the House that we are seriously considering means for reducing expenditure under these heads. But the steps in order to effect that reduction cannot be taken immediately, and in any case cannot be taken until there is some change in the tenure of the posts which are affected under the two heads. But the point which I really want to put to the House is that although these may be telling examples, they do not, in relation to the total of Government expenditure, amount to appreciable sums. And I think what I have said there applies really to most of the particular criticisms that have been made in the course of this debate. But I would turn back from these two small examples to the more general type of criticism, which is of the other kind which I described. Well, Sir, in that connection I fully agree with what has fallen from several speakers, both on this side and the other side of the House, as to the necessity with which the country is faced for a general reduction, if present economic conditions continue, in the scales of pay throughout the services. But when we are accused of not having effected sufficient economy at the top, or for not having made sufficient cuts in the higher salaries, I do wish to remind the House of the figures which I gave them in the course of the last debates as to the amount which is involved in those higher salaries. I would remind the House that in the case of salaries of over Rs. 1,800 a month, the total bill of the Government on the civil side, including Posts and Telegraphs, is only 1.15 lakhs; and if you go down to Rs. 1,000 a month, the total bill again on the civil side, including Posts and Telegraphs, is only 1.95 lakhs. It is quite obvious from these figures that, however drastically you cut the salaries above those levels, it is not going to have a major effect on the Government's financial position. It is not going to make any appreciable difference in the burden of taxation as it has to be borne to-day. Then again when we are told, as my Honourable friend Mr. Das told us, that we have only scratched the surface, I would reply to him, what about the Retrenchment Committees? The various Retrenchment Committees working for a year and having a completely free hand, in spite of what anybody says, to look into every matter that came before them, have on the civil side only produced economy recommendations of 4.99 lakhs and we have met them by effecting actual economies of 4.33 lakhs. Even if we admit that the whole difference of 66 lakhs between these two figures might have been accepted by the Government, that again is not a sum on a scale which would appreciably have affected the present financial position. It would not have appreciably altered what we have to ask for in the way of new taxation and in fact no one would have felt any difference at all. I do think it is important that the proportion of figures about which we are talking should be realised.

Now, Sir, my Honourable friend who moved this motion raised a very great number of points into which I cannot possibly enter this evening. He made some particular criticisms about the way in which the retrenchment policy had been carried out and levelled some charges on those who were responsible for departmental action, which I very much regret to have heard coming from him. He told us that the system of classification, the system of the order in which we arranged that retirements should be effected, gave room for a great deal of variation and a great deal of jobbery and unfair discrimination. But if he has any charges to make in that respect, I would like him to come to me with them and let me have a chance of going into them. I can assure him that the matter has been very carefully attended to in each department. Each department had its selection committee to go into the matter; and as far as I know, one consideration and one consideration only has influenced a final decision, and that is to achieve the maximum economy consistent with efficiency. There has been no sort of influence of personal considerations, and as regards communal considerations the House already knows from the answers which I have given to repeated questions in the course of this session, that our orders have been that the communal proportion should be exactly preserved. If my friend has cases,—and he read out a large number and list of names—I hope he will give us an opportunity of going into them, because I do not like charges of that kind being made; and I am perfectly confident that if the cases are gone into, I can convince my Honourable friend that there has been nothing of the nature which he suspects in the selection of individuals for retirement.

Then, Sir, he raised the question of the terms of compensation to retrenched officials and there also my Honourable friend the Leader of the Independent Party had something to say. I do not wish to weary the House now with a full comparison of the terms of compensation which are being paid now and those which prevailed at the time of the Inchcape Committee. I only want to make two remarks. One of them is that if you have adequate compensation, adequate, that is to say, to satisfy all those who feel sentimental sympathy,—and it is very difficult to avoid feeling that sympathy for those whose posts are abolished,—if you are going to have compensation adequate in this sense, then you will get no retrenchment. You cannot, as I said before, “make omelettes without breaking eggs”. The other thing I want to say is this, that in the case of the Inchcape retrenchments, there was in fact surprisingly little retrenchment of personnel. Honourable Members, who care to study the effect of the Inchcape economies, will find that practically the whole of it was effected in the Army, and that as regards civil personnel, the numbers of personnel retrenched were very small. In that case there were given in certain cases terms more favourable than those which we are giving to-day, but those favourable terms applied only to staff in the Secretariat; and we came to the conclusion that that was an entirely unfair discrimination which ought not to be repeated in the present circumstances, where very much greater numbers of personnel are affected. I have already arranged, as I promised last week, to circulate to the House full particulars of the terms which are being offered. As I have had no detailed criticisms on those terms but merely a general complaint was made that they were less favourable than those recommended after the Inchcape retrenchments, I would invite Honourable Members to study those terms, and I think we may stand on them and feel that we have made out our case.

A good deal has been said this evening about the position in the Customs Department, and particularly as regards the payment of overtime fees. I do not know whether the House appreciated that these overtime fees, about which we have heard so much, actually cost the Government nothing. They are fees which the Government recover from the shipping interests for working overtime, and it has been the custom ever since the Customs Department was organised on its present lines, that men who were called upon to work overtime are entitled to a certain share of the benefit from those overtime fees: a certain share went to increase the pay of the staff and another part went to support beneficent institutions for the welfare of seamen. Now I think it is somewhat unreasonable to claim that a particular class of Government servants may be called upon not merely to put in their regular nine hours' work a day, but to hold themselves in readiness to be called upon to work at any time during the whole 24 hours. It is unreasonable to claim that they should be subjected to that sort of addition to their obligations without getting some financial compensation for it. I think it is also most unreasonable to say that when you have recruited a service on certain well understood terms, you should select that service and that service alone for a discriminating measure of retrenchment. We felt when we went into the case that it had become a recognised part of the terms on which the Customs service were engaged that they should be entitled to overtime fees on the scale which had become customary, and that the furthest we could go was to subject their benefits under that head to the same cut as we were applying to the ordinary remuneration of Government servants. Whatever any one may think about the justice of instituting the original practice, it is quite certain that those men who are now serving had a legitimate expectation of those benefits, and we had to treat it as part of their ordinary conditions of service and refuse to discriminate against that particular form of remuneration. The whole of this question, as regards future entrants, is receiving very careful consideration, and we may be able to make some change in the conditions, but we have always got to remember this, that the conditions must be sufficiently attractive to attract the type of men that we want, and to guard the service, as has been most pertinently pointed out by my Honourable and gallant friend on my right, against the danger of corruption which might arise if the scale of remuneration was inadequate.

That brings me to one other important point, that is the question which has been raised as to what is to be done as regards the permanent scales of pay in the future. On that, I will say that the matter has been receiving the most careful attention of the Government, and I do not want to say more now than that I hope to be able to call a meeting of the main Retrenchment Committee some time before the end of this week, when the procedure for the further consideration of this question can be put before them. The matter certainly has not been ignored and no time has been wasted in conducting inquiries and in the consultation with the various interests concerned—departments, branches and Provincial Governments—which is necessary in order to deal with that question. In the meanwhile I would remind the House of what I told them the other day, that we are not prejudicing the future, for, since the 1st of July last year, all officers have been taken on on the distinct understanding that the terms are provisional and that they are not acquiring rights for the future on the existing scales of pay.

I think that I have taken sufficient time of the House in dealing with the more important points which I have selected. I should have liked if it had been possible to go through some of the points made by the Honourable the Mover and also to answer certain of the arguments which fell from my Honourable friend, Dr. Ziauddin Ahmed, particularly as regards the Army expenditure. There is only one remark which I would make to him in conclusion, and as I have said little yet about Army expenditure, I may permit myself the time for doing so. My Honourable friend read to us some extracts from the Inchcape Committee's Report, and he said that what they wrote then is equally true to-day. He read extracts to the effect that the country cannot stand the burden of a Military Budget at the level which was referred to in that Report. But I would remind my Honourable friend of this, that when the Inchcape Committee reported, the military expenditure was something like 67½ crores, whereas to-day it has gone down to just over 46½ crores; and I think it is a little unfair to apply to that reduced expenditure the arguments which held good when the expenditure was more than 50 per cent. higher than it is to-day. I would also remind my Honourable friend, if he takes his stand on what the Inchcape Committee said, that the Inchcape Committee held out, as an ideal to be aimed at, a reduction of Army expenditure to something like 50 crores; and that whatever may happen in the future, we have at least in the next year got the expenditure down to 3½ crores below that figure. I think . . .

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: May I just point out

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I think my Honourable friend will excuse me if I do not give way; the time is short and the point is a simple one and I should like to finish. I do not say that if prices get lower than they are to-day, that it will not be necessary to seek still further economies. But I do say this; that we have at least done more than the Inchcape Committee recommended and that, short of substantial reductions in troops, we can claim that Army expenditure has been cut down now to the minimum which is possible. My Honourable friend referred to expenditure before the war, and he made great play with the uselessness of non-effective charges; but unfortunately those non-effective charges, being charges for war pensions and ordinary pensions, are just the very charges which no man can reduce. The Government cannot avoid them, and it is very largely the increase of those charges which has increased Army expenditure since before the war.

In conclusion I must return to the main point which I have made, that if we look at the general picture, I think we may congratulate ourselves on the achievement of this year. But I would be the last person to say that we may rest content with that achievement, or that we should turn a deaf ear to the expressions of public opinion which we have heard in the course of this debate emphasising the urgent need for further reduction in public expenditure and the urgent need that we should not relax our efforts in attempting to get equilibrium on those lines.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: Sir, I have hardly time to reply to the weighty remarks of the Honourable the Finance Member. My main contention was that there was no other way except by retrenchment, by which we could attain our object of balancing the Budget or meeting the situation. I think the suggestion first came from the European Group; a year or two ago they first pressed for more retrenchment. In my speech I went through the details in order to show that there is enough room for further and more retrenchment, and now I shall only refer to a few points to reply to some of the points made by the speakers.

The Honourable Sir Fazli-i-Husain took us to task and said that the General Purposes Retrenchment Committee recommended that these scientific departments should be retrenched to the utmost possible limit. Here I will merely quote just a line from our Report to show the attitude that was taken by the representative of the Finance Department on our Committee to our proposals. On page 38 of our first Report it is stated—“Our official colleague, Mr. Nixon, holds that its expenditure should be reduced so as to cost not more than 9½ lakhs in all, but he has given no details of the scheme he has in view”.

Then I shall read from page 29 of the same Report to show that at every point it was the representative of the Finance Department who pressed for really killing these scientific departments. On the Geological Survey, this is what is stated in the Report: “Our official colleague, Mr. Nixon, however, urges that on grounds of financial necessity it should be closed down altogether for a term of years”.

Then again at page 43, in connection with other scientific departments, it will be seen that “Mr. Nixon, however, holds that this group of institutions should also be subjected to retrenchment in common with the departments of Government,” although we suggested that these scientific departments should not be touched. So, Sir, it is not so much the fault of the General Purposes Committee as the pressure that was brought to bear upon the Committee's deliberations by the representative of the Finance Department that led us to suggest these large reductions in Scientific Departments.

As regards the point raised by my friend Sir Henry Gidney, I can only say that if really you would like to give more money to these people, why don't you in these days of unemployment recruit fresh men? Even men from his own community will be helped. Why should you give extra emoluments to whole-time servants for overwork? Then again if you work them overtime and make them also work at nights, certainly they will not be able to maintain their efficiency on the following day. It is certainly wrong on principle for Government to allow their officers to work over night.

Then as regards compensation to the retrenched officials, I think I showed that the Incheape Committee's suggestion was that there should be an additional 20 per cent. enhanced pensions for the lower paid people, and of course it was given effect to. As regards compensation, even the Honourable Member himself in his first estimate made an allowance for roughly 20 per cent. for this purpose, but we find that it is now actually even less than 10 per cent.; that shows what was first considered as necessary compensation has been subsequently very much reduced.

Sir, with these remarks I close this debate, but I press my main point for more retrenchment, and I think the House will agree with me and also vote for my motion.

5 P.M.

Mr. President: The question I have to put is:

"That the Demand under the head 'Executive Council' be reduced by Rs. 100."

MOTOR MAIL CONTRACTS IN BOMBAY, MADRAS AND BENGAL.

818. *Rao Bahadur B. L. Patil: Will Government be pleased to state :

- (a) the names of different places to which postal mails and other articles are carried on a contract basis in motor vans and lorries in the Presidencies of Bombay, Madras and Bengal together with the names of the contractors and the amount of the contract;
- (b) who is the authority negotiating and sanctioning such contracts;
- (c) whether the Director General is the final authority;
- (d) whether the contractor is one and the same man both in Madras and Calcutta; and
- (e) whether it is a fact that the Calcutta contract was given to the Madras contractor on much better terms and conditions than actually advertised; and
- (f) whether they propose to hold auctions for smaller circles?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a), (b) and (c). Heads of Postal Circles have power to make contracts for the carriage of mails at costs up to Rs. 1,000 per mensem in each case. Government have no particulars of such contracts. Larger contracts require the approval of the Director General of Posts and Telegraphs, and in certain cases of the Government of India. A list of such contracts is being prepared and will be laid on the table.

(d) Yes.

(e) I can find no ground for the Honourable Member's suggestion. Government placed the mail contract with the present contractor after considering all tenders received in response to the advertisement.

(f) The question is not understood. Mail contracts are placed under the usual tender system.

GRIEVANCES OF THE MUSLIM COMMUNITY AGAINST THE PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION.

819. *Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to:

- (i) a series of letters voicing the grievances of the Muslim community against the Public Service Commission which have appeared in the Eastern Times, Lahore, from time to time;

(ii) the letter from Mr. D. Reynell, I.C.S., the Secretary, Public Service Commission, which was published in the issue of the 14th December, 1931, of the Eastern Times, Lahore; and

(iii) the rejoinder to Mr. Reynell, which appeared in the issue of the 24th December, 1931, of the same paper?

(b) Is it a fact that the Public Service Commission did not reply to the rejoinder mentioned in item (iii) above? If not, why not?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) Yes.

(b) No reply was sent because the Government of India who were consulted by the Public Service Commission did not consider it desirable to pursue the matter in the Press.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: I hope the Honourable Member has read the article of 24th December. There are some serious allegations there.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is not asking a supplementary question.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: I am just asking whether the Honourable Member has read the article dated the 24th December himself and whether he has read the serious allegations made against the Public Service Commission in that article?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I regret to say that the article is not in my possession and I have not had the opportunity of perusing it. If the Honourable Member will be good enough to send me a copy, I shall be glad to look into it.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: I will send it.

VACANCIES FOR MEMBERS OF MINORITY COMMUNITIES IN CENTRAL GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS.

820. Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: (a) Will Government please say whether, prior to holding their 1931 examinations, the Public Service Commission asked the various offices of the Central Government to state their requirements of (i) members of the minority communities, and (ii) Muslims?

(b) If so, what were the requirements of each office under each category?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) Yes.

(b) I presume the Honourable Member is referring to the requirements in connection with the 1931 examination. A statement giving the information is laid on the table.

Statement showing the demand of each office for members of minority communities and Muslims in respect of vacancies which occurred during the period 1st April, 1930 to 30th September, 1931.

APPOINTMENT OF MUSLIMS TO MINISTERIAL ESTABLISHMENT OF THE CENTRAL GOVERNMENT.

821. *Maulvi Sayyid Murtaza Saheb Bahadur: (a) Is it a fact that the Public Service Commission, in its communiqué, dated the 16th October, 1930 announcing the competitive examination for the selection of candidates for the ministerial establishment of the Central Government stated that not less than 15 of the Third Division appointments would be reserved for Muslims?

(b) How many Muslim candidates were actually declared qualified by the Public Service Commission against these 15 reserved appointments?

(c) How were the 15 vacancies reserved for Muslims disposed of?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) Yes.

(b) Eight.

(c) Six were filled by qualified candidates from the competitive list, one by a qualified candidate from the qualifying examination held for departmental candidates and six by appointment of temporary Muslim clerks who qualified at previous examinations. I have no precise information about the remaining two, but the orders of the Home Department are that unqualified Muslims may be employed temporarily in permanent vacancies reserved for Muslims until qualified members of that community are available.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: May I ask whether these examinations are held every year or are they held only periodically?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: As requirements arise.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Is it not desirable to hold the examination on fixed dates every year, irrespective of the fact whether there are vacancies or not. These are not competitive examinations.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I take note of the Honourable Member's suggestion.

RECRUITMENT OF MUSLIMS BY THE PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION.

822. Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: (a) Is it a fact that the Public Service Commission is the only recruiting agency for the offices of the Government of India?

(b) If the Public Service Commission has failed to meet in full the requirements of the various offices in respect of the Muslim candidates what steps do Government propose to take to assure the requisite supply of Muslims?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) Recruitment to the clerical staff in most of the offices at the headquarters of the Government of India is made through the Public Service Commission.

(b) The Government of India have arranged that unqualified Muslims should be allowed to continue to hold temporarily permanent vacancies reserved for members of that community until qualified candidates are available.

RECRUITMENT OF MUSLIMS BY THE PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION.

823. Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: (a) Is it a fact that the Public Service Commission notified 48 appointments in the Third Division for the competitive examination, but passed more than 100 candidates against those appointments?

(b) Was the number of passed candidates in excess of requirements determined by communal considerations? If not, why not?

(c) What is the communal composition of the first 48 passed candidates and of those passed in excess of that number?

The Honourable Sir James Orerar: (a) and (b). I would refer the Honourable Member to the reply given in this House on the 24th September 1931 to question No. 946.

(c) Of the first 48, 3 were Muslims, 4 were Anglo-Indians and 41 were Hindus. Of the others, 5 were Muslims, 4 were Anglo-Indians, 2 were Sikhs and 41 were Hindus.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: May I repeat that if the examinations are held and dates fixed every year, all these difficulties will automatically disappear.

RECRUITMENT OF MUSLIMS BY THE PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION.

824. Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the following statement made in a letter published by the Eastern Times, Lahore, in its issue of the 14th December, 1931, in the name of Mr. Reynell, Secretary, Public Service Commission, concerning the 1931 examinations of the Commission:

"It is untrue that in the 1926 examination the qualifying marks were lowered in order to admit of the appointment of more minority community candidates."

(b) Is it a fact that the names of all the candidates who passed the 1926 examination were published in the Gazette of India, dated the 22nd March, 1927?

(c) Is it a fact that certain candidates who appeared at the 1926 examination but whose names were not published in the Gazette of India, dated the 22nd March, 1927, were subsequently appointed to permanent posts in the offices of the Government of India with the cognisance of the Public Service Commission, and that some of them are still permanently employed in those offices?

(d) Is it a fact that the marks obtained by the candidates referred to in part (c) above were less than those obtained by the candidates whose names were published in the Gazette of India?

(e) If the reply to part (d) above is in the affirmative, will Government please state whether Mr. Reynell's statement quoted in part (a) above is correct?

The Honourable Sir James Orerar: (a), (b) and (d). Yes.

(c) and (e). The position is explained in the reply given in this House on the 24th September 1931 to part (a) of question No. 947.

RECRUITMENT OF MUSLIMS BY THE PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION.

825. Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the following statement made by the Secretary, Public Service Commission, in a letter published in the Eastern Times of Lahore, dated the 14th December, 1931, in connection with the 1931 examinations:

"The Government of India decided that the proper course was to wait until the next examination to obtain qualified Muslims for places reserved for that community and in the meantime to make temporary appointments of unqualified Muslims to vacancies for which Muslims had failed to qualify at the examination, the existing temporary incumbents being retained where that was desirable."

(b) Will Government please say how many unqualified Muslims have been recruited since the 1st July, 1931, in compliance with the above decision of the Government of India, and how many Muslims have been turned out from temporary posts during the same period, specifying, in each case, the offices by which such recruitment or discharge has been carried out?

(c) Is it a fact that in his letter referred to above, the Secretary, Public Service Commission stated that there was no possible foundation for the allegations made against the Commission about tampering with the answer books of the 1931 examinees?

(d) Will Government please state whether any enquiry was made in the matter, and if so, the methods by which it was ascertained that answer books had not been replaced and that correct answers had not been crossed through?

The Honourable Sir James Orerar: (a) Yes.

(b) The information is being collected and will be placed on the table when complete.

(c) Yes.

(d) At the first suggestion of tampering, a careful examination of the answer books was made, which showed that there was no foundation whatever for this allegation. The Commission took the same precautions in this examination as they do in all other examinations. They offered to give, and are still willing to give, any impartial person full facilities for investigation.

RECRUITMENT OF MUSLIMS BY THE PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION.

826. Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: (a) Have Government seen a letter published in the Eastern Times, Lahore, of the 24th December 1931, in reply to a letter published in the same paper in its issue of the 14th December 1931, in the name of Mr. Reynell, Secretary, Public Service Commission?

(b) Is it a fact that the Public Service Commission did not reply to the allegations made against it in the letter referred to in part (a)?

(c) Will Government say whether the following statements occurring in the reply to Mr. Reynell's letter are correct:

"(a) There are about a dozen people who failed in the 1926 examination whose names are not included in the Home Department Notification No. F.166/27, dated the 22nd March, 1927, but who were subsequently declared qualified by the Public Service Commission for employment in the 2nd and 3rd Divisions and who at present hold permanent appointments in the offices of the Government of India."

"(b) The Home Secretary issued these orders on July 17, 1931, after receiving a deputation of Muslims, but the Commission did its worst to nullify these orders as it took full two months, I understand, in communicating them to the Army Department, who had reserved some 40 vacancies for the Muslims. How can the Commission then claim that it has played fair with the Muslim community? I may add for Mr. Reynell's information that the Army Department issued instructions on August 20, 1931, that is more than a month after the issue of the Home Department orders, that the vacancies reserved for the minority communities must be given to the Hindus. These curious instructions were cancelled on October, 6, 1931.²²

(d) Are Government prepared to consider the advisability of making a full statement in the Press in regard to the action taken by the Public Service Commission after the 1926 examination?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) Yes.

(b) Yes, for the reasons stated in reply to part (b) of question No. 819.

(c) No. The facts are not as stated.

(d) Government have ascertained that at the outset no qualifying mark was fixed at all because only a limited number of vacancies was offered. When it was found that a sufficient number of candidates from minority communities to fill the vacancies reserved for these communities were not at the top of the list, the Commission went down the list, taking these candidates in order of merit. Eventually the question arose how far down the list the Commission could probably go; and a qualifying mark was then fixed for the first time. Thus the mark was not reduced in order to admit Muslim candidates. It was fixed for the express purpose of excluding unqualified candidates.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Is it not a fact that the fixation of the qualifying marks is a purely arbitrary problem and it would depend on the nature of the question paper and would vary from year to year?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: The Honourable Member is asking for an expression of opinion.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Is it a fact that some candidates who failed to obtain the requisite number of qualifying marks were awarded additional marks in order to enable them to pass the examination?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I have no information of that kind.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: May I ask when Government observe certain proportions and reserve seats for a particular community, whether they also reserve a certain proportion for the working classes?

(No reply was given.)

RECRUITMENT OF MUSLIMS BY THE PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION.

827. Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Sahab Bahadur: (a) Is it a fact that the Public Service Commission recently suggested to the Home Department that the vacancies reserved by the different offices of the Government of India for the Muslims should be filled by candidates belonging to other communities, as Muslims had failed to pass the prescribed examinations of the Commission in sufficient numbers?

(b) Is it a fact that as a result of the Ministerial Selection Branch examination held in 1926, Muslims did not pass in sufficient numbers to hold the appointments reserved for them?

(c) Is it a fact that the Public Service Commission selected some of the failed Muslim candidates in 1927 to fill certain vacancies in the Government of India offices?

(d) If the reply to part (c) above is in the affirmative, will Government please state as to why similar action was not taken by the Commission in 1931?

The Honourable Sir James Grerar: (a), (b) and (c). No.

(d) Does not arise.

RECRUITMENT OF MUSLIMS BY THE PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION.

828. Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: (a) Is it a fact that in connection with the 1931 competitive examination of the Ministerial Selection Branch the Public Service Commission notified that one vacancy in the First Division, one in the Second Division and fifteen vacancies in the Third Division would be reserved for the Muslims?

(b) Is it a fact that the Public Service Commission nominated two Muslims for the First and Second Division vacancies?

(c) Is it a fact that the Public Service Commission did not nominate fifteen Muslims for the Third Division vacancies?

(d) Do Government propose to consider the advisability of nominating Muslims for the Third Division vacancies on the same principle as was observed in nominating Muslims for the First and Second Division vacancies?

The Honourable Sir James Grerar: (a) The Public Service Commission notified that one vacancy in the First Division and 15 in the Third Division would be reserved for Muslims. One vacancy in the second Division was reserved for a member of a minority community.

(b) The Public Service Commission nominated 4 Muslims for the First Division vacancies and two for the Second Division vacancies.

(c) Yes; because that number of qualified Muslims was not available.

(d) The Commission observed the same principle for all three Divisions and would have nominated more Muslims for the Third Division if a sufficient number of qualified members of that community had been available.

RECRUITMENT OF MUSLIMS BY THE PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION.

829. Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: (a) Is it a fact that the names of the candidates who passed the 1926 examination of the Ministerial Selection Branch of the Public Service Commission were published in the Gazette of India?

(b) Is it a fact that the Gazette Notification included a list of the members of the minority communities who had been selected in preference to members of the majority community with a higher number of marks?

(c) Is it a fact that the Gazette Notification stated that the list referred to above could be added to if the demands were received for candidates belonging to communities unrepresented or not adequately represented in the various offices of the Government of India?

(d) Is it a fact that the Public Service Commission added to the list in 1927 and declared qualified a number of candidates who had failed in the 1926 examination?

(e) Do Government propose to consider the advisability of taking similar action to make up communal inequalities in connection with the 1931 results?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) to (c). Yes.

(d) and (e). I would refer the Honourable Member to the reply given in this House on the 24th September, 1931, to parts (a) and (d) of question No. 947.

RECRUITMENT OF MUSLIMS BY THE PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION.

830. Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: (a) How many candidates passed the competitive and qualifying examinations, respectively, of the Public Service Commission (Ministerial Selection Branch) held in 1931, and what was their communal composition?

(b) Will Government please state:

(i) the number of candidates who were recruited to fill temporary, officiating and permanent vacancies in the Departments of the Government of India and their subordinate and attached offices during the period, 1st May, 1931 to 31st January, 1932; and their communal composition; and

(ii) how many of the candidates referred to above were "passed" men and how many of them were nominated by the Public Service Commission?

(c) Is it a fact that there are no passed Muslim candidates available with the Public Service Commission for employment in clerical establishments of the Government of India offices?

(d) If so, what steps do Government propose to take to assure a supply of Muslim candidates?

(e) When do the Public Service Commission intend to hold the next examination of the Ministerial Selection Branch?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) The number of candidates who passed the competitive and qualifying examinations for the typist and routine grade was 100 and 25 respectively. Their communal composition is as shown in the statement laid on the table. No pass standard was fixed for the examination for 1st and 2nd Divisions.

(b) The information is being collected and will be furnished to the House in due course.

(c) Yes (except one candidate who desires appointment of a kind which is not available) in respect of the typist and routine grade only.

(d) The manner in which it is proposed temporarily to get over the difficulty has been stated in reply to previous questions. Government hope that a permanent solution will be found in the entrance of Muslim candidates with high qualifications for the various competitive examinations so that there will be no difficulty in obtaining qualified Muslim candidates for the places reserved for them. I hope the Honourable Member and other influential Muslims will assist in this respect by encouraging candidates to enter.

(e) The Commission are not now in a position to say when the next examination will be held.

THE RAILWAY SYSTEM OF ACCOUNTING.

831. Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the article under the heading "The balance sheet of Indian Railway and Railway system of Accounting" published in the Indian Accountant, Lahore, dated December, 1930 (pages 85-86)?

(b) What action do Government propose to take on the points raised in the article?

Mr. P. R. Rau: Government have not seen the article referred to but my Honourable friend has promised to send me a copy of the article and I shall have the question examined.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Will my Honourable friend try to get a copy from the Public Information Office?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I believe, Sir, that the article my Honourable friend is referring to was not among those circulated to the Railway Board by the Director of Public Information.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Did he try to get a copy?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I suppose the office did; but I cannot say definitely.

Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad: Do Government want to get a copy now?

Mr. P. R. Rau: My Honourable friend has already promised to supply me with a copy, Sir.

RE-EXAMINATION OF CERTAIN TRAVELLING TICKET INSPECTORS.

832. Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: (a) Is it a fact that the Superintendent of Allahabad Division has issued a circular demanding that the T. T. Is., who had already passed the Departmental examination before their confirmation, should appear again in the said examination?

(b) Have such instructions been issued by the Superintendents of other Divisions in the East Indian Railway?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I have called for certain information and will lay a reply on the table in due course.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: May I just ask that as the examinations are announced by the 15th of April, he will kindly complete his enquiry before the examinations are actually held?

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

OCCUPATION OF POST OFFICE INSPECTION HOUSES BY A DEPUTY POSTMASTER GENERAL.

186. Mr. Muhammad Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Is it a fact that Mr. R. F. Kalberer, Deputy Postmaster General, United Provinces Circle, occupied the Post Office Inspection house at Allahabad on several occasions and more recently in February, 1932, but did not pay any rent for the occupation as required by the rules?

(b) Is it also a fact that Mr. Kalberer and his wife, who was then working as Assistant Postmaster General, while on leave occupied the Post Office inspection quarters at Mussooree about the year 1929 for over a month and a half and paid no rent for them?

(c) If so, what action has been or is proposed to be taken by Government in the matter?

Mr. T. Ryan: Replying to questions Nos. 186 to 190, together: an enquiry has been instituted and when their information is complete Government will take such action as may be necessary.

CONTRACTS FOR THE CONVEYANCE OF MAILS IN THE DEHRA DUN AND JHANSI POSTAL DIVISIONS.

†187. Mr. Muhammad Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Is it a fact that during the last few months a number of contracts for conveyance of mails in Mr. Kalberer's range in Dehra Dun and Jhansi Postal Divisions were given without calling for any tenders, and is it a fact that this is known to the Director General, Posts and Telegraphs?

(b) If so, what action has been taken in the matter?

CONTRACTS FOR THE CONVEYANCE OF MAILS IN THE DEHRA DUN AND JHANSI POSTAL DIVISIONS.

†188. Mr. Muhammad Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Is it a fact that the contract for conveyance of mails in Dehra Dun was given to one Tewari on Rs. 700 a month in the face of a lower tender for the same work of about Rs. 340 a month only?

(b) Is it a fact that the lower tenderer sent a telegram to the Director General and asked for an enquiry into the case?

(c) Will Government state whether they are prepared to investigate into the modus operandi of this and all other tenders for the conveyance of mails in Dehra Dun, Jhansi and Aligarh Divisions and Agra head office during the last twelve months?

†For answer to this question, see answer to unstarred question No. 186.

(d) Were the notices calling for tenders issued in the name of the Postmaster-General in all cases? If not, why was this Deputy Postmaster-General allowed to put his name in any case?

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY PASSES ISSUED TO THE DEPUTY POSTMASTER GENERAL, UNITED PROVINCES CIRCLE.

†189. Mr. Muhammad Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Is it a fact that the East Indian Railway have issued third class passes to the Deputy Postmaster General in the United Provinces Circle and when asked have informed the Postmaster-General that their action in issuing 3rd class passes was due to the fact that a Deputy Postmaster-General misused the first class pass?

(b) If so, who was this Deputy Postmaster General and in what way did he misuse the pass?

RECRUITMENTS IN THE UNITED PROVINCES POSTAL CIRCLE.

†190. Mr. Muhammad Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Is it a fact that during the month of February, 1932, 26 new recruits have been appointed in the Circle Office at Lucknow out of whom only one belongs to the minority community?

(b) Is it a fact also that three of these recruits have passed only the primary examination?

(c) Is it a fact that approved candidates who are graduates and who have been candidates for the last three or four years have protested to the Postmaster General against these recruitments in total disregard of their superior qualifications and claims?

(d) If so, will Government state what action they propose to take to redress the grievance? Had Mr. Kalberer, Deputy Postmaster General, United Provinces Circle, anything to do with this recruitment?

THE GENERAL BUDGET—LIST OF DEMANDS—contd.

DEMAND No. 28—EXECUTIVE COUNCIL—contd.

Avoidance of Income-tax.

Mr. John Tait (Burma: European): Sir, I move:

"That the Demand under the head 'Executive Council' be reduced by Rs. 100."

My object in moving this cut, is to call attention to what we consider to be the inadequacy of the remarks of the Honourable the Finance Member in his Budget speech when referring to the very important question of income-tax evasion. Honourable Members will remember that on the occasion of the debate on the Supplementary Finance Bill, this Group called the attention of Government to the widely held view that evasion or avoidance of income-tax was rampant throughout the country; and in the speech I delivered on that occasion I put forward the theory—not to prove any specific case or cases of evasion or avoidance of income-tax,—but attempting on broad lines to show that there existed a disparity as between provincial assessments of such arresting dimensions as to compel the inference that there could be no other explanation but that evasion or avoidance of income-tax was prevalent amongst a very large section of those liable to taxation or, what amounts to the same thing, that there was inefficiency in assessing the tax by the department concerned.

Now, while it never was claimed that the figures submitted absolutely established evasion or avoidance of income-tax to the extent deduced, the case was in our view sufficiently clearly delineated to warrant the conclusion being drawn that an enormous loss of revenue to Government from non-assessment or under-assessment of income-tax was in fact being experienced, not only to the disadvantage of the country's revenues at large, but in particular to the detriment of those tax-payers who always have, and who continue to meet their legal liabilities. It was therefore urged by those whose interests we on these Benches represent that it was up to Government to examine in the closest detail the case we had propounded, on the supposition that the deduction drawn from the figures reflected what either in whole or in part was the true state of affairs existing in the country.

Sir, we were afforded much encouragement by the promise of the Honourable the Finance Member in the reply he gave us in November last. He promised then that he would inquire into the figures with the object, in his own words, of finding out how near the truth we had got and not for the purpose of proving that we were wrong; and that, Sir, is all that we have asked for. We expected to be told at this time, after the lapse of four months, what had resulted from that inquiry. Did our figures really provide a reasonably accurate picture of the true state of affairs with regard to the provincial assessments, or did they under microscopic examination prove nothing at all? Did a comparative analysis of all the figures show that the assessments on business profits and on properties in some provinces produce less proportionately than the same assessments in other provinces, considering all the connected circumstances of each, or did the figures prove so nebulous as entirely to fail to justify any change in the official opinion towards this disputed question of evasion or to bring that opinion more into line with the very definite views on the subject held generally in Mercantile Circles? And I put it to the Honourable the Finance Member, does he honestly think that the indefinite reference to this very serious question in his Budget speech was an entirely adequate answer to the case we had put forward? Sir, if Sir George Schuster could shed the restraint of officialdom for a moment and assume again that matter-of-fact attitude of mind to which I am sure he was accustomed in many a Board room in the past, I do not think there could be any doubt as to what his answer would be. That, then, Sir, is the business community's complaint. We want to be told quite frankly and clearly whether Government agree that very serious avoidance of income-tax is widespread in the country today; and if they do so agree, can they give us a clear assurance that every step, and entirely adequate steps, will be taken with the least possible loss of time to remedy the position?

Sir, the Honourable the Finance Member complains in his speech that no specific instances of evasion have been put up to him, and I put it to him, does he really expect us to put up any specific case or cases of evasion? And if we had been able to put up any specific case or cases of evasion, what, I ask, would the country or he himself have thought of his own department? For surely nobody outside that department should be in possession of such confidential information as to be able to put up specific cases of where a man was under-assessed or not assessed at all to income-tax. If anybody became in possession of such information in the course of professional connection with the persons concerned, does he really think that that person would be free to disclose such confidential information? On reflection, Sir, I suggest to the Honourable the Finance Member, he will agree that he has no right to expect any such information from outside. As regards suggestions for remedying the irregularities, here again I do not think the Honourable gentleman can complain, for, in point of fact a great number of suggestions were put up to his Department here in November last and since then in other places and we must assume that all such suggestions have eventually reached his table. I do not therefore propose to review such suggestions, because it is obvious that matters of such detail can be dealt with much more conveniently elsewhere than on the floor of this House. But I would only mention what is perhaps our most important suggestion, and that is that a small expert Board consisting of two or three Members, which may or may not be wholly official, but in any case should be unquestionably highly qualified, be appointed, and that they should visit each centre to examine the effectiveness of the assessments in each circle. That is our basic suggestion, for we are confident that on the facts which an unhurried penetrating survey by that Board would bring to the light of day, a much more effective administration of income-tax assessment could be built up.

It may well be that many of the suggestions which have been submitted are not considered practical in all the circumstances. We do not know if that is so but we have no shadow of doubt that all of them are not impractical, and that an application of even a few of them would unquestionably effect very marked improvement in the existing unsatisfactory state of affairs. It may be also that the proposed action so mysteriously inferred in the Honourable the Finance Member's speech will do all that the position calls for at the present time. But, Sir, the inherent vagueness of the remarks quite frankly leave the mercantile community with an uneasy feeling that the position is not really appreciated and that very little is likely to be done. Rightly or wrongly, we are constrained to believe that the department does not accept the view that evasion or avoidance is nearly as extensive as most non-officials are convinced it is, and quite possibly the department cannot appreciate why we here are pressing this question at this time. But in the non-official view there is no alternative but to press for the relief we seek, when it is remembered that our case, if it is as well founded as we are convinced it is, really means that those of us who are to-day paying Rs. 300 a year as income-tax should only be paying about Rs. 200, and that those who are paying Rs. 1,500 a year, should only be paying about Rs. 1,000 a year, and that those firms which are paying Rs. 9 lakhs a year are really paying 8 lakhs too much because somebody else is avoiding taxation and paying nothing at all. The most urgent claim both on our sympathy and on our consideration however is of those unfortunate people whose salary is Rs. 1,000 a year or Rs. 83 a month, who would be freed from the taxation which we subjected them to in November last under the present financial emergency. Speaking for myself, I can frankly say that, amongst a host of objectionable items in the Finance Member's Supplementary Bill, this feature whereby the minimum taxable income was reduced from Rs. 2,000 to Rs. 1,000, was the feature which caused me the greatest misgivings.

There is one thing more which I wish to say. In replying to me last November, the Honourable the Finance Member, in his own words, generated considerable heat in the defence of his department, and no one will blame him for that. But—and I should like to make this perfectly clear—there was not then and there is not now any suggestion in my remarks attacking the honesty of his department. I have no reason whatever to think that the integrity of the members of the Income-tax Department stands any lower than the very high standard which makes the Civil Service of India as a whole the admiration of the world. We do claim, however, that there is something very definitely wanted in the effectiveness of the assessment of income-tax. We believe the fault lies in the system and, in the absence of adequate powers, more than in the actual working of the department. But whatever the cause, we do appeal to Government to do everything that may be necessary to put matters right.

Sir, I move.

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Mohammadan): Sir, when I read the cut motion I thought that my friend Mr. Tait would say that there was a great deal of evasion of income-tax, but when I heard his speech I felt that he had a good deal of sympathy with those who are heavily taxed especially on account of the lowest limit of income-tax having been reduced to Rs. 1,000, and also he had a great deal of sympathy for a rebate of taxes. I think every one of us who is a human being would like to show sympathy with those who evade payments. When my friend Mr. Tait travels in a first class compartment and some stranger tries to get in, he tries to stop the gentleman from coming in and thereby the Railway Company loses its income and there is thus the evasion of railway dues. Then, Sir, the other day, when a certain income-tax Bill was introduced by my Honourable friend the Finance Member by means of which he wanted to tax all foreign investments, all my friends on my left were against it. That is also a sort of evasion of payment of income-taxes. Sir, being human, we all want to evade taxes, but I had thought that I would hear from my friend, Mr. Tait, a tirade against such evasions. Those who evade payment of taxes are not certainly moral wrecks. I find that my friend did not hold that view. It is human nature to evade income-tax, and it cannot be avoided. I had thought that this token cut was a vote of censure on the Government or on those who evade taxes, but his speech has not brought out that point at all. My Honourable friend expressed a good deal of sympathy with those who evade taxes, and I too express a good deal of sympathy with those who try to evade, because Government impose such taxes as they like and the tax-payer has no say in the matter. So, rightly and naturally, there is a desire on the part of every one to evade those taxes. Then, taking into consideration the fact that to-day the tax-payer is heavily taxed, naturally there would be such evasions. On the other hand, one aspect must be recognised that the low grade Income-tax Officers exercise too much control and recover extra taxation and cause lots of annoyance in the country side. Since the recruitment of the new staff by the Finance Department to collect all additional income-taxes, I think the police are held in as much terror as the income-tax officers are feared in the districts. The Finance Member himself knows that at present there is very little trade in the country, but the newly recruited Income-tax Officers want promotion. So they want to show that they can increase the amount of receipts of the income-tax, of the district by so many lakhs of rupees. So they go to the shops of every Panwala and Biriwala every oilman and grocer and tell them that their income is something like Rs. 5,000. These poor people have no accounts and it is their wives and children who sell the pans and the biris and eke out a bare living.

These are cases where these people are going to be taxed through over zealousness. In spite of my being hauled up under some sort of an Ordinance, that I am assisting a certain party in evasion of taxes, I will rather help that party whenever that man's income is Rs. 500 a year and the Income-tax Officer assesses him at having an income of more than Rs. 1,000. So I think this debate coming on the floor of the House at least teaches us one lesson. I do hope it will make the Honourable the Finance Member a little more humane and he will ask his Income-tax Officers and the Central Board of Revenue to be a little bit more human and not to apply the income-tax rules too strictly to those whose incomes are very low and who may not have paid income-tax unless an over-zealous Income-tax Officer evaluated and assessed their income at Rs. 1,000 or more.

Sir Hugh Cocke (Bombay : European) : Mr. Das said that it was human nature to evade income-tax. Well, I do not know that I should like to agree with him that it is human nature to evade income-tax, but it is certainly human nature to avoid income-tax, but still I accept his statement with his great knowledge of India. I accept his statement as applying to India. That being the case, I think it is very strong support to the fact that there must be very extensive evasion. I remember once a young man about to enter life and he was considering whether he should become an Inspector of Taxes in the United Kingdom and some one who was advising him said, "There is a great field in the future for Inspectors of Taxes because it is said that if everybody paid the income-tax they should, there would be no other taxes at all." That probably was something of an exaggeration and it is certainly not true today in the United Kingdom. But to what extent it is true in India, I should have very grave doubts. I have no doubt in my mind whatever that there has been tremendous evasion, mostly from the small merchants and shopkeepers. Mr. Das says that it is human nature. Well, whether it is human or not, I do not know, anyhow it is a very natural thing not to announce your profits and not to go out of your way to have your income assessed. Therefore I suppose that it is a natural process for the ordinary small shopkeeper and merchant, of whom there are thousands and thousands in India, to evade assessment to income-tax. Now that the limit has been reduced from Rs. 2,000 to Rs. 1,000, of course it will be very much more serious. Many more thousands of people are now to be drawn into the net and it is a question how many and what proportion of the total can be brought in. It is with this object in view and that of trying to tighten up the administration, that this matter was raised last November and is raised again to-day. We have been asked to make constructive suggestions. First of all, we have been asked to prove our case. That I think is impossible to prove with facts and figures, but I think by inference it is self-evident, and I think Mr. Das' remark that it is human nature to evade income-tax is a sufficient indication that no one will deliberately return his profits to assessment unless he is forced to do so and if he is forced to do so, so far as he can in accordance with his conscience, if he has a conscience, he will naturally minimise his profits. Another fact which causes the profits to be minimised in the commercial world is undoubtedly the fact that there is no allowance for losses. When a man makes a lakh of rupees, he says, "I may make a loss of a lakh of rupees next year and therefore I must reduce this year's profit of a lakh of rupees by every means I can to a smaller figure so that I may not be mulcted in income-tax on a large figure this year when I get no redress for making a loss next year. Coming to the actual suggestions, many people have been thinking about this subject during the last few months, and certain suggestions have been put up which I think would bear mention in this House. One is the fact that to-day there is no obligation upon anybody, any private trader or individual to send in a return unless he is called upon to do so by the authorities. I think the time has come to take up this suggestion. The point was debated by the Select Committee that sat on the Income-Tax Bill in 1921. They decided that, having regard to the state of India then, the state of education and general learning, it was not possible to make it obligatory upon every individual to file his return whether he was asked to or not. But I think the time has come now when it should be made incumbent upon an individual to do that. It would place the authorities in a much stronger position because anybody who has not sent in his return is supposed to know the law and he is supposed to know that if his profits or income exceed Rs. 1,000 he ought to have sent in his return, and ignorance of law is no defence. That is a very important matter which requires attention from the authorities.

Then, there is another point about income-tax prosecutions. Any one who has been reading the English papers for the last five years will be struck by some almost famous cases which have been brought into the courts and they are of well known men who have swindled the income-tax authorities for many years and who have received sentences. These cases naturally make other people, who have been doing the same, very nervous, and possibly it makes them declare with perfect correctness their figures which they have not done in previous years. I am told that certain prosecutions have been launched in India but that the fines inflicted have been so trifling, in fact much less than what the income-tax authorities could themselves have imposed, that it has not been worth bringing other cases. Well, publicity ought to be very useful in this matter, and I hope that public opinion may force the courts to take a more serious view of these cases and to impose heavier fines, and in that way to make people return their incomes correctly who have not done so in the past.

Then there is the further point as to whether more inspection should not be done from headquarters. After all you can easily have a certain number of experts attached to your Income-tax Department, who in the light of their experience gained in Bengal, can go to Madras or Bombay and use that experience and possibly show up lines of assessment which are not appreciated locally. Take a bookshop. The experience in Bengal may be that an average bookshop in the bookshop locality makes a certain figure as profit. Possibly that man goes to Madras and finds that similar bookshops are not being assessed on the ground that their income is not large enough to be assessed. That experience of experts going round the country may assist to show up irregularities in the income-tax administration of particular provinces and would be a great moral check on the personnel of the Income-tax Department, as they would know that there would be some one coming along once or twice a year, who was a great expert in his subject, and who would pounce on a given street and ask why bookshop No. 171 had not been assessed, or why only assessed at so much, when its turnover must be so and so. These are the sort of things in which experts travelling round the country from headquarters could assist. I should be very interested to hear from the Honourable the Finance Member how they have been thinking on this matter in the last few months and what steps they have in their mind. It must be obvious, I do not think it can be denied, that now that the income-tax limit has been reduced to one thousand rupees, evasion will be far more serious than it has ever been before, that is to say, as regards the number of cases,—whether it will be in the actual revenue is another matter. Therefore I think this matter should be ventilated and any step possible to bring in the correct amount of tax from individuals should be pressed.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, the Honourable the Leader of the European Group was saying that Mr. Das was speaking in favour of the evasion of income-tax.

Sir Hugh Cocke: That is rather an exaggeration. I merely said that in his view it is human nature to evade it.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: I am glad the Honourable the Leader of the European Group has generously removed the wrong impression that I at any rate had about his speech and perhaps some others also on this side of the House. Because I think nobody would stand up on the floor of the House and no responsible man would say out in the country that any one should evade the income-tax. As a matter of fact, I do not think there can be any controversy about the stated object of the motion that the European Group has moved today. I think Government themselves will welcome a motion of that kind because it is calculated to strengthen their hands. But the only objection that I have to that motion is the plea that the Honourable the Leader of the European Group put forward, namely, that there should be a severity of punishment for evasion which he says there has been in his own country. I am quite willing to admit that England is one of the most heavily taxed countries in the world; it is also a well-known fact that England is also one of the most educated countries in the world; it is also a well-known fact that England is one of the richest countries in the world; and most important of all, it is worthy of note that England is a country which is governed by Englishmen and the Government is responsible to the people and the taxes which are put upon the people are put with the people's own consent. On the floor of this House we rejected the Finance Bill, and with the power which is not shared by the people that England has in this country, the Finance Bill was certified. If the House of Commons had rejected the Finance Bill, Englishmen would have had to go and consult their people in a general election and a new Government would have come into existence. Therefore, Sir, I would ask the Honourable the Finance Member not to take the very mischievous advice of the Honourable the Leader of the European Group and chastise those who evade income-tax not only with whips but with scorpions. That is what the Leader of the European Group implied when he said that the fines were trifling. He wants very severe punishment; he wants sharp exposure of the offenders. All that will come when power is transferred from that side to this side. Till then, I will only ask the Finance Member to secure our moral sympathy and support against the evasion of income-tax, but not to tax the tax-payer with a heavier tax, namely, a savage punishment for evasion. That would be a disastrous thing when the Government have no responsibility whatever and when the House has given them no power to tax the people.

Mr. H. P. Mody (Bombay Millowners' Association: Indian Commerce): Sir, the issue before the House is of such a simple and straightforward character that I do not think there need have been any disagreement amongst ourselves. There is no doubt about it that a great deal of evasion of income-tax takes place. My Honourable friend Mr. B. Das said that it was a very common every-day affair.

Mr. B. Das: I did not say that.

Mr. H. P. Mody: He said it was human nature to do it. I entirely agree

Mr. B. Das: Do you want to pay any income-tax on your foreign investments?

Mr. H. P. Mody: I think this interruption was unnecessary, because I was going whole-heartedly to agree with my Honourable friend. As a matter of fact I have already said on the floor of this House that many people regarded it as a sort of religious duty to dodge the income-tax collector. And whether it reflects upon human nature or not, I think I was stating what was an absolute fact. I cannot say that I personally know of a great many people who do that, but I have not the least doubt that a very large number of people exist who think it morally right and justifiable that they should try and escape the clutches of the income-tax collector. That being so, the only question that arises is whether Government propose to take any action, and if so, what. My Honourable friend who moved this cut referred to the speech of the Finance Member in reply to his general observations last year, and he said that the Honourable the Finance Member had generated a certain amount of heat. Well, Sir, I also was unable to follow the Honourable the Finance Member in his observations last year. It is no reflection upon the Income-tax Department. After all you must remember that there are a great many people who are out to cheat the income-tax authorities and who have resources and who probably know the rules of the game better than the income-tax people. And therefore it is no reflection upon the income-tax authorities that a certain number of people should escape them, and I do not think that my Honourable friend the Finance Member should take it as a reflection upon those people who are running the income-tax law in this country. And therefore this is an issue which in my opinion ought to receive a very sympathetic consideration from the Finance Member. When however, the Finance Member in his Budget speech this year said that he had received very little advice or guidance from those people whom he had openly invited to assist him in this matter, I think he was right. The fault however is not altogether with the loaders of commercial opinion in this country. So far as I am concerned at any rate and people in Bombay are concerned, the Finance Member was going to that city and those people who were arranging his programme had asked a number of people to appear before him and to assist him with whatever they thought was reasonable in this matter. I at any rate was willing to appear before the Honourable the Finance Member, but he did not turn up and I have not the least doubt that when he tours the principal cities of India next time, when he goes to Calcutta, Madras and Bombay, he will find a few people at any rate who will be able to tell him something about the way in which income-tax is evaded and how the control can be tightened up. The Mover of the cut, my Honourable friend Mr. Tait, suggested the appointment of a committee, not necessarily of officials but of at least people who know something about this business, and I think it is a suggestion which might be carefully adopted in this connection. After all, the income-tax authorities may not be the best people to judge how far the tax is being evaded and what measures should be adopted for the purpose of getting round that evasion. Some commercial men, if they are associated with the income-tax authorities, might be able to give a hint or two which may prove very useful; and therefore, Sir, I submit that the suggestion of my Honourable friend ought to be received with considerable sympathy by the Government Bench.

As regards the observation of my Honourable friend, Sir Hugh Cocke, while it is true that in England the law is much more severe upon people who dodge the tax there than it is here, I entirely agree with what my Honourable friend, Mr. Ranga Iyer has said in that connection. I am not saying that because England is a richer country and India is a poorer country, therefore the people are justified in evading the tax and in escaping this light punishment. That is not the point of view. I take his point of view to be, and that is a point of view with which I am in agreement, that owing to ignorance a great deal of evasion may take place which is not necessarily criminal in intent; and therefore before the machinery of the income-tax law is tightened up and more severe punishment is meted out to defaulters, a great deal of circumspection requires to be exercised. Therefore, Sir, I hope that this motion before the House will not be construed as arming the authorities with larger powers of meting out punishment to defaulters, but as conveying to them the deliberate opinion of this House that a great deal of evasion is taking place and that the Government, with all their resources, might look into that question and in their examination of it they will be certainly entitled to assistance from those people who know something about the administration of the Income-tax Act.

Mr. K. P. Thampan (West Coast and Nilgiris: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, may I say a word in this connection? I am speaking about the condition of affairs in the villages and not in big towns like Madras, Calcutta, Bombay and other places. Before the introduction of the reforms and income-tax became a central subject, income-tax was recovered through the agency of the village headman and other revenue authorities. I remember in my place the village headman forwarded a list of people liable to be assessed to the Revenue Inspector; both the village headman and the Revenue Inspector knew more or less intimately about these people, and if they had any grievance they had naturally the right of making their representations to the Tahsildar. The Tahsildar who was very often a native of the taluq also knew the conditions of the people and so there was no trouble at all. Avoidance of payment was a good deal less in those days. After the centralisation of income-tax a separate agency was created. As a matter of fact now in my place there is an Income-tax Officer stationed at Palghat for three taluks. This Income-tax Officer whose jurisdiction is wider than a revenue division has got only his establishment in his head office. There is no one who is in contact with the people to help him. I really do not know who sends him the list of people of the remote villages who are liable to pay income-tax. My own conjecture is that he gets his information from all kinds of people, with the result that there is a good deal of avoidance or evasion of payment of income-tax. Another aspect of the question is this: it would be considerably cheaper to go back to the old arrangement. The village officer, the Revenue Inspector, the tahsildar the Divisional Officer and the Collector are all paid more now than in the old days, though much of the work they were doing before has been released and taken away from them. Formerly the Collector was in charge of the District Board, salt, income-tax and other things, and he is not likely to demur to take up the income tax administration also. So the best way to manage income-tax in the districts is to revert to the old system; and it will save a good deal of expense also. Probably the Local Governments might want a contribution for managing this branch of the administration; and it is but well and proper that a certain amount should be given to them. I command this suggestion for the consideration of the Government.

Mr. T. N. Ramakrishna Reddi (Madras ceded Districts and Chittoor: Non-Muhammudan Rural): Sir, when my friend, Mr. B. Das said that there was a human tendency to avoid income-tax, I expected he would be liable to be misunderstood in this House, and the Honourable the Leader of the European group was not slow in giving expression to my expectation. I do not think he has interpreted correctly what Mr. Das meant when he said that. What Mr. Das said was that on account of the over-zealousness of the Income-tax Officers they levy income-tax indiscriminately and some of those persons who do not have any taxable income are on that account brought under their purview, and hence there will be a tendency to escape such inhuman and unjust taxes. I think that was what he meant when he made that statement; and it is exactly so. When my friend the representative of the millowners Association, Mr. Mody, supported the statement that there was a good deal of evasion of income-tax in this country. I do not think he said that with any knowledge of those income-tax assesses who come under lower grades of incomes. I think perhaps he spoke on behalf of the class or interest which he represents, that is, the millowners. It may be that they are out to escape the income-tax, and for that I invite any rigorous application of rules from the Government. I will support Government in their endeavour to prevent that; but when he wants to talk about other income-tax assesses who come under lower grades, I enter a caveat. My friend may laugh at me but it is a fact, and I will be supported by any one who knows anything about the working of the Income-tax Act in the interior villages, that many of those who do not earn that amount of income also come under its purview. What the income-tax assessing officers do is just to issue notices to some persons about whom they have got some private information that they earn some income and assess them to income-tax and ask them to produce their accounts and other information. Generally, these small shopkeepers and others do not keep any accounts, and so when they come to the Income-tax Officer and say that they do not maintain any accounts, they are assessed arbitrarily and the amount has to be paid; and once they come within the tax, it continues whether they continue to get any income or not. Once an assessee always an assessee—Naturally these people being illiterate, even though they have to pay from year to year, they are not able to maintain any accounts as required by the Act; so it is more of exaction than of evasion that we have to deal with. Instead of stressing that aspect the whole debate has taken an one sided affair, that is, regarding the evasion of income-tax. Now that the minimum incidence of the income-tax has been lowered, it is all the more necessary that we should confine ourselves to the question of exaction rather than evasion, because a larger number of persons will come under the purview of these Income-tax Officers; and so it is all the more necessary to see that there should be no exaction. But not a word has been said about exaction so far by any of the previous speakers are concerned. Everything has been said about evasion alone. For instance, take an individual, the motor bus owner: no doubt he gets 5 or 6 or even 10 rupees a day on his bus service. But look at the expense: he has to pay not less than Rs. 1,000 as tax to the Government per year and about 6-8-0 per seat to the District Board; also he would have borrowed amount for the purchase of the bus itself; he does not keep any account of all these things: in addition he has to pay interest and the pay of the conductor and driver and running charges; he does not keep an account of all these things. What the Government looks at is that he earns so much per day, and therefore he comes under that category. I say therefore that there will be more cases of exaction than there have been heretofore. I do not deny the fact that there may be cases of evasion; but it is very easy for the officers to check the accounts and statements in the absence of accounts, and if they find that the accounts or statements are not correct then they can investigate them and bring defaulting people to book. But at the same time you must take note of this fact also namely exactions.

My Honourable friend the Leader of the European Group said that the punishment for defaulters is not so rigorous in this country as it is in England. That has been sufficiently answered by my friend, Mr. Ranga Iyer. There are also other reasons. In England the tax is levied on most humanitarian grounds. They levy income-tax on a person after giving allowance for his maintenance, for the maintenance of his wife and children, and if there is any dependant, they make allowance for him also, and tax him on the extra income if there is any. So there is no reason 12 Nov. why he should evade the payment of income-tax, whereas in India Government do not take any notice of the circumstances of an assessee, they do not take any note of the peculiar social customs of the people nor of the large joint family system under which only one member earns while there are a number of dependants on him. He may have a number of children and a number of daughters to marry for whom he may have to give large amounts by way of dowry and also incur huge marriage expenditure,—all these things the Income-tax Officers do not take into consideration, and in assessing an individual they will not make any deductions for all this expenditure. That is one thing.

Then with regard to companies, here also they do not make any allowance for losses in the previous year, and if the assessee gets a little income the next year within the assessable limit, then he is taxed. So I submit, Sir, that you should not apply the rule so rigorously in this country as you do in England where the conditions are altogether different.

Further, Sir, here the appellate authority and the authority who levies the tax is one and the same person or rather the same department, whereas in England the appellate authority is quite different; the representatives of the people of that county namely, Income-tax Commissioners will sit as an appellate authority, and so there is not so much rigour in England. Therefore, Sir, for all these reasons I oppose the Motion moved by my friend and also in view of the fact that the actual facts are quite different from what the Honourable the Mover has stated.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju (Ganjam cum Vizagapatam: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I am largely in agreement with the remarks made by the Honourable gentleman who has just sat down. I do admit that the avoidance of income-tax is bad, but I must at the same time say that unjust imposition of income-tax is worse. There is no judicial control over these assessments. A Bill is now awaiting introduction in this House to which most of the Members of the Opposition have appended their signatures, and unless and until we are satisfied that the assessments have been properly made, and unless there is a guarantee that those assessments would be capable of being reviewed by a judicial tribunal, I for one, Sir, can never have any sympathy for the proposition put forward which would merely strengthen the arms of the executive. I know, Sir, that there may be here and there cases of avoidance of income-tax, but to say that there is a large number of such cases is not to pay a compliment to income-tax officers. At the same time, I know for a fact that there are several cases where unjust imposition has been made without any redress. There was one case recently where a tax of a lakh of rupees was imposed on a man and the man being unable to pay the Income-tax Officer had to negotiate for the sale of his estate. There was also another case in which a heavy tax was imposed on a man and he had to file a petition to declare himself insolvent. Several instances of that kind can be multiplied, and I am surprised that my Honourable friend Mr. Mody had no sympathy . . .

Mr. H. P. Mody: It is entirely beside the issue.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: It is not entirely beside the issue, because when you say that there is an avoidance of income-tax, if you do not at the same time admit that there is in very many cases injustice done by way of imposing heavy taxation, that would be avoiding a material point in issue. I for one am not prepared to support any proposition which would go to support the arms of the executive unless such judicial control is accorded to us.

Sir Hari Singh Gour (Central Provinces Hindi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I did not intend to take part in this debate, but I should be failing in my duty if I did not inform the Members on this side of the House what are the implications of the motion moved by Mr. Tait. I should have expected that, after the lucid eloquence on the last occasion when he indulged in generalities and avoided specific recommendations, he would be content with the assurance that was given to him by the Finance Member, but now that he has returned to the charge with the same vagueness, with the same generalities and with no constructive suggestions, I feel surprised whether the Honourable gentleman has not contracted some sort of monomania or, shall I say, megalomania for evasions and avoidance of this tax. May I remind the Honourable the Mover of this Resolution that the question of avoidance or evasions is not really germane to income-tax. We have the customs duties, and I am quite sure that the Honourable gentleman when he goes to England, opens a closed box of cigars because he finds that an open box is not liable to customs duty. (Laughter.) And I have no doubt that Honourable occupants of benches on the other side follow his good lead in that direction. If you have a scent bottle, you rip open its cover and take a few drops into your handkerchief, not because you need that refresher, but because if a full bottle was to cross the channel it would be subjected to a heavy duty in the port of London. (Laughter.)

Honourable Members entirely forget that whenever a person has to do an act or make a statement against his personal or pecuniary interest, there is always a disposition to make a statement most favourable to himself. It is a part of the human trait, and I say to the Honourable gentlemen occupying the centre group that nobody on this of the House has any objection,—indeed we are entirely at one with the underlying purpose of this Resolution. Our difficulties become apparent the moment we descend from the cloudy heights of generalities into the dusty level of particulars. Let us now come to close quarters and ask what is the specific recommendation which he would ask the Finance Member to translate into action? On that the Honourable the Mover of the Resolution was ominously silent, and knowing that fact, his leader ran to his rescue, but in running to his rescue, I am afraid, he has run with a hurry without making any speed. He said that the time has now come when everybody should be called upon to file a compulsory statement of his income. Now, I wish to ask the Honourable the Mover, the Honourable the Leader of the European Group, as everybody is not liable to pay income-tax, how can you call upon everybody to prepare and file a statement? Are you going to introduce some sort of Doomsday Book in this country and ask everybody to prepare on the first day of our Lord a statement and then sanctimoniously hurry to the nearest post office or the Income-tax Department and file it and say, "This is my confession of faith for the ensuing year"

Sir Hugh Cocke: I was careful to explain that point. I did not say that everybody should be called upon to file a statement; I said that those who were liable should be called to file a statement.

Sir Hari Singh Gour: If my friend were a lawyer, he would understand that he has got into a vicious circle. How do you know that the man is liable unless he prepares his statement? Why should he prepare a statement? Because he is liable. As my Honourable friend Sir Abdur Rahim has pointed out, he has got into deeper waters than the Honourable the Mover of the motion by making that suggestion. We have been often told that the shoemaker should be wary of going beyond his last, and gentlemen who wish to advise upon matters which are the special domain of lawyers should indeed be wary before they offer their advice. Then we are told by the Honourable the Leader of the European Group that you must pillory everybody who has been found guilty of evasion and avoidance. The very man who taxes is the man who is the final judge. Then, my Honourable friend on the other side says that such is the law of England. I wish again my Honourable friend to go and consult some lawyer expert in the English law of income-tax. The whole procedure in England is diametrically opposed to the procedure prescribed by the Indian taxing law. You have Income-tax Commissioners who are drawn from the people, who assess the tax. You have then Income-tax Commissioners who are drawn from the people, who modify the tax and hear appeals against that tax. You have the High Court and special commissioners who modify and hear final appeals. They are all representatives of the people, chosen by the people, and trusted of the people. Then, you have a whole system of judicial machinery for the purpose of controlling undue assessments upon the assessee. Have you got that machinery here? As my Honourable friend Mr. Raju very pertinently pointed out, that income-tax law here is a relic of the old bureaucratic system of hic volo, hic jubeo order. "This is what I wish; this is what I ordain." It is an entirely antediluvian system, against which Members on the Opposition Benches have registered a written protest, and it is not as my Honourable friend has pointed out, that that largely signed Bill is still awaiting introduction. It has been duly introduced, and some of us have written to the Honourable the Finance Member to co-operate with us in sounding public opinion before its further progress during the next Simla session. What response we shall get to our very just appeal, I wait to see. But the question with which we are directly concerned here is this. We all admit, and we must admit, that in all taxation, and particularly, in the case of the income-tax, there must be evasions and avoidance, but that is not the main question. The question is not that there is evasion and avoidance; the question is whether the doctor's cure would not be worse than the disease. And that is a point upon which Honourable Members on this side of the House are not at one with the Honourable Members in the Centre Group.

What remedy can you suggest for the purpose of mitigating the evil? That is the whole question with which we are concerned.

Then, it has been pointed out by my Honourable friend Mr. Thampan that we have now a new system of procedure, and that the special assessing department that has been installed ever since income-tax became a central subject has led to large abuses. Those are abuses implicit and inherent in the system. When you give any department the sole control and right of levying taxes, and whether you wish or not, the assessor believes that his efficiency will be judged by the measure of success that he attains in collecting money for his masters, there is always an incentive. I do not say you encourage it, but I say that there is always an incentive inherent in the system,—that the Income-tax Officers are inclined to become over-zealous in the discharge of their duties. Therefore, what we now require is a salutary control over their over-zealous discharge of duty.

Honourable Members have said that we must have a committee. That is a question to which I think there can be but one reply. Only yesterday, we heard from Sir Abdur Rahim and his colleague Mr. Mitra, and we agreed with them, that when you have been spending large sums of money upon committees and commissions which turn out voluminous reports that load the archives of the Government of India and are afterwards forgotten and never given effect to—what is the good of having one more committee? If my Honourable friend, Mr. Tait, who seems to be an expert in this subject, is taken into the confidence of the Finance Member—he seems to know, or he seems to have a particular knowledge of evasions, and he will tell him how evasions take place. I know, Sir, that the Income-tax Officers do employ informers, and the informers go and give information which is out of all proportion to the reality of the facts for which they vouch. That has led to the accumulated volume of public opinion against the Income-tax Department. It is true that the Honourable the Finance Member has time and again from his place supported that department. I have nothing whatever to say against the personnel of the department, and I do not think that any Member on this side of the House is saying anything against the personnel of that department. What they are attacking is the vicious system, the system that lends to abuse, and it is a system therefore which must be speedily, if not immediately, put an end to.

One more word and I have done. We know as a matter of fact that income-tax will in the very near future be a concern of the Local Governments. ("Question" from the European Group.) My Honourable friends on the other side say "Question". At any rate if it is a question, it is a question which can admit of two answers. It will either entirely go to the Local Governments, as they demand, or they will certainly have a share therein. But, whether it is one or the other, the fact remains that the future of income-tax is on the lap of the gods, and I have been of opinion that we should not now change the policy for the purpose of tightening up the collection of income-tax till we really know where we are. If it is a concern of the Central Government in the future constitution, then let the future constitutionalists, who will take our place, decide how they will levy that tax. If, on the other hand, it goes out of our cognisance and becomes a matter for provincial legislation, you would be anticipating their decision by launching out on a scheme of our own which, on fuller consideration, we may find not only to have been premature but perhaps positively mischievous.

Mr. C. C. Biswas (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadian Urban): I was not present when the Mover of this Resolution spoke, but from the speeches of the last speaker, I gather that he entered some sort of protest against the avoidance or evasion of income-tax which is now supposed to be going on, and that there have been protests from this side of the House against some of the proposals which have been put forward from the centre Benches. The objection, it seems to me, if I have been able to follow the speeches correctly, is against the suggestion to further tighten up the income-tax law in order to ensure that no one who is liable to payment of the tax does escape taxation. Sir, I must confess that I do not quite appreciate the attitude of those who wish to maintain that people who are under the law liable to taxation should not be taxed. As to whether or not evasions of the income-tax are going on on an extensive scale, I have no information, but it is common property in Calcutta at any rate, that various parties who have at their command a sufficiently long purse have the means of avoiding their just obligations under the income-tax law. (Mr. B. Das: "Is that so?") My friend over there may express surprise that this is so, but they must be as much aware of such reports about evasion of taxes as anybody else in this House, only that some of my friends may not wish to admit that fact on the floor of the House. I am at one with Sir Hari Singh Gour and others in saying that the rigours of the income-tax law ought to be lightened, that its administration must be made less irksome, that the Income-tax Officers should behave with greater consideration towards the public. Upon that, there can be no question. There have been instances within my own knowledge and that of other Honourable Members, where income-tax officers were unduly severe. I know of cases where, for instance, for very good and valid reasons parties have asked for a short postponement of the date for production of papers and documents, but the Income-tax Officer has peremptorily refused such application and has proceeded, after refusing such application, to deal with the case as if no proper return had been submitted. These are real hardships against which all of us ought to enter our protest, and it is up to the authorities here to see that such unduly severe proceedings are not allowed. Then, again, I will not say it is common experience, but it is the experience of many of us, that the Income-tax Officer when confronted with some difficulty or other, invariably goes up to his superior authority, the authority which later on might have to hear the appeal in that case. The Income-tax Officer goes to him and takes his directions, and he proceeds to make the assessment in accordance with such directions. The result is that when an appeal is taken to that higher authority, the appeal turns out to be purely illusory, because the judgment of the Income-tax Officer was de facto the judgment of the appellate authority, although it did not purport to be so. I am quite aware that, in reply to certain questions which were put in this House, the House was informed that directions were being issued in order to prevent anything of that kind happening. I only hope that the instructions will be scrupulously followed by those for whom they are meant. The instructions are to this effect, that if an Income-tax Officer finds it necessary to consult his superior officer in regard to any case, then that superior authority will not hear the appeal.

Then, Sir, hardships of a different character are well known to many of us. I refer to those cases where small holders of Government securities have to submit to the deduction of income-tax on their securities at the source at the maximum rate, and in most cases it happens that although the parties concerned are entitled to apply for a refund, the procedure involved in applying for a refund is found to be so inconvenient that the deduction is never claimed. Poor Hindu widows, Muhammadan widows, minors and various other parties similarly situated have found it, I will not say impossible to, but as a matter of fact they do not, apply for some reason or other. Therefore this deduction of income-tax at the maximum rate at the source on the interest of Government securities does often involve a great hardship to persons who are hardly in a position to bear it. There are many directions in which there can be no doubt the income-tax law ought to be modified, so as to lighten the burden upon the taxpayers as much as possible without at the same time endangering revenue.

I will not refer now to the question of the rates of taxes, because for present purposes it must be taken as no longer an open point. The rates are unduly high in certain cases. Then, again, the lowering of the limit of taxation which had to be imposed recently, that again entails a great hardship on a large number of people who should have been exempted from the payment of income-tax altogether. While I concede all this, the fact cannot be gainsaid that there are still many loopholes left through which it is possible for many people who do not deserve any sympathy whatsoever to escape. My own feeling is that such a thing is hardly possible in most cases except with the connivance of the Income-tax Officers themselves, or at any rate, if not with their connivance, at any rate through lack of vigilance on their part.

There is just one other matter to which I might refer in this connection, and that is the provisions of the section which provides for assessment of income-tax on incomes which had escaped assessment originally. Section 34 lays down that if it is found that anyone has escaped the payment of income-tax or has been under-assessed, then the income-tax authorities may proceed against him de novo or proceed against him for the recovery of the deficiency within one year. Sir, this limit of one year I think is much too short, and it does admit of abuse in many ways. What happens is this. Suppose any party finds it possible, by arrangement with the particular Income-tax Officer, to escape the payment of the full share of his proper tax, and if that particular officer remains in office for one year, then the chances of detection are reduced to nil. Generally,—I suppose that is a fact,—Income-tax Officers are not transferred very frequently from one place to another. You can safely take more than one year as the period during which he will remain at a particular place. If, on the other hand, instead of making it one year, you extend the period, it is more likely that another officer may come later on to the same section, and the very fact that another will be there, to whom it will be open to check the assessments made during the preceding period, will itself act as a deterrent on any particular officer from making any arrangements with any party. Either you extend that period of one year to two or three years, or see to it that your officers are more frequently changed from one office to another. I know this does involve a reflection on the officers concerned, but I venture to suggest that an inquiry might be made by the Finance Department into this matter to ascertain whether or not there is any ground for the apprehensions expressed.

Then there are certain defects in section 41. As a matter of fact there has been a decision of the Calcutta High Court, to which I do not wish to refer at length, which has held that after an assessee dies, it is not open to the income-tax authorities to proceed against his legal representatives. I do not see why that should be so. My point is this: if we have got to pay the tax, let us all be placed on the same basis. I do not like the idea that I should have to pay my full quota, whereas my friend over there will somehow or other manage to escape. That is not fair. As my Honourable friend, Sir Hari Singh Gour, has pointed out, you cannot help evasions of any law, however stringent the law may be, but if there are patent defects in the law, then there is no reason why you should not remove those defects or any possible loopholes which you can anticipate. That is my view. I know of a case where the executor of an estate was served with a notice of assessment on behalf of the estate which he was representing. Proceedings went on up to a certain point, and then that executor died. Another executor came in his place, and this executor took the point that under section 41 he was not liable. The proceedings which had been taken against the former executor, it was said, came to an end on the death of that executor, and could not be revived against the present executor. The present executor could be held liable in respect of only the period that he was in office. Sir, that point has been taken, I know. The point has not yet been finally settled in the sense that the High Court has not yet had an opportunity of pronouncing a final opinion on that question. But I think, Sir, the law ought not to be left in any state of uncertainty. You have in section 41 certain categories of persons specifically mentioned. There is no reason why you should not specifically include also the case of an executor. Therefore I say, if you examine the matter impartially, there can be no question that there are many directions in which the law can be improved, I mean, not in the sense of tightening its rigour, but for the purpose of securing that those who are liable are really made to pay. That is all I have to say.

Several Honourable Members: The question may now be put.

Sir Abdur Rahim (Calcutta and Suburbs: Muhammadan Urban): Mr. President, I shall not take much time of the House. I am sorry I was not present when the Honourable Member, Mr. Tait, moved his motion, but, as I gather, he has not put forward any definite proposition before this House. He has complained of the laxity of the administration of the income-tax law and suggested that the penalties provided in the Act should be made heavier and more deterrent than at present. Well, that is a proposition of a very general character, and as has been rightly pointed out by my Honourable friend, Sir Hari Singh Gour, it does not lead anyone anywhere. I wish specially to point out this that the income-tax law as it is is not of a character which has satisfied any portion of the public. There are provisions in it which do require re-examination in the light of the experience we have had of its administration. Sir, if the suggestion was that the whole of the income-tax law ought to be reviewed and a fresh Act drafted, then we should be prepared to support such a proposition. As regards the evasion of income-tax and of the Income-tax Officer, I do not think that is a phenomenon that obtains only in this country. As has been pointed out so nicely by Sir Hari Singh Gour, customs duties in Europe, for instance, are systematically avoided.—and I know they are avoided by persons placed in very high positions in life, persons very rich. They think that to evade the customs officers in different countries is no crime at all. I do not think this statement will be challenged by anyone. The tax-gatherer has never been popular in any country, and I am sure he is not so in England and has never been so if I have read the history of that little island aright. But one serious point which I want to bring to the notice of the House is this. Under the Finance Bill as it has been passed by Government, 350,000 assesses have been added to the list. I want the Government just to imagine what that means. Government have provided for, I believe, 18 lakhs of rupees in order to meet the expense which the administration of the law, as now extended, will involve. 350,000 assesses means a very large number of people whom the Income-tax Officer will have to assess, men whose incomes are only Rs. 1,000. That would mean a class of people who are not in the habit of keeping accounts, such as, small shopkeepers, small traders and men who do very small business in all parts of the country. Sir, I really shudder to think, when the Act is in full force, and when 350,000 people are brought under the operation of the income-tax gatherers, what the political consequences will be. Nobody likes to pay income-tax and when you are going to exact a certain amount of money from people with such a small income as Rs. 1,000, you may take it that the popularity of Government will diminish in that proportion. I am really afraid that one certain result of the extension of the income-tax to this large class of people with very small incomes will be that the political unrest in the country will be aggravated. I should therefore like to warn the Government to see that the administration of the Act is so carried on that the least hardship may be caused to the large class of people now brought under the operation of the Act. I feel that when I am giving this warning and advice to the Government, I am not exaggerating the situation. I believe that they themselves will realise that it is rather a serious undertaking to assess 350,000 people in the country, and they cannot be too careful in seeing that the administration of the Act is not carried on unduly harshly.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster (Finance Member): Sir, in some respects my task in replying to the original motion is a somewhat easy one for, if I am to oppose the motion, I think I have had a good deal of support for that line of action coming from my Honourable friends opposite. But I am sure that they will not quarrel with me, if, though I welcome their support, I prefer to put my own case in a slightly different way. I think it is very important that we should endeavour to be clear as to the exact issue which is before the House, and I confess that, although my Honourable friend from Bombay, Mr. Mody, said that the issue was a very clear and simple one, I was—at least until he had spoken and thrown the illuminating light on the subject which he generally throws on any situation,—in some difficulty in understanding exactly what was the case with which I have had to deal. I have tried to clear up my own mind on the subject and I will if I may try to clear up the minds of Honourable Members in the House on the issues.

In the first place, I would like to say at once that I am not concerned with the moral issues; I am looking at this matter entirely from a business point of view. Although I am sure all of us are grateful for the illuminating confessions about his own human weaknesses in the matter of evading Customs duties which fell from the lips of my Honourable friend the Leader of the Nationalist Party, we need not really concern ourselves with that aspect of the matter. Now, Sir, if I come back to the speech of my Honourable friend on my right, who moved this motion. I think I might interpret what he said in three alternative ways. In the first place, he did say that his reason for moving this cut was his dissatisfaction with the reply which I had given in the case which he made last November in my Budget speech. That is a point which I can explain later. The second possible interpretation—and I am very much afraid that this is the interpretation which my Honourable friend himself would put on his motion—is this; that there does exist in this country today an abnormal amount of evasion of income-tax which by the exercise of ordinary efficiency on the part of the Income-tax Department we could prevent, and that, if we could prevent that, we should achieve such revolutionising effects in our returns of income-tax that we should be able to relieve other tax-payers to the extent of several crores. Sir, if that is my Honourable friend's case, I must contest it to the last ditch. The third possible interpretation is this, that there exists in India today, as in all countries, a substantial amount of avoidance of income-tax. I might further expand this interpretation by saying that, conditions being what they are in India, the extent of the avoidance of taxation which goes on here may be larger than it is in other countries which have a higher standard of education and a smaller area to be covered by Government authorities in collecting a tax of this kind,—as for example in England. But,—to continue this interpretation of the case,—it is, as I have already said, that there is in India a substantial amount of evasion as in all other countries and that it is the duty of Government to pay vigilant attention to the matter, to be constantly endeavouring to improve and make more efficient their machinery for preventing this evasion, and to be ready to listen to suggestions which may come from the business community or from other unofficial quarters as to improvements which they could effect. If that is my Honourable friend's case, I am perfectly prepared to accept it.

Now, Sir, going back over these three interpretations, I am sure the House will appreciate that I did not attempt to deal exhaustively with this case of evasion of income-tax in my Budget Speech. I am sure the House will agree with me that my Budget speech was long enough without that and that there was no room for its enlargement to the extent that would have been necessary on that particular topic. But I did try to put in a few words some account of what I had done since this matter was discussed last November. I think my Honourable friend is perhaps a little ungracious in having characterised that account as totally unsatisfactory and insufficient. He knows perfectly well that I have been in correspondence with the members of his Group, and that I have expressed my willingness to discuss their suggestions in detail with them as soon as the urgent pressure of work which falls upon a Finance Member's shoulders during the discussion of the Budget and Demands for Grants is over. I repeat the assurance which I have given that I am very anxious to go into the points which my Honourable friends have raised and to consider whether there is room for some improvement in our machinery.

Then, Sir, if I turn to the second interpretation, an interpretation which implies that there is an abnormal amount of evasion going on which could be stopped by the exercise of the ordinary efficiency, and which would improve our revenue in terms of crores, I must take the line that my Honourable friend has entirely failed to establish his case. He said he would have liked to hear from me how we, on further consideration, viewed the figures which he put forward last November. I thought that I had given some answer to him in the course of the debates in November. My Honourable friend's case rested mainly on this ground, that according to statistics which he collected from Burma it was clear that if in Bengal there was the same efficiency of collection as he maintained was exercised in Burma, then we should gain three or four crores. I doubted the figures on which my Honourable friend based his case. But I took the broad line with him that it was quite impossible for us to believe that we had in the Income-tax Department in Burma an example of all that was perfect, of the greatest possible efficiency which could be achieved in this world, whereas in Calcutta we went to the other extreme and reached the actual basic limit of inefficiency. I put it to him that on the face of it that was an impossible thesis. Since then, I have had most carefully examined the statistics on which he based his case. I am afraid it will be impossible for me to go through those figures in the time available to-day, but I should be very glad to furnish my Honourable friend with what I think he will accept as a complete answer to that particular line of argument. Nevertheless, my Honourable friend repeats, as far as I understood him, the case which he put forward before and he bases his argument entirely on his own "conviction". In the meanwhile since last November, I have, as I informed the House, taken such opportunity as was possible to consult with the various business organisations on this matter. It was, I am afraid, as my Honourable friend Mr. Mody has pointed out, impossible for me to go down to Bombay and meet certain business representatives there, but I did have the occasion to go very fully into the matter in Calcutta, and I confess that I was disappointed with the way in which evidence came forward for establishing this case for evasion. My Honourable friend admits that row, and his answer is that it would be foolish, and it must surely have been beyond anything that I could have expected, to hope that I should get from himself and his business associates any direct evidence of evasion. But I put it to my Honourable friend that, while it may be very difficult for him to produce that evidence, nevertheless if he spoke entirely without evidence from what did he derive his conviction? It is a little hard to understand the line which my Honourable friends on the right are taking. It seems to me that the case is rather like this, if I may give him a homely example. Supposing one of my Honourable friends is held up between Old Delhi and New Delhi for exceeding the speed limit in his motor car, and he asks the policeman who holds him up, what evidence he has got that he was driving at sixty miles an hour. The policeman says, "I have not got a stop-watch. I do not know. But you have a speedometer in your car and you must know whether you have exceeded the speed limit." It seems to me that that is rather the line which my Honourable friends are taking. If they expect us to accept the position that there is a large amount of culpable evasion on the scale which my Honourable friend's figures indicated, then I do submit that it is up to them to produce at least some evidence to us of concrete cases. I would go further and say that their general line of argument is—and it was implied in what fell from the Honourable the Mover,—their general line of argument is that we who work in Government offices in some way or other divest ourselves of that matter-of-fact common sense which we might have enjoyed when we were indulging in other and more profitable occupations. That I take it implies that my Honourable friend, who still enjoys that easier and more profitable form of life, does in his own person preserve that matter-of-fact common sense which he so much admires and of which I, apparently, and my official colleagues have long ago divested ourselves. I appeal to my Honourable friend, why does he not come forward to give us the benefit of that matter-of-fact common sense and tell us how we can overcome this great evil on which he has enlarged so eloquently before the House? I think that on these lines the case put forward is, if I may say so, an unreasonable one. But I do not wish to stress that point too much and I hope that on reflection both the Honourable the Mover and those who sit with him on those Benches will be able to accept the third and the more modest interpretation which I have given to their position, the interpretation that is that there is evasion, that is a normal feature of the administration of income-tax law in any country, that the probabilities are that it exists owing to the nature of the case to a larger extent in India than in some other countries, and that it is our duty to do our best by detailed measures to improve the machinery which we have for preventing it. On those grounds I am prepared to discuss the matter with my Honourable friend.

Now, I have here material which could easily form the subject of a speech for another hour and a half, dealing fully with 12 suggestions that have come recently from the Bombay Chamber of Commerce and with half-a-dozen other suggestions which have come from other quarters, but I do not propose to go through those to-day. I propose to discuss them with my Honourable friends. A good many of them will require legislation in some form or other, and judging from what has fallen from the lips of my Honourable and learned friend the Leader of the Nationalist Party, I think a good many of them will encounter a fairly strong opposition in this House. That does not mean that we shall not necessarily proceed with them, but the matter is not quite so simple as my Honourable friends think and it does require very careful consideration as to the exact form in which we should put forward these proposals. Now, I do not want to frighten the House by what I have said. The proposals which I have in my mind and which would require legislation are all fairly simple and not of a very drastic nature, and I am afraid I cannot hope that they are going to produce any very sensational results. They are exactly of the nature of the measures to which I have already referred, small points of detail which will to some extent tighten up our machinery and thus, we hope, improve its efficiency. It is measures of such a kind which we have been considering, and which we are prepared further to discuss; and if there are any other suggestions on those lines, whether they come from my Honourable friends on my right or from my Honourable friends opposite, I say here that we shall be very glad to receive them and that we shall give them our most careful consideration. I think, Sir, that is all that I need say on the subject. Before I sit down, I would therefore sum up what I have said by inviting my Honourable friends on my right to accept the modest, and I think I may say the common sense, interpretation which I have put upon the motion moved by my Honourable friend; and, having taken it in that light, I would suggest to them that, in view of what I have now said, they should not press the matter to a division.

Mr. John Tait: Sir, I do not propose to take up much time of the House because I feel that I have more or less established my case as regards evasion of income-tax. With probably one exception the Honourable the Leader of the Independent Party every other speaker has clearly admitted that evasion does exist and does exist to a serious extent. My Honourable friend Mr. Das went further and pleaded with Government to make it more easy for the evasion to continue. Several of his friends made an attempt to whitewash that speech which was an extraordinary statement, but I am afraid they signally failed to do so. However, the fact remains that there was not one single speaker who got up to say that evasion did not in fact prevail.

There was much complaint made about the oppressive tactics of the Income-tax Department, and with that I have a fair amount of sympathy. But I do contend that the fact that honest people are harassed by the Income-tax Department is no argument that dishonest people should be allowed to escape. It is one of our complaints that the time and energy of the Income-tax Department is in a great many cases expended fruitlessly in harassing honest people when their time could be much better employed in seeking for new assesseees.

It was somewhat difficult to find from the speech of the Honourable the Leader of the Nationalist Party what his attitude towards evasion of income-tax was, but one thing that was clear from his opening remarks was that there is very little regarding evasion which the Honourable gentleman is not perfectly aware of.

However, we are very grateful indeed to the Honourable the Finance Member for what has fallen from him today and I can say that he will be perfectly justified in taking all the three alternative interpretations as the purport of my speech. However, as he has given us an assurance that it is intended to institute such measures as circumstances may require to put matters right and that we will have an opportunity of discussing these things with him, I think our case is met. We have no intention of being unreasonable at all. We still adhere to the view that very extensive evasion is practised in the country, and because of that other people are paying more than they ought to do. However, as he has said the matter can be best discussed in committee or at a meeting; that meets our case and therefore, Sir, in view of these circumstances, with your permission and with the leave of the House, I desire to withdraw my motion.

Mr. President: Has the Honourable Member leave of the House to withdraw his motion?

Several Honourable Members: No.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member has not got the leave of the House to withdraw.

The question is:

"That the Demand under the head 'Executive Council' be reduced by Rs. 100."

The motion was negatived.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Twenty Minutes Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Twenty Minutes Past Two of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

Indianisation of the Army.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan (Agra Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Demand under the head 'Executive Council' be reduced by Rs. 100."

It is a subject which has been debated many times in this House for a very long time, and again I wish to bring to the notice of the Government and of this Honourable House how far this subject has advanced and what achievement India has made since the beginning of the reforms.

In 1923, I moved on the 24th January a Resolution which was worded as follows:

"This Assembly recommends to His Excellency the Governor General in Council to be pleased to get King's Commission for Indians by direct recruitment and by promotion from the rank of Viceroy's Commissioned Officers in such number that all vacancies in the Indian Regiments be in future filled by such Indian Officers only till all Indian Regiments are wholly Indianised."

My object in moving this Resolution was that it should apply to the regiments in which the sepoys were Indians and I confined it to Indians when I used the words "Indian Regiments" that is that it should apply only to those regiments where the sepoys are Indians, and it did not concern the British troops at all; and while moving that Resolution, I said at that time what I am ready to say now:

"I am not actuated by any racial feeling and I do not wish to minimise in any way the great services rendered to the Indian Army by the British officers for a very long time past. British officers in India have played a great part in teaching discipline to the Indian Army and in maintaining peace and order in the country. The great quality of a Britisher of knowing his duty is well known to all Members of this Honourable House, and the whole House, I hope, will agree with me and will support me in appreciating the services which British officers have been rendering to India. They have taught such good discipline that the fruits of it were found on the battlefields of France, Mesopotamia, Palestine, South Africa, China and other places. British officers have led the Indian troops in a remarkable way, and they have won great fame for the Indian Army."

I still pay that tribute to British officers serving in Indian regiments; and when I move this cut and bring the same Resolution forward for consideration, it is not in any way because I minimise the great services rendered by the British officers serving in the Indian Army; my intention is totally different; and it is this, as it was then, that the Indian officers who are the Viceroy's Commissioned Officers serving in the Indian regiments, with a few exceptions, as I will show, have proved their worth on many battlefields and they have rendered such signal services that, in spite of their having never received proper education or the training that is given to the British Officer at Sandhurst, these people proved their worth during the war and that they were second to none in their loyalty, in their valour and in their ability to lead troops. This fact was very well recognised by His Excellency the late Lord Rawlinson when he was replying to my speech. He said:

"In the first instance, during the war and since, 371 Honorary King's Commissions have been granted mainly as war rewards to Indian Officers holding the Viceroy's Commission in the Indian Army. In addition to these, there are now some 66 Indian Officers holding the full King's Commission and serving in the Regular Indian Army, or doing the normal period of attachment with a British regiment . . ."

He further said:

"Many of them have received the King's Commission, largely as a reward for gallantry and distinguished service in the field and we shall continue to recognise such distinguished services by the grant of further King's Commissions to this class as time goes on."

This very fact shows that when 371 King's Commissions were granted as a reward to the officers who were holding Viceroy's Commissions, they were placed on the same footing as the British Officers during the war and after the war, when thousands of them had perished on the battlefields and laid down their lives for the cause of the Empire they showed that they were really fit and proper persons to have a great regard from this country and from the Government as well. Their services were recognised; but I think they were still not recognised quite adequately, because though the number was 371, a great number, still it was really because thousands of them had perished who would really have obtained the King's Commissions if they had survived the war. After seeing this, when we can find amongst the martial races people who are quite capable of conducting armies and of fighting in the war equally as well as any British officer or any European army can fight, I see no reason why any stigma should remain on the face of the Indian Army, that it cannot produce a sufficient number of officers to officer their own regiments. That is the motive which impels me today to bring in the same Resolution. I think that the policy which the East India Company had pursued in getting Indian sepoys who were officered by the Europeans should be abandoned now. The time has changed and is changing every day; with the increasing power in the civil departments, the increasing responsibility in the military also must come to Indians. Unless we have the Indian Army Indianised, the Indians will still be incapable of defending their shores, and they will be unfit absolutely for home rule or any rule whatsoever. I think His Excellency Lord Rawlinson speaking at that time realised this very factor and I will quote from his memorable speech one sentence and that will strengthen my cause. He said:

"Now it will be idle to ignore on the other hand the desire for change that comes very naturally with changing times and I can readily understand that as the people of India claim increasing independence they should also claim increasing opportunities to fit themselves for self-defence. The desire that the Indian Army should be Indianised follows as a natural sequence, and Government, as I have already said, have for a considerable time recognised that a demand of this kind is inevitable and they have spent much time and pains in investing the best means of assisting the people of India to realise their ambition without at the same time sacrificing even for a time the traditional efficiency of the Indian Army."

Sir, the late Lord Rawlinson and the Government of India and the Home Government recognised that with the change of time this demand will be inevitable and this demand will be made every time. After the ten years that have elapsed since then, I still feel justified and I stand here justified in moving this motion. I was advised by my Honourable friends of the then Democratic Party—and out of that party I find I have here my old, respected and learned friend, Sir Hari Singh Gour,—to withdraw my Resolution. My friend took part in that debate, and I find from the division that although we had that very morning a very strong majority, yet on account of an unfortunate incident,—I call it an incident,—which occurred, I could not get a sufficient number of votes, and I was advised to withdraw my Resolution on account of a statement made by His Excellency Lord Rawlinson. I thought I should not withdraw the Resolution, for I felt that posterity would blame me if I did so, and that I should have no ground to justify myself in the future if I accepted that statement, and today, Sir, I feel justified in not having accepted that statement. Sir, this Resolution was moved on the 24th of January, but the time was very short. It was moved in the afternoon, and after a reply from the Commander-in-Chief and a speech from Dr. Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikari, the debate was postponed till the 17th of February. In his speech the Commander-in-Chief had made one remark on the 24th of January as follows:

"From the statements already made in this House, Honourable Members are aware that the Government is still not able to set on foot any specific scheme of Indianisation or even to say really now when this will be possible. It is hoped, however, that it will be possible to make an announcement at no very distant date when the correspondence which is still proceeding between the Government of India and the Secretary of State will be concluded. The correspondence has been prolonged and the consideration given to the matter has been very thorough, as indeed the importance of this matter deserves."

Now, Sir, this was said on the 24th of January, when the correspondence between the Government of India and the Secretary of State had not been concluded, and when the Commander-in-Chief said that he would be able to make an announcement as soon as possible. Then on the 17th of February, to which date this Resolution was postponed for further discussion, His Excellency came into the House and was the first to get up and make an announcement, which perplexed practically everybody for the time being; it practically dazzled or I may say captured the minds of everybody, because they did not then realise fully the importance of that announcement. They thought the announcement would go a long way and accelerate the pace of Indianisation of the Army, but what do we find today? This is what the Commander-in-chief said:

"In the short interval that has elapsed the correspondence which I then said was proceeding has been concluded, and I am able to announce to the House the following decision, that the Government consider that a start should be made at once so as to give Indians a fair opportunity of proving that units officered by Indians will be efficient in every way. Accordingly it has been decided that 8 units of cavalry or infantry be selected to be officered by Indians. This scheme will be put into force immediately. The 8 units to be wholly Indianised will be merely infantry units, but there will be a proportion of cavalry."

Now, Sir, this announcement really cast a spell on the whole House on that day. Honourable Members thought that from Second Lieutenants officers would at once be promoted to Colonels and Majors as if by magic, and that these officers would go and lead the Army without acquiring much experience, or that people selected from schools and colleges would be appointed as Captains and Majors, (An Honourable Member: "From factories")—probably from factories also as the Members then thought, in fact Members then thought that the underlying object of my Resolution had been achieved, but I found that the decision of the Assembly was wrong and that wrong decision still stands today

Mr. B. Das: Nobody expected anything better from that Assembly in 1923.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: Let me see what you will do today. I realised then, Sir, that these 8 units would be absolutely separated, they would be treated something like the depressed classes in the Army Department, and my apprehensions on this ground were fully justified. I find there is a general grievance among Indian officers serving in those regiments that they are socially isolated, in fact there is a strong feeling among these officers that they are not treated or respected in the same way as British officers are treated, with the result that nobody likes to go into those units; everybody wishes to be shifted from those units. I thought that as vacancies occurred, in the higher ranks of the British Army these officers would be promoted as Captains or Majors and thus the process of Indianisation would be accelerated, and if this method had been followed it would have taken 24 years for a King's commissioned officer to come up to the rank of a Lieut.-Colonel. If that scheme had been accepted then, probably by this time we would have had Indians as officers holding the ranks of Captains and serving under British officers, and who would in the natural course of things have occupied the rank of Majors and Colonels according to seniority, and it would also have proved the sincerity on the part of the Government to prepare India for self-government. But, Sir, what do we find today? This 8 units scheme was not and is not acceptable to anybody even after a lapse of 8 years, and I would like to hear what our Honourable friend the Army Secretary has to say on behalf of the Army Department in support of the policy which they adopted at that time. I do not like that incidents that happen in the House here in connection with Army questions or the incidents that happen outside this House should in any way interfere with the loyalty, the unswerving loyalty, of our officers in the Army: I am anxious that the Army should be kept absolutely free from the criticisms of politicians; I want that the Army should live as the Army and not as politicians; but, Sir, the policy which is pursued, the wrong policy which is pursued by the Government of India today, is dragging the Army unfortunately into politics. Politicians in the districts think that they should invade the Army by making capital out of the discontent that exists among the Army officers, by creating discontent in their hearts, by showing them that they are not treated properly and so forth, and this will continue as long as the Government persist in their present policy; and it will be a very deplorable state of affairs indeed if the Army really begins to feel in the way they are made to feel. I say, the Indian officer, whether he be a Viceroy's commissioned officer, or a King's commissioned officer, has proved his loyalty beyond any suspicion or doubt. You cannot impeach his integrity; you cannot impeach his loyalty. He is ready to give his life, he is ready to sacrifice his children and all his pleasures for the sake of the Empire, as has been proved on many battlefields. He had gone ungrudgingly outside India to fight the wars of the Empire. Why? Because these people come from the martial races who delight in taking part in warfare, whose business, whose job, whose training from their very cradle is warfare. They can never rest content unless they have somebody to fight with. You are limiting their sphere up to Risaldar Major, or Havildar Major, or something like that, which means that you deprive the best people of the country, the most loyal people. You narrow down the limits of their ambition—that is Government's present policy. Their policy is to stop these people from rising higher and shining as their forefathers did before. It is not that the martial classes did not produce any capable officers before the British came to India. We had Indian armies which went out of India, the Rajputs and the Mussalmans went outside India. The Army which was led by Aurangzeb to Central Asia was composed not of Persians but of the Mughals, Pathans, and the Rajputs. The Rajputs had shown the same valour as the Mughal armies had done. Their names are written down in history. Before the Mussalmans came to this country the Rajputs were in the front; thereafter we had the Pathans and the Mughals who were conspicuous. The valour of Porus who met Alexander the Great is written in history. We find that though not only in Indian history, but it is to be found in the Greek history, how bravely Porus fought against the disciplined army of Alexander the Great. He had received eight or nine wounds, and he was absolutely injured, but still he never left his command. He stopped there keeping his army cheerful all the time. So, it shows that, in valour the Indian army is not wanting. In loyalty they are not wanting. The only thing that they are wanting in is proper training. May I ask, whose fault it is that they are not properly trained? At the time when Babar came, the Indian armies fought against the Mughal armies with great distinction. When the Indian armies went to the south of India to conquer it, the record of their achievements is all there. Sivaji's exploits are there, the Mughal army's exploits are all there. The officers in the Indian States' armies are all Indian, practically no English officer serving in the Indian regiments of Indian States. The Hyderabad contingent, the Gwalior forces, etc., distinguished themselves in the War. The Hyderabad regiment went to fight in Palestine, Egypt and other places. I find in the records of the War, some Indian friends of mine, at least one Indian friend of mine who belongs to the Indian Legislature though to the other place, led a British regiment in France when all the British officers had been killed. He was the only officer left, and he commanded the British regiment and did so with great distinction. His name was reported in despatches, and here in this House I find that we have got distinguished men. We have got our friend sitting behind me Captain Sher Muhammad Khan. He has fought in China, the frontier, Egypt, Gallipoli, and the Black Sea, with great distinction. We have got as your Marshall a gentleman who rose from the lowest rank to the highest which could be allowed to an Indian officer. He got an M. C. in the War. He afterwards got a King's commission, but, instead of wasting the best part of his life as a sepoy, if he had been given the opportunity of enrolling himself and becoming a King's commissioned officer, he would not have been a mere Captain Nur Ahmad Khan, but General Nur Ahmad Khan in the Indian Army. Is there anybody whom you can call a General in India among the Indians? There were Generals, and Field Marshals, in the past, before the advent of the British. Why should they be kept down? Why should this policy be adopted which keeps them down and down although they have got all the other qualities except the one quality of training? These people are not responsible for their lack of training. The responsibility lies on the Government to select the best people out of the martial classes in sufficient numbers. You give them a chance to be educated in the schools. If these people cannot educate their children properly on account of the insufficiency of the salaries that they get, it is the duty of the State to provide money for free education of the children of those people who are serving in the Army. If you give them the same education, the same opening, they will shine as well as anybody in the Empire, for the benefit of the Empire. They will serve as loyally as they are serving now, and they will be a great asset to the Empire in the future, and the Government will be proud that they possess very efficient officers who are a decoration to the Empire. Indian officers can never think of living outside the Empire. They will serve as loyally in the future as they have been serving in the past. It is not enough to provide only 60 cadetships in Sandhurst. I find that there are 141 Indian regiments. There are 120 regiments of Indian infantry and 21 regiments of Indian cavalry. Now, Sir, this policy that a British officer must serve side by side with Indian officers in the Indian regiments gives the Indian soldier the feeling that the Government feel a kind of suspicion against him. A very ridiculous speech, rather a speech like that of a buffoon, was made in 1923 by an old man, who called me a rash young man at that time.

Mr. B. Das: Was he a Member of the Assembly?

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: Yes.

Mr. B. Das: Is it fair to call him a buffoon?

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: On a point of order. Is it proper for an Honourable Member of this House to describe an ex-Member of this House, who is no longer present to answer him, as a buffoon?

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): It appears to the Chair that it is a question of good taste. The Honourable Member will be well advised not to use such language when referring to ex-Members of the Assembly.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: I will take your advice, but if my Honourable friends had a little patience I would have shown them that I was called rash. If my Honourable friends will read Khan Bahadur Zahir-ud-din's speech they will have no other opinion but that it was a buffoon's. From top to bottom, there was no seriousness in it, and he was swearing at everybody in the House. He called me the same thing to my face. I shall not waste the time of the House. I am sorry my friends interrupted me when I was dealing with a subject like this. The interruptions which they are accustomed to make do not stop when even a serious subject is discussed. I found that the Indian officers were discredited by one of my countrymen, who happened to be a Member of this Assembly and he wanted to rouse in that speech the Indian officers serving in the Indian regiments, and I am glad that it had not created that effect. The Indian officer in the Indian Army is so unswerving in his loyalty that no amount of propaganda can drag him into politics. He remains a soldier from beginning to end. I want, Sir, that opportunity should be given to the Indian soldier and his son to get proper openings, so that the stigma may be removed that the policy which had been adopted by the East India Company had been accepted by the British Government, after the transfer of power from the Company to the Sovereign. I think that 60 recruits will not be sufficient. Sir, I do not approve of the policy of placing British officers in Indian regiments, which makes the Indians exclaim, "Why should not there be Indian officers in British regiment?". The reply will be given that the British soldier will not be willing to serve under an Indian officer. That will again drag politics into this question. I want to avoid that. The policy should be to discard this communalism in the Army. If you place British officers in the Indian regiments, the Indian officer will equally claim that he should be placed over British regiments. The Indian officer will say, "If I am good enough to lead my caste fellows, why should not the British troops be willing to serve under me?". This question will crop up in another ten years time if the Government do not take the hint today. If you do not concede this point in time, it will involve India in great danger, and you may have to yield much more later than what will content the people today. I would include in the category "Indian" the "Anglo-Indian" also, because some of the Anglo-Indians and Europeans made their home in India in the past and they distinguished themselves in the Army. We all know the names of Gardener and Skinner and others who formed regiments and they led them. I am quite willing to recognise that the Anglo-Indians, who have made India their home, should be treated as Indians and they should be allowed full opportunity along with other Indians, and in the future their feelings are bound to be the same as those of other Indians. Future events and changing circumstances will teach them that they must consider India their home and they should not look to any other country but India as their motherland. I will confine my remarks only to this which is the same as what I advocated before, namely, that Indian regiments should be officered by Indians only and I still advocate the same principle. With these words, I move my motion.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: I rise to congratulate my friend Mr. Yamin Khan who on behalf of his party made a speech which is a reply to one school of thought, whose views were expressed by Professor Keith in the following words:

“Self-government without an effective Indian army is an impossibility and no amount of protests or demonstrations or denunciations by the Imperial Government can avail to alter that fact.”

Mr. Yamin Khan was very nearly expressing the views of the Nehru Report so far as the Indianisation of the Army is concerned and the views of the Nehru Report embodied in these words; and, incidentally, they also constitute a reply to the pungent observations of Prof. Keith:

“This is true, but we do not accept the constitutional position that without an Indian or Dominion Army India cannot obtain Dominion Status. In the first place, the Indian Army is not to be created. It exists there already. In the next place, historically the position taken by our critics is not correct.”

I have not got much to add on the speech of my Honourable friend, Mr. Yamin Khan; and if I had to interrupt him, I can assure him that it was not with a view to interrupting the eloquent flow of his reason and the array of his arguments; it was only incidentally to place on record that, whatever might have been the record of Members who are today not present here, I think it would be very much in keeping with the dignity of Members in this House not to describe a gentleman as a “buffoon” or a speech as the speech of a “buffoon”. If he had said that it was something of the nature of buffoonery, it would have been less offensive though the bad taste would remain. Sir, I have not had as yet the opportunity of reading the speech of the Honourable gentleman who appears to belong to the same community as Mr. Yamin Khan. I am not therefore looking at it from a communal point of view but from a parliamentary point of view. In his reply he tried to show that Honourable Members on this side are accustomed to interrupt. Yes, but we are not accustomed to interrupt Mr. Yamin Khan of all. We generally, as an Opposition, are accustomed to interrupt the Treasury Benches and sometimes the European Benches when they are in agreement with the Treasury Benches without the “responsibility”, as pointed out this morning rather parenthetically by the Honourable the Finance Member himself when he referred to their comfortable ease or some such expression which I cannot recall, but my impression I believe is correct. I must tell Mr. Yamin Khan that I had no intention of giving him the honour of my usual interruptions which I think it is the privilege of the Opposition to indulge in.

With these few remarks I may now embark on a few observations on the important question of the Indianisation of the Army. My Honourable friend, Mr. Yamin Khan, referred to the great Anglo-Indian community, whom no one on this side of the House wants to deprive of their great possibilities in the field of the Army, just as in the field of the Railway Department. Sir, I do not think they have got the same consideration in the Army as they have got in the railways. The inroad we are making into the railways will I think be compensated by the inroad they are welcome to make into the Army, and therefore I endorse the observations of Mr. Yamin Khan that the Anglo-Indian community must be given their opportunity in the Army of the future. (Hear, hear.)

Then I would also say that though my Honourable friend, Mr. 'Rajah, is not present here today, the depressed classes must be given the same opportunity. Sir, Mr. Yamin Khan referred to the East India Company days, and his reference reminds me of the part the depressed classes played in those days, when they fought the battles of Clive and Tippu for and against Great Britain. Sir, who fought those great battles of Clive for Great Britain? The depressed classes. It was also they who fought the battles of Tippu against Great Britain. Sir, Tippu and Hyder Ali had a large number of soldiers and officers drawn from the depressed classes. Similarly in South India the depressed classes were the trained officers of Lord Clive, the founder of the British Empire in India whose statue faces very rightly the India Office, commemorating one of the greatest events in the career of a man who came on an adventure because he was unwanted by his parents and founded a great kingdom for his mother country. He enunciated a principle, since perhaps forgotten, of equality on the battlefields when the depressed classes people were quite willing to share their conje with their European officers, or for that matter their Indian officers. Sir, I want the spirit of those happy days to be revived.

Sir, the Report of the Simon Commission contemplated the introduction of a Dominion Army in India. Without going into that controversy, I think we may say that a Dominion Army is a necessity if India is to be a Dominion, and to have a Dominion Status, and you cannot have a Dominion Army without Indianising the Army; and therefore I would ask the Army Secretary what steps the Government propose to take in the direction of the acceleration of the pace of Indianising the officer strength of the Indian Army.

Sir, it has been stated that a military college will be established in Dehra Dun or somewhere else in India. At present we have got a so-called military college in Dehra Dun. Some Members on this side of the House have had the opportunity of visiting that "military college" as guests of the Government. I think that opportunity was given to us by the late Lord Rawlinson, the great Commander-in-Chief that he was, who wanted the Opposition to have an opportunity of understanding the possibilities opening before Indians. Sir, the good Adjutant-General, Sir John Shea, was with us at Dehra Dun when the officers and professors in charge showed us round the college—I am not casting any reflection when I say, it is not a military college, but that it is a very good public school for the training of students who have aspirations for a military career.

Captain Sher Muhammad Khan Gakhar (Nominated Non-Official): It is a public school.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: I agree. My friend is perfectly right, it is a public school; I was about to say it is miscalled "The Prince of Wales Military College". (An Honourable Member: "Then change the name.") I do not want to change the name, as my friend suggests, with his usual sense of humour; I want that it should be as good as its name; I want to see that it is made a military college. I do not want to be understood as saying that there should be only one military college in India. India, Sir, must have as many military colleges as its size and its population justify. Take the size of England and the population of Great Britain. How many military colleges have they got? Take the size of India and the population of India and how many military colleges should India have? Sir, I say, Sandhursts. Woolwiches and so on must dot every part and province in India. Take the case of the United Provinces, which has as large a population and size as Great Britain. Every province in India must have a military college. Many more military schools like the Dehra Dun school, many more feeders for the military colleges must come into being in this country. Sir, if the Government are genuinely keen about promoting self-governing institutions in this country—and that would seem to be the case, otherwise we would not have had the Round Table Conference and the Consultative Committee—I would very earnestly appeal to the Government to take, without delay, all steps in the direction of introducing military colleges and feeder schools therefor in India, and thus give the British Indian people opportunities for military careers, and opportunities to show their military valour not only in the interests of India but also in the interests of Great Britain, for, united we stand, as we proved in the last war by our united stand not only for the good of India but for the good of Great Britain and all she stands for.

Sirdar Harbans Singh Brar (East Punjab: Sikh): Sir, this opportunity which has been afforded to us by Mr. Yamin Khan to discuss the Indianisation of the Army has come at the right moment. Sir, although India was not afforded the opportunity of obtaining the King's Commission before the year 1920, she had a class of officers who were gallant and had a marvellous record of chivalry and were drawn from the ranks of the peasants. They were not very much educated but were very well trained for the art of warfare. I am referring, Sir, to that class of officers who were known as the Viceroy's Commissioned officers.

(At this stage Mr. President vacated the Chair which was taken by Sir Hari Singh Gour.)

Our demand on this side of the House for Indianisation of the Army and of the higher ranks, though listened to with courtesy and consideration and acceded to in very small degrees, is now having a great reaction. In 1920 an expert Committee of the Army Department recommended that about 110 Indian Cadets should be trained every year for the King's Commission. But last year we had a Committee, which was composed of military experts as well as persons drawn from the public life, which reduced the pace of Indianisation almost by half. Our total figure per year for appointments in the King's Commission has roughly been about 200. If every year we recruit all these 200 men from the ranks of Indians, it will take about 30 to 35 years to Indianise the whole Army. But if we accept the figure recommended by the Sandhurst Committee of last year, it will take about 100 years to Indianise the King's Commission. Another most reactionary decision, we are told by that Committee, was that the

[Sirdar Harbans Singh Brar.]

Government have decided upon doing away with the Viceroy's Commission. Sir, in the Viceroy's Commission we have thousands and thousands of Indian soldiers drawn from the martial classes in the countryside who by their great chivalry and merit rose from the ranks of sepoys to the ranks of officers. Although they do not become King's Commissioned Officers, they do become Subedar Majors, and some of them even retire as Honorary Lieutenants or as Honorary Captains on decent pensions for the valuable services which they rendered to the Army. Sir, the Viceroy's Commission encouraged the people from the villages to take to the Army as a profession because it produced a great field for becoming officers in the future. Now, Sir, this measure of Indianisation in the King's Commission is not large enough for the resources which India provides. It will be the cause of great dissatisfaction and discontent to the lower ranks of the Army if they are told that they should not hope to become in years to come Jamadars, Subedars, Subedar Majors and so on. I am sure it will shatter their hopes for all time to come. We have been asking that, in addition to what we are enjoying in the officer's ranks, we should get more officer's jobs. Sir, we are expecting to get now 60 officers every year. They will be admitted in the college, and out of them at least 10 will fail and we will have only 50 passed officers. Even in England they fail about 2 out of every 10. So we will be having only 50. For having this number of King's Commissions we are being deprived of Viceroy's Commissions for many thousands of our countrymen who in the past have done wonderfully well in the Army, not only within the borders of India but also beyond. Is it fair, Sir, now that India is going to have its own management of affairs, that we should have the total abolition of the Viceroy's Commission? When I say this, I voice the feelings of my constituency, which is a great recruiting ground in the Punjab for the Army. At least half the Army recruited from the Punjab is recruited from that area. I am sure the soldiers in the Army will be very much discontented and the peasantry in the countryside will rise up against the Government if, instead of giving us more ranks in the Army as officers, you deprive thousands and thousands of young men from rising to the Viceroy's Commission. They will very much resent the idea that they should remain as sepoys for all time to come. My friends Captain Lal Chand and Captain Sher Muhammad, who have been in the Army and who have come in contact with the marvellous feats which the sepoys have displayed in the battlefields of the Empire, will be able to bear testimony to this fact. Sir, it is nothing but fair that these sepoys should be afforded the opportunity which they have had so long, viz., that in addition to the King's Commission, they should also enjoy the Viceroy's Commission. Sir, these men might not have been good linguists, but they are certainly good soldiers, and as such deserve good treatment at the hands of the Government. Government should provide them with free higher education in the Army and should make military training compulsory in Government and Government aided schools throughout the country. With these few words, I press for the Army Secretary's consideration of the case of the ordinary layman in the Army, namely, the soldiers. I request him to remember that it is the sepoys who form the backbone of the Army, and it is they who fight the battles and therefore they should not be deprived of opportunities for getting what is their due, and that they should be given every facility to rise to the higher ranks of the Army.

Captain Sher Muhammad Khan Gakhar: Sir, I feel it my duty to thank you first for giving me an opportunity of presenting my views on the subject of defence which forms a most important and integral part of the Budget. I propose to have a plain talk with the politicians, and ask them to give the authorities all that they need and think necessary for our safety as well as that of our motherland. It is essential that they should in the very beginning appreciate the facts that it is the proper authorities who are the saviours of the country, and not they who should be the judges of our needs and equipments necessary for the defence of the country.

Ever since the inauguration of the Montford Reforms, and the present Assembly, there has always been a heated discussion on the military side of the annual Budget; and Government have often been accused of feeding their own countrymen at the expense of the Indian tax-payer, and have been constantly and persistently asked to replace the British King's Commissioned officers by Indians, a process which is generally known as the Indianisation of the Indian Army.

Undoubtedly to all lovers of India the defence of India must ultimately be the concern of the Indians themselves; and it is extremely gratifying to note that as a result of the Round Table Conference deliberations, the principle has not only been accepted but put into practice as well. Our long cherished desire for the establishment of an Indian Sandhurst has been fulfilled; and the annual intake of 60 young Indians out of an annual wastage of about 100 is going to begin in a few months. This means a very substantial advance.

Ever since the publication of the Indian Military College Committee's Report a storm of criticism has been raised and objections levelled against its recommendations by Nationalists and their press. Although the general sense of the Committee, on which I had the honour of serving, was satisfactory, yet some of the members have appended minutes of dissent to it and the burden of the song has been an increase in the pace of Indianisation.

I, as a soldier and a man of action, who has spent a greater portion of his life in the Army and on active service, venture to differ from my esteemed friends, the politicians. They forget that the question of Indianisation cannot admit of a mathematical solution. It involves considerations of efficiency, equipment, and esprit-de-corps. Under a zeal for Indianisation we should not overlook these facts. We should remember that an army without efficiency is as useless as a rifle without ammunition. The question of the defence of India is too important for us to trifle with. Most of our politician friends had emphasized the desirability of fixing a period for complete Indianisation. To this, with all due respect for their pious wish, I would most emphatically say that no one, at least no military authority, on earth can fix the exact period. In the words of Mr. Thomas, Chairman of the Defence Sub-Committee of the Round Table Conference:

"It is not a question of saying Smith, Brown or Robinson is entitled to be called General, but it is that Smith, Brown or Robinson have graduated through a period of experience and of training that fits them and makes them competent to be Generals. Therefore that cannot be determined by a resolution: you could declare, if you like, that on and after five years every officer should be an Indian. It might sound popular, but in practice when worked out you knew perfectly well that in five years they would not be competent to take that position, not because they would not be competent because they were Indians but because they would not have the necessary experience."

[Captain Sher Muhammad Khan Gakhar.]

My Honourable friends should appreciate this fact, that without experience and experiment there can be no step forward towards Indianisation.

It was with this object in view that His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, when addressing the Indian Military College Committee in Simla, declared that an immediate start would be made to Indianise a complete Division of the Indian Army of all arms. It was a very wise step taken by him. He could very easily have declared that a start would be made with two or more Divisions, but that would have jeopardised the safety of the defence of India. He could not sacrifice competency and experience simply for the desire of accelerating the pace of Indianisation. It is pleasing to see that Government have promised to accelerate Indianisation when the experiment with the Indianised Division is completed. By that time the young officers now in the Army would have assumed command; and in the words of His Excellency:

"With fourteen years' service, I feel convinced that these young officers will have shown themselves fit or not fit and it will then be an easy matter to increase Indianisation because by that time the Government will have no doubt in their minds as to whether they are conducting an experiment or building up an Indian Army that will be a reliable instrument for carrying out the onerous duties of the fighting forces in India."

I, once more, repeat what I have said above, that it would be simply useless and highly dangerous to determine a period of Indianisation unless we were certain that, "Indianisation which was dependent on competency and experience would materialise by the experience that would be gained in that time".

So much for Indianisation of the Army. I now venture to make a few remarks on the elimination of Viceroy's Commissioned officers of the Indian Army under the new scheme about which my Honourable friend Sirdar Harbans Singh Brar was very anxious. I was at one time against this elimination; but on deeper thought I have come to the conclusion that the existence of this class of officer in the Indianised units would be unnecessary. The reasons are not far to seek. Under the present system a sepoy joining the Army hopes to receive the Viceroy's Commission after putting in a long service of say about 15 or 20 years; but in the Indianised unit he would hope to secure the King's Commission within a comparatively short period of about three or four years, which he could never dream of otherwise.

Sirdar Harbans Singh Brar: Only if he is well educated in English.

Captain Sher Muhammad Khan Gakhar: Yes, that is right. It is argued that the abolition of the Viceroy's Commission would work as a check upon the flow of the low-educated Indians to the Army, and my Honourable friend said that the sepoys will be discontented and they will be disappointed to learn that the Government have eliminated the Viceroy's Commission, but I do not agree with him. I cannot agree with this view, for the process will be so slow and gradual that no one will feel it. Moreover, it will serve as an impetus to better and higher education among the people who now join the Army. However, to lesser such apprehensions, I would most strongly suggest the Government should create Warrant Officers' rank, for example Battalion Havildar Major, Battalion Quartermaster, Havildar, etc., as in the British Army for men who would not have sufficient education to receive the King's Commission.

Sir, last but not least I wish to raise the point, the question of martial and non-martial or what are sometimes known as enlisted and non-enlisted classes of the Indian Army. I have every sympathy with the non-enlisted classes, and I, for one, whole-heartedly wish that they should be afforded the opportunity of building up a military career. But it would not be wise to allow them to join the ranks without any restrictions. An experiment may again be made. I am glad to see that the Indian Military College Committee have done away with this distinction; but still I consider it of utmost importance for the military authorities to see that the College or the Army is not unduly overcrowded by the young men of the non-enlisted classes.

I reiterate what I said at the Round Table Conference that if the Army of New India is to be efficient, it must contain the flower of its manhood. It must contain men who are determined and prepared to die, and not logicians, to whom mere abstractions make greater appeal than solid realities. Hence the martial races and the martial provinces must be specially utilised for the purpose. This seems to me to be an indispensable preliminary to any successful experiment in the creation of a national army.

One thing more, Sir, and I have done. Government have been blamed for the creation of a distinction between the martial and the non-martial classes. In the minute of dissent of Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar and Major-General Rajwade appended to the Report of the Indian Military College Committee they say:

"This policy was founded not so much upon the innate differences in the characteristics of the people as upon the distrust engendered by the participation of particular classes of soldiers in the Mutiny. Recruitment to the army was determined by the opinion of the military authorities as to the reliability or otherwise of particular classes of people for loyalty to the Government."

Now, Sir, this is absolutely wrong and misleading. There were times when Mahrattas, Gurkhas, Sikhs and other martial classes fought against the British; but they were not debarred from entering the Army on this account. I belong to the famous Gakhar tribe of the Punjab, and my tribe also fought against the British, but Government have never objected to our enlisting in the Army; on the other hand our young lads are accepted with pleasure and are honoured.

Now, Sir, one word more about education. My Honourable friend Mr. Yamin Khan pressed this point. There are already existing three what we call King George's schools at Jhelum, Jullundur and Ajmer. There the sons of sepoys and Indian officers get practically free education.

Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Sahab Bahadur (South Madras: Muhammadan): None in Southern India where there are thousands and thousands of Moplahs.

Captain Sher Muhammad Khan Gakhar: Recently Government have sanctioned one English teacher for each school specially to teach the English language to the boys, because the idea is that boys from these schools will go to the Kitchener College which has been started at Nowgong. And with a complete knowledge of English from this College these boys will be prepared to take part in the competition or to be selected for the King's Commission to be trained at the Dehra Dun Military Academy. With these few remarks, Sir, I resume my seat.

Hony. Captain Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Lal Chand (Nominated Non Official): Sir, the Honourable the Mover has done a real service to the country generally and to the martial classes in particular by drawing attention to this most important subject. He has made out a good case for speedy action. Government have accepted the principle and we are all grateful for that. The introduction of the Indian Air Force Bill in this House is an earnest of the efforts of Government in this direction. The starting of an Indian Sandhurst at Dehra Dun is proof of the fact that Government mean some business, and the doors are now being opened freely for Indians to be trained in India. There are also the schools referred to by the previous speaker, at Jhelum, Jullundur and Ajmer, for the training of young boys who are sons of Indian soldiers. But the point remains, with what speed are you moving? The speed proposed and the methods suggested and sanctioned are open to very serious objection. The Honourable the Mover has pointed out that the slow rate at which we are proceeding is not commensurate with the aspirations of the people, and I only support him in the desirability of accelerating the speed. Let caution be the watchword and efficiency be not sacrificed, but the present speed needs acceleration.

As regards method. I crave the indulgence of the Honourable Members who belong to the non-military classes to bear with me when I say that there is great discontent among the military classes over the opening of the Army Commissions to non-military classes. Without meaning any disrespect to those non-military classes, I say that if there is anything in the old traditions and old sentiments they are all out of court. India is probably the only country where the distinction of non-military and military classes has existed from times immemorial. The military classes have always been known as Kshatriyas. Their past history is full of heroic deeds and sacrifices for the country. They have defended the frontier; there are families among those classes where for several generations they have contributed their quota at the frontier. They have been tried in many ways both here and outside India. During the Great War they displayed very high qualities of heroism and sacrifices which were characteristic of their forefathers, in the frozen fields of Flanders and burning sands of Mesopotamia alike. The classes which have preferred the pen to the sword and the office chair to the back of the horse are now coming forward to claim an equal share in the higher ranks of the Army. The Government always goes on lines of least resistance and judges the amount of discontent in the country from the articles that appear in the Press, which is all manned by the non-military classes. Government, acting on these easy ways, has agreed to throw open 50 per cent. of Commissions to competition, which does not consist of riding, tent-pegging and the like, but simple arithmetic and composition. This is a very serious inroad on the rights of the military classes. These classes had not got these rights and privileges by mere chance or on account of any favour. They shed their richest blood in securing this monopoly. In the name of those brave soldiers who laid down their lives for the upholding of the supremacy of democracy over autocracy, in the name of those brave sons of India who left the shores of India from 1914 to 1918 never to return to their motherland, I appeal to Government not to forget these sacrifices and promises so soon. Even this very House in 1923 accepted the principle that the officer ranks should be given to those classes in proportion to the number of recruits they supply. So far that is one defect in the methods that have been sanctioned by Government.

Another defect is the abolition of the Viceroy's Commission in future as has been so rightly pointed out by our friend Sirdar Harbans Singh.

Sir, if the officers' ranks had not been thrown open to the non-military classes, I would not have brought this point forward. But as I find that future recruitment to the officers' ranks will be based on knowledge of arithmetic and mensuration, the military classes will find themselves greatly handicapped. Every despatch is full of the graphic accounts of the deeds of these brave Indian Officers; and their abolition, without even giving them a chance of a hearing, is being greatly resented, not only by them but by the military classes as a whole. If they have done well in the past as a connecting link between the rank and file and the officers, there is no reason why they should not be allowed to do so in future also. So, this decision, if it has been arrived at already, should be reconsidered. The methods employed in effecting Indianisation of the Army remind me of an old story of Kashmir State. Probably it was the grandfather or great grandfather of the present Maharaja who was approached by the people, who said that it was not proper to spend money on Dogras and Sikhs in forming his army, and it was pressed upon him that an army of Kashmiris should be raised. The Kashmiris are very fine-looking fellows; they could carry heavy loads on their backs and being so hardy, the principle was agreed upon. A battalion was raised and with their military uniforms they looked very nice and smart when they went up hill and down hill; and after a year a report was made in the durbar to the Maharaja that the unit was ready for action. The Commandant of the battalion saluted and made this report himself. The Maharaja at once ordered that they should be ordered to relieve a Sikh battalion which was serving on the Gilgit frontier. The Commandant, instead of retiring, saluted him again and the Maharaja looked at him and became furious. "What is it you want now" he asked, "Why do you not go back?". The Commandant said, "I want half a dozen Sikh sepoy to guard my armoury at night". The Maharaja was very furious; but the Commandant was pressing, saying that it was in the interests of the State and of the Maharaja himself that he was asking for these sepoy and that it meant only about a hundred rupees a month which was not much, and further that the whole army would remain safe. The result was that the Maharaja ordered the battalion to be disbanded at once.

(At this stage Mr. President resumed the Chair.)

In the pre-Reform Council of the Punjab I had been pressing for a share for the zemindars in the public services of the province. A Committee was appointed in order to survey the situation in the province and I was on that Committee. Sir John Maynard presided and it was proposed that a survey of all services should be taken in regard to the present occupants whether they were zemindars or non-zemindars; and the President asked me, as it was at my suggestion that the Committee had been appointed, whether the zemindars were willing to give up any particular service in the province, and I at once said, and my zemindar colleagues in the Committee agreed, that we did not want to be treasurers and accountants and those services were given up to them. About other services our share was defined, but those services were left to the non-military classes. Similarly the Army is our monopoly; and if that is taken away, not only will the Indian Army be discontented, but the efficiency will suffer. Pray, do not play with the whole of the Army; if you want to try an experiment, let the Government begin with one unit and one battalion be raised separately from non-military classes

An Honourable Member: The territorials are raised already from those classes.

Hony. Captain Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Lal Chand: The territorials are not a mixed unit, they are not solely of the classes that do not go in for soldiering. The history of the Punjab University Corps and the Bengal Company is fresh in our minds, and so it is no use getting old history repeated. My point simply is this: that the speed should be accelerated and the methods adopted should be revised. The military classes should not be deprived of the monopoly that they have enjoyed; they have earned it on account of their past sacrifices not only during the British period, but from the Hindu period onwards.

An Honourable Member: Whose battles are you fighting?

Hony. Captain Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Lal Chand: We are fighting for the King and country.

Mr. S. C. Mitra (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions: Non-Muham-madan Rural): Sir, I had no intention to take part in this debate, but I am tempted to say a few words due to the offensive and senseless remarks of some of the Members from the so-called military classes. Some of these people fight for a mere 20 rupees, and they are speaking ill of other Provinces. When the British came to India, where were these military classes? They had to recruit soldiers from Madras and from Bengal: the famous red army consisted of Madrasis and Bengalis who conquered some parts of India for the British. Now, for some reasons or other—for political reasons—they have ceased recruiting men from these intelligent classes and confine recruitment to less advanced communities. Warfare nowadays does not depend so much on mere muscle; it requires brains. The time for warring with mere swords, one man going for another man like brutes, has passed; even in the last war it was found that it was the brain and the better organisation that won and not brute force or animal energy Hony. Captain Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Lal Chand: Let the penal laws be withdrawn for two days only, and then you will see the result.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: These gentlemen have had a chance of speaking, and now they will allow me my few minutes to reply to them. I am ready to accept the challenge. Bengal will take care of itself. Had it been more muscle that could have won the war, I think some of the gentlemen who espouse the cause of the martial races could offer some argument. What are these brave people they are speaking of? What is the origin of the brave Sikhs? Guru Govind Singh, for political reasons, trained mere cultivators, and they gradually grew to be very heroic and self-sacrificing. I do not find fault with the military races; but what I ask is, what really makes people military? When the British used to recruit soldiers from the United Provinces, the United Provinces Brahmins and Khatrias were considered as the military races; my friend, Mr. Gava Prasad Singh, who comes from a military race, is a Khatri but now Government has ceased recruiting from these Provinces. According to that brave hero over there, all other races are non-military, as if in England and America and Europe they come to India to recruit their soldiers from the so-called martial races! In all the world over there is no special martial class. I am not at all against giving some preference to these people who have got vested interests, being in the military classes; but when they make a fetish of this theory of martial races, I say they make the whole position absurd. There is no such false and frivolous theory of martial races anywhere else in the world. Are these martial races? What country are they governing now by their heroism? They are slaves, and they are helping to make other nations slaves in the whole of Asia. When there is trouble or war in China, these so-called mercenary military people go for 20 rupees and shed other people's blood. I could understand their bravery and their heroism if they were independent and stood on their own legs at least in their own country.

Hony. Captain Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Lal Chand: Can a Bengalee regiment be raised for China?

Mr. S. C. Mitra: If they speak of heroism and fearlessness, I can cite any number of cases. Even our Bengalee girls are much more heroic than some of these stalwarts who come and boast here of their Hony. Captain Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Lal Chand: I rise to a point of order, Sir. The word "heroism" has been used in connection with terrorism. Firing upon the civil population is not a heroic deed. Heroism has to be shown in fighting battles. This is cowardice.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): That is not a point of order.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: I merely wanted to point out that it requires more of brains than of bulk and muscle in these days in warfare. My point is, if for any purpose Government want to make a class martial they can do so; by recruiting men from Bengal, Madras or from Bombay, they can create a martial class within a few years because, after some time, the people will get the necessary training and they will become a martial class. Martial instincts are not confined to the people of the Punjab or the North-West Frontier Province alone; there are martial classes all over India and all over the world. Therefore, I say that, not that India is going to have full Dominion Status, Government should pursue the policy of recruiting and training men from all provinces and from all classes of people in India, but if unfortunately some of our friends argue the case in the manner they have done, I think the motion of my Honourable friend Mr. Yamin Khan, which is very proper and reasonable may be lost in this House.

Mr. G. M. Young (Army Secretary): Mr. President, I do not propose to follow the last speaker into his somewhat unfortunate digression, because it is not disputed in this House that the provision that Government are making for the Indianisation of the officer ranks of the Army includes ample representation of the non-enlisted classes. I will, therefore, confine my observations to the subject-matter of the motion before the House.

[Mr. G. M. Young.]

In rising to take my part, for the sixth year in succession, in the debate on the Army, I find myself in an unfamiliar but not altogether uncomfortable position. Throughout the strenuous debates that we have had for the last five years on this subject, I have come to regard two very formidable lines of attack hitherto as inevitable. One of these was the attack on the level of military expenditure, based upon the well-known figure of 50 crores laid down by the Inchcape Committee. So long, Sir, as military expenditure was above that level, I found it very difficult, in fact impossible, to satisfy Honourable Members opposite that Government had every intention of ultimately coming down to that figure. As the House is now well aware, the Budget figure for this year is several crores below the ultimate aim recommended by the Inchcape Committee. Whether it will remain at that figure or not, of one thing we may be tolerably certain, that we shall never see a Military Budget, in peace time, of as much as 50 crores again. My Honourable friend Mr. Yamin Khan, the Mover of the motion, has accordingly very wisely confined the scope of this debate to the other burning topic that always comes up in the course of the discussion of the Army Department grant, namely, Indianisation. Here again the main attack that I have experienced in the last five years has been based upon a figure laid down by a Committee. The figure this time was not a monetary figure; it was a date. The Indian Sandhurst Committee, better known as the Skeen Committee, recommended that an Indian Military College should be established in the year 1933. The Government at the time were unable to commit themselves to this recommendation, and their refusal to do so aroused a storm of impatience and condemnation. It was in vain that I, and other speakers on behalf of Government, endeavoured to point out that Government did not say that there would not be an Indian Military College in 1933; they said it might be possible to have it in that year, it might not be founded till later, or it might even be founded earlier. This last suggestion was received with frank incredulity and I well remember a Member of this House drawing a picture of myself running about in the year 1932 with bricks and mortar, in order to slap up as quickly as possible a building for the Indian Military College, if it were decided to establish one in 1933. Well, Sir, we have the building, we have decided to found the college; the first examination will take place in July next, and the college itself will open early in October of this year. (Applause.) We shall hear no more of the year 1933 in connection with the establishment of a military college, just as we shall hear no more of the figure of 50 crores in connection with our Military Budget

Mr. B. V. Jadhav (Bombay Central Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): No credit to the Government of India.

Mr. G. M. Young: I followed very carefully the speech of my Honourable friend Mr. Yamin Khan. I wondered what it was that he was trying to impress upon Government. Towards the close of his speech I gathered that what he was advocating was the total cessation of recruitment of British officers to the Indian Army. Sir, nobody who has the efficiency of the Indian Army at heart could for a moment entertain such a suggestion. Government are all for accelerating the pace of Indianisation to the greatest possible measure consistent with efficiency, but to stop all recruitment of British officers to the Indian Army would lead to disaster.

I should like, however, to take this opportunity of informing the House of what has been done in the last few years. My Honourable friend spoke as if nothing had been done since the memorable debate in which he took part in this House in 1923; but of course that is not the case. Let me go back for a little while to the publication of the Skeen Committee's Report and the debates that took place in this House at that time. There were then only 10 vacancies available for Indians at Sandhurst. There were no commissions for Indians in the Artillery or the Engineers or the Signals; there were no vacancies for Cranwell, that is to say, there was no means of entry for Indians into the Air Force. Even the 10 vacancies for Sandhurst had not been regularly filled. I think I am right in saying that in no one year could we get all the candidates that we wanted, although we were allowed to carry over from one year to another. The average for some years was 6 or 7; it sometimes dropped to 2 or 3. As a result of the deliberations of Government on the Skeen Committee's Report, the number of vacancies at Sandhurst was raised from 10 to 20, Woolwich was thrown open to Indians for the first time, and vacancies were also thrown open to Indians at Cranwell for the Air Force. We also established a competitive examination in this country (previously the examination had been a closed one), and in accordance with one of the recommendations of the Skeen Committee we took all possible steps to make the new facilities for Indian candidates intending to join the Army known throughout the country. The fact that we did so was amply proved by the number

4 P.M. ber of applications that we received from every corner of the country. The first results were not quite as satisfactory as we had hoped. In the first half-yearly examination 7 boys, I think, out of 10 passed for Sandhurst, none for Woolwich, and none for Cranwell. In the second examination, we had 10 for Sandhurst, none for Woolwich and none for Cranwell. In the third examination the results were better. Not only did we fill the ten places for Sandhurst, not only did boys successfully pass for Cranwell and Woolwich, but we had for the first time a number of boys who qualified but did not succeed in obtaining places, that is to say, we had, for the first time, effective competition. In the next half-yearly examination the result was not so good, but still steady progress was made, with the result that by 1930 the Government of India in their despatch to the Secretary of State on the Simon Commission's Report, definitely recommended further expansion in the rate of Indianisation of the Army, and also revived the question of the establishment of an Indian military college, with the result that we all know. With the inauguration of the Indian Military College, the number of vacancies has been increased from a maximum possible of 37 to 60. The number of units selected for Indianisation has been expanded so as ultimately to form a complete division of all arms and a cavalry brigade. This progress I think will be admitted by Honourable Members to be considerable, and it has been done in what I venture to suggest is the only possible way, that is, not by laying down a time table or programme for a definite number of years ahead, regardless of what might happen in the meantime, but by looking forward as far as it is safe to look forward, and deciding then to halt and take stock of the position and consider what the next step should be. The successive steps that have been taken were at intervals of about five years. It was 5 or 6 years, from the time that Indians first went to Sandhurst, to the recommendations of the Indian Sandhurst Committee. It is about 5 years from the time those recommendations were submitted to the Government till to-day. Five or six years hence will be the time for the next move; and it is precisely that time to which His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief referred last year in his inaugural address to the Indian Military College Committee. He then said as follows:

"At the present moment, the young Indian officers in the eight units have seven years' service. This is obviously not long enough for us to tell whether they are going to be fit to administer and train a unit in peace and lead it in war. In seven more years, however, they will have had fourteen years' service, and by that time I feel pretty certain we shall be able to give a definite opinion whether they are going to be a complete success or not; and we need not wait until a further seven years, which would bring young officers now in the Army up to 21 years' service and approaching the time when they would command units, before we decide to carry the experiment further."

I submit, therefore, that Government are proceeding in the most expeditious as well as the most effective manner, to expand Indianisation in the Army; and that it would not be better to adopt proposals which have been put forward several times in the past for a regular programme of Indianisation extending over a period of 25 or 30 years; still less would it be better to adopt the proposal of my Honourable friend and close down British recruitment altogether.

I pass on to a subject which has exercised the minds of a good many of those who have taken part in the debate, namely, the prospects of the Viceroy's Commissioned officer, and of the rank and file of the Indian Army who have hitherto entered the Army in the hope of attaining to Viceroy's Commission rank. Now, this problem has exercised the mind of Government ever since it was originally decided,—now nearly five years ago—that in an Indianised unit you can only have one type of commissioned officer. I need not go into that controversy again, but the Government of India realised that if you started regimental establishments on the British pattern in Indian units with some 28 full King's Commissioned officers, the need for the Viceroy's Commissioned officer would clearly disappear, and something would undoubtedly have to be done to keep the prospects of the rank and file at least as good as they were before. In their despatch of September, 1930 on the Simon Report, the Government of India, in speaking of the conversion of the officer establishments to the British pattern, said:

"It will then be necessary either to set apart more units for Indianisation or to begin the conversion of the officer establishment to the British pattern, or to introduce a combination of both these measures. We have not yet decided which procedure we shall adopt. An important factor in the decision must naturally be the necessity of securing the rights and prospects of the Viceroy's Commissioned officers, and of the sepoys and sowars who enter the army with the ambition of being promoted to Viceroy's Commissioned rank."

Now, I will try and explain to the House exactly what the prospects amount to, and what we hope to be the effect of the measures that we have introduced. In the first place, we have time on our side. It will be some time yet before the first Indian King's Commissioned officers under the new system is posted to an Indianised unit in a place hitherto reserved for a Viceroy's Commissioned officer. The first batch of cadets will enter the Military College next October. Half of them will be men who have themselves come from the ranks of the Army. Their course at the College will be for 2 years. After that, they will be attached for one year to a British battalion, and then join their unit in the Indian Army. Some of them no doubt will occupy places hitherto reserved for Viceroy's Commissioned officers, but that will not be till the autumn of 1935, and the boys who in this way displace Viceroy's Commissioned officers will themselves have come through the ranks. The same will apply to the next half-yearly entry, in the summer of 1936. In the autumn of 1936 the first Indian officers who entered the Indian Military College by direct competition will be posted to their units, and it will not be till then that any one who has not himself been through the ranks of the Indian Army will find himself in a position hitherto reserved for the Viceroy's Commissioned officer. I think Honourable Members will agree

Mr. B. V. Jadhav: Is that distinction desirable between those who go to the Military Academy through the ranks and those who go through direct examination?

Mr. G. M. Young: I do not think I can go into that question now. It was a question to which the Committee and the Government gave a great deal of thought. They ultimately decided that Indians who enter through the ranks will require only a two years' course at the College, as distinct from the three years required for those who enter by open competition. I am now merely explaining what will be the effect on the posts which have hitherto been held by Viceroy's Commissioned officers. Then, we must remember that the post of Viceroy's Commissioned officer will continue for a very considerable time in the other regiments and battalions which have not been selected for Indianisation. Broadly speaking Indianisation will proceed in all probability by units within groups, and the other units of the same group will still be officered for some time on the old pattern of British officers and Viceroy's Commissioned officers. It will therefore be possible to space out the total number of posts of Viceroy's Commissioned officers in such a way as to provide for the promotion of non-commissioned officers from the Indianising units, who would under the old system have aspired to the post of Viceroy's Commissioned officer in their own units. Then, besides that, as Honourable Members know, half the vacancies every year are to be reserved for Indian Army cadets, that is to say, cadets who enter through the rank of the Indian Army. Although, as my Honourable friend Sirdar Harbans Singh did suggest, that will not bring in the same class of person as now hold the Viceroy's Commission, we do hope that, by means of the King George Schools and by encouragement of the enlisted classes to educate themselves up to the standard required for King's Commissioned officers, in time we shall get a continuous flow of officers fully qualified to take the King's Commission, and that the number of men in the ranks who could not hope for anything beyond the Viceroy's Commission will steadily decline. The enlisted classes as a whole will certainly not suffer by the change. I have no hesitation in saying that their prospects will be better than they have been before. My Honourable friend Captain Sher Muhammad Khan made a suggestion for the creation of the posts of Warrant Officers. That suggestion is at this moment under consideration. I am unable to make any definite statement about it; but it is obviously a suggestion that has to be considered in any re-organisation of the officer establishments of the units of the Indian Army, so as to bring them into line with those of the British Army.

[Mr. G. M. Young.]

I do not think I need weary the House any more. I have dealt fully with the one aspect which has found expression to-day in the course of debate, namely, the prospects of the rank and file of the Indian Army under the new conditions. I should like to repeat the assurance that Government will always keep the interests of that class in mind, whatever may be the future course of Indianisation in the Army.

Mr. B. V. Jadhav: I was very sorry to see that some bitterness was introduced into the discussion on this cut by unnecessarily bringing in the question of martial and non-martial races. I belong to an acknowledged martial race and therefore I do not lay myself open to a charge of partisanship when I say that the distinction now sought to be made is not at all desirable. In the history of India, we shall find that every race has distinguished itself at some time or other as opportunities occurred. Even in Bengal, which is now looked upon as a non-martial province, there were big kingdoms and people have fought there and have raised their armies. I do not think I need pursue this unprofitable subject. The Government of India have decided to admit eligible young men, whatever community they may belong to, if they find them suitable for the Army and I think that has been a very wise decision. My friend the Army Secretary has given a succinct history of the Indianisation of the Army and therein he has tried to justify the present decision of the Government of India to do away with the Viceroy's Commissions as far as the Indianised units are concerned. I may point out that, however, necessary or wise that resolution may be, it will work to the prejudice of the best interests of India. In the first place this new decision will retard the rate of Indianisation. Up to this time 12 King's Commissioned officers were required to fully Indianise a battalion. Under the present resolution no less than 28 King's Commissioned officers will be required for that work, which means that the rate of Indianisation will be retarded by two and one-third times. That is one objection to the scheme. Another objection to the scheme is that it will prove very costly from the very beginning and the cost will increase as Indianisation proceeds. The 16 or 17 Viceroy's Commissioned officers are paid a very moderate salary every month. All of them will have to be replaced by King's Commissioned officers who will be getting at least 400 or 500 rupees a month. So the total expenditure on this branch will be a very heavy item when all the units are ultimately Indianised, and in this way the expenditure on the Army will be very materially increased. Praises have been sung here and the pages of the military history of India are replete with the efficiency and the brave deeds of the Viceroy's Commissioned officers ever since that service was instituted. If they were quite efficient all these years and if they have done valuable service in the Indian Army, there is no reason why they should now be dispensed with and their places should be given only to King's Commissioned officers. As I pointed out just now, the introduction of that system will retard Indianisation nearly three times, and at the same time it will entail very heavy expenditure. Hopes are held forth that new posts of warrant officers will be created in order to satisfy the higher aspirations of those men who have now enlisted in the battalions which are going to be Indianised. That too, I may point out, will entail further expenditure and the Indianisation on the whole it appears is going to cost the treasury of India a very heavy amount. Sir, we always press for Indianisation with the object that when any department is Indianised, it will save something to the country. But the policy of the Government has always been to increase the expenditure. I had no opportunity of speaking yesterday, but I was going to show how in every department where Indianisation was attempted, the Government have always increased the expenditure and did not take proper care to reduce it. So in the case of the Army too, I am afraid, they are going to follow the same policy of increasing expenditure in the name of Indianisation. I have pointed out that by the abolition of the Viceroy's Commission the expenditure on the officers' pay bill will be very heavily increased and if, as was given out by my friend, Captain Sher Muhaminad, warrant officers are to be also added, then again further expenditure will be entailed. As for the question whether a Dominion Army should be raised, I ought to say a few words. A dominion or provincial army, Sir, as has been described in the Simon Report, will be the ruin of India. (Some Honourable Members: "Why?") Do we expect that the autonomous provinces in the near future are to fight with each other with their own armies under their own commanders? (Laughter.) If these provincial armies are raised, they will be under the orders of the Provincial Governments with the Member in charge or the Minister in charge. There will be some differences with a neighbouring province and ultimately that may lead to a war. If India as a nation is to go ahead, then there ought to be a unified army under a unified command, and I do not subscribe to the view that there should be a provincial army for every province . . . :

Mr. O. S. Ranga Iyer: Sir, when I used the phrase "Dominion Army", I was referring to a Dominion Status for India, and was speaking of India as a Dominion and not as a province!

Mr. B. V. Jadhav: I am very glad my Honourable friend, Mr. Ranga Iyer, does not want a provincial army, but that he is claiming a Dominion Army. If the whole of the Indian Army as now maintained by India is to be called a Dominion Army, I have no objection.

As for the suggestion that there should be a military college for every province, I may point out that it calls for very heavy cost, and besides so many officers are not wanted. All the officers passing out of a military college have the prospect of being employed in the Army, and the Sandhurst College in England is now sufficient to turn out all the officers required for the whole of the Indian Army. In the same way, the new academy at Dehra Dun will in time be able to supply officers for the whole of the Indian Army. There will be no necessity of having another college, because we in future look for reduction in the Army. And if the size of the Army is going to be reduced, then to that extent the number of officers will have to be reduced at the same time. So I do not support the idea of having a military college in every province. We do want Indianisation, and that, as I say, for the purpose of reducing expenditure. But the whole system of English military education and the military career of the cadets are very expensive. Lieutenants are paid very high salaries from our point of view. But the Lieutenants recruited in England do come from very high and rich families and they have very expensive habits and we know that many of these—at any rate a very large proportion of the English

[Mr. B. V. Jadhav.]

Lieutenants and Captains—are indebted to the banyas in the bazaar. (Laughter.) (Captain Sher Muhammad Khan Gakhar: “Their salary evidently is not enough.”) And I know that even the Indian cadets, after they leave to Sandhurst and come back, and are serving in the Army, are in the same sad plight. There is a son of a friend of mine who is an officer in the Army. Although the boy is a very well-behaved boy and does not drink or smoke, still he finds it difficult to make both ends meet, and his father has to supply him with a few hundreds at the least at the end of every year. (Captain Sher Muhammad Khan Gakhar: “Then they are not adequately paid.”) Certainly not, according to the ideas of Captain Sher Muhammad Khan. But I think they are more highly paid than the Captains and Lieutenants in the German or the French or the Japanese Army: and if these men are to do the work which the Viceroy’s Commissioned officers have been doing up to this time, then I do not understand why they should run into debt and adopt extravagant habits of life in order to keep up their position. With these words, Sir, I would like to support the cut.

An Honourable Member: I move that the question be now put.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): Order, order. The Chair would like to ascertain the wishes of the Honourable House as to when they wish to adjourn to-day. Honourable Members are aware that in accordance with the arrangement which has been arrived at, this motion must conclude to-day either by taking it to vote or by being talked out. Either alternative is open to the House. But the Chair would like to be enlightened as to when the House proposes to adjourn to-day. The Chair is asking this question because at the conclusion of Mr. Jadhav’s speech, about half a dozen Honourable Members stood up to address the House. If each one of them is to get a chance to take part in the discussion, the House will have to sit till a very late hour. The Chair is entirely in the hands of the House as to what their wishes are. (Cries of: “Let the House adjourn at half past four.” “A quarter to five.”) Well, one Honourable Member has asked for a closure. I take it that the House is agreeable to my accepting the closure. (Voices: “Yes.”) I accept the closure. The question is:

“That the question be now put.”

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: Now I want to know if the Honourable Member, Sir George Schuster, wishes to reply.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: No, Sir.

Mr. President: Mr. Yamin Khan. I hope the Honourable Member will not be very long.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: Sir, I wanted to hear during this debate the views of all the Honourable Members of this House, but unfortunately the time at my disposal has not been very long. I was sorry to see that there had been some kind of a conflict of opinion on such a resolution, or some kind of heated discussion on such a question which should I think have got the support of the whole House. If I did not get support for my Resolution in 1923, I expected at least that in 1932, the whole House would support my Resolution. (An Honourable Member: "Press it to a division and we will vote for it.") Now I find my motion has not been opposed by Government, and that it has met with a very cordial reception from my Honourable friend, the Army Secretary. I had of course met with a good reception even in 1923 from the late lamented Lord Rawlinson, who was a great friend of mine, at that time. But for this incident, there should not be a feeling of heart-burning of the nature that we have witnessed, nor should the feelings run so high on such serious questions. Personally, I feel very sorry for this. If anything is said on either side which has been offensive, then I am ready to apologise on behalf of my friends on one side or the other. I think when they give their minds to such serious affairs, they should for the time being forget their own feelings, but should coolly and deliberately think on the point under discussion only. I know from the way the House has expressed itself that it is really fully supporting me. I do not want the vote of the House, which is really quite explicit because I know that the House is with me even if I do not divide it. What I really wanted was the expression of the feelings from different sides of the House, and also I wanted to see whether they receive my suggestion well or not. Sir, it has been urged by me that in future the recruitment of the officers in the Indian Army should be entirely from amongst Indians. That is the only principle. I am convinced that even the Government will accept this advice but perhaps after some time. I may tell Government that it is better to act a little too early rather than to act a little too late, which is not right.

Sir, as the House had expressed its desire that we should adjourn at half past four, and as I have already exceeded the time limit by two minutes, I would like to conclude my remarks as I do not want that the Members who are to be entertained by you after half an hour should be deprived of their entertainment in any way. I do not think, therefore, Sir, that it will serve any purpose if the motion is put to the vote of the House.

Mr. President: Order, order. Does the Honourable Member ask the leave of the House to withdraw his motion or does he want the Chair to put the question?

Several Honourable Members: Put the question.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: I do not withdraw.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the demand under the head 'Executive Council' be reduced by Rs. 100."

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at Eleven of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

THE GENERAL BUDGET—LIST OF DEMANDS—contd.

DEMAND No. 28—EXECUTIVE COUNCIL—contd.

Royal Commission on Labour.

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I move:

“ That the Demand under the head ‘ Executive Council ’ be reduced by Rs. 100.”

Sir, my object in placing this motion before the House is first to ask the Government of India and their various departments concerned to give me an explanation why the various recommendations of the Royal Commission on Indian Labour have not been given effect to and why in some cases they have been overlooked. And then, Sir, if the explanation given by the various departments of the Government are not satisfactory, I would request this House to help me in making a protest against the delay caused by their inaction. Sir, as you know, the Royal Commission on Indian Labour signed its report about this time last year. It is many months since the report was published, but the machinery of the Government of India, as is well known, unfortunately for us moves very slowly. Up to this time the Government of India have brought forward before this Legislature only a few measures. They brought forward a Bill to amend the Trade Disputes Act in a very minor way. They have brought forward a Bill giving effect to the recommendations of the Royal Commission on workmen's compensation. I admit, Sir, that this is an important measure. They have also brought forward recently a measure regarding the recruitment and repatriation of labourers on Assam plantations. I admit that this measure too is of some importance. But, Sir, the proposals covered by these three Bills are not in the first place the most important, and in the second place, besides these there is a large number of proposals made by the Royal Commission which are not yet touched by the Government of India. I want therefore the Government of India to state in detail what they have done regarding several of the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Labour. It is true that if they try to give a reply as regards each recommendation of the Royal Commission, the time allotted for the discussion of this motion may not suffice. I would therefore like them to state about each important recommendation what they have done so far and how long they will take to prepare their proposals upon each recommendation and place them before the Legislature. Sir, I am one of those people who do not think that we can get things done all at once by methods of revolution. I believe we must accept the fact that we can only progress by stages. But if the stages are so slow that we cannot reach our goal within a reasonable time, that slowness will be an enemy of the method which we all like to follow. I would therefore like the Government of India to recognise this fact, that the Royal Commission on Indian Labour consisted of people who recognised that we cannot by revolutionary methods change the conditions in India so far as they affect the industrial workers. There were men who were officers of Government, there were some gentlemen from England, who cannot be accused of being revolutionaries; there were representatives of employers, and men like Mr. Srinivasa Sastri, who are not revolutionaries; and therefore when they made recommendations regarding the improvement of conditions of labour, these recommendations must be regarded as moderate. It is intended that these recommendations should be given effect to at an early date so that the improvement in the conditions of labour which is sought will be effected within a reasonable time, and I may say, Sir, will be effected in time so that those people who believe in revolutions may not become strong and may not gain much strength in this country. Sir, if I attempt to deal with all these recommendations, the time at my disposal will not be enough and it is not necessary for my purpose; but I can only mention a few of the recommendations and would like the Government of India to state what they have so far done within this year and how far progress has been made on each of them. Sir, the third chapter of the report of the Royal Commission deals with employment and unemployment. The problem of unemployment is an important problem and many people have suffered on account of unemployment in our country. The Royal Commission on Labour recognises that there is some unemployment in this country. I want to know what the Government of India have done to consider how unemployment should be met and how the suffering caused by unemployment can be relieved. The Royal Commission on Indian Labour has suggested certain investigations in this matter. I want to know whether those investigations have been started, and if so, when the investigations were started and by what machinery. Then, Sir, the Royal Commission on Labour has made a recommendation regarding the reduction of hours of work in factories. This is a very urgent problem. The hours of work in Indian factories have not changed for more than ten years. I want to know when Government propose to introduce a Bill on that point. The same may be asked about improving the conditions in factories. The Royal Commission on Indian Labour has made several recommendations on that point. The Royal Commission has also made recommendations for securing some kind of inspection and control over those factories which were not controlled so far. They called these factories unregulated factories, and they have made certain suggestions how these unregulated factories should be controlled, and I want to know how far the Government proposals on this point have progressed. Then they have made certain proposals as regards improvements to be made in the conditions prevailing in mines. I want to know why no Bill has so far been introduced in this Assembly on that point.

Then there is the question of the minimum wage. The Royal Commission has asked certain investigations to be made regarding industries which could be brought under regulation for fixing a minimum wage. Then there is the question of deduction from wages by fines. This question has been investigated by the Government of India and Local Governments and I do not know why there should be any delay in bringing forward proposals to legislate on this question. Then there is the question of health and welfare of the working classes. The Royal Commission has recommended that Public Health Acts should be passed. Perhaps these Acts have to be passed by Local Governments, but I want to know what the Government of India have done in making suggestions to the Local Governments on this point.

Then the Royal Commission has recommended that maternity benefit should be provided to women workers in industries. This question was also discussed in this House some years ago and there should be no difficulty in bringing forward legislation on this point. The Commission has made recommendations as to how we should progress towards the establishment of national health insurance; they have recommended certain investigations to be carried out. I want to know whether a beginning has been made in carrying out these investigations. Certainly some work will have to be done by actuaries, and after the preliminary work is done the Royal Commission has recommended that the Government of India should appoint a committee to go into the whole question and see how far we could provide measures for safeguarding the health of the industrial workers.

Then there is the question of plantations. I am glad that the Government of India have introduced a Bill on one of the points dealt with by the Royal Commission; but the Royal Commission has dealt with several other points. They have recommended the establishment of a minimum wage. They have also recommended several measures for securing good health for the people working on plantations. I want to know what the Government of India have done on that point. I want to know whether they propose to legislate on those questions or not.

Then the Royal Commission on Indian Labour made recommendations about the passing of a Statistics Act. It is a very important thing. In India often we are at a disadvantage for want of statistics. I want to know what the Government of India have done in preparing a Bill for collecting statistics.

These are some of the points which touch the main report of the Royal Commission and they generally are to be dealt with by the Department of Industries and Labour. Then there is one question which is a very important one; I do not know whether the Department of Industries and Labour will deal with it or the Home Department will deal with it; it is the question of the indebtedness of industrial workers. The Royal Commission has made recommendations to prevent indebtedness and to minimise the bad effects of indebtedness of the industrial worker. Some legislation must be passed very urgently, because these industrial workers suffer a very great deal on account of their indebtedness; and the recommendations must be given effect to without delay. Whether the Industries and Labour Department deal with this subject or the Home Department, I want some reply from either of them as to why delay has been caused in giving effect to the recommendations regarding indebtedness.

Then I shall come to some points which are to be dealt with by the Department of Commerce presided over by the Honourable the Leader of the

[Mr. N. M. Joshi.]

House. Some time ago I asked him what the Government of India had done regarding the proposals of the Royal Commission for railway workers. He did not condescend to give me a reply. I would like the Honourable the Leader of the House to tell me today what he has done in order that effect should be given to the recommendations of the Royal Commission for the benefit of railwaymen. It is wrong of him to delay giving effect to these recommendations. I read the other day that the railwaymen are threatening a strike. Under these circumstances if the Royal Commission on Indian Labour have made any recommendations how industrial disputes on railways should be settled, is it not the duty of the Government to give effect to these recommendations without loss of time, and prevent great suffering which the railwaymen may have to suffer and prevent also a great deal of loss of public revenue?

Then I would like the Commerce Member to tell me what he has done so far regarding the Royal Commission's recommendations for the benefit of seamen. The Commission in the first place stated very clearly that the problem of the conditions of seamen on board ships is a very important one, and as it is an important one, it must be investigated; but unfortunately the Commission decided that these foreign-going ships are foreign-owned and therefore they could not deal with that question. I want to know how the Government of India propose to deal with the question of the conditions of life and service for seamen on foreign-going ships. I suggest to them that these conditions must be investigated either by a committee or by a small conference, because the Indian seamen have many grievances regarding this question. Their hours of work are long; their food supply is not adequate and their accommodation is not also adequate. On the other hand, in our own Merchant Shipping Act there is a difference made between the accommodation to be provided for Indian lascars and European crew. I do not know why there should be any difference between Indian lascars and the European crew as regards the accommodation to be provided. I do not even know why there should be a difference between the food to be provided to European workers and Indian seamen. You may make any difference in the articles of food according to the taste of the people in India and the people of England; but why should there be a difference in the quantities of food? Why should there be a difference in the accommodation? The Royal Commission has also made recommendations regarding the recruitment of seamen, and on several other questions regarding seamen. I want the Honourable the Commerce Member to tell me what he has done so far and what he proposes to do.

Then there are one or two other questions which affect Indian seamen. Indian seamen are not allowed to go into certain latitudes. At one time something wrong had occurred on a ship and Indian seamen suffered from cold, and the Secretary of State for India took it into his head that Indian seamen should not be allowed to go into certain latitudes. Since then the place of Indian seamen has been taken by Malaysians and by Chinese seamen, and Indian seamen have lost their employment. I want to know when the Government of India propose to remove that restriction which prevents Indian seamen going into certain of the colder regions. Then there are other grievances of the Indian seamen which I do not wish to discuss on this occasion.

The Royal Commission has also made certain recommendations regarding the department of the Honourable the Commerce Member on the point of conditions of workers in docks. They have suggested that there should be a sort of register of workers in ports to regularise employment, and that there should be certain safety regulations for the workers in docks; and the Royal Commission has suggested that the Government of India should pass legislation enabling Local Governments to make safety regulations. I want to know what the Government of India have done in that matter. The Commission has also suggested that labour interests should be represented on Port Trusts. I want to know what has been done on that point also.

Then, Sir, we know that recommendations have been made in respect of workers engaged in other means of transport such as tramways, buses and other vehicles. I do not wish to go into the details now, but there is only one more point with which I wish to deal, and that point touches the department which is represented here by the Honourable the Foreign Secretary. The Royal Commission on Indian Labour has made a recommendation, and a very strong recommendation too, that in all the provincial and central legislatures, labour interests must be adequately represented. They have given very cogent reasons why labour interests should be adequately represented in the legislatures. I am not going to deal with the constitutional aspect of the question today, but there is one question which is very urgent, and therefore I propose to deal with it today. There is a Legislative Council being established now in the North-West Frontier Province, and from the constitution which has been published, I find that there is absolutely no provision made for the representation of labour interests there. This is clearly against the recommendation of the Royal Commission. There are 40 Members in that Legislature, and out of these 40, I do not see any seats reserved for labour at all. I find that provision has been made for Muslim representation, Muslim rural, non-Muslim representation non-Muslim rural, Sikhs, Landholders, nominated non-officials, nominated officials and for everybody, but there is no provision made whatsoever for labour representation in that constitution. I feel, after having studied the rules regarding franchise, a large number of classes in the North-West Frontier Province will have absolutely no representation, and I will give the Honourable the Foreign Secretary some figures. There are in the North-West Frontier Province farm servants and field labourers numbering about 14,000. I want to know how these people are going to be enfranchised or represented by the provision so far made by the Foreign Secretary. These people will have no representation at all, because the franchise is based upon the land assessment. Franchise is also given to tenants, but certainly it is not given to field labourers and servants, whose number is put in thousands, and I want to know how these people are going to be represented.

Then, Sir, in that province there are about 288,000 people engaged in industry. I quite realise that some of these people may get the franchise by other means, but out of these 288,000 people, there are certainly some who are merely wage-earners or labourers, and I estimate, to err on the safe side, their number cannot be less than 50,000. I should like to know by what method it is proposed to enfranchise these people or give them representation in the North-West Frontier Province Council. Then, out of these people who are engaged in industry, there are about 9,000 sweepers.

[Mr. N. M. Joshi.]

How are they to get representation? Then there are also transport workers consisting of porters and messengers, whose number comes to about 5,000, railway workers about 5,000. Then again there are about 148,000 people engaged in trade. I am not aware of the number of shopkeepers, because I don't represent them, but certainly these shopkeepers may have some servants employed under them, and I estimate their number to be about 50,000. Now, how are all these people to be represented? Then there is the public administration which consists of Government employees, and certainly there are some poor peons and sepoys. How are they going to be represented? Who is going to speak on their behalf in the Legislature? Then there are about 21,000 domestic servants in the North-West Frontier Province, how are these people going to be enfranchised? Then there are also labourers who belong to unspecified categories, and their number is more than 50,000. Out of 22 lakhs of the total population, all the people that I have mentioned numbering more than two lakhs will have absolutely no chance of being represented, and I want to know why these people should suffer in point of representation. They will be paying taxes; they are not going to escape taxation. If their interests lie in the province, why should they not have any representation in the Legislature of the province? I feel, Sir, that the whole question of labour representation has been overlooked by the Government of India and the Chief Commissioner of the province. I therefore want the Honourable the Foreign Secretary to look into this question. There is still some remedy which they could take. There are six seats for nomination at least. I want to know how these six seats are going to be filled. For whom is this nomination intended? Most of the interests in the province have been adequately represented. I want, therefore, Sir, that these six seats should be reserved for nomination of people who will undertake to represent the interests of the unenfranchised classes, the labourers and so forth and I hope Government will consider my suggestion very favourably and remove the defect in the constitution of the province. Whatever has to be done should be done immediately, and whatever has to be done later on, can be left to be done on a future date, but whatever has to be done must be done without delay.

Mr. President, I have now dealt with the several departments, but there is one department, which is a sort of superdepartment, with which I propose to deal now, and that is the Finance Department. When the question of retrenchment was discussed in this House, I could not get an opportunity of telling the Finance Member how retrenchment should not be effected. Unfortunately I did not get an opportunity to do that on that occasion. But that question is equally relevant today, and I therefore want to know from the Finance Member whether he has taken sufficient care to see that while making retrenchments, the very object of retrenchment is not frustrated. Sir, why are we making retrenchment? We are making retrenchment, because our revenues have suffered on account of depression in trade. Therefore, if we make retrenchments on principles which are wrong and by methods by which depression will increase, it is a wrong method of retrenchment. I would therefore suggest to the Finance Member that, while making retrenchment, he should take care that the productive efficiency of the masses of the people in this country does not suffer, because if their productive efficiency suffers, what will happen? The purchasing power of the people will go down, and your depression will increase still more. Sir, you all know that Mr. Henry Ford is a great industrialist, and he has very clearly stated that an industrialist or financier who begins to make retrenchments by cutting down wages and by undertaking measures which will reduce the productive efficiency of the people is not fit to be an industrialist or a financier. He says that it is the height of folly to try to reduce expenditure by reducing wages and by taking measures by which the purchasing power of the people will be reduced. I therefore want the Finance Member to tell me whether he has placed sufficient funds at the disposal of the various departments which have to deal with Indian labour, and especially which have to deal with these departments which have to give effect to the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Labour. Sir, it is quite natural that in these times of depression, the Finance Minister should look into the financial proposals very carefully, but that does not mean that he should refuse to give sufficient money to the various departments which have to deal with such questions as have to give effect to the recommendations of the Royal Commission. Why was that Commission appointed at all if their recommendations are not to be given effect to immediately? I want therefore the Finance Member to tell me whether he is willing to provide sufficient funds for giving effect to the recommendations of the Royal Commission. I do not suggest that he should provide crores of rupees immediately, but certainly the Department of Industries has been charged by the Royal Commission on Labour to make investigation as to how the national health insurance should be established in India. Money for the investigation of questions of this kind should not be refused, because, if peoples' health is secured, the workers' efficiency will be increased and you will get better revenues. In the same way, if we want money for making certain investigations into the conditions of seamen or any other questions, money must be provided. That money need not be estimated in crores. The money required for these investigations and for providing a sufficient staff to hasten the preparation of legislation will be a small amount. I therefore want the Finance Member to explain to me why money was not provided for in this Budget for that kind of work, and what he proposes to do in the future.

Mr. President, I do not wish to take up any more time of the House, but I want to appeal to the House on this question. This is a very vital and important question from the point of view of the Indian workers. The Government of India appointed a Royal Commission, and that Commission has now made certain recommendations. Those recommendations are meant to be given effect to without delay, and if the Government of India do not give a satisfactory explanation as to why the recommendations have not been given effect to so far, and if they do not say satisfactorily what they propose to do in the immediate future, then, Sir, I would like to have the support of this House in making a protest against their conduct and their failure to take the necessary steps. Sir, I move.

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore (Member for Industries and Labour): I am sure the House must be grateful to my Honourable friend Mr. Joshi for the enlightenment which he has offered the House through his somewhat lengthy survey of, and commentary on, the recommendations of the Labour Commission. I am afraid it is not possible for me to follow his example and to try the patience of the House in saying what may be, or is being, or will be, done in regard to each one of the 350 odd recommendations which are to be found in the Labour Commission's report. But, Sir,

[Sir Joseph Bhore.]

I do wish to repeat the assurance which I gave to this House the other day, that we are steadily pursuing the examination of those proposals, and that we will allow no avoidable delay to occur in our examination of these questions. There is one very important matter which I would like the House to bear very prominently in mind, and it is this, that retrenchment and economy cannot be pursued on the scale which we are following without certain inevitable and definite consequences. One of those consequences is a definite slowing down of departmental activities. If the extremely onerous and complicated task, which is involved in giving effect, after exhaustive examination, to such proposals as are contained in the Commission's report, is to be done by the existing staff alone, and perhaps with an attenuated staff, then, Sir, I say that some delay is absolutely inevitable, but I do assert that, despite these difficulties, we have definitely made progress in this matter.

A large proportion of the recommendations of the Commission falls to be dealt with by Local Governments and by organisations and bodies and authorities over whom the Government of India have no control. So far as the Provincial Governments are concerned, we are keeping in the closest touch with them in regard to those matters which fall within their province; and, Sir, we have made a very careful analysis of all those matters which fall to be dealt with by them. We have asked them in their turn to keep in touch with and to refer to those non-official organisations whose co-operation is absolutely essential if the fullest effect is to be given to the proposals of the Labour Commission.

The action of the Government of India falls under two categories, administrative and legislative. I explained to the House the other day that we have already begun to take definite executive action, and I instanced the case of instructions which we have issued already to our Central Public Works Department in respect of certain matters connected with the employment of labour on central works, as for instance, wages, housing and health conditions, and employment of children. That we have not stood still in the legislative sphere is I think also evidenced by the fact that I have already introduced three Bills pertaining to labour matters during the current session, and a fourth Bill dealing with an amendment of the Trade Disputes Act is in course of being drafted. I may say further that the recommendations of the Commission relating to the statutory regulation of rest days, hours, etc., in oilfields, amendment of the Indian Mines Act, exemption of workmen's salaries and wages from possibility of attachment, amendment of the Land Acquisition Act, are now all in course of active examination, and I hope that it will be possible for us to register some definite conclusions before the next Autumn Session in Simla. But, Sir, I would ask those impatient partisans of labour in this House, who are always charging the Government with delay in this matter, to remember, firstly, that legislative measures, some of them of great complexity, cannot be devised and drafted at a moment's notice. To give effect to a simple principle it is often necessary to provide most complex machinery, and the greatest care and attention is required to devise such machinery and to see that it fits in with the existing order of things. An instance in point is the Assam Labour Bill which I introduced in this House last week. It took us many weeks of the closest examination and consultation with the Local Government, resulting in great changes and alterations of the original draft before the Bill was put into the form in which we introduced it in this House. Then, in the second place, people very often forget that labour legislation is not the only official business before this House. Whatever my friend Mr. Joshi may say, I am sure that the House will agree with me that there are other legislative measures of equal importance, and some of far greater urgency, which demand the attention of this House. (Mr. H. P. Mody: "Hear, hear.") (Mr. N. M. Joshi: "Question.") And, therefore, the process of considering and passing labour legislation must inevitably be slower than my Honourable friend Mr. Joshi would like it to be, and I confess than I myself would like it to be. But we have got to remember that this House is the bottle neck through which all Bills have to pass before they turn into Acts, and no amount of congestion in the way of Bills will increase the output in the way of Acts. No amount of argument on the part of my Honourable friend and no amount of cut motions will overcome these difficulties or alleviate them in any way, but I do wish to repeat the assurance which I have given in the most categorical terms, and that assurance is this, that we have been pursuing and we will continue to pursue steadily and without remission the examination of all the proposals of the Labour Commission, that we will allow no avoidable delay to occur in that examination and no delay to occur in giving effect to the results of that examination. Sir, I hope that my Honourable friend Mr. Joshi and the House will rest assured with this assurance and that he will not press his motion.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Member for Commerce and Railways): My Honourable friend is desirous to know what we are doing in the Railway and Commerce Department about certain of the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Labour, and in accordance with a principle that my Honourable friend sometimes follows, he wants to know what we are doing about things that were not recommended by the Royal Commission on Labour. I am not quite sure that this extension of the discussion is a fair one, and obviously if it were carried to the full length, it would demand very great width of information before one could reply to his enquiries. So far as the Railway Department is concerned, the Railway Board divided the recommendations of the Royal Commission into two classes, namely, minor matters and matters of first class importance. I understand that on the minor matters they have already received the opinions of the Agents, and on the great majority of them have formulated their own conclusions, but they wish to discuss them with the Agents of the Railways at the beginning of April next, because in these matters, usually matters not involving legislation, it is desirable to secure uniformity on the Company-managed and State-managed railways. The matters of first class importance remain for discussion with the Agents at the meeting in April, but the Railway Board anticipate that by the middle of April or shortly afterwards, or at any rate before the end of the month, they will be in a position to make definite recommendations to the Government of India. In view of the complexity of the questions which have to be considered, I do not think that any time has been unnecessarily wasted.

Then, as regards the Commerce Department, one of the matters mentioned by my Honourable friend was safety regulations in docks. That is a matter which is regulated by an international convention, and before the end of the session, I shall make a statement on this subject. I have not got it with me at the moment, but if my Honourable friend is anxious to know what the position is, that statement has already been made by a representative of Government in the Council of State, and appears in their proceedings. The most important question perhaps in connection with seamen is the question of recruitment. It is a question which I have always found to be one of extreme complexity and difficulty. That matter is under discussion with the principal officers at the ports, and I hope that, before very long, we shall be in a position to make up our minds about the recommendations of the Royal Commission. I do not propose to follow my Honourable friend into the sphere where the Labour Commission made no recommendations. For one thing, it seems to me that, if you want progress to be made, the wise course for the moment is to concentrate on what the Commission did recommend before we attempt to deal seriously with questions on which the Commission did not make recommendations. Finally I would refer to one matter in connection with the railways. It is this, that so far as the settlement of disputes between employers and employed on the railways are concerned, that is a matter in which the Railway Department are deeply interested indeed, but the settlement of industrial disputes is a matter the responsibility for which rests with the Industries and Labour Department.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: May I ask for a reply about the North-West Frontier Province?

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola). The Honourable Member cannot ask another Member to get up and give answers to him. It is at the discretion of Members to get up to speak or not. The Chair has called upon Mr. Joshi to reply.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: I cannot compel him, but I would certainly suggest

Mr. President: The Chair has called upon Mr. Joshi to reply.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: I have listened to the speeches of the two Honourable Members who have dealt with some of the points raised by me. I am sorry, Mr. President, the Honourable the Foreign Secretary was not prompt enough in rising in his seat, but I feel that when any Member of this Assembly, however humble that Member may be, raises a point, it is his privilege to get the Member of Government in charge to deal with the point he has raised. That is a matter of courtesy not only to the Member but to the whole House.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: On a point of order. The point raised in the cut is, "The Royal Commission on Labour". My Honourable friend is overlooking the fact that the Royal Commission on Labour made no recommendations as regards the representation of Labour in the North-West Frontier Province.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: I know something about the report of the Royal Commission on Labour and I state that the Royal Commission on Indian Labour has made very strong recommendations for the representation of labour in Indian legislatures, both provincial and central, and it was for that reason that I put forward a suggestion and I wanted to get information on this point from the Honourable Member in charge of the department. But I feel, Mr. President, this omission on the part of the Member in charge is certainly not intentional. Perhaps on account of the exigencies of the debate. I am not able to receive a reply, but I am sure the Honourable Member means to give me a reply, if not on the floor of the House, elsewhere. Mr. President, I am not satisfied with the reply given by the Honourable Member in charge of Industries and Labour, nor by the Member in charge of the Department of Commerce on these points. I quite realise that these are days of retrenchment, but as I stated if you try to cut down your expenditure in such a way that the productivity of the people or the efficiency of the people will suffer, you are not carrying on your work of retrenchment in a proper manner. You are only going to add to your troubles. I am not therefore satisfied with the reply given by the Honourable Member who has also tried to throw the blame on this House, saying that the business of the House is crowded and the House will not have time to pass the legislation, which perhaps he hinted was quite ready with him. If the legislation is ready with him, let it be introduced in this House. Introduction does not take time, and let the blame be thrown on the House after its introduction. I am quite sure that all sides of the House have some sympathy with the cause of labour. There are my friends, the Nationalists, there are my friends, the Independents, led by such a sympathetic leader as my Honourable friend, Sir Abdur Rahim. Then, the sympathy of my Honourable friend, Mr. Mody, is well-known. (Laughter.) I am sure if the Government bring forward legislation, this House will agree to sit a week or two more to see that this legislation is got through and passed. I do not therefore think the Honourable Member brought forward a good argument for the delay in giving effect to the recommendations of the Royal Commission. I quite agree that many of the recommendations, at any rate some of them, must be given effect to by the Local Governments, but, Sir, my Honourable friends will recognise that labour legislation is a central subject, although not entirely, I quite realise that the provinces today have got the power of legislation in labour matters with the sanction or approval of the Government of India. But the chief authority for labour legislation is the Government of India. I therefore want the Government of India to be responsible, not for passing legislation on all the recommendations but for telling this House what the Local Governments are doing, and what the Government of India have permitted the Provincial Governments to do. That information at least should be given by the Honourable Member, because without his approval no labour legislation can be passed by a Provincial Government. Mr. President, I am not satisfied with the reply and I would therefore like to enter my protest against the inaction of the Government. But I recognise that we are pressed for time, and I do not wish that the House should spend its time now in debating the subject at length. I would therefore ask for leave to withdraw my motion.

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Lack of Supervision over the Coal Transactions of Railways.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi (Dacca cum Mymensingh: Muhammadan Rural):
Sir, I move:

"That the Demand under the head 'Executive Council' be reduced by Rs. 100."

Sir, I want to draw attention to the lack of supervision. Sir, during the general discussion of the Budget the other day I said—and I think I ought to repeat it to-day as my Honourable friend, the Commerce Member, was not present on that occasion in this House—I said “I must confess it was no small surprise to me the other day how the Honourable the Commerce Member gagged me when making my submission to this House as to how a saving of half a crore of rupees could be effected if the scheme I had to place before the House was adopted”. Sir, I shall now put my case before the Honourable Members and shall ask them to judge if I was not justified in what I had said. I will just for a few minutes refer to my friend, the Honourable the Commerce Member’s speech which he delivered the other day in reply to mine. He said:

“But I am afraid I must say that I have never listened to a speech in this House with more pain or more regret,” —pain it must have caused him, for, Sir, truths are sometimes painful—because that speech contained, as he said, what he was afraid he must call a very violent attack on the Chief Mining Engineer of the Railway Board, Mr. Whitworth. Now what was it that I said that had pained him? Sir, what I was saying the other day was a public topic, as everybody knows. I said old Members of this House will remember that Mr. Church landed the railways into a scrape by making forward contracts

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Non-Muhamadan Rural): Sir, on a point of order, I find that the Honourable Member has just referred to a railway contract and his motion also relates to coal transactions. Sir, I believe the Honourable gentleman is a Director of Messrs. Lowe & Co., who have a contract with the railways for coal, and I should like to draw the attention of the Chair to the point that both according to May’s “Parliamentary Practice” as well as in accordance with the ruling in this House given by two of your predecessors—Sir Frederick Whyte and Mr. Patel—one who has got a pecuniary interest in the transactions of a contracting firm should not take part in the debate, and further I would draw your attention, Sir, to the ruling given by Sir Frederick Whyte when Diwan Chaman Lal drew his attention to a point order on an identical occasion namely the consideration of the Demands for Grants. Sir Frederick Whyte stated, Sir:

“Where a member is directly and personally concerned in contracting with Government or certain services, he is not entitled to take part in the debate.”

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhamadan): That was not a ruling but was an advice.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: In view of that definite ruling, Sir, I would request you to ascertain from the Honourable Member in the first place whether he is a Director of Lowe & Co. and whether Lowe & Co., are not connected with the railways over a contract and if so—without arguing further from May’s “Parliamentary Practice”.

Mr. President: I think the Honourable Member should complete his remarks on the point of order.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Well, then, Sir, according to May’s “Parliamentary Practice”, I find that “Each member should be guided by his own feelings in the matter and should vote or abstain from voting as he thought fit"—I see my friend, Mr. Mitra, is laughing, but as soon as I complete my reasons I believe he will stop his laughter—and it was added by Sir Erskine May "that members should be aware that they ran the risk of having their votes disallowed by the subsequent action of the House",—which latter has not been the procedure of this House, and that is why Sir Frederick Whyte gave a definite ruling. (At this stage Mr. C. C. Biswas rose to his feet.)

Mr. President: Order, order. The point of order is still being debated.

Mr. O. S. Ranga Iyer: Sir, "On the 16th June, 1846, objection was taken to the vote of a member who had voted with the noes, because, as a director and shareholder in the Caledonian Railway Company, he had a direct pecuniary interest in the rejection of the . . . Bill" and so on. The question of disallowing his vote on the ground of direct pecuniary interest was voted upon by the House there, but there is no such thing as calling upon a Member to withdraw his vote by a vote of this House here: and in view of that circumstance, Sir Frederick Whyte gave that ruling. Sir, on this matter the late lamented Pandit Motilal Nehru, a great authority on legal matters, stated:

"That rule has been enforced and adopted, not only in the interests of the general public, but also in the interests of the Members themselves, because, as the House can very easily imagine, a Member who is personally interested in the subject-matter of a debate, feels himself in a somewhat difficult position when he has to give an opinion either for or against his own interest. So, I say that the rule is in the interests of both."

12 Noon. That is what the Panditji said. And ex-President Patel himself said this:

"Unfortunately in the Government of India Act we have got no such provision and we must therefore be guided by the practice in the House of Commons. It is, I submit, not at all a question for this House to decide. It is entirely a question for the President to decide on the interpretation of the Act or on the practice of the House of Commons. It is not for this House to say whether a particular Member shall or shall not take part. It is entirely a matter for your ruling. If you choose to follow the practice of the House of Commons, you are bound to rule that Members who have a pecuniary interest in the Tata concern 'shall not be entitled to vote'."

At that time Mr. Patel was the Deputy Leader of the Swarajist Party and the words were addressed to President Whyte, and President Whyte's decision on a subsequent occasion was as I have just read out. He said, as far as the shareholders in Steel Companies were concerned, he was not going to say that they could not take part in the debate.

And I shall further read his own words on that matter:

"That question has been settled by the established practice of the House of Commons which I think we may reasonably follow here. It has been raised in the history of the House of Commons on many occasions and is now well settled in practice. The practice is that where the individual Member of the House of Commons is actually an active partner in a business, not a limited liability company, it is a misdemeanour on his part to vote; and there have been cases in recent Parliamentary history where a measure has had to be passed to indemnify a partner in a business in England from the penalties otherwise leviable upon him for having given his vote in the House of Commons on any subject, not merely on a question in which he was personally interested."

And so on in relation to the shareholders. Then Sir Frederick Whyte definitely laid down:

"It is only where a Member is directly and personally concerned in contracting with Government for certain services that he is not entitled to take part in the debate."

I submit therefore, Sir, that the Honourable Member, who is directly connected with Lowe and Company which Company has a contract with a

[Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer.]

State Railway, cannot, according to Sir Frederick Whyte's ruling, take advantage of his position in this House to forward the interests of his own Company, which are competitors with other mining contracting companies in India.

Mr. President: Order, order. I should like to ask the Honourable Member (Mr. Ghuznavi) whether he has anything to say?

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: I am glad, Sir, that the Railway Board have got my gallant friend, the Honourable Mr. Ranga Iyer, to espouse their cause.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Sir, the statement is most reprehensible.

Mr. President: Order, order. Will the Honourable Member (Mr. Ghuznavi) please restrict himself to giving an answer if he has any to the point of order that has been raised?

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: I wish to tell Mr. Ranga Iyer to his face that I am not a Director of H. V. Lowe & Co.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: I should like to know if he is otherwise interested in the firm?

Mr. C. C. Biswas (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I also wish to raise a point of order. It is this. Where a point of order involves a personal reflection upon an Honourable Member of this House and is founded on an allegation or suggestion of a direct pecuniary interest, is it open to any other Member to raise such a point of order without being satisfied as to the facts which he is assuming for the purpose of raising that point of order?

Mr. S. C. Mitra (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, on the point of order raised by my Honourable friend, Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer, I would like to draw your attention to the "Selections from the Decisions from the Chair", pages 438 and 439:

"During the discussion on the Steel Industry (Protection) Bill Mr. Devaki Prasad Sinha raised a point of order that Members interested in the Tata Iron and Steel Company as Directors or Shareholders should not be allowed to take part in the proceedings of the Assembly or allowed to guide its deliberations in the capacity of the President of the Assembly. After some discussion on the point of personal interest, as it was applied in the House of Commons,—The President ruled: 'I have sufficiently heard Members on this point. It has been raised rather in an irregular manner. Still I am not sorry that it has been raised and we have had the expression of opinion from various Members of the House. In the House of Commons objection has been raised to members having a direct personal interest voting—not taking part in the debates—only in case of private Bills and even then the objection has on a good many occasions not been upheld. My conclusion is that in this case I cannot uphold the objection raised by Mr. Devaki Prasad Sinha. This is not a private Bill designed to promote the interests of the Tata Iron and Steel Company. It is a Bill brought in by Government involving a question of public policy to give protection to the steel industry.'"

So it is clear that the question can only be raised as regards the right of voting and that also in regard to private Bills. As regards the question of taking part in the debate, the ruling is clear that it does not affect the right of the Member to speak on the debate. In this House only the other day during the debate on the Paper Protection Bill, Sir Edgar Wood took part in it and no objection was raised to it. He was within his rights to take part in the debate.

Mr. B. Das: Sir, I wish to point out that this House has never taken seriously the point that no shareholder or Director should be allowed to take part in any debate which affects a particular industry. In the past Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas has taken part; my friend Mr. Mody, who is a shareholder of the Tata's and Sir Hugh Cocke and several others have been allowed to take part in such debates. The point which my Deputy Leader, Mr. Ranga Iyer, has raised is whether Mr. Ghuznavi is not discussing the affairs of Messrs. Lowe and Company. My friend Mr. Ghuznavi wanted to raise the point in the railway debate and also to-day's debate whether the Railway Administration will not save money if certain suggestions, which he has put forward or will put forward, are approved by this House. So; there is no question of merely taking part in the debate; every Member who is concerned even directly with a particular industry has a right and privilege, in the public interest, to speak, whether a certain benefit may not accrue to the public.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Chair has no hesitation in ruling that the Honourable Member is quite in order in taking part in the discussion which he has initiated. The Honourable Member who raised the point of order drew attention of the Chair to the words "directly and personally interested". It is, I think, very desirable that Honourable Members, who raise points of order or a question that a particular Member is directly and personally interested, should take adequate and proper care in making such allegations. The Chair is prepared to consider all aspects of the question when its attention is drawn to serious allegations. I take it, that the Honourable Member who raised the point of order himself recognises that, in the interests of the good name of the House, the Member raising the point shall take adequate care to ascertain his facts before making them. Having ruled on the issue that has been raised, the Chair's view is further confirmed by the fact that the Honourable Member has stated that he is not a Director of any Coal Company.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: I did not say that. I said that I am not a Director of H. V. Lowe and Company.

Mr. President: I take it that the Honourable Member is a Director in some coal company.

Mr. O. S. Ranga Iyer: Many companies, of which Messrs. Lowe and Co., are the Managing Agents.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): If the Honourable Member is a Director in several coal companies it is for the Honourable Member himself to consider whether he should avail himself of this opportunity as a Member of the House to deal with this subject. As a Director he is not personally and directly interested, and therefore he is in order in taking part in this discussion. The Chair leaves it to the Honourable Member himself to decide whether he will proceed with the discussion.

Mr. O. S. Ranga Iyer: In view of your observations, I have to submit

Mr. President: The Honourable Member has admitted that he is a Director in some coal companies and no further remarks are therefore necessary.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: Now, I will proceed with my speech. I will at once go to the facts to show, instead of meeting my Honourable friend's speech of the other day, how Government are losing from year's end to year's end nearly half a crore of rupees, by the negligent manner in which they exercise control over the buying of coal and management of the collieries. The coal purchased for 1932-33 was to the extent of 16,29,000 tons. Here I have got on page 52 of Capital the names of the tenderers, the rates and the quantity tendered. In the issues of 4th February and 16th January of Capital you will find the names of the accepted tenderers, their rates and quantities. Like Mr. Whitworth, I have also tabulated the offers and their acceptances, and this is the tabulated sheet which I have got in my hand, and from this I shall show that Government have lost about 8 lakhs on purchase of coal this year. The same quality, the same grade was offered to Government at cheaper rates, but they did not accept them—they accepted higher rates.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad (United Provinces Southern Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): What commission?

Mr. President: Order, order.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: Here is a publication of the Indian Coal Grading Board. There the names of these collieries are entered, as to their grades, as to their seams, and approved by Government; and here is the list which I have got which will show that these approved grades and approved qualities, the same seams were offered at lower rates but were not accepted.

An Honourable Member: Why?

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: Let that question be put to the Honourable the Commerce Member. I will take the first item. Special Jherrias; they were purchased at Rs. 4-12-0, but coal of the same quality was offered at Rs. 4-4-0. On this they could have saved Rs. 18,000. The second is Jherria, 17 and 18 seams, they purchased 1,28,000 tons. The same quantity was offered and they could have purchased it much cheaper, thereby saving Rs. 63,750, on that lot. Just for the information of Honourable Members I will read the rates of Jherrias and the rates that were accepted and the rates that were tendered:

										Rs. A. P.
50,000 tons at	3 6 0
18,000 tons at	4 0 0
30,000 tons at	4 4 0
30,000 tons at	4 8 0

whereas the same quantity was offered at Rs. 3-6-0, 3-8-0 and 3-12-0

Mr. S. C. Mitra: That is economy in Government Departments.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: Yes. Then, Jherria, first class, 12, 13, 14 and 15 seams, there could have been a saving in this lot of Rs. 2,10,000. They purchased at higher rates, while the same quality and the same quantity were offered at much cheaper rates. Then, the second class Jherrias, 10, 11, 12 and 13 seams; they could have saved Rs. 50,000 on this transaction. I have worked out how the whole saving was arrived at and if any Honourable Member would like to see it, I shall furnish him with a copy.

An Honourable Member: Then, lay it on the table.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: I do not want to waste the time of the House. Then comes Raneegunge Coal. A quantity of 2,36,000 tons was purchased at Rs. 4-12-0 and Rs. 4-6-0 and Rs. 4-4-0, while the same quantity and the same quality was offered at Rs. 4-4-0; thereby they could have saved Rs. 32,000. In second grade Deshurgurh quality, a saving of Rs. 18,000 could have been effected. In Kasta quality, a saving of Rs. 18,000. In Raneegunge series Jherria coalfield, a saving of Rs. 6,000. In Poniat quality, a saving of Rs. 19,750. In Koithi quality, a saving of Rs. 20,250. In Gusick quality, a saving of Rs. 1,850. In Kajora quality, a saving of Rs. 54,750. Thus the total saving would approximately have been about six lakhs in these coal purchases.

Then comes the shipment coal. They bought 1,40,000 tons for the Burma Railways and this contract was given to one contractor alone at Rs. 9-2-0 per ton, f. o. b., Calcutta, with insurance and weight on the Rangoon weighbridge. Sir, this very same coal, of the same quality and of the same seam, was offered at Rs. 7-6-0 per ton, which if accepted would have brought a saving of 2½ lakhs. Even if they had been given it to one contractor; had the coal been shipped by themselves; had it been shipped by their Mining Engineer, they could have saved at least Rs. 70,000 on shipping Jherria only. The contractor made another profit for shipping it directly. Sir, the Honourable the Commerce Member said the other day that Mr. Whitworth is not a man who decides everything but it is the Railway Board who decide—that he comes with his proposals and they scrutinise them and decide after scrutiny from whom to buy. Sir, I want the Honourable Member to give me a straight answer. The Railway Board call for tenders; but who opens those tenders? Is it or is it not Mr. Whitworth in Calcutta who opens those tenders? Who tabulates them? Is it or is it not Mr. Whitworth and his assistant, the great Surendra Nath Banerji?

An Honourable Member: Not the great Surendra Nath Banerji?

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: He is great because from Rs. 35 he is now getting Rs. 900 a month, and he owns in his father-in-law's name and mother-in-law's name and sister-in-law's name so many properties in Calcutta.

Then, Sir, is it or is it not a fact that this Mr. Whitworth and Mr. Banerji come up to Delhi with their proposals? And can the Honourable Member tell me if they have ever changed a single item in those proposals? That is what I should like to know. Then why was I blamed? What was my sin when I said that it is Mr. Whitworth who practically decides whom to give and whom not to give to?

[Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.]

Then, Sir, I will make another charge and a serious charge, and ask him to refute it. Previous to tendering, Mr. Whitworth and his friend Mr. Banerji are obviously in the habit of advising their friends what rate to tender. And I will give you the proof. If you study the various tenders you will find that the pact rates are all the same. I will explain to the House what I mean by "pact rates". There are certain firms in Calcutta who have made a pact for themselves and they always quote a certain figure. But there are many others who are not in the pact and who therefore do not know what will be the rate of these pact firms. But Mr. Whitworth knows it. You will find from the pact firms that their rates were the same but those who were not in the pact also quote the pact rate. And how do they find the pact rate? From the evidence here I know who are the pact rate firms and who are not, but we find that those who are not also give the pact rates. Then, Sir, I make another charge. When they give out a tender, they say that those tenderers who do not want to put in the pact rate, because it is a higher rate, will not get an ounce of order. If any evidence is required of that I am prepared to furnish it.

Sir, I think I have made out a case for investigating into these allegations that I have made on the floor of the House and for the appointment of a committee to go into this matter. But before I bring my remarks to a close, I will take up the collieries. Will this House be surprised to hear that Government have not published the accounts of the cost of running their collieries in spite of repeated demands? My Honourable friend Mr. Das drew my attention to the fact that for many years the Public Accounts Committee urged this point, and only the other day they got them to prepare a form of accounting. So as regards the collieries, we have got nothing in our possession to show what is the cost of their running. I say that the State collieries are running at a much higher cost than even the costliest European managed collieries. Will the House be surprised to hear that there is no tender ever called for for raising coal in the State collieries? Only the other day my Honourable friend Mr. Ranga Iyer stopped me when I wanted to bring up this thing on the motion of my Honourable friend Mr. Maswood Ahmad about favouritism, and he said that it was not to the point. I did not pursue it that way, but this telegram that I have here will show the favouritism that I was referring to. It says:

"Railway colliery working under raising contractor at higher rate without calling yearly tenders, favourite persons are appointed for instance Rambilas Singh chaprassi under Railway colliery at Bermo colliery has been appointed raising contractor."

I believe there is another contractor who is Mr. Whitworth's dhobi. Then the telegram says:

"You can conclude how Railway raising contracts are given respectable raising contractors can be had at cheaper rate if yearly tenders are called and on this policy lakhs and lakhs of rupees can be saved question hitherto tenders were not called and given to respectable parties at lower rates."

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Sir, I rise to a point of order. I had no intention of raising a point of order about the earlier part of the Honourable Member's speech because the Chief Mining Engineer does purchase coal not only for the Railways, but also for the Army Department, and certain other departments of Government, and therefore I must admit that he is concerned with this part of the Budget. But I should like to point out that the railway collieries supply coal only to the railways, and therefore the administration of these collieries is pertinent rather to the Railway Budget than to the General Budget. It is a general question of administration and policy affecting the administration of the railways that is really in question on this latter point.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Chair recognises the force of the point of order raised, but the Chair cannot overlook the fact that the Executive Council is in charge of the entire policy and administration of the Government of India and must therefore hold that the Honourable Member is in order in criticising the policy pursued by the Executive Council in the manner he is doing.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: Thank you, Sir. I have already shown, when dealing with coal purchase, how lakhs could have been saved, and I will now illustrate it by figures. When I mentioned about 50 lakhs, another 30 lakhs or so could have been saved from the collieries. Sir, the railways this year bought from the public 16 lakhs of tons, and they expected to raise 16 lakhs of tons from the collieries. I will assume that the requirements are 32 lakhs. Of this they do not raise more than half the quantity and the rest they give to the public. On the 16 lakhs of tons which they will raise they lose at least 32 lakhs of rupees, and you will see how. You can get cheaper coal in the market, much cheaper than you can raise. You do not show us the figures

Mr. President: The Honourable Member will please address the Chair.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: I beg your pardon, Sir. They have not up to date said what it costs them to raise a ton of coal; and in the absence of any figure, I will assume that their cost must necessarily be much higher, as it is run on State lines, than what they can get it in the market. Even assuming that is wrong, I will give you this figure. They have got their raising contractor, if I remember aright, a man named Amrita Lall Ojha; and I should like the Honourable Member to tell us on the floor of the House what is the rate that they are giving him to raise their coal. He makes lakhs annually. If you can reduce your cost even by a rupee a ton, you save 16 lakhs of rupees in your estimates. I therefore suggest the following. It is only because I want to help my Honourable friend the Finance Member in his retrenchment. I am sure he would have half a crore of rupees if he would adopt this suggestion. The first is, that tenders should be called for and every tenderer should have to deposit ten per cent. with the tender of the value of the coal he tenders. This must be a condition precedent. What happens is this: the tenderers tender and the favourite tenderers tender for a far bigger quantity than their output. I will illustrate this point. There have been tendered this year 91 lakhs of tons, and Government have accepted 16 lakhs of tons. Each tenderer got something, say 10 per cent. or 5 per cent. For instance, Mr. A's colliery, whose output is 200,000 tons, tenders for one lakh; Mr. B's colliery, a favourite colliery whose output is only 10,000 tons also tenders for one lakh; then Mr. C's colliery whose output is 300,000 tons tenders for 150,000 tons; and Mr. D's colliery whose output is only 5,000 tons tenders for 50,000 tons. Mr. Whitworth brings these figures before the Railway Board and says that Messrs. A, B, C and D have tendered respectively for so much and he shows he has made an equal distribution—ten per cent. to everybody

Mr. S. C. Mitra: Are these people not required to show what is their total output?

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: That is the trouble; they do not go into the matter of whether this man can deliver it. They cannot deny it. The Commerce says:

"We publish below a list of State railways coal tenders for the years 1932-33. It will be observed that offers larger than their output have been made by several collieries."

Perhaps I have not been able to explain myself sufficiently clearly. For instance, I have offered to sell a lakh of tons, but my colliery has an output of 2 lakhs. Another man also offers a lakh of tons, but his colliery's output is only 10,000 tons. So, when these two proposals come before the Board with Mr. Whitworth's recommendation, giving 10 per cent. to each, I get practically nothing at all, but the other man gets his full output and more. But if you ask for a deposit, he will not be able to put in that lakh of tons, because the deposit will be 10 per cent. . . .

Mr. C. C. Biswas: Are they not required to state their output in each case?

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: No. Now there is another matter. This shows that the Railway Board is not in a position to help the trade or see whether a man is in a position to deliver things which he offers. This list, which shows that 91 lakhs of tons was tendered, does not include coals outside Jherria and Ranigunje fields, nor the coal accepted for shipment. The total output of coal in India is roughly 20 million tons. So it means that practically half the output has been offered to the State-managed railways only; and when one has to take into account all the contracts already fixed up for the year 1932-33, and the coal which must be reserved for industries, bunkers, shipments, etc., it is obvious that the quantity of coal offered to the State railways, if all were accepted, could not possibly be delivered; and here is the list of tenderers with their names and their acceptances. I made a careful study of this before I brought up the subject before this House.

My first proposal therefore is that in future when coal tenders are called for, tenderers must be asked to deposit 10 per cent. with the tender. The second check that I would suggest with every tender is that a space in the tender form should be left for directors to put in the previous year's output of their collieries. They have to give this information to the Mining Department of the Government every year, and these figures would then be available to the Railway Board as a further check on tenderers giving their correct output. Thirdly, my suggestion is that all tenders should be sent direct to the Railway Board in Delhi and opened here and the Board should tabulate them. If the tenderers wish to come to Delhi or Simla, they may do so and be present when the tenders are opened, and it is for them to decide whether they should come up or not.

Then, Sir, shipment coal, which is a very heavy quantity, should not be given to one firm, but coals which are best for shipment should be purchased from several parties and mixed at the time of shipment; the contractors should only be required to put the coal on the railway at the siding of the collieries. They will get only the price of the coal and nothing for shipping it direct to Burma or anywhere else.

I would then submit that the Board should be constituted as follows:

The Chairman:

The Chief Commissioner of Railways or a Member of the Railway Board.

Members:

1. The Chief Mining Engineer to the Railway Board.
2. The Combustion Engineer.
3. A gentleman with experience of the commercial side of colliery work, but not actually in the coal trade.

The Board will be a permanent Board and attached to the Railway Board. The Combustion Engineer and the commercial members will be left in charge. With a Board so constituted, one will have a Mining Engineer with experience of the practical side of coal, a Combustion Engineer with experience of the actual burning quality of coal and a commercial man with knowledge of the commercial side of coal. To put it plainly, one would have a Board of men who would know all the tricks of the trade, and I am certain that the cost of this Board will be saved over and over again. Not only could they make coal purchases for the railways, but they could also see to the working of the State Railway collieries which would then be run on commercial lines. This is what I wanted to show to the House in the public interest, and therefore I had to make the statements that I did, and I think I have been able to satisfy the House that I have made out a case for an investigation into this matter.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Sir, I should not ordinarily have intervened in the debate at so early a stage, but I think it is desirable that on this particular motion I should do so, because in view of the serious charges that the Honourable Member has made, the House is entitled to hear at the earliest possible opportunity what the reply of Government is. One thing perhaps I might say by way of preface. I think it is a great pity that, when the Honourable Member first opened the subject in this House, he did not make it plain at that stage what exactly his complaint was; it is a pity he did not give his figures at that stage. (An Honourable Member: "He was obstructed.") The Honourable Member found time to hurl what I consider very unfair imputations against a Government officer, and failed altogether to state what the precise matter was to which he was drawing the attention of the House.

Now, Sir, I should like to begin by explaining briefly the procedure we followed in the purchase of coal for the State-managed railways. The procedure we followed this year is exactly the same as is followed every year. In the middle of December the Railway Board, on a preliminary survey of what the coal requirements of the State-managed railways in 1932-33 would be, came to the conclusion that, after allowing for a carry over of 160,000 tons from this year's contract, it would be necessary to arrange for the supply of 3,173,000 tons of coal, out of which they proposed to take 1,753,000 tons from the market, leaving 1,420,000 tons to be raised from the railway colliery. These figures would have given the market a rather higher percentage of the total coal required than in the previous year. The Chief Mining Engineer was authorised to call for tenders for 1,753,000 tons, and these tenders were opened in the presence of the tenderers in the middle of January, and the list of the tenders was published in the Press. Thereafter the Chief Mining Engineer discussed with representatives of the operating departments of the State-managed railways how the orders should be distributed. It is quite true, as Mr. Ghuznavi has stated, that the total quantity of coal tendered was considered in excess of nine million tons. As a result of the discussions with representatives of the operating branches, proposals for the distribution of the orders among the tenderers were laid before the Railway Board by the Chief Mining Engineer towards the end of January. Now, my friend says that the Railway Board merely accepted the Chief Mining Engineer's proposals, they made no changes in them, they just blindly accepted them. It is rather remarkable that this particular accusation should be made in this particular year when a modification of an entirely unusual character was actually made by the Railway Board. The Board decided that, in order to assist the coal trade in the difficulties through which it is now passing, the quantity of coal to be taken from the market should be raised from 1,753,000 tons to 2,167,000 tons, with a corresponding reduction in the amount to be raised from the railway collieries, and it is perfectly obvious from that fact that it was a physical impossibility for the Railway Board to follow blindly the distribution proposed by the Chief Mining Engineer, because the quantity to be distributed had been increased by more than 20 per cent. The effect of this decision was to give the private collieries the supply of over 65 per cent. of the State-managed railways' requirements compared with about 54 per cent. in the current year. When the Railway Board had come to a decision how the orders should be distributed, a statement showing the names of the successful tenderers, with quantities accepted from them and the prices to be paid in each instance, was published in the Press. I think the phrase used in an earlier part of the discussion was "a hole and corner business". I do not think there is any hole and corner business at all when we published all the tenders in the newspapers and subsequently also published the names of successful tenderers. It is then open to any member of the public, if he considers that the action taken was improper, to raise the point, and I should be the last to deny that this is a proper subject for criticism. What I do say is that it is not correct, it is not fair to say that there has been a hole and corner business. All the facts and figures are published, and we invite the whole world to see them.

Now, Sir, I am in a position to say that the revision of the proposals of the Chief Mining Engineer by the Railway Board is a reality and is not by any means a matter of form. All important matters are brought by the Financial Commissioner of Railways to my notice, and I personally discuss them with him, and I cannot remember any year in which there was not a modification sufficiently important to be brought to me. I should like to emphasise that—that the responsibility does not rest with the Chief Mining Engineer, who only makes proposals; the responsibility for what is done rests with the Railway Board and the Financial Commissioner and, of course, with myself as the Member of Council concerned.

I should like now to deal with the question whether the distribution actually made was satisfactory or not, first, generally, and then, with reference to what has fallen from the Honourable Member. I think the House knows that the coal trade is passing through very hard times, that a good many of the collieries are only just hanging on, and it is for that reason that the Government decided to raise so substantially the proportion of these requirements to be obtained from the market. I do not claim, of course, that we were acting on purely altruistic grounds, which indeed would be rather a questionable procedure for a commercial department. The position of our State railway collieries, the output from which can, if need be, be rapidly increased, puts us in a strong position when there is any attempt to organize a squeeze, and the prices are raised against us. But the position is rather different when things are going badly with the collieries, because it is not in our interests that a large number of collieries should have to stop working, since that might result in a gradual decline in the competition for the orders of the State railways, and that is the last thing which we desire. Now, clearly it was desirable that the contracts for next year should be fairly spread over a number of collieries. It would be no use to give increased orders to a few firms and leave the rest to go to the wall. I claim that our distribution, as a matter of fact, was fairly made. It enabled us to raise the proportion of second class coal taken from the market from about 23½ per cent. to 28½ per cent., to give Indian firms and businesses, who mostly deal in second class coal about 42½ per cent. of the amount taken from the market instead of 37½ per cent. That our distribution of the orders has given general satisfaction may I think be fairly inferred from the telegram that was sent to me by the Indian Mining Federation immediately after the Honourable Member's speech in the general discussion on the Railway Budget. It is as follows:

"Committee of the Indian Mining Federation have carefully considered the press report of the remarks made by Mr. Ghuznavi in the Legislative Assembly on the 29th February to which their attention has been drawn by various members of the Federation. They dissociate themselves entirely from the criticisms made by the Honourable Member regarding purchases of coal for railways. The Committee of Federation must record their emphatic view that contracts for purchases of coal for railways for 1932-33 were fairly distributed and criticisms offered thereon unwarranted."

That deals with the general question. Now, I will turn to the particular point which has been brought up by my Honourable friend. I found a great deal of difficulty, and I dare say other Members did also, in trying to follow his figures in detail. They do not entirely correspond with the figures which were supplied to me. But, when my Honourable friend speaks of a possible benefit to the railways of half a crore of rupees, I am a little puzzled to know how he arrives at a figure of such magnitude. 50 lakhs of rupees a year means 5 million rupees a year. The State-managed railways do not consume 5 million tons; they only consume about 3,330,000 tons. Now, if there is to be a saving of half a crore of rupees, it must mean that this 3,330,000 tons, the whole of them, can be purchased at a rate Rs. 1-8-0 cheaper than they were actually purchased. Is that my Honourable friend's proposition?

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: No. I will reply afterwards.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I wish to be sure of that. I cannot push that particular point further at the moment except to say that the figures the Honourable Member gave seem to me on any assumption grossly exaggerated.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: May I interrupt the Honourable Member for a minute? I have shown from the figures, which I shall place on the table, that you could have saved, on buying your coal alone, to the extent of about Rs. 8 lakhs. These figures will show; you can compare the prices which you paid and the prices which were offered, but which you did not accept. I then said that there would be a saving of another 32 lakhs of rupees from your State collieries. That is in this way. They have bought about 19 lakhs of tons this year, and I assume they want another 19 lakhs for their requirements.

Sir Hari Singh Gour (Central Provinces Hindi Divisions: Non-Muhamadan): You also mentioned some saving from shipping?

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: I am coming to that. On shipping alone they have actually paid about a lakh more. These figures are all there, but in such a short space of time it is difficult to go into the details. I shall place them on the table. The savings on the collieries, according to me, would be over Rs. 30 lakhs, because you do not show your cost and I presume it is two rupees higher at least.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I shall be very glad indeed to see the figures put forward by my Honourable friend, and irrespective of anything that has been said to-day, I should certainly be glad to go into those figures and see exactly what they appear to establish. I should indeed be most grateful to my Honourable friend if he can show how we can save Rs. 30 lakhs on the working of our collieries. Quite obviously, any Government must be grateful to people who can make practical suggestions of that kind if they are in fact practical. I do not know how far I am right in my assumption, but I think the figures that the Honourable Member has given were based in the main on the coal which he thinks ought to have been taken from collieries under the management of H. V. Low and Co.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: No.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Not solely, but including them.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: No.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Not solely but including them. Well, Sir, as regards that firm, it is necessary that I should say something. It controls a very considerable number of collieries, and ever since the case which is known as the Church case, up till last year no orders whatever had been placed with that firm by the State-managed railways. For that policy I accept full responsibility. Last year, for the first time, the ban was lifted and an order for a certain quantity of coal was placed with the firm. It is quite true that the collieries managed by that firm did in a number of cases put up tenders for the supply of coal at a lower price than the tenders we actually accepted. The reason why we adopted that plan is that, in placing contracts, we have not to look only at the price but also to performance, and to the manner in which contracts previously given have been carried out. It is no use getting coal at cheaper prices if the loading at the collieries is bad, so that the railways do not receive the supplies at the time they are expecting them, or if the quality of coal received is inferior to what has been asked for. Now in both these respects during the year 1931-32, a number of serious complaints had been received from the railways concerned about the coal supplied by this firm, and in the circumstances the Railway Board came to the conclusion that it was not desirable to place an order with this firm for more than a comparatively small quantity of coal, and I want to tell the House that, before these orders were issued, the Financial Commissioner of Railways drew my attention to the point and I entirely approved of the action taken.

Sir, I contend that the Honourable Member has not made out his case. What he has made out is that we did for certain qualities of coal not place the whole of the contract with the lowest tenderer, but in some cases, for what appeared to us adequate reasons we turned down the lowest tenders. That is undoubtedly so, but there were good and sufficient reasons for the action taken in every case.

I am not going into any elaborate disquisition about the management of the railway collieries because the single subject with which I have so far dealt is really of sufficient importance to take up the whole of the debate, but what I feel about these railway collieries is this. We publish annually in one of the pink books distributed with the Budget papers a statement of the costs of raising coal in these collieries. When I was in the Tariff Board and since I have held my present appointment, I have often heard a great deal of criticism of the cost accounts kept by Government departments, and we are always ready and willing to submit accounts of that kind to the criticism of the people in the industrial world who are in a position to speak with authority. I should like to inform the House that the balance sheets of the State railway collieries have been examined by representatives of the Indian Mining Association and the Indian Mining Federation, and neither body was able to suggest even a small item of expenditure as having been omitted which ought to have been included. That, Sir, is at any rate prima facie evidence that our accounts are kept in a reasonable way, and if that is so, then it is not the case that the coal taken from our railway collieries is costing us more than the coal which we purchase in the open market. That, Sir, I think, very nearly concludes what I need say. Perhaps I might just refer to certain practical suggestions which the Honourable Member made at the end of his speech. I have been compelled to differ rather strongly from the Honourable Member as regards the attitude he has taken up, but that makes no difference to my attitude to any practical suggestions he makes, and I am quite ready to consider them on their merits. What I cannot do is to admit that there is any reasonable and proper ground of criticism of the action taken on the ground that it was taken from improper motives and not for good and adequate reasons.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till a Quarter Past Two of the Clock

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at a Quarter Past Two of the Clock. Mr. President in the Chair.

Mr. S. C. Sen (Bengal National Chamber of Commerce: Indian Commerce): Sir, before I begin, I should make a little personal explanation. I do not want to be so subtle as Mr. Ghuznavi. I must say that I have an interest in a small coal contract with a railway, but I am vitally interested in the coal trade and through my profession as a solicitor I have more than 95 per cent. of the colliery owners in Bengal and Bihar as my clients and I am a member of the Indian Mining Federation, from whom the Honourable the Finance Member has got a telegram of approval to his action. I must say I do not approve of what Mr. Ghuznavi said regarding the acceptance of tenders in this House. Every tender contains the usual clause that the lowest tender need not be accepted. and any person who makes the lowest tender cannot legally or even morally make a grievance that his tender has not been accepted. Before a tender is accepted, there are various things which have to be considered by the person accepting the tender. The personal element comes very much into the question of course. A person may tender at the lowest rate, but he may be known to be a person on whom no reliance can be placed if the market goes against him. That is the experience of every business man who does any business in coal or any other commodity where the contract is not a contract for a lump quantity but an executory contract which has to be performed in a year or so. Under these circumstances, if in the exercise of the discretion vested in an authority, he chooses to make a contract with persons whom he knows to be reliable, with whom he has had dealings and with whom he did not anticipate or did not have any difficulties, then I do not see what objection can be made or grievance felt. Moreover, in the coal trade the question of loading comes very much into practical play. A contract is generally made with the condition that the case will be free of any slacke, slate or stone. Now in the loading you can if you want to cheat put in as much slacke as you can. It may be rejected by the purchaser if he is alert, or may be taken by his subordinates if arrangements are made; therefore, although you may have quoted a very low price, you really charge a higher price than what you have put forward. Under these circumstances, I do not understand Mr. Ghuznavi's objection. Secondly, he has made certain charges, or rather insinuations, against Mr. Whitworth and also against his assistant. I do not know nor does the coal trade know of any justification for such insinuations. No facts justifying such insinuations have been adduced or hinted; they are unwarranted and unjustifiable. The Honourable the Commerce Member has told us that the giving of contracts and the acceptance of tenders do not rest with the Chief Mining Engineer of the Government or his assistant. These contracts are scanned by the Railway Board and, as stated by the Honourable the Commerce Member on the last occasion, especially by the Finance Member of the Board. Under these circumstances, what blame can be attached to Mr. Whitworth or his assistant I do not know. Then Mr. Ghuznavi has stated that the tenderers generally put forward, or rather tender for, quantities far more than what they can possibly deliver or what can be their output. I do not know whether Mr. Ghuznavi is thoroughly acquainted with the custom of the trade or the conditions under which Indian colliery owners or even European colliery owners have to conduct their business. As a matter of fact if there are no buyers, I can curtail my output of coal. Now having regard to the market conditions which have been subsisting for the last two or three years, it is well-known that both European and Indian collieries have been obliged to curtail their output. That does not mean that they have done so for good or that they cannot if occasion arises increase their output and supply all the coal necessary. Then Mr. Ghuznavi raised the question of the collieries owned by the railways. There I join him in his condemnation of working of these collieries, as I in my opinion by opening collieries themselves the State have come into competition with private colliery owners. (Mr. N. M. Joshi: "Why should they not come into competition?") Sir, it is the universal practice in all civilized countries of the world that the State should not come into competition with private enterprise. (Mr. N. M. Joshi: "That is so only in capitalistic countries, not in civilized countries.") Here the State have not only come into competition with ordinary colliery owners, but they are practically killing them and with the resources at their command it is merely a question of time when private enterprise will be entirely killed. Of course Mr. Ghuznavi was wrong when he stated that the cost of production has not been shown by the railways, although this was demanded. The cost of raising of coal has been shown also in the Budget books published by the Railway Department, but the rates there given are misleading. The rates given there contain the rates not only for coal but also for slack, that is small coal and dust. These are sold in the market at practically half the rate for which you can obtain coal. Therefore the rates shown there for coal are misleading and really the coal rate there is much higher than what is given. As regards coal contracts, I have said that there is no grievance which can be felt: as a matter of fact colliery owners, both European and Indian, do not complain of the way in which contracts have been given this year or even in the previous years (Hear, hear), and but for the action taken by the Government this year many of the Indian colliery owners would have shut their coal mines, i.e., if they had not got the distribution which has been made by the Railway Board this year. The Railway Board had the support not only of the Indian Mining Federation, of which I am a member, but also generally of the whole of the coal trade in Bengal. The Board is entitled to the thanks of the coal trade generally. Sir, with these remarks I oppose the motion.

Some Honourable Members: The question may now be put.

Mr. President: I accept the closure. The question is:

"that the question be now put."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Sir, I wish to speak very briefly indeed. There was one part of my Honourable friend Mr. Ghuznavi's speech which I did not catch very distinctly, and therefore I obtained from the Reporters a copy of the type-script. The particular part to which I wish to allude is this. He said:

"Then, Sir, I will make another charge and a serious charge, and ask him to refute it. Previous to tendering, Mr. Whitworth and his friend Mr. Banerji are obviously in the habit of advising their friends what rate to tender."

The Honourable Member then went on to state what the practice was and ended up by saying:

"If any evidence is required of that I am prepared to furnish it."

He has not as yet given any proof, but what I wish to say is that I entirely repudiate that charge as being entirely without foundation.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: Sir, the reply of the Honourable the Commerce Member has relieved me of the necessity of making a detailed reply. I should like however to say something about the telegram to which the Honourable the Commerce Member appears to attach a good deal of importance. Sir, the telegram from the Indian Mining Federation read out by the Honourable Member has not come upon me as a surprise, nor will the telegram which I am about to read come upon him as a surprise unless the Department of the Honourable Member's colleague, namely, the Posts and Telegraphs, has not supplied him with a copy, which was addressed to him. It appears from the telegram that I have received that a copy of it was addressed to the Honourable Sir George Rainy. It is from a member of the Indian Mining Federation and this is what he says:

"Some members of Federation who have secured orders under patronage have wired Home Member" (This is a mistake; he means the Commerce Member.) "as follows."

Then he gives the telegram which the Honourable Member has read out. But he has not read out the latter part of the telegram. He should have, in justice to me, read out this portion as well. I will read out the whole telegram. It runs thus:

"Committee Indian Mining Federation having carefully considered Press reports of remarks made by Ghuznavi at Legislative Assembly on 29th February to which the attention has been drawn by various Members of the federation dissociates Committee of Federation records their emphatic view that contract for purchases of coal for 1932-33 was fairly distributed any criticism offered thereon unwarranted. Total Members on Federation below hundred. This wire has been sent by four persons in name of Federation. Kindly consider what was justification of sending such wire by Federation against the views of hundreds of colliery owners. Kindly anyhow get impartial committee appointed hundreds of colliery owners will come give evidence we shall prove conclusively merits and demerits of purchases by mining engineer before Committee. Railways losing millions through such purchases yearly. Wasteful management of railways collieries similar quality of railways collieries coal can be had from market at cheaper rate Federation all along fought against working of railway collieries past correspondences will prove that colliery proprietors offered similar coal at Rs. 2-8-0 per ton for ten years any quantity railway require. Railways collieries cost average few years over rupees four per ton explain how railways losing fifty lakhs yearly. Show this telegram all Assembly members. We appeal for appointment of impartial inquiry committee. P. C. Bannerjee, Member, Bengal National Chamber of Commerce, Indian Mining Federation."

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: That, Sir, is a telegram from a single individual, but the hundreds of colliery proprietors have sent no telegrams.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: In justice to me he should have read this telegram as well. Whether the telegram which was sent on behalf of the Federation was sent by 4 Members and how far he is correct or how far that telegram which he received from the Federation is genuine, has yet to be seen. Sir, I have no further remarks to make because I find the Honourable the Commerce Member has not been able to meet my case. He has in a manner admitted all that I have said and with these remarks I close this debate.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Demand under the head 'Executive Council' be reduced by Rs. 100."

The motion was negatived.

Separation of Burma from India.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi (Burma: Non-European): Mr. President, I move that the Demand under the head "Executive Council" be reduced by Rs. 100.

By this motion I propose, Mr. President, to raise a debate on the future of Burma and to help Burma to exercise a free choice during the election which has been promised by the Prime Minister. A general election is to be held either in October or November this year on the specific issue whether Burma desires to separate from India or whether she desires to remain part of India, whether it may ultimately be a federated India or British India.

I wish to make it clear at the very outset that this motion is not designed as a vote of censure on the Government of India or to reflect in any way on the Government of India. As a matter of fact, I wish to express my gratitude to the Government of India for the efforts, which I believe, they have exerted as a result of the debate which took place in this House last year. I believe that it was mainly due to the efforts of the Government of India, as a result of the Burma debate last year, that both the separationists and anti-separationists were invited, and the Burma Round Table Conference was almost as representative as it could be reasonably made. This, I take it, was due to the good efforts of the Government of India, and therefore when I place this motion before the House it is not to censure them, but to afford them another opportunity of helping Burma to have an entirely free choice at the election next November. Now, in this connection I wish to read out a passage from the announcement made by the Prime Minister when he closed the Burma Round Table Conference. The passage is very short. Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, when closing the Burma Round Table Conference, said as follows:

"With this material before them the people of Burma will be in a position to decide whether or not they are in favour of separation from India. His Majesty's Government consider that a decision might best be taken after a General Election at which the broad issue has been placed before the electorate. (The life of the present Legislative Council has been extended for a year, but an election must be held before the end of the year)."

That decision will determine whether on the one hand Burma should be independent of India with a constitution on the lines set forth above or on the other hand should remain a province of India with the prospects indicated in the proceedings of the two sessions of the Indian Round Table Conference."

And then comes a very important observation:

"and in this connection, it should be remembered that if an Indian Federation is established, it cannot be on the basis that Members can leave it as and when they choose."

Sir, I confine my attention at the moment to this particular observation:

"and in this connection, it should be remembered that if an Indian Federation is established, it cannot be on the basis that Members can leave it as and when they choose."

Mr. President, I do not think this general observation made by the Prime Minister can be interpreted to mean a threat to Burma that if she decides at the next election in November to join the Indian Federation, she shall be forced to remain part of the Indian Federation for ever. As I understand this passage, it is a general observation which would be applicable in ordinary constitutional theory to federations, that when a federation is formed it is not lightly broken up, and when the Prime Minister was dealing with the subject, he had in mind all the units which would make up the Indian federation, and I do not think any narrow interpretation can be put upon it. When the Prime Minister made that observation he did not mean to convey a threat that if Burma entered the Federation, she would never be able to leave the Federation. But, after that, Sir, came the address to the Burma Legislative Council delivered by His Excellency Sir Charles Innes, Governor of Burma. I shall read to the House extracts from his address. When the House follows these extracts, it will bear in mind the general observation which the Prime Minister made in his announcement, and which I do not interpret—and I do not think the Government of India will interpret it—to mean a threat to Burma that she would be forced to remain in the Federation for ever. In the course of his address to the Burma Legislative Council on the 12th of February this year His Excellency Sir Charles Innes said:

[Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi.]

“I have just said that the announcement has cleared the air and has made plain what is the choice which lies before the people of Burma. Either they can elect to enter the Indian Federation or they can elect to separate from India and to pursue their own political development apart from India, but the Prime Minister”.

and this is the interpretation put by His Excellency Sir Charles Innes on the observation of the Prime Minister:

“but the Prime Minister has made it clear that it will not be open to them to enter the Indian Federation on the basis that they can leave it as and when they like. This stipulation is not a device intended to impale the people of Burma on the horns of a difficult dilemma or to drive them into voting for separation. It is no easy matter to separate two countries which have been so long and so closely connected as India and Burma.”

I contend that His Excellency the Governor of Burma, in placing this interpretation on the general observation made by the Prime Minister, has gone a great deal further than the Prime Minister's words justify, and has practically said to Burma, “You have to decide whether you want to separate from India or whether you want to enter the Federation, but if you decide to join the Federation, you have got to stay in it for ever”. His Excellency Sir Charles Innes argues that this is what the Prime Minister has announced. I contend that the general observation in the speech of the Prime Minister is not capable of this interpretation, and in putting this interpretation on it, His Excellency Sir Charles Innes has allowed himself to be carried away by his zeal. In the course of the same address, His Excellency the Governor of Burma, after making a number of observations, goes on to say, “I have no desire to prejudge the issue”. I offer no comment on this claim. Then later on, after assuring the Burma Legislative Council that, “He has no desire to prejudge the issue”, His Excellency Sir Charles Innes preached to the Council a political sermon as follows:

“The only point I wish to make is that the issues ought to be carefully thought out and squarely faced. There must be no thought of using India merely as a political convenience. There is no place in the Indian Federation except for loyal members content that matters of common interest should be managed in the interests of the whole, and ready and willing to contribute loyally and faithfully to the strength and well-being of the Federation. If Burma wants to separate from India, now is her opportunity. If not, let her throw in her lot with India whole-heartedly and without any arrière pensee and let her play her part as a loyal member of the Federation.”

This is the political sermon preached by His Excellency Sir Charles Innes to the Burma Legislative Council after claiming that “he had no desire to prejudice the issue". The interpretation placed by His Excellency Sir Charles Innes on that passage in the Prime Minister's announcement is naturally causing grave concern to Burma. As the House knows, political Burma is divided into two camps, those who desire to separate from India and those who do not desire to separate from India in view of the constitution offered by the Prime Minister. Burma has been given the option. She can elect to accept the constitution offered by the Prime Minister in the announcement made by him before the Burma Round Table Conference, or she can decide to join the Indian Federation if a Federation ultimately emerges, or remain part of British India if a British Indian constitution ultimately emerges. There are two schools of political thought in Burma; one school, although very much dissatisfied with the constitution offered by His Majesty's Government, wants to separate from India and take its chance of obtaining something more in the near future. There is another school of thought which is equally dissatisfied with the constitution offered by the Prime Minister, if not more so, and wants to remain with India believing that by remaining with India, Burma would be better able to solve her political problem. But this threat that once Burma enters the Indian Federation or the Indian constitution she must remain in it for ever, is likely to deprive the electorate in Burma of the free choice, which, it obviously was the intention of His Majesty's Government, to give to the people of Burma. If a choice is to be given to the people of Burma to make a decision, it should be a free and unfettered choice. There should be no restrictions and no threats. As I say, Sir, I do not interpret the Prime Minister's announcement to impose any threat or restriction whatever, it is a general observation; but His Excellency Sir Charles Innes has attempted to put an interpretation on it which goes much further than the words of the Prime Minister. This has caused an apprehension in Burma, and I am asking this House to help me to make it clear—as the Indian National Congress and then the Federation of the Indian Chambers of Commerce have already done—that it is for Burma to decide whether she wants to separate from India or whether she wants to join the Indian Federation, if a Federation emerges, or to remain a part of British India, if ultimately a British Indian constitution emerges, and further—and this is the most important point which I want to urge before the House,—that if Burma decides to join the Indian Federation or the Indian constitution, she shall be free to leave it when she chooses to do so. That and that alone would be a free choice given to Burma. (Hear, hear.)

I have not the slightest idea as to what the attitude of the Government of India is; but I take it that they are determined that Burma shall have a square deal and completely fair play on this question. And if that is their intention, I feel confident that the Government of India will have no difficulty in supporting the proposition which I want the House to endorse, that Burma shall be at liberty to leave the Federation or the Indian constitution when she chooses to do so. I see, Sir, that my last remark has caused some amusement to my Honourable friend the official Member from Bengal. Perhaps when it is his turn to speak he will explain exactly what amuses him. It is superfluous to state that if and when Burma leaves the Federation she shall be doing so on the necessary adjustments, as there must be adjustments even now. The point really is this. Is this House or the Government of India prepared to force Burma to separate now if it is Burma's desire not to separate now but to separate, if it is found necessary to do so, 10, 20 or 30 years hence? That is really the issue in a nutshell. If Burma says she does not want to separate now, are we going to force her to separate now by this threat? It may turn out that Burma may not want to separate at all; but I do want Burma to have the right to secede or separate if and when she chooses to do so; and she should not be subjected to this threat which has been imposed on her by His Excellency Sir Charles Innes, to which, I do repeat, the Prime Minister was not a party.

I am very glad that my Honourable friend U Kyaw Myint has arrived in Delhi just in time to take part in this debate. He has taken a very keen part in the separation controversy in Burma during the past 12 months. He represents one school of political thought in Burma, and he is looked upon as one of the prominent leaders of that school of thought. He will therefore be in a much better position to tell the House what Burmans feel and think about the constitution in general and this question of the Governor's threat in particular. We have also our Honourable friend Mr. Tait in this House, who also will be giving his views about the political situation in Burma. Of course Mr. Tait will be labouring under this disadvantage that he does not read the Burmese papers and does not attend Burmese political meetings; he is not in close touch with Burmese politicians. But my Honourable friend Mr. Tait has a buoyant temperament and an optimistic nature. (Laughter.) He still may claim that he knows more about the sentiments of Burmans than my Honourable friend U Kyaw Myint. (Laughter and cheers.) But when that claim is made, U Kyaw Myint will deal with it.

My object in making this motion is to raise this debate on Burma and to ask this House and also to request the Government of India to help Burma to have a completely free choice at the next election, and to endorse this proposition that if Burma decides to join the Indian Federation or the British Indian constitution, whatever it may be, she shall thereafter be at liberty to secede or separate if and when she chooses to do so. (Applause.)

Mr. John Tait (Burma: European): Sir, coming from a very distinguished Barrister, the interpretation which my Honourable friend Mr. Munshi places on the words of the Prime Minister is almost an unexplainable one. The only interpretation which can be placed on the words of the Prime Minister is exactly what those words say. They say in clear language that if Burma decides to enter the Federation, she must remain within the Federation. There can be no question as to what the Prime Minister meant by that. He said exactly what he meant and his words meant exactly what he said.

The theme of my Honourable friend's speech is not whether Burma should separate from India or should remain as part of Federal India. What he wants now is that Burma should be allowed to join the Indian Federation and at the same time have the right, whenever she decides to exercise that right, of seceding from the Federation. The question as to whether Burma is or is not to have a free vote is another matter. Mr. Munshi does not particularly want merely a free vote. What he wants is some other thing on which Burma can vote. Burma is quite definitely going to have a free vote, either for separation or for remaining permanently within the Federation. What he wants is that Burma should be able to vote not on these two alternatives which have been offered to her, but on something quite different. So it is not a question of Burma not having a free vote, but that Burma should have something else on which to vote.

Now, what strikes me and what must also strike Honourable Members of this House is that this is the first occasion on which this point has been raised, as to whether Burma should be free to join the Federation and later on leave it when she wants to do so. This is the first occasion on which that point has been raised. (Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: "Question.") And if there was any substantial feeling in favour of that particular point, surely it would have been mentioned at least at the Burma Round Table Conference in London before the Prime Minister made the remark or it would have been mentioned in the Burma Legislative Council. The session of the Burma Legislative Council has just now terminated, and there unquestionably are quite a few in that Council who are prepared to voice the views of the anti-separationists, and it is remarkable that not one member in that Council raised this particular point; neither has it appeared in the Press. It may, I admit, have appeared in some of the vernacular papers. On that I cannot say one way or the other; but I do contend that if it was of any material importance whatsoever, it would have appeared in the more widely read Press of the province.

Now, what is to be the actual effect of this reservation should it be agreed to? No one, I think, who knows anything about Burma and who has had experience in that province will deny that there unquestionably has been and still is a definite anti-Indian feeling amongst the Burmans. The tragic events of May 1930 and subsequently are eloquent enough if proof was required that that feeling has not been submerged and is ready to boil up again at any moment. I submit that there is nothing in the view of most reasonable men, more certain to retard the development and the industrial progress of Burma than the perpetuation of this disturbing and most regrettable clash of racial feeling; and I submit further that this is exactly what such reservation would be likely to effect. It will preserve an atmosphere of discontent against what is called the peaceful penetration of Indians into Burma; parties of irreconcilables will come into existence distracting the attention of the people and the country at large from the main consideration of the working of the constitutional progress of Burma and all that Burma stands for. We Europeans in Burma have never taken sides on this question of separation. On the facts as we now see them, it is our opinion that it will be in the interests of Burma, if she does decide to separate; but we now and always have said that it must be left for the Burmans and Burmans alone to decide whether or not they will separate from India or will remain as a constituent part of Federal India. But, and this is a very big but, we are definitely not prepared to support the plea now put forward by my Honourable friend, Mr. Munshi, for we are definitely of the opinion that it is not in Burma's interests to perpetuate a feeling of uncertainty as to Burma's future. Let Burma decide now one way or the other,—to separate or remain within India; but above all, let her decide finally.

[Mr. John Tait.]

And what is Federal India going to have to say about this suggestion? A federal scheme with all its ramifications must provide for an India which will include Burma and that same scheme of federation will unquestionably not suit an India without Burma; and is India going to put herself in a position when she forms her new constitution that at some uncertain date entirely outside her own control, one constituent member should be allowed to secede and upset all the arrangements and all the scheme? Surely in a Federation, representation of which in the Central Government is worked down to the basis of single seats, the question whether or not Burma will continue to send representatives to the central Legislature must have the effect of upsetting the balance of representation between the various communities. It is not certain at all with the passing of years on what side the weight of the Burmese representation will be thrown; will it be on the side of the Muslims or on the side of the Hindus? It all depends what kind of representative comes forward; and if Mr. Munshi comes as representative of Burma, would he vote with the Muslims or with the Hindus?

That is all I have to say; but I do say on the facts it is a most extraordinary position that Mr. Munshi should come here and raise this new issue which so far as the whole world knows, nobody else has asked for and nobody wants.

Mr. H. P. Mody (Bombay Millowners' Association: Indian Commerce):

3 P.M. Sir, in order to understand the implications of the issue placed before the House by my Honourable friend, Mr. Munshi, it is necessary to dip into the history of this question. As a somewhat active member of the Burma Sub-Committee of the Round Table Conference, I think I am in a position to tell the House something about the matter. When the question was first raised before the plenary session of the Round Table Conference, a decision was reached in, I think, less than three-quarters of an hour's discussion, and it took most people by surprise. I am not going to deny that it was due to the members not being sufficiently wide awake with regard to the issues before the plenary Conference. Before they realised exactly what was happening, the Prime Minister declared that a Committee would be appointed, and that the question of separation would be regarded as settled. I remember one or two of my friends on the Round Table Conference inquiring when this announcement was made whether it was possible in the Committee to raise the question of separation, and the Prime Minister said, "No". It was not possible in view of the fact that most members were not prepared to fight the issue out at that stage for anybody to say anything on the spot, and the fight was transferred to the Burma Committee of the Conference. At the very first meeting of the Committee, I raised the question of separation. I pointed out how the decision had been rushed through, and I wanted to know whether it was open to any member of the Committee to reopen the issue in the Committee. The Chairman of the Committee, the late lamented Earl Russell, ruled that the question could not be raised in the Committee because the Committee was only asked to define the terms upon which separation should be effected; but he gave the Committee very clearly to understand, in view of the strenuous opposition of some of us, that it would be open to me or to any other member of the Committee to raise that question again in the plenary session. Thereafter we proceeded to discuss the general principles upon which separation should be effected and we put up a report which came up in due time before the Round Table Conference. There, my friend, Mr. Shiva Rao, and myself, led the attack. We pointed out what the implications of the whole business were, and we secured such support from most of the members of the Conference that the Prime Minister at the end was compelled to say that an opportunity would be given to the Conference to reconsider the question before the separation of Burma was an accomplished fact.

The next thing in this little drama was an announcement on the floor of the House of Commons after a few weeks by the Secretary of State or the Prime Minister—I forget by whom exactly—stating that it had been decided that Burma should be separated, and that a separate Conference would be held in order to consider the terms on which it would be possible to effect that separation. I may say in passing, Sir, that our strenuous opposition to stampeding Burma into a hasty decision was not exactly relished, and I remember the gibe which the Chairman of the Committee, Earl Russell, flung at me when he said that I appeared to be feeling more for Burma than the Burmans themselves, and I retorted that I felt as much for Burma as His Lordship himself. To proceed with my argument, we are not considering this question from the point of view of Indian interests. We who claim the right to self-determination must recognise the right of Burma also to self-determination. All that we say is that if the issue is put fairly and squarely before Burma, and if Burma decides to separate, and if the terms upon which she is going to separate are mutually acceptable, then it is Burma's business and not ours, and we wish them joy of their new constitution. That is the position which we have all along taken. It is a question entirely for Burma to decide, and the only thing on which we in India demand an effective voice is the terms upon which separation should be effected, what financial adjustments are to be made, how the various communities are going to be treated under the new constitution and various other questions of a like character.

Sir, the reason of my little incursion into the history of this question is this,—I want to put it very bluntly before the House,—that the fresh term which is now being sought to be imposed upon Burma is part of the whole game of forcing Burma to separate. I do not know why the Burmans should be told at this stage that they have to make an irrevocable choice. If after 50 years of connection with India it can lie in the mouth of Burmans to claim separation, why cannot Burma after 50 or 5 or 25 years of existence in the Federation, claim separation from the Federation? My point is that in asking the Burmans to make an irrevocable choice here and now they are being forced to decide in favour of separation and it is not a free choice which Burma has got before her. That is the whole point of the motion before the House.

Now, Sir, it is quite true that Burma cannot come into the Federation and get out of it as and when she likes. After all, there will be various other units in the Federation who will want to have a say in the matter, just as at the present moment there is the British Government, the Government and people of India and the Government and people of Burma. Therefore, Sir, my submission is that Burma cannot claim that she can enter and get out of the Federation at her sweet will. If, however, after a few years' experience, Burma can put up a case before the Federation for separation, and if she satisfies the other units of the Federation that she is prepared to shoulder all the responsibilities and agree to all the adjustments which are necessary before she is allowed to separate, if Burma can do all these things, then I cannot imagine the Federation holding out against such a claim. I would like to give this House the parallel of the Irish Free State. For centuries Ireland was a part of the Empire, and by mutual consent, not by revolution, though revolution may have led to it, but in the last stages by mutual agreement between the representatives of Great Britain and the representatives of the people of Ireland, the Irish Free State was created. Well, if the Irish Free State was able to establish its claim to a separate existence, why should it not be possible for . .

Mr. Arthur Moore (Bengal: European): It is within the Empire.

Mr. H. P. Mody: The Irish Free State is for all practical purposes a republic. I will not say that it is not technically a part of the British Empire, but it is practically independent; the very words "Irish Free State" proclaim it. Let not my friend Mr. Arthur Moore forget what the new President has told the world only a day ago as to the oath of allegiance and various other matters. I do not want to push the parallel further. I only say this, that if it is possible for Ireland to establish a case for separate existence, then I say it is equally possible for Burma at a later stage to establish a case for separate existence if she can satisfy the other units of the Federation that she is entitled to it and that she is prepared to shoulder her fair share of the burdens which the Federation has incurred on account of all units of the Federation. And just as by mutual consent on terms honourable alike to Great Britain and to the Irish Free State, a new State was created, so it may be at a distant date Burma may set up a claim, and by mutual consent get out of the Federation. I have no fear however that Burma will make that demand, because if India is to be a responsible equal member of the British Commonwealth, as she is bound to be, if not today, at least in the next few years, and if she attains to the full stature of her opportunities, it is possible that Burma may find that it is a far more honourable existence to be a unit of that Federation than to break away from that Federation and set up an independent Government. That, Sir, will assuredly happen, and, therefore, in order that the decision of this question may be arrived at in an unprejudiced and dispassionate atmosphere, I want that no conditions of any sort or kind should be imposed upon the Burmans which would drive them to give a decision which they otherwise would not. In other words, let Burma have a free choice, an absolutely unfettered choice in the matter; let not any threat be held out to her. If she wants to get out at any time, she can set up a claim to do so. Who is to say that she should not get out? What is the position of the British Government? When the Federation comes into existence, will it lie with the British Government to say "You can get out or you cannot get out"? It will be for the Federation to decide the issue, and therefore I refuse to recognise the locus standi of the British Government in the matter. Otherwise, it would mean that the British Government were going to decide the future of Burma for all time. That is not the correct position. The position of Burma will be decided by the Federation, and by Burma as a component part of that Federation. For all these reasons, I am strongly in favour of the motion which has been placed before the House by my Honourable friend Mr. Munshi. I only wish that the representative of Burma, Mr. U. Kyaw

Myint, will make it clear that Burma is not going to claim that she can get in and get out of the Federation as and when she likes, that she will be prepared to satisfy the future Federation, if at any time there is a compelling desire in Burma to separate, that there are valid grounds for separation, cultural or any other, and that the separation would be in the interests of both Burma and the Federation,—I want my friend to make that clear, so that there may be no misconception in the mind of any Honourable Member of this House, or the public at large, which, I think, awaits with anxiety the decision of this issue.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju (Ganjam cum Vizagapatam: Non-Muhammadian Rural): Sir, at the very outset I would like to ask whether Burma is going to be separated from India or whether it is going to be separated from England, because throughout the whole discussion this question of separation has been creeping upon us, and we who make the other half are not properly consulted in the matter. Sir, I come from Madras, and from there large sums of money have been invested in Burma, and many of our people have settled in Burma and thus made modern Burma and I consider that we should have a vital say in the matter of the separation of Burma. I do not for a moment like to say that we, who are wedded to the principle of self-determination, are not prepared to grant the same principle of self-determination to Burma. I am not going to say that. On the other hand, we wish Burma all joy in its desire to determine its future for itself. But, before it does, we should also like to know what are the feelings of those people in this country in the matter, whether they would be consulted and whether their interests would be properly safeguarded. These are things that we cannot possibly, even in our enthusiasm for Burma's future, ignore. Regarding Burma, I would like to say this, that, so far as Burma is concerned, she is culturally as well as racially different from us, and the union of Burma was forced upon us. We never wanted Burma to be mixed up with India. Against the united voice of the Indian National Congress and against the wishes of the people, the wars against Burma were undertaken, and Burma was forced to enter the Indian Empire. We never wanted her. Large sums of money have been spent on Burma, and that against our wishes. Still, in our desire for freedom we do not stand in the way of the wish of other people to secure their freedom. If we ask that some security or some guarantee should be given for the vast interests that we have in that country, however hard it may be that we should ask another people to pay the price of their slavery, we could not possibly consent that the material interests that we have there should not be taken into proper consideration and duly safeguarded. As regards the question of federation, at the time when Burma wanted separation, the cry of Burma for Burmans was a legitimate cry which not only was heard in Burma, but in other provinces of British India also. I know for a fact that the Andhras of our own parts wanted Andhra for Andhras, I know for a fact that Mysore wanted Mysore for Mysoreans. . . . (Mr. B. Das: "And Orissa for Oriyas.") . . . and Orissa for Oriyas, as my Honourable friend Mr. B. Das is always anxious about his province. (Mr. H. P. Mody: "Orissa for Mr. Das.") (Laughter.) Therefore, it is a very natural desire on the part of Burma to secure the promotion of their own individual expansion and progress, and we do not stand in the way of her unfettered growth. But, Sir, the question of federation came in a little later after the cry of Burma for Burmans. In considering the question of federation, we have to consider two things.

[Mr. B. Sitaramaraju.]

One is the question of the federation of British Indian provinces, and the other is the question of federation where not only British India is concerned but also the Indian States. If Burma desires that in the federation she should occupy the position of an Indian State vis-a-vis the federation, there is still room for her in that federation. There are certain common interests which would prudently show to Burma that it would be in her interests perhaps if she continued to be part of the federation. For instance, there is the question of common defence, common trade, and political co-operation which is needed before Burma can lead a successful and prosperous life. All these considerations must prudently dictate to Burma that it is in her own interests that she should be a part of British India, but whatever that be, our politicians and statesmen have already accorded to her that self-determination which they themselves want. As regards the Premier's statement, "once in a federation always in a federation", I would like to say this. Even in this question we have to take into consideration two aspects. One is the question of the geographical unity of India. So far as the geographical unity of India is concerned, I for one would think that there could be no choice for any province within that geographical unity of India to say that she could come in or go out of the federation as she liked, or else the federation would be unreal. But so far as other provinces, like Burma and the Islands, are concerned, they are not exactly within the geographical unit, but they form part of the Greater India if I may say so and I for one—it is my own personal opinion—see no reason, when they are asked to join, and if they do, why they should not have the same liberty of getting out of it if they want, provided by their separation they do not inconveniently handicap British India in the scheme of constitutional growth.

Sir Hari Singh Gour: I think, so far as we on this side of the House are concerned, we do not wish to place any consideration before our fellow Burmese subjects except one, and that is that if the Burmans wish to separate, they are free to do so; if they wish to remain joint, they are equally free to remain joint,—that we on this side are not prepared to set any fetters upon their discretion, and that I submit is all that is exercising the minds of our friends from across the seas. In this connection, Honourable Members will observe that the Round Table Conference is, at the present moment, thinking of several federating units including the Indian Princes, the Indian States. When the deliberations of the Round Table Conference contemplated the union of British India with the Indian States, did anybody make any condition with the Indian States that, "If you wish to come into the federation, you will never be free to get out of it"? If that condition was not made with the Indian States which are at the present moment not a part of British India, I wish to ask why this condition should be taken as superimposed in the case of Burma, which is already an Indian province, and has been so since 1886. That I think makes us suspect that the condition is made so as to produce a mentality in the minds of the Burmans of now or never. That I submit is not one of the conditions which is laid down as a condition precedent to any principle of federation in the known federated constitutions of the world. It is like telling a fair lady from Burma, "I am prepared to unite with you, but there shall be no divorce, under any condition, under any circumstances". That I submit is a condition which I think no fair minded man or woman can accept. (Laughter.) I therefore submit that when we discuss this question of federation, let us not obscure the issue by referring to any vested interests either of India or of other communities in that country. I know my friend Mr. Tait's views. He says that he as a representative of the Europeans in Burma has no sides, but nevertheless as a friendly adviser along with the other European merchants in Rangoon and elsewhere, and looking at the question from a purely non-commercial and detached point of view, he and they would counsel their Burmese friends to go in plump for separation now. That is their disinterested advice, but I am quite sure that my Burmese friends would not walk into the European parlour because they know with what object that invitation is made.

Mr. John Tait: On a point of explanation, Sir, may I interject? It has just occurred to me that the Honourable Member who of course has had personal experience of the position in Burma, made a remark in a debate in this House on this question of separation. He said this:

"It must be said to the credit of the British merchants in Rangoon that they were not asking for separation because it would serve the interests of the British mercantile community."

These are the Honourable gentleman's words.

Sir Hari Singh Gour: Well, Sir, I have still to learn that that is a personal explanation. What I am now trying to impress upon the House and upon our Burmese fellow subjects as the considered opinion of the elected Members of this House is that we on this side of the House are not in favour of fettering your free judgment. If you wish to separate, you are welcome to do so, but if you wish to remain joint you are equally welcome. You are already joint with us, and when your judgment is being influenced by vested interests and interested parties that there is a cultural and racial disaffinity between yourself and the people of India, they overlook the grand fact that Burma has been a sister province of India and considered as a religious and cultural part of India long before the birth of the British dominion in the East, and whatever may be the difference visible and apparent between the Burmese and the Indians, there is, at any rate, that innate affinity between the two races which time cannot destroy and which time will strengthen. Indians feel that the Burmese should get a fair deal and their judgment no more than the judgment of the other Indian States which have been invited to join the Indian federation should not be in any way fettered by the condition being placed—that if you come in now you will never be able to get out. Sir, it has never been said by those who have laid down this condition that if you wish to get out, you get out, and if you wish to come in you will be equally welcome to come in, subject to the same conditions regarding mutual adjustments. The fact that the condition is one-sided makes me somewhat suspicious of that condition. The Prime Minister's statement is a perfectly plain and straightforward statement. He said no more than what is the fundamental principle of all federated constitutions, namely, that the federating units cannot by their own will decide that they will get out of the federating union. Such a union is a contract and it holds good till the two contracting parties choose to dissolve it. That being the case, we need not go beyond what is the accepted canon of constitutional law, and I do not think my Burmese friends need have the least apprehension that if they are once tethered to the central pole of India, their escape to a free and independent life will hereafter be impossible. Sir, the very fact that India is to have a federal constitution, the very fact that the federal constitution means and implies that the Federal Assembly will be the spokesman and voice of the federating union, that alone should be a sufficient guarantee to all who join the federating union that the question of their remaining joint and remaining separate will be a matter of a family conclave in which all the federating units will have a potential voice. It is not a matter which can be decided by a unilateral action. That being the position, I do not think anybody is justified in laying any emphasis upon the condition upon which jointness will be accepted or separation granted. I therefore think that Mr. Munshi has done a public service to the land of his adoption in coming before this House to ask us as to what we think on this momentous question which is exercising Burma, and which naturally is dividing Burma into two sharply antagonistic camps. I am glad that we have Maung Kyaw Myint amongst us. He is the spokesman of a large section of Burmese opinion. His voice would be the voice of one who speaks from inner knowledge of his people, and who will express what is the underlying spirit which works the people of Burma in this connection. We should be all very glad indeed to hear him, and whatever he may say, let him, at any rate, carry with him this assurance from the elected Members of this House, that so far as we are concerned, our good wishes follow him to his home and to his fellow countrymen, and if they decide to remain with us, we and they will shoulder the joint responsibility of whatever constitution may be given to them and us.

Sir Abdur Rahim (Calcutta and Suburbs: Muhammadan Urban): Mr. President, on this side of the House there is no disagreement on the question that has been raised by my Honourable friend Mr. Munshi. On a previous occasion when the question of separation of Burma was debated here, we made our position perfectly clear—that we are willing to afford to Burma the opportunity of making a free choice, that is to remain connected with India or to separate from us if that serves her interest best. We have not changed our position in that respect, but the position that has now arisen as stated by the Mover of this motion, is that a sort of clog is sought to be put on the choice of Burma which has been asked to decide whether she will separate from India now or remain with India for ever. It seems to be a rather curious condition to lay down that if Burma chooses to remain in the Federation, she must remain in that Federation for ever, even if her interests or the interests of the rest of the federated units may at a future date require separation. That is a matter for the future. No one, not even the Prime Minister of England can say what are the circumstances which are likely to arise in the future with reference to the needs of India or Burma, and I do not see why he should have gone out of his way to lay down a condition like that, if that be the real meaning of what he said. I really doubt whether a statesman of his position and world-wide fame would think of laying down a hard and fast condition as to what should be done, not at present but with reference to what may or may not happen in the future. Sir, the position has been very clearly put by my friend, Mr. Mody. We say that if Burma chooses to remain with us as part of a Federation, then in that case she is welcome to do so; and if at any future date the condition of things changes and Burma desires that she should separate, that it is in her interest to separate from the rest of the federated units, then in that case undoubtedly she will consult the other federal units and the other federal units will also have a say in the matter. Questions of adjustments and various other questions of that kind will arise, and undoubtedly both the parties will have to sit down and decide under what circumstances and on what conditions there should be a readjustment of the federal units. That is a perfectly fair proposition and I am sure my Honourable friend, Mr. Kyaw Myint, who is here representing a very large party in his own province of Burma, will agree that that is a position which is perfectly fair to both sides, and if he accepts that position, there can be no difficulty in the matter at all. We wish to assure him that so far as we are concerned, we do not like to put down any condition which will in any way interfere with the free exercise of the option that has been given to Burma.

Mr. Arthur Moore: Sir, it seems to me that Mr. Munshi, in his endeavour to correct a mistake which he believes to have been made by the Governor of Burma, is in danger of leading the House to commit the opposite mistake, and I was very much reassured to hear the speeches of the Leader of the Nationalist Party and my friend, Sir Abdur Rahim, the Leader of the Independent Party, on the point, because I think they have both put the case in the correct perspective. I agree with Sir Abdur Rahim that it is not likely that Sir Charles Innes can be interpreted as having laid down a condition for Burma that if she comes in, she is always in. I have read the speech, and it seemed to me that what he was doing was to put in other words what the Prime Minister had said and what Sir Hari Singh Gour has told us is the fact. Now surely if you are federating, it is right to come into the Federation in a serious spirit. There are obvious arguments in favour of Burma coming into the Federation. She has a real choice to make. There are arguments on both sides. If she elects to come into the Federation, surely it ought to be, because she is convinced by the arguments in favour of doing so, and she should come in whole-heartedly, with every intention of profiting by that Federation and of being a loyal member of it. She should not come in light-heartedly with the idea of having a look at it before she goes out. Surely, when you are drawing up a federal constitution, you are much more interested in notices marked "Way in" than in notices marked "Way out", and I think it would be a very great mistake if by any division today we were to undo the useful warning which has properly been issued, and we were to create the wrong impression that Burma can actually go out when she likes. I do not for a moment suggest that Burma could never go out. I think the position has been correctly stated, and I am quite sure the Members for Burma can feel that we are all entirely agreed that if Burma chooses to stay out, then, as every speaker has said, we wish her well, and if Burma comes in, we shall be glad to have her. (Applause.) But I think it would be very unfortunate if we were to set out to try and dangle baits in front of the different members of a possible Federation, and to advertise that the principal bait is that they can get out. I quite agree with my Honourable friend that there ought to be no distinction in this matter between Burma and the Princes. I would go further and say there ought to be no distinction between Burma and our present provinces, which we expect to become constituent states, in the Federation. All units in the Federation come in on the same terms, and we hope that they will all come in with the intention of remaining in. If at any future date any member of the Federation desires to go out, obviously that is a matter which has got to be adjusted between all the members of the Federation. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. B. Das: Sir, I am sorry I have to strike a different note to what some of the observers have said a few minutes ago. Sir, I stand by the Congress Resolution that was passed at Karachi. I also stand by the Resolution which the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry passed last year at Delhi and to which I was a party. I can assure my Burman friends, Sir, here and also outside that they are at liberty to separate when they like: and if they are ill-advised by the Premier or by anybody under the threat of a loaded pistol that if they are not separated now, they cannot secede from India afterwards, they must know it that the unanimous voice of India, the voice of the Indian National Congress and the voice of the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry is that they can remain with us to raise us all up to the status of a Dominion. Thereafter, as a special case, India will not stand in her way, however, if she wishes to separate and secede from India afterwards.

I would just read two lines of the Resolution of the Indian National Congress held at Karachi:

“This Congress recognises the rights of the people of Burma to claim separation from India to establish an independent Burman State or to remain an autonomous partner in a free India with the right of separation at any time they may desire to exercise it.”

I would also quote from the Resolution of the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry that was passed in Delhi last year:

“The Federation is of opinion that the question of the constitutional evolution of Burma should be left to the decision of the people of Burma.”

Later on it says:

“The Federation therefore urges that full and proper facilities should be provided for the people of Burma to express their free and clear opinion on this matter otherwise they will render it more difficult owing to repressive laws now in force.”

Sir, it is said by some interested parties—I do not know whether it is the Government of Burma or the European interests in Burma,—that once the Burmese people come into the Indian Federation, they will never be allowed to separate from us. The same expression of view was expressed by my Honourable friend Mr. Arthur Moore just now when he said that once Burma comes into the Federation there is no going back. I however entirely agree with the views and the speeches that were delivered at the Karachi Congress that we have no desire to keep down Burma. We want self-determination for ourselves and we want the same self-determination for Burma. Yet we do not want them to be deprived of their existence and not to attain the full stature of Dominion status by being separated now. I will just read a few lines from my own speech which I delivered at the Federation of the Indian Chambers of Commerce which sums up my view on the subject:

“However, on behalf of the Federation, I want to make this assurance to the public of Burma that Indians will not stand against the Burmese desire for separation. But the Indians would not like that Burma should be separated and turned into a Crown Colony of England, but that Burma should attain the same Dominion Status and, above all, we all Asiatics want eventually an Asiatic Federation of all Asiatic nations. We would like that Burma should remain alongside with India as our equal partner and work up to that high ideal of Asiatic nations and if the Burmese people, in time, decide to secede, as I learn they want the right of secession from India after the attainment of Dominion Status, it is their lookout and not ours.”

I still hold that view.

U Kyaw Myint (Burma: Non-European): Sir, a year ago in this House I moved successfully a motion which resulted ultimately, I flatter myself, in at least one portion of the Premier's statement. This time last year the question of separation was regarded practically as a closed question. We have now, thanks to the sympathy that was received in this House and to the sympathy of the Indian Government, achieved something tangible. We have been given a chance—Burma as a country and as a nation has been given a chance of deciding her own future. But my Honourable friend Mr. Munshi shares with me the fear that this threat that, if you enter the Federation, you are doomed for ever, and the spirit in which this threat is being uttered, are exercising to a great degree the minds of my people. I am particularly obliged for the speeches of various leaders of the Nationalist and the Independent Parties and I am really grateful for the speech delivered by my Honourable friend Mr. Arthur Moore. Sir, we have come to the parting of the ways. I feel, as also Mr. Munshi apparently feels, that, on the one hand, no bait should be dangled in front of us, but, on the other hand, no threats should be uttered. Leave us to choose for ourselves. That is all we ask for. The idea that, if you enter the Federation you cannot leave it any time cannot appeal to educated persons; but it is an idea that frightens, at any rate for the time being, uneducated persons who will have a large share in the actual election. I am glad that this debate has given various leaders in this House an opportunity of defining the attitude of this House and also augmenting the attitude that the Congress has set out in the Resolution passed at Karachi last year. I am grateful to my Honourable friend Mr. Das for reminding the House of two Resolutions, one passed by the Karachi Congress and the other passed by the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce.

My Honourable friend Mr. Tait was pleased to say that this was the first occasion on which this particular point has been raised in public. I am sorry to have to correct him. I was myself responsible for many statements in public in Burma. They were made before Burmese audiences and also in the Burmese Press. I repeat, I was myself responsible for many statements on this momentous subject. As soon as the Prime Minister's statement was published, we took grave objection to the sentence that has been read out by Mr. Munshi. Here, unwittingly probably, was a threat, but we were prepared to take it. After all, it was a statement of a general character without any particular reference to Burma. The sentence speaks for itself. But this was followed within a few weeks by a statement included in the speech of His Excellency Sir Charles Innes, the Governor of Burma. There we certainly drew the line. Whereas the Prime Minister's version was a statement of a general nature, in the speech of Sir Charles Innes we certainly thought that he was misinterpreting the Premier's statement. That is why I am particularly grateful to my Honourable friend Mr. Arthur Moore for his contribution to today's debate.

I would assure my Honourable friend Mr. Tait and this House that this is not the first occasion that this point has been raised in public, although naturally it is the first time that it has been raised in this House. The Prime Minister's statement is only a few weeks old. Naturally also, this point was not raised at the Burma Round Table Conference because nothing could follow the Prime Minister's statement which was indeed the end of the Conference. Equally naturally—and there I must disagree with my Honourable friend Mr. Tait—it was not raised in the Burma Legislative Council. That is a separationist body—witness the various

[U Kyaw Myint.]

Resolutions it has passed in favour of separation. We had a gentleman in the Burma Legislative Council who was an ardent anti-separationist until very recently. Sir, you may perhaps remember, and I think at least a portion of this House will remember, that I pointed out in my speech last year that the Burma Legislative Council was boycotted by the General Councils of Burmese Associations which undoubtedly represent the vast majority of the Burmese people. They will of course have to lift the boycott on the separation issue. So, naturally, the Burma Legislative Council, as at present constituted, does not bother itself about anything except the ready acceptance of separation on the basis of the Prime Minister's statement.

Sir, I want this House to be clear, and I will endeavour my best to make it clear, that the issue now before Burma is not separation or federation. That was the issue last year, but not this year. The present issue for the decision of the Burmese people is separation on the basis of the statement of the Prime Minister, and that, I do say on the floor of this House, has been strongly and persistently opposed by the majority of the Burmese people. (An Honourable Member: "Have a Burmese Congress.") We have not yet formed a Burmese Congress, but the time will come when we shall have to form one. We have already had Ordinances and repressive measures which generally pave the way to some kind of solution of a nation's problems.

My Honourable friend Mr. Tait was pleased to refer to what he termed a definite anti-Indian feeling and he also referred to the riots of May 1930. But I will ask the House not only to inquire, but also to consider, what was the origin of those riots. The Indian labourers went on strike and a European stevedoring firm tried to break the strike by using, as its instruments, the Burmese labourers. That was the cause of the riots. That definite anti-Indian feeling, which was certainly definite during the riots in Rangoon, did last for two days, but it no longer exists.

Our position in Burma—by our position I mean the position of those who have been persistently opposing separation—is stronger today, vastly stronger today than it was last year. Last year all that we could say was on surmise—that, if we separated, these things might happen, and if we did not separate, other things might happen. But now we have tangible evidence—Exhibit A, if you will pardon legal phraseology, for the prosecution—if we separate, we are to get a constitution within the four corners of the Premier's statement; and that is certainly a thing which even the people who were clamouring for separation do not like. The constitution that is now being offered is a travesty of a constitution and is entirely unacceptable.

An Honourable Member: What about the Indian constitution?

U Kyaw Myint: That is the concern of the Indians. We are worried about Burma at the present moment. Everybody in Burma is agreed that the constitution offered in conjunction with separation is unacceptable, but the people who are willing to accept separation think that this constitution might lead to something better. We, that is, we who oppose separation, do not think in the same manner. That is the difference. But I must remind the House that the issue now before the Burmese people is this: we are called upon to separate from India on the basis of the constitution offered in the Premier's statement, and we do not want to accept that constitution. The cause of the fears of my Honourable friend Mr. Munshi is that we do not want our judgment to be clogged, and we do not want to be coerced by any threat. By threat I mean the one that Sir Charles Innes uttered in the course of his speech in the Burma Legislative Council, the threat that, if we are to enter the Federation, we shall have to remain there for ever.

An Honourable Member: Disregard the threat.

U Kyaw Myint: Yes, I think that advice is very sound advice, which will be adopted in due course. One other threat, which is a favourite threat, is that of racial extermination. But we have learnt to disregard that threat, because racial purity, if we may accept the statements of scientists, is a myth.

The statement of my Honourable friend Mr. Tait that Europeans have never taken sides has been met by other Honourable Members. Mr. Tait fears that if Burma now enters the Federation and goes out later on, she might upset all the arrangements. But my Honourable friend, the Leader of the Nationalist Party, has pointed out that this proposed Indian Federation is a Federation that is unique in the world's history. The Federation, as my Honourable friend Sir Hari Singh Gour pointed out, consists of several kinds of units. All that Burma asks for is freedom of choice without any threats being uttered at this stage. She asks that she may be treated as a peculiar kind of unit, if such terms can be meted out to her. The Indian National Congress has given Burma the right to secede from the Federation without disclosing any reason. Even if such a concession should be granted to Burma by the Indian Federation, I can assure my Honourable friends that we shall not exercise the right to secede without pondering over the consequences, and in our deliberations we shall have the assistance of our Indian brethren. No unit can afford to leave any kind of Federation without assigning any reason. That, Sir, is the Burmese attitude. Burma wants to be bound to the other units of the Indian Federation by a silken cord and not by heavy chains. (Applause.)

An Honourable Member: I move that the question be now put.

Mr. President: The question is that the question be now put.

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Sir, the speech to which I listened with the greatest interest today was the speech of the Leader of the Nationalist Party, and for this reason, that it became evident early in his speech that his zeal for social reform carried him so far that even to contemplate a political alliance without the possibility of a divorce was almost more than he could bear. I had hoped that perhaps he would have developed that aspect of the subject, but he passed from it very early and I was a little disappointed. Now, Sir, my Honourable friend Mr. Munshi in his opening speech put his case somewhat ingenuously. He read to us the statement of the Prime Minister—"In this connection it should be remembered that if an Indian Federation is established, it cannot be on the basis that Members can leave it as and when they choose". Then, he went on to say that the interpretation he would ask the House to place on those words was that Burma was to be free to leave the Federation if and when she wished to do so. I think that is an ingenuous way of putting it, for it is very difficult to put that construction upon the words, and I do not think any subsequent speaker has supported that particular line of argument. My Honourable friend Mr. Mody, for example, made it quite plain as soon he rose, that he, at any rate, realised that when a Federation was once formed, it could not be broken up without some kind of mutual consent of the component parts. The last speaker, also, made a quite clear that he too fully appreciated that point. But what I think the Honourable the Mover, Mr. Munshi, laid most stress on was this, that he saw some difference or distinction between what was said by the Prime Minister and what was said by His Excellency Sir Charles Innes, and he advanced the view that a strained interpretation had been put upon the Prime Minister's words by the latter, and that something like a threat was being held over the heads of the people of Burma. On that point, I cannot for one moment agree. I have read with the utmost care every word of the speeches of His Excellency Sir Charles Innes delivered on these subjects and I can find nothing in them that departs from what clearly and obviously underlay the words of the Prime Minister. The speeches are not the speeches of an advocate; they are the speeches of a judge summing up a case for the jury, and putting before them to the best of his ability all relevant considerations.

[Sir George Rainy.]

Now, Sir, a great deal has been said on the question, whether it is fair to impose upon any country a condition that once she enters a union or federation it must be for all eternity, with no possibility of withdrawal. I am not aware that anybody has said that yet and therefore it is a somewhat hypothetical question. But at least this much may be said that when federations are formed, the teaching of history shows that either they tend very rapidly to break up or that if they once consolidate, the business of secession or separation is a very formidable one indeed. I do not think the example chosen by my Honourable friend Mr. Mody was an altogether happy one if we remember the years of misery and horror that preceded the separation by mutual consent between the Free State of Ireland and the United Kingdom. And when I recall the fact that a number of the States who were original members of the American Union believed that the right of secession was guaranteed to them under the constitution, and when I recall the civil war to which that belief led, it is obvious that there are very serious considerations to be taken into account. And I was a little surprised when I detected, as I thought I did, in some of the speeches on the other side a tendency to speak somewhat light-heartedly on the question of what secession from a federation might mean. It is not a thing to be lightly undertaken and I should look forward with the very gravest apprehension to the future of any Indian Federation, if it appeared that the members were joining under any impression that a decision once taken could be recalled except for overwhelmingly strong reasons, or that it would be possible to arrange for a separation except after very full discussion in which every member of the Federation would be interested. Now, Sir, the way I should be inclined to put it is this: it is one thing to go into a federation on the basis that, if after a full trial the conditions are found to be absolutely intolerable then perhaps by mutual consent separation may be possible. That is one thing; and it is quite a different thing to enter the federation with the underlying thought that after all it will be quite easy to leave it as soon as it suits us. I think any sort of action of that kind—entrance into the Federation with the feeling that it does not mean very much, and that it will be possible to get away without much difficulty, would be very dangerous to the future of the Federation itself and would be quite unworthy of any self-respecting country. I do not believe that the electors of Burma will proceed on that basis. As I have already said, I can find nothing in the speeches of His Excellency Sir Charles Innes which departs from what was said by the Prime Minister or puts anything but a fair interpretation on his words. Nor can I find in the speeches any semblance of a threat or anything more than a definite desire to state clearly for the guidance of the electors before they came to a decision what the issues were and how serious they were.

Sir Abdur Rahim: Sir, may I ask a question? Is what the Prime Minister has said to be interpreted as a condition as regards the choice that is given to the electors of Burma?

Sir Hari Singh Gour: The question I should like to ask is this. Is that condition general to all federating units or special to Burma?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: It is not for me to give an authoritative interpretation of the Prime Minister's words, but to speak of laying down conditions, does not seem to me the natural language to use about this point.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: Sir, before I proceed to reply, may I have one inquiry answered more definitely by the Honourable the Leader of the House? Are the Government of India anxious that Burma should have a free choice and unfettered election over this issue or not?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: His Majesty's Government have made their desire perfectly plain, and what I have said in reply to the Honourable the Mover is that I can find nothing in His Excellency Sir Charles Innes' speeches which would interfere with a free choice.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: I am obliged to the Honourable the Leader of the House for making the position of the Government of India clear. I hope now Burma will take it clearly from the Government of India, that so far as the Government of India are concerned, they are most anxious that Burma should have a free and unfettered choice at the ensuing election in October or November. We have this further message which the Leader of the House now gives to Burma on behalf of the Government of India, that the Government of India will not be a party to any action anywhere in Burma which would in any way unfairly or improperly fetter that free choice.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Why does the Honourable Member assume that there is any authority in Burma that is going to take unfair action?

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: I did not use the word "authority". All that I said was that we felt justified in giving a message to the people of Burma from the Government of India that so far as they are concerned they will see that nothing will be done in Burma

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Sir, I must object to the Honourable Member putting words in the mouth of the Government of India. We are ready to be judged by what is said from these Benches but not by what the Honourable Member chooses to say from his Bench.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: Sir, I am puzzled by this last utterance of the Leader of the House. Is it the position of the Government of India that they would approve of Burma's choice being fettered in any way?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I have nothing to add to what I have already said.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: In view of the fact that no answer is forthcoming to this question, my interpretation is the correct one, that the Government of India are a fair-minded Government and that they will not be a party to any improper fettering of Burma's free choice.

As regards the interpretation placed by my Honourable friend, Sir George Rainy, on the passage appearing in His Excellency Sir Charles Innes' address, if that is the correct interpretation, then Burma should have no grievance, and I for one would like very much to accept that interpretation. But whether Sir George Rainy's interpretation is the correct one or the interpretation of myself and my Honourable friend, U Kyaw Myint, is the correct one, Burma has now got this much to congratulate herself upon, that the Government of India have so far seen nothing either in the Prime Minister's announcement or in the Governor of Burma's address to the Council to justify Burma in thinking that any restriction is imposed on her or that her choice is fettered in any way. So to that extent my object is served.

Now, Sir, I have tried to make it clear,—I am sorry I have not succeeded so far as my Honourable friend Sir George Rainy is concerned—that my object is not to censure the Government of India. My only object is to have it made clear that Burma should have a free and unfettered choice at the election. On this point the Government of India are in complete agreement with me; on this point every section of the House and every speaker, except my Honourable friend, Mr. Tait, has been in agreement with me. So all that remains for me to do—it is getting very late—is to deal briefly with my Honourable friend, Mr. Tait.

I think it was most unfortunate that Mr. Tait should have advanced as an argument against my motion the fact that there was a riot in Rangoon about two years ago, and that in the course of the riot, which lasted for two or three days, anti-Indian feeling was displayed. My friend, U Kyaw Myint, has dealt with it. Nobody can deny that there was anti-Indian feeling in Rangoon during those two or three days. But what object has Mr. Tait served by raking up this unpleasant incident? Is Mr. Tait trying to suggest that the feeling of Burmans is only anti-Indian and not anti-British? I would rather not have referred to this at all, but Mr. Tait has forced my hand. Mr. Tait is shaking his head as a protest against my remark. I wonder if my Honourable friend Mr. Tait believes that the rebellion which lasted in Burma for more than eight months, a rebellion directed to overthrow the British Government, was a game—a little harmless game played between Burmans and their brother Britons. (Laughter and Cheers.) Since we have been referred to anti-Indian feeling, I hope Mr. Tait will remember that the volume of feeling in Burma against the British element is more intense than the feeling against Indians now or at any time before; and in proof of that I am not merely pointing to a riot which started between two sets of labourers and continued for two or three days, but to a rebellion which lasted for about a year and cost the Government of India 27 lakhs of rupees—a rebellion directed against the British Crown and against the British race. I would not have brought this in, but my Honourable friend Mr. Tait has forced me to do so.

With regard to Mr. Tait's claim that the European community in Burma has not taken any side or any part in the separation controversy, I have been amazed at this claim. There are two British owned and British edited journals in Burma, which in season and out of season for the past three years have been attacking the Government of India, not because they want to attack the Government of India as such, but because they want to show to the people of Burma that unless they remove themselves from the control and domination of the Government of India, they can expect no justice or fair treatment from the Government of India

Mr. John Tait: May I remind the Honourable gentleman that what I said referred, as I specifically said, to the British mercantile community of Burma, not to the Press?

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: May I inquire if the proprietors of the Rangoon Times and the Rangoon Gazette are not members of the Burma Chamber of Commerce?

Mr. John Tait: I submit that that has nothing to do with the question.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: Is it denied that they belong to the European mercantile community? The European mercantile community in Burma consists mainly of the Burma Chamber of Commerce, of which, so far as I am aware, the proprietors of these two papers are either members or eligible to be members; and Mr. Tait has not contradicted that. And is there a further implication underlying Mr. Tait's remark that the European community in Burma has not taken part in this controversy, an implication that the Indian community has? Is that Mr. Tait's implication?

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): Please go on with your observations.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: Very well, Sir. So far as my object is concerned, it has been served by every section of the House endorsing the view that no threat should be held out to Burma, and that Burma should have an unfettered choice; and in particular I wish to express my keen appreciation of the attitude taken up by my Honourable friend, Mr. Arthur Moore; I have no hesitation in assuring my Honourable friend Mr. Arthur Moore that the attitude which he has taken up to-day on behalf of the European Group in this House will go a long way to assuage public feeling in Burma which cannot possibly be pleased with the attitude taken up by Mr. Tait. Under the circumstances, my object having been served, I do not wish to pursue the matter further, more particularly so as I have not the slightest desire to censure the Government of India. I therefore ask for leave to withdraw the motion. (Applause.)

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Improper Interference by the Secretary of State in the Financial Affairs of India.

Mr. N. N. Anklesaria (Bombay Northern Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Demand under the head 'Executive Council' be reduced by Rs. 100".

The other day, my friend Mr. Munshi gave us a tall story about two ping pong balls to be given to the Bengal detenus. I think if my Honourable friend had drawn a little further on his imagination he would have been able to tell us something about the battle royal which was waged between the Finance Member of the Government of India and the Finance Minister of the Government of Bengal and the Finance Minister of the Government of Burma, and the final decision on that contest of the Secretary of State for India. He would have told us that after my friend Mr. Arthur Moore had decided as to what exactly was the price of the two ping pong balls the question as required by the orders and instructions of the Secretary of State, arose as to who should pay the price of those balls: the Government of India or the Government of Bengal or the Government of Burma; and the whole question as required by the orders and instructions of the Secretary of State was referred to the Secretary of State for India and he said, "Well, the Finance Member of the Government of India has been treating me with little courtesy, and this time I shall decide against him and it is the central Government who are to pay the price of the ping pong balls". It is possible that I have rather overdrawn the picture of the absurd meticulousness with which the Secretary of State interferes in matters purely Indian. But that he does so will be readily apparent if I refer you to the report of the Acworth Committee and read to you a few instances of the absurdly meticulous interference of the Secretary of State for India in matters purely Indian. On page 43 of the report in paragraph 126, the Acworth Committee say as follows:

"We have had an opportunity of perusing the despatches and the cable messages on railway subjects exchanged between the India Office and the Government of India in January 1920. They are numerous. They are voluminous and not a few of them are concerned with quite petty details. We have found for instance despatches addressed by the Secretary of State to the Viceroy in full official form dealing with matters such as the following:

'Despatch No. 7 of 1920, sanctioning gratuity to a travelling inspector of accounts for an amount proposed in the Government of India, Finance Department Despatch No. 44 of 6th November 1919.

Despatch No. 11 of 1920: reporting re-engagement of an engine driver as result of correspondence ending with a cablegram from the Government of India.

Despatch No. 2 of 1921: Sanctioning payment of a pension of Rs. 100 per month (say 80£ per annum) to the widow of an engine driver killed in an accident'."

These are some of the instances of the absurd meticulousness of the interference of the Secretary of State for India in petty matters. Last session we found to our very painful surprise the interference of the Secretary of State in matters purely Indian, of supreme importance to the interests of India. I refer, Sir, to the interference of the Secretary of State for India in regard to the financial and currency position of India when England went off the gold standard. Sir, the pronouncement of Mr. Montagu and the other British politicians with regard to the constitutional future of India were no doubt very large and very liberal, but what does the Government of India Act disclose? If you refer to that Act, you find that section 124 of that Act gives a despotic power to the Secretary of State for India, in fact it provides that anybody no matter who he is, whether he be the Governor General or any other person holding office under the Crown in India who does not carry out the instructions of the Secretary of State for India commits a misdemeanour punishable with fine, the amount of which is left indefinite and punishable by a term of imprisonment which may extend from 10 months to 10 years or to an indefinite period. That is the position of the Government of India vis-à-vis the Secretary of State for India. The object of my motion is, therefore, to bring this peculiar position of our Government to the notice of the British Cabinet so that the recommendation made by the Joint Select Committee may be given effect to in time. Sir, I do not propose to enter at any great length into the constitutional questions, because the time at my disposal is very limited. However, I would just like to read the statement of India's case as regards the relations of India vis-à-vis the Secretary of State for India at page 11 of the Joint Select Committee's Report. I read those remarks, because I have come to feel that those remarks have been greatly misunderstood till now. This is what is stated there :

"The Committee have given their most careful consideration to the relations of the Secretary of State with the Government of India, and through it with the provincial governments. In the relations of the Secretary of State with the Governor General in Council the Committee are not of opinion that any statutory change can be made so long as the Governor General remains responsible to Parliament, but in practice the conventions which now govern the relations may wisely be modified to meet fresh circumstances caused by the creation of a Legislative Assembly with an elected majority".

I pause here to point out that the conventions here recommended are not confined to mere fiscal conventions. They embrace all relations of the Secretary of State with the Government of India, and the generality and the extent of this recommendation is emphasised by the Select Committee by mentioning the special case of what is now known as the fiscal autonomy convention. They say :

"This examination of the general proposition"—mark the word "general"—"leads inevitably to the consideration of one special case of non-intervention. Nothing is more likely to endanger the good relations between India and Great Britain than a belief that India's fiscal policy is dictated from Whitehall in the interests of the trade of Great Britain. That such a belief exists at the present moment there can be no doubt. There ought to be no room for it in the future is equally clear".

By these words the Joint Select Committee emphasised the generality of their recommendation as regards the creation of conventions in all relations between the Secretary of State and the Government of India, and I say the attempt to restrict these words to the creation of one solitary convention about the fiscal autonomy of India, I think, is not supported by these words in the Select Committee's Report. Sir, the existence of far-reaching control of the Secretary of State for India on the finances of India is a defect which very much detracts from the value of the reforms granted by the Act of 1919, because it is well known that a national Government which has no control over the national purse will be a national Government in name only. Now, what then is the remedy, it may be asked? How can you remove that defect from the financial system of India? The answer has been given by the Select Committee themselves and also by your illustrious predecessor the Honourable Mr. Vithalbai Patel. The remarks are reproduced in this book, "Decisions from the Chair". At page 310, long extracts are given of the debate which took place in connection with the fiscal autonomy convention, and towards the end Mr. Patel says:

"I agree that real fiscal autonomy is possible even under the existing constitution" that is at page 318:

"If the decision on fiscal measures is left to the vote of the non-official Members and such decision is regarded as binding on the Executive: but this can be done by a convention and not by a ruling of the Chair."

I trust, Sir, that if the present motion evokes any sympathetic response from the Government of India, we may all see our way to help in establishing such a convention as mentioned by Mr. Patel. But the matter does not and cannot lie with the Government of India alone, by themselves they can do nothing. It is the Secretary of State whose help is primarily required in establishing the conventions.

Sir, it may be said that the Round Table Conference is sitting and that they would be able to settle this question once for all. In spite of the certificate which my Honourable friend Sir Henry Gidney gave to the delegates of the Round Table Conference, I do with great respect to my friends here venture to say that, so far as the Indian delegates are concerned, they have been bungling the affairs of India all through in the Conference. My Honourable friend Dr. DeSouza talked of two monsters—the Minorities Pact and the Federation idea. I think my Honourable friend was a bit unjust to the Round Table wallahs with regard to the first monster. Sir Henry Gidney has authorised me to tell this House that he is the real father of that monstrosity and not the other delegates of the Round Table Conference. (Laughter.)

Mr. H. P. Mody: What can you expect from such a parentage?

Mr. N. N. Anklesaria: My Honourable friend Dr. DeSouza forgot to mention the very long list of monstrosities which are called "safeguards" in the proposals of the Round Table Conference. Sir, if time permitted, I would have dilated on that topic, but it is enough for me to say that the bantering tone assumed by my Honourable friend, Sir Cowasji Jehangir, while criticising my esteemed friend Sir Hari Singh Gour's arguments, was absolutely misplaced as he would find if he would only read the debates of the Round Table Conference with impartiality and judgment.

I shall conclude my remarks with recounting to the House what was said during the French revolutionary period by a leader of the popular representatives in the National Assembly of France. In 1788 the rights and privileges of the popular representatives in the National Assembly having been invaded and trampled upon by the Nobility, one of the leaders of the popular representatives wrote a pamphlet in which he proposed three questions and answered them himself. He asked, "What is the third estate, composed of the popular representatives?" (corresponding to this Honourable House). The answer was, "The third estate is everything". The second question he asked was, "How has the third estate been treated up till now?" The answer was, "As nothing". The third question was, "What does the third estate ask for?" The answer was, "To be something". I would ask the Government of India and the Secretary of State these questions as regards this House. I ask, what is this Assembly?

This Assembly is everything. This Assembly is the parliament of India. (Ironical laughter from the Opposition Benches.) How has this Assembly been treated up till now? As absolutely nothing. How does it want now to be treated? As something. If these remarks have any effect on the Secretary of State and if he condescends to help in the establishment of the conventions recommended by the Joint Select Committee, I think my words in the present debate will not have been wasted.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: I rise to support the motion moved by my Honourable friend Mr. Anklesaria. In doing so, I do not propose to say more than a few words at this late hour. The Secretary of State is the great Moghul at Whitehall. He has in the Government of India here his imperial harem. What passes behind the purdah we do not know, but all that we do know is this, that the Secretary of State is an autocrat of autocrats, and the begums here have not got any more control than any begum ever had in an imperial harem. As an instance in point, we had here a few months ago the linking of the rupee with sterling. Honourable Members are fully aware that the first impulse of the Honourable the Finance Member on that occasion was to stand by the best interests of this country and do what was right for the occasion. But soon came the imperial firman which set at nought the action of the Finance Member and we were asked to take a different course altogether. On that occasion the House by a large majority passed a Resolution condemning that action of the Secretary of State. Notwithstanding the unanimous voice of the elected representatives of the people in this House, notwithstanding the experience of the Finance Member, the great Moghul issued his firman and we had to obey. It is absurd that in the 20th century there could be a person of the position of a Secretary of State with power only equal to or next to that of the Czar of all Russia, who could override the best advice of his Ministers who are in daily touch with the administration of the country. Except on one occasion, there was no other occasion when a Secretary of State for India has ever visited these shores. Sir, his knowledge of this country would ordinarily be, that this is a land of hot sun, big snakes and troublesome natives. Beyond that, whether he has any other knowledge it is very difficult to say, except that which he gathers from the official despatches of the Government of India if he finds time from his Home politics to read them, and also that which he gathers from his Council of retired civilians, who are always anxious to maintain their own privileges and fight against every attempt of the people of this country, as they consider that all attempts at establishing responsible government in this country would be an invasion of their cherished privileges—accept the advice which such Ministers give him. With that advice and that knowledge, that gentleman, sitting 6,000 miles away, dictates to us as to what is to be done and what is not to be done without our say in the matter. Therefore, I say that his power of superintendence, direction and control, by which he expects obedience to his orders by the Government of India, is in this age absurd and should not be allowed by any civilised community to continue without relaxation. It is a negation of that promise which was held out in the declaration of 1917—a gradual relaxation of the control of the Secretary of State and a gradual admittance of the people of this country to a share in the administration. I fully sympathise with the Honourable the Finance Member in these matters, because he has to come before this House and face the representatives of the people here and he has to satisfy them, but all the time he knows full well that he has got to carry out the orders of somebody else and not his own. Our wishes in this House count for nothing.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster (Finance Member): Sir, I refrained from raising a point of order on this particular motion because I knew and appreciated the basis on which these debates had been arranged. But I think, Sir, it is little hard that any one in this Assembly should suggest that the Executive Council should sacrifice Rs. 100 from their very exiguous travelling allowance, on the ostensible ground of improper interference with its activities by an authority which, as my Honourable and learned friend the Mover has reminded us, has powers to subject the members of that Council to penalties which may extend to an unlimited fine and even unlimited imprisonment. I take it however that you Sir, have satisfied yourself on this point and that it is in order that on the vote of the Executive Council a question of this kind should be raised.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): If the Honourable Member had raised a point of order, the Chair would have dealt with it. If the Honourable Member so wishes, he can raise it even now.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I must proceed on the assumption that I am too late. I think the House will hardly expect from me any attempt to deal seriously with this motion at this late hour. If I might sum up my feelings about its subject, leaving aside the graver issues which underlie it, I would say that my Honourable friend has been perhaps rather unfortunate in the time at which he has raised it. In the first place, he started by quoting examples of what he regards as improper interference, examples from a report written on conditions which prevailed in the year 1920. I may inform my Honourable friend that the practice he referred to in the Acworth Committee's report has since been entirely changed, and that a very large measure of discretion in dealing with matters of that kind has been accorded to the authorities in India, so that his remarks based on those particular examples hardly apply to the conditions which exist to-day. That, Sir, is as regards the past; but if we look at the matter the other way round, I think it is perhaps hardly appropriate that a motion of this kind, complaining of the conditions which exist under the present constitution, should be brought forward just on the eve of constitutional changes to which we are all looking forward in the near future. I suggest to my Honourable friend that his scepticism about the possible results of the Round Table Conference, and of the other machinery by which the new constitution is now being planned and discussed, that scepticism is hardly justified. Indeed I can hardly imagine a more unfortunate moment to have raised this question than at half past four of the clock on a very hot day in Delhi in the year 1932, when we are all looking forward to great changes in the present constitutional state of affairs to be introduced in 1933.

I have only one more subject on which I must touch because reference has been made to my personal actions in connection with certain incidents. It is surprising to me that Honourable Members in this House should state with absolute assurance that they are fully aware of what are the hidden motives which operate within my own heart, or what have been my intentions, secret and never disclosed, but apparently very well known to all Honourable Members of this House with one single exception and that is myself. Honourable Members have persistently, if I may say so, misinterpreted the action which the Government of India took on the 21st September of last year, and as the incident has been referred to, I must take this opportunity of contradicting that interpretation and refuting all the arguments which are based upon it.

That, Sir, is I think all I need say upon that particular subject. I venture to put it to my Honourable friend that in the existing very difficult situation we are carrying on in co-operation with a certain amount of mutual satisfaction, and that even in the current session we have had before us very important practical examples of the result of that co-operation. So that when my Honourable friend the Mover puts forward a very eloquent appeal that this Assembly should be treated as "something", I think we can truthfully say that both in our actions and in our intentions we respond to that appeal.

Mr. N. N. Anklesaria: In view of what has fallen from the Honourable the Finance Member, I beg leave to withdraw my motion.

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Friday, the 18th March, 1932.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Friday, 18th March, 1932.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at Eleven of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

APPOINTMENT OF INDIANS TO CERTAIN POSTS ON THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

833. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Is it a fact that, as a general rule, prior to April, 1923, only Europeans, Anglo-Indians, Christians and Parsis were recruited in the senior subordinate and junior subordinate service of the Mechanical Branch of the North Western Railway for the posts of Foreman Boiler Maker, Foreman Erector, Foreman Blacksmith, Fitter Chargeman, Boiler Maker Chargeman, Locomotive Foreman, Locomotive Inspectors, Locomotive Drivers, Shunters in grade III and IV and Shedman in grade III and IV?

(b) Is it a fact that Indian apprentices in various categories mentioned in part (a) were recruited during 1923 to 1930, with a view to Indianise these posts?

(c) How many Indians were recruited during each year and in what category between 1923 to 1930 and appointed to various posts?

(d) Is it a fact that apprentices so appointed are not put on their proper posts although they stand qualified?

(e) Is it a fact that from the apprentices so appointed many have been discharged?

(f) What is the Railway at present doing to Indianise the posts stated in part (a) above?

(g) What is the total number of Europeans in the service mentioned in part (a) above as against the total number of Indians?

Mr. P. R. Rau: With your permission, Sir, I propose to reply to questions Nos. 833 to 836 together. I have called for certain information and shall lay on the table a reply in due course.

APPOINTMENT OF INDIANS TO CERTAIN POSTS ON THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

†834. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state the total number of drivers, shunters, firemen and boy-firemen in grade III and IV respectively and also totals under (i) Europeans, (ii) Anglo-Indians, (iii) Indian Christians and (iv) Miscellaneous, on 31st March, 1923, employed on the North Western Railway?

† For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 833.

(b) Is it a fact that before April, 1923, grade III was given to Parsis and grade IV to Europeans, Christians and Anglo-Indians on the North Western Railway?

(c) Is it a fact that from April, 1923, both grades III and IV were opened to Indians?

(d) How many Indians were recruited as boy-firemen or firemen in grade III and IV during the period 1923 to 1930?

(e) Was the purpose of the recruitment mentioned in part (d) to Indianise the posts of shunters and drivers mentioned in part (a) above?

(f) How many Europeans, Anglo-Indians and Parsis were recruited in grade III and IV respectively during the years 1923 to 1930 as boy-firemen, firemen, shunters and drivers, and how many Europeans, Anglo-Indians Parsis, Christians were promoted from firemen in grade III and IV to shunters and drivers during the period 1923-1930?

(g) From the Indians referred to in part (d) how many, recruited as firemen or boy-firemen during the years 1923 to 1926, have been promoted as shunters and how many as drivers?

(h) Is there any period fixed for automatic promotion to shunters and drivers for firemen of grade III and IV like apprentice for Permanent-Way Inspectors, Train Examiners, etc.?

(i) What is the total number of drivers, shunters, firemen, and boy-firemen in grade III and IV, respectively, on 31st December, 1930?

(j) Is it a fact that there is a larger number of drivers and shunters in grade IV and the firemen in grade IV, whose number is smaller, stand better chance of promotion, while the number of shunters and drivers in grade III being smaller and the number of firemen in grade III being greater they stand lesser chance of promotion? Is the Railway prepared to remove the grievance? If so, how?

PROMOTION OF FIREMEN, ETC., ON THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

†835. *Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Is it a fact that Indians who were recruited in 1923 to 1926 as firemen or boy-firemen grade III on the North Western Railway and who are qualified for promotion to shunters and drivers are not being promoted?

(b) If the facts stated in part (a) above are correct, will Government be pleased to state the reasons for the same?

(c) Is it a fact that the block in the promotion of firemen of grade III to shunters and drivers is due to promotion of firemen of grade IV against vacancies of grade III and also due to recruitment of drivers grade IV from outside?

(d) If the answer to part (c) be in the negative, will Government please give the number of vacancies reserved for firemen of grade III and IV, respectively, since 1923 and how they were disposed of?

PROMOTION OF FIREMEN, ETC., ON THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

†836. *Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Are Government prepared to fix a definite period of training for firemen of grade III for automatic promotion to shunters and drivers on the North Western Railway?

† For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 833.

(b) Is it a fact that many firemen-passed shunters of grade I got promotion to shunter both permanent and officiating, but the firemen-passed shunter of grade III were not allowed to take that chance although they were far superior by virtue of their education as well as grade?

(c) If the answer to part (b) above is in the affirmative, what preference the grade III firemen have over grade I or II firemen?

(d) What steps are Government taking to Indianise the posts of drivers grade IV and III which are at present held by Europeans?

(e) What facilities are being provided to firemen of grade III to enable them to pass drivers examination?

(f) If any Indians have replaced Europeans will Government please give their number as against the total number of Europeans employed as drivers in grade III and IV also stating whether Indians, if any, were taken from firemen of grade III recruited during 1923-1926?

(g) Are Government prepared to consider the case of promotion of firemen of grade III who have got seven years' training and above?

ALLOTMENT OF GOVERNMENT QUARTERS IN NEW DELHI.

837. Mr. S. C. Mitra: Will Government be pleased to refer to the replies to unstarred questions Nos. 52 and 56, dated 13th February, 1932 and state whether Government have considered the question of appointing a committee of six men from different Departments of the Government of India selected by the ministerial staff of the Secretariat and Attached Offices for the purpose of making all necessary enquiries into the matter? If not, why not?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhoré: Government do not consider that investigation by a Committee would be a suitable method of procedure but would be prepared to institute enquiry into any definite complaints received.

MINISTERIAL AND INFERIOR STAFF QUARTERS IN NEW DELHI.

838. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Will Government be pleased to refer to the reply to unstarred question No. 55, dated 13th February, 1932 and state the reasons why, in the absence of any existing rules or orders, the New Delhi ministerial and inferior staff quarters are occupied by the local Public Works Department and other offices?

(b) Is it a fact that these quarters were actually constructed for the ministerial staff in the Secretariat and Attached Offices?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhoré: (a) and (b). Under the existing rules and orders the quarters in New Delhi are intended primarily for the use of establishments in the employ of the Secretariats of the Government of India and in all attached or subordinate offices, including the Local Administration, who are compelled to reside on duty with the Government of India in New Delhi. The local Public Works Department and other offices occupy the quarters under those rules and orders, but there are no rules or orders under which the offices referred to are given preference over the ministerial staff of the Secretariat and attached offices.

MAINTENANCE OF PARKS AND FOUNTAINS ADJACENT TO THE IMPERIAL SECRETARIAT BUILDINGS.

839. *Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Will Government be pleased to state reasons why the parks and fountains adjacent to the Imperial Secretariat Buildings in New Delhi are maintained during winter months and not during summer?

(b) What objection have Government to issue necessary orders for the maintenance, from the ensuing summer, of the parks and fountains referred to above?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhoré: (a) and (b). The parks referred to are maintained throughout the year. The fountains are not used except during the cold weather on account of the cost involved in working them.

PROMOTION OF EX-WAR SERVICE RAILWAYMEN.

840. *Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan (on behalf of Maulvi Badi-uz-Zaman): (a) Will Government kindly state whether it is a fact that the Railway Administration were asked by the Railway Board to consider the question of preference for promotion for such members of their staff as were lent by them for service overseas during the Great War?

(b) If the reply be in the affirmative, will Government be good enough to place a copy of their letter on the table or state on what grounds a preferential promotion was to be given?

(c) Will Government please also state the names and designations of the men who were given such promotions on the East Indian and North Western Railways?

Mr. P. B. Rau: I would refer the Honourable Member to the reply given to unstarred question No. 111 asked by Khan Bahadur Haji Wajih-uddin on the 29th February, 1932, which was in practically identical terms.

EXTENSIONS OF SERVICE GRANTED IN THE PUNJAB AND NORTH-WEST FRONTIER POSTAL CIRCLES.

841. *Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan (on behalf of Mr. Muhammad Muazzam Sahib Bahadur): (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the Director General, Posts and Telegraphs, circulated the Government of India's instructions regarding retrenchment and retirement of officials?

(b) If so, will Government kindly state why extension of service is still being given in the Punjab and North-West Frontier Circle, and especially at Delhi?

(c) Do Government propose to order stoppage of extensions to safeguard the interests of approved candidates on the waiting list?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhoré: (a) Yes.

(b) The instructions referred to in part (a) of the question by the Honourable Member do not contemplate the entire suspension of the ordinary rules regarding the retention of Government servants in service.

(c) No.

SELECTION POSTS CONVERTED INTO TIME-SCALE APPOINTMENTS IN THE PUNJAB AND NORTH-WEST FRONTIER POSTAL CIRCLE.

842. *Kunwar Haje Ismail Ali Khan (on behalf of Mr. Muhammad Muazzam Sahib Bahadur): (a) Will Government kindly state the number of lower selection grade posts in the Post Offices in the Punjab and North-West Frontier Circle converted into time-scale as a retrenchment measure?

(b) Will Government kindly state the number of such posts converted into time-scale in the Office of the Postmaster-General, Punjab and North-West Frontier Circle?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) The Honourable Member presumably refers to the scheme for replacing officials in the lower selection grade of Rs. 160—10—250 in certain post offices by supervisors in the ordinary clerical time-scale of pay. The number so far replaced in the Punjab and North-West Frontier Circle is 11.

(b) The scheme just mentioned does not apply to the office of the Postmaster-General, where the organisation and condition of work are quite different from those prevailing in Post Offices.

APPOINTMENTS OF TICKET COLLECTORS.

843. *Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: Will Government be pleased to state if the instructions of the Railway Board contained in their letter No. 683-E. G., dated 3rd March, 1931, have been carried out in respect of the old Travelling Ticket Inspectors and Ticket Collectors when they were utilised in the Moody-Ward system?

Mr. P. R. Rau: With your permission, Sir, I propose to reply to questions Nos. 843, 844, 845, 847, 848 and 850 together. I have called for certain information and shall lay a reply on the table in due course.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Considering the fact that the "necessary particulars" have been in the hands of the Railway Board for a long time and also considering the fact that these Inspectors have already suffered much hardship, will the Honourable Member kindly inform this House of the reasons why he is not able to answer the question now.

Mr. P. R. Rau: Sir, the details required are in the office of the Agent, East Indian Railway.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Sir, if the details have been for so long with the Agent, East Indian Railway, why, I ask, are they not, by now, in the hands of the Railway Board, considering such a long time has elapsed?

Mr. P. R. Rau: Sir, the Agent of the East Indian Railway is responsible for the detailed administration of the East Indian Railway.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Is not the Railway Board responsible for the administration of the East Indian Railway?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I said "the detailed administration".

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Is not the Railway Board also responsible for the detailed or call it if you like the retailed or curtailed administration of the railway?

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Sir, since this question has been before the Railway Board for the last five months, why have the Railway Board been unable to get the information during this long interval when they were expected to get the reply? It is not a new question, Sir: it has been before the Railway Board for five months.

Mr. P. R. Rau: As regards this question, we have had notice of it for only about ten days, I believe, Sir.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Is it or is it not a fact that the Railway Board is shelving a final decision on this question of a substitute system for the much criticised and abolished Crew System?

Mr. P. R. Rau: It is not a fact.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Is it not a fact that the attention of the Honourable Member as Secretary of the Railway Retrenchment Committee was drawn to all these facts at the time, and should he not therefore have got the information by this time?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: The Honourable Member is entirely in error in supposing that this question did not contain a number of new details not mentioned in the earlier questions.

APPEALS OF TRAVELLING TICKET INSPECTORS.

†844. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) With reference to the reply to starred question No. 229 to 250, dated the 12th February, 1932, will Government be pleased to state the month in which the appeals were sent by the old Travelling Ticket Inspectors, to whom they were addressed and the cause of delay in considering those appeals by the Agent, East Indian Railway?

(b) Will Government please lay on the table a copy of the said appeal and a reply thereto given by the East Indian Railway authorities?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that the old Travelling Ticket Inspectors sent a copy of the said appeal to the Secretary, Railway Board, direct; if so, what action was taken by Government on knowing the facts contained in the appeals?

(d) Will Government be pleased to state if the Railway employees have a right of appeal to the Agent of their Railway; if so, why the appeals of the old Travelling Ticket Inspectors of the East Indian Railway addressed to the Agent were disposed of by the Chief Operating Superintendent?

APPEALS OF TRAVELLING TICKET INSPECTORS.

†845. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) With reference to the reply to the supplementary question by Dr. Ziauddin to question No. 251, dated the 12th February, 1932, will Government please lay on the table a copy of the said rules relating to appeals?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state also if the appeals addressed by the old Travelling Ticket Inspectors to the Secretary, Railway Board, came within the provisions of the said rules justifying their being withheld by the East Indian Railway authorities? If so, in what respects?

† For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 843.

RAILWAY TICKET CHECKING SYSTEMS.

846. *Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that Messrs. Moody and Ward, Officers of the Crew Enquiry Committee, were asked to suggest what preventive system should be adopted in case the Crew system was recommended by them to be abolished?

(b) If the reply to part (a) above be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state why this system has been adopted which is not a preventive system?

Mr. P. B. Rau: (a) Messrs. Moody and Ward were asked to submit proposals as to what system should be adopted to prevent persons travelling without tickets.

(b) Because it is considered to be the most suitable system at a reasonable cost.

RAILWAY TICKET CHECKING SYSTEMS.

†847. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: With reference to the answer to starred question No. 1120, dated the 2nd October, 1931, will Government be pleased to state why the Railway Board do not know if the Moody-Ward system sanctioned by them is a permanent or a temporary measure?

LADY TICKET COLLECTORS ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

†848. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) With reference to answer to starred question No. 240, dated 12th February, 1932, will Government be pleased to state why the lady Ticket Collectors are retained on the Railway when the Travelling Ticket Examiners are authorised to check the tickets of female passengers?

(b) Will Government be also pleased to state how much economy would be affected per year if they are abolished and what is the percentage of such stations on the East Indian Railway where lady Ticket Collectors are provided?

SYSTEMS OF RAILWAY TICKET CHECKING.

849. *Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) With reference to the answer to supplementary question to starred question No. 389 by Sir Henry Gidney, dated the 16th February, 1932, will Government be pleased to state if up to 1922 identically the same systems of ticket checking prevailed on the North Western and the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railways (both under State-management) and that after amalgamation of the East Indian and Oudh and Rohilkhand Railways the same system was adopted on the entire East Indian Railway?

(b) Will Government be also pleased to state if it is also correct that the Crew system on the North Western Railway was adopted and abandoned, the same Crew system was afterwards started on the East Indian Railway and abandoned, that a system of two T. T. Es. followed the Crew system on the North Western Railway and that the same has followed the Crew system on the East Indian Railway now which is called Moody-Ward system? Is it also true that on the North Western Railway since June the Travelling Ticket Examiner system has been replaced by the S. T. E., i.e., Special Ticket Examiner system and on the East Indian Railway since the same month, i.e., June, 1931, the Travelling Ticket Inspector system has been replaced by the Travelling Ticket Examiner system?

(c) If reply to part (b) above be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state if the local conditions on both the said Railways during the prevalence of those identical systems were the same and now different to justify the Moody-Ward system on the East Indian Railway and not on the North Western Railway?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) The records of the Railway Board do not show what system of ticket checking was in force on the North Western, the old Oudh and Rohilkhand and East Indian Railways up to a period prior to the introduction of the crew system on the East Indian Railway.

(b) As regards the first part of the question, I would refer the Honourable Member to paragraph 6 of the Moody-Ward Committee's report which deals with the working of the crew system on a part of the Lahore District on which it had been introduced as an experimental measure in 1923. The position on the East Indian Railway is explained in the Moody-Ward Committee's report. As regards the second part of the question, in June 1931 the cadre of Travelling Ticket Examiners on the North Western Railway was abolished and was replaced by Special Ticket Examiners, and the arrangements for ticket checking recommended by the Moody-Ward Committee introduced on the East Indian Railway.

(c) So far as Government are aware, the detailed arrangements for the checking of tickets on the North Western Railway system generally have not always been the same as on the East Indian Railway.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Will the Honourable Member inform this House whether the Railway Board are satisfied with the system at present in vogue for checking tickets?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I cannot say that the Railway Board consider the present system to be perfect.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Will the Honourable Member inform this House whether the Railway possess any other variety of ticket checkers since the Moody-Ward Report has condemned this crew system?

Mr. P. R. Rau: No change is contemplated at present.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Then there is nobody checking the tickets, I understand?

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Is the Honourable Member aware of the fact that every Divisional Superintendent plays about with this scheme and changes this system along with the change of the office?

Mr. P. R. Rau: No, Sir.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Will he make an inquiry about it and find out if my statement is not correct? Will he make an inquiry?

Mr. P. E. Rau: Will the Honourable gentleman put a question on the subject, Sir?

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Did I not draw attention to the case of the Divisional Superintendent at Allahabad in my previous question, on which he said he would make inquiries?

Mr. P. E. Rau: The results of the inquiry will be laid on the table in due course.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Is it or is it not a fact that the Railway Board, having been committed to the system, do not now know how to get out of it?

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Are not the Railway Board prepared to make an inquiry as to why this system of examinations was introduced only in one Division and nowhere else and the method of examination is not free from suspicion?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Government are not prepared to make inquiries. Surely, Sir, it is a reasonable thing to try a plan as an experimental measure in one Division without immediately extending it to all Divisions?

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Is not the Honourable Member aware of the fact that they have been making the experiments for the last six years and that the time has come when they should put a stop to those experiments?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I am unable to see the relevancy of my Honourable friend's question.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: I am also unable to see the relevancy of the Honourable Member's interference?

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Will the Honourable Member in charge kindly inform the House when he intends to cease experimenting and start working?

(No answer was given.)

RE-EXAMINATION OF TRAVELLING TICKET EXAMINERS.

1850. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is true that in some Divisions of East Indian Railway the Travelling Ticket Examiners are ordered to appear at a departmental examination of checking duties?

(b) Is it also true that amongst them are included the old Travelling Ticket Inspectors who have already passed the same and have got long service and are now working on much reduced pay?

(c) If the reply to part (b) above be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state what is the reason for compelling the qualified and experienced hands to re-appear at the said examination?

†For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 843.

LOSS OF EXCESS FARE RECEIPT BOOK.

851. *Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if the loss of an excess fare receipt book is considered a very serious offence?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state how many Travelling Ticket Inspectors worked in 1926 and how many such books were lost by them during the period?

(c) How many of the staff were employed on the whole of the East Indian Railway in 1929 who handled excess fare receipt books, i.e., Travelling Ticket Inspectors, Crew Inspectors and Crew in charges, and how many books were lost during that period?

(d) Is it a fact that increase in the staff handling these books has increased the loss as well?

(e) Is it a fact that in the Crew system a circular was issued that loss of an excess fare receipt book would result in the termination of the service of the employee concerned and several from amongst the staff suffered this penalty?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) The loss of an excess fare receipt book is a serious matter.

(b) to (c). Government have no information.

REFUNDS IN RESPECT OF EXCESS FARES RECOVERED.

852. *Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Will Government be pleased to state which officer on the East Indian Railway grants refunds in respect of excess fare recovered by staff, i.e., whether it is the Chief Accounts Officer or the Chief Commercial Manager (Claims)—and to whom this application for refund should be made?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state the percentage of amount refunded to the public in respect of the excess fare recovered by the Travelling Ticket Inspectors and Ticket Collectors between 1st January, 1926, to 30th June, 1926, and the same in respect of Travelling Ticket Examiners and Ticket Collectors between 1st June, 1931 and 31st December, 1931 (both separate)?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) The Chief Commercial Manager.

(b) These statistics are not compiled by the Railway Board and the information required is therefore not available.

TICKET CHECKING ON BRANCH LINES OF ASANSOL AND DINAPORE DIVISIONS.

853. *Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Will Government be pleased to state why the Crew system did not operate on the branch lines of Asansol and Dinapore Divisions when the said system worked on these Divisions?

(b) Is it a fact that the said branch lines were worked by Travelling Ticket Inspectors who were brought from a non-Crew area?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) The Crew system was not introduced on certain parts of the Asansol and Dinapore Divisions as the Railway Administration considered that alternative arrangements were better suited for these parts.

(b) Government have no information.

TICKET CHECKING ON MAIN AND BRANCH LINES.

854. *Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that during the operation of the Travelling Ticket Inspector system, main and branch lines were worked by the Travelling Ticket Inspectors as per programme which was given to them by the Divisional Inspector?

(b) Is it true that there being about 125 Travelling Ticket Inspectors only for the whole of the East Indian Railway, every train was not manned with staff throughout its run as is done now due to the strength of Travelling Ticket Examiners being raised to 650?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) Under any system of check by Travelling Ticket Inspectors, the latter work generally to a programme drawn up by their superiors. Government are not aware what the actual procedure was on each of the Divisions on which Travelling Ticket Inspectors were employed.

(b) This is substantially correct.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: As the Honourable Member has replied that Government have no information on the matter and Government are not aware of the facts, will he kindly inform this House whether he is prepared to obtain the information and become aware of these facts?

Mr. P. R. Rau: The subjects dealt with in this question are matters of minor detail and Government do not propose to interfere with the discretion of the Agents in the matter.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Is it or is it not a fact that it is mainly these minor details that lead to unrest amongst railway employees? If the answer be in the affirmative, is it not the duty of the Honourable Member to inquire into these minor details, however minor they may be?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Government do not consider that it is their duty to obtain information as regards these particular points to which the Honourable Member has referred.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Will the Government kindly inform this House what exactly is their duty in regard to the administration of the Railways?

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: If the Honourable Member will travel like an ordinary passenger, then he will find out the unrest that is caused. Members of Government travel in saloons and they know nothing as to what is happening.

EXPULSION OF CERTAIN CITIZENS FROM MHOW CANTONMENT.

855. *Khan Bahadur Haji Wajthuddin: (a) Will Government be pleased to state since how long Th. Amarsingh Laxmansingh and Mr. Bhagwan Dass Aggarwal have been under orders of expulsion from Mhow Cantonment?

(b) Are Government aware that Th. Amarsingh Laxmansingh is a man of 80 years and during his long exile from Mhow Cantonment, which is his home, he has suffered several losses by death in his family at Mhow owing to his inability to arrange medical attendance by reason of the order of expulsion?

(c) Is it a fact that Th. Amarsingh Laxmansingh has since his expulsion lived in Indore and has forwarded a certificate from the Chief Secretary to the Prime Minister, Indore, testifying to his being a law-abiding citizen taking part in social service movements?

(d) Was a copy of the certificate submitted to the Government of India by the All-India Cantonments Association?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) Since 1922 and 1923, respectively.

(b) Government are not aware of this person's exact age and have no information in support of what is stated in the remainder of this part of the question.

(c) and (d). Government have received from the All-India Cantonments Association a copy of a certificate purporting to have been granted by the official mentioned, to the effect that this person's activities have been in no way objectionable. Government are however in possession of detailed information to the contrary effect.

Mr. Jagan Nath Aggarwal: Will the Honourable gentleman consider the desirability of cancelling these orders? They must have served their useful purpose long ago?

Mr. G. M. Young: Government have considered the matter and have come to the conclusion that these orders should not be cancelled.

Mr. Jagan Nath Aggarwal: Are they prepared to place the material against these people before any court of inquiry?

Mr. G. M. Young: No, Sir.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Are they prepared to place the material on the table of this House?

Mr. G. M. Young: No, Sir.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Why not?

Mr. G. M. Young: The Honourable Member might wait till the next question is put and replied to, to find the reason why Government are not prepared to lay the material on the table of the House.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Is it or is it not a fact that one of these gentlemen is related to the questioner on the other side?

Mr. President: Order, order.

Mr. Jagan Nath Aggarwal: Is the Honourable Member's insinuation based on any facts that he is in possession of?

Sir Hari Singh Gour: Sir, I very strongly disapprove the conduct of Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney in insinuating personal motives to any of the questioners.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The House must have noticed that the Chair called the Member to order. (Applause.)

EXPULSION OF CERTAIN CITIZENS FROM MHOW CANTONMENT.

856. *Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Will Government specify the activities of Thakur Amarsingh and Mr. Bhagwan Dass since their expulsions that made their re-admission to Mhow Cantonment undesirable?

(b) Is it a fact that the All-India Cantonments Association forwarded with their letter No. 1924/A./B., dated 22nd April, 1931, a written undertaking from Mr. Bhagwan Dass that in case of the expulsion order being cancelled, he would do nothing that will bring him within the purview of Section 239 of the Cantonments Act dealing with expulsions?

(c) Are Government aware that there is a great agitation in cantonments against these two cases of long banishment from Mhow Cantonment?

(d) Are Government aware that the All-India Cantonments Conference, held at Lahore in October, 1931, passed a unanimous resolution urging Government to cancel these orders of expulsion and a copy of the same was forwarded by the All-India Cantonments Association to Government for consideration?

(e) Do Government propose to rescind the orders in these two cases?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) Government are not prepared to disclose the information in their possession.

(b) The representation from Lala Bhagwan Dass Aggarwal forwarded with the Association's letter referred to contained no such undertaking.

(c) Government have no information to this effect.

(d) Yes.

(e) No, Sir.

SUPPLY OF ICE AND MINERAL WATER ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

857. *Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Are Government aware that ice and mineral water are sold on the East Indian Railway line at higher rates than those obtaining on the North Western Railway line?

(b) If the reply to the above be in the affirmative, will Government state the reasons for this difference in rates?

(c) Are Government aware that the high rates on the East Indian Railway have caused discontent among the passengers in these days of economic depression?

(d) Is it a fact that when tenders were recently called for the ice and mineral water contract on the East Indian Railway, the contract was not given to the tenderer of lowest rates?

(e) Will Government explain the reasons for the disregard of the lowest tender in this case and do they propose to take steps to reduce the price of ice and mineral water on the East Indian Railway to the level of the rates obtaining on the North Western Railway?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) and (b). Government have no information beyond that appearing in the published time tables of the two railways referred to, which confirm the statement made in part (a) of the Honourable Member's question.

(c) No.

(d) and (e). Government have no information, but I am asking the Agent, East Indian Railway, for a report and will consider whether any action can suitably be taken.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: On a point of order, Sir. When questions are put in the form, "Have the Government any information", this is only a formal way of asking a question.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Honourable Member is making a statement.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: I am raising a point of order, Sir. When we put questions in the form I have mentioned, we expect that the information will be supplied. We do not expect the reply that the Government have no information. We expect that the Government should give a definite reply containing the information asked for.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): If an Honourable Member asks a question as to whether Government are aware of a certain thing, they are entitled to say that they are not aware of it.

Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: Are the Government prepared to make an inquiry and lay the result on the table of the House?

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Is it your ruling, Sir, that if we ask a question whether the Government have got information and they say that they are not aware of it, it is the end of the reply?

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Honourable Member has. I think, sufficient experience of the Legislature to know that when you ask a question and an answer is given either in the affirmative or in the negative, it satisfies that question. The Honourable Member is not debarred either to put supplementary questions and get further information or to put further questions giving Government due notice. But when the Honourable Member asks a question whether Government are aware of certain things, it is perfectly open to Government to say, no, they have no knowledge about them.

Mr. P. R. Rau: May I answer, Sir, to the supplementary question put by Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin? I have already told the House that I am asking the Agent, East Indian Railway, for a report and will then consider whether any action can suitably be taken. I am quite prepared to lay a statement of the action taken on the table in due course.

EXTENSION OF THE HOUSE-SCAVENGING TAX IN AMBALA CANTONMENT.

858. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Are Government aware that the Ambala Cantonment Board has, by a majority of votes, decided to increase the House-Scavenging Tax in Ambala Cantonment by imposing it on shops, offices, godowns that were hitherto exempt from that tax?

(b) Is it a fact that the Northern Command has issued a Circular to the Cantonments under its jurisdiction, on 17th December, 1931, not to submit any proposal of additional taxation and informing them that there was no prospect of getting any grant from Government?

(c) Is it a fact that the suggestion to increase the House-Scavenging Tax was based on the assurance that Government would give a substantial grant towards the water scheme of the Cantonment Board, Ambala?

(d) Does that assurance still hold good? If not, do Government propose to direct the Northern Command to make it clear to the Cantonment Board, Ambala, that their proposal to increase the House-Scavenging Tax did not entail any obligation on the part of Government to give a grant to the Ambala Cantonment Board?

(e) Are Government prepared also to give the Ambala Cantonment Board an opportunity to re-consider its proposal for enhancement in House-scavenging Tax in the light of Government's inability to pay any grant?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the reply given on the 15th February 1932 to Sirdar Sohan Singh's starred question No. 357 on the same subject.

(b) Government have seen a copy of the circular referred to.

(c) Government gave no such assurance.

(d) and (e). Do not arise.

APPEALS IN CANTONMENTS.

859. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Is it a fact that appeals submitted under Schedule V of the Cantonments Act can be heard and disposed of only by the General Officer Commanding-in-Chief a Command?

(b) Are Government aware that the Inspecting Officer, Military Lands and Cantonments, Northern Command, is himself disposing of appeals submitted under the above schedule and the Cantonment Authorities in the jurisdiction of Northern Command have been accepting his decisions on those appeals?

(c) Is it a fact that in the Ambala Cantonment Board, minutes of dissents have been filed pointing out that the General Officer Commanding-in-Chief being the appellate authority in case of such appeals, has no power to delegate or transfer that power to any of his subordinates and consequently the decisions on such appeals given by the Inspecting Officer are illegal?

(d) Is it a fact that the Inspecting Officer also sanctioned the Budget of the Ambala Cantonment Board for 1932-33 and also grants in addition to the Budget? Is it a fact that such sanctions can under rules be given only by the General Officer Commanding-in-Chief?

(e) Are Government aware that there is growing dissatisfaction among the people as to the justness of the decisions given on such appeals by the Inspecting Officer?

(f) Do Government propose to take action to put an end to this practice and to instruct the General Officer Commanding-in-Chief, Northern Command, to hear and dispose of such appeals and perform other statutory functions himself?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) The Honourable Member's attention is invited to the third column of the schedule, which specifies the appellate authority for each class of appeal.

(b) to (f). I have called for a report and a reply will be laid on the table.

THE LUCKNOW-LALMONIRHAT TRAIN SERVICE.

860. *Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: (a) Is it a fact that the Eastern Bengal Railway have discontinued the running of the Lucknow-Lalmonirhat through train service from 1st March, 1932? If so, why?

(b) Are Government aware that it was a very popular train, and that its discontinuance has resulted in great inconvenience to the travelling public?

(c) Are Government aware that the Bengal and North Western Railway Administration are willing to continue the running of that train over their section of the line; and do Government propose to take steps to continue the service?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) The running of through services is arranged by Railway Administrations without reference to Government, who have, therefore, no information beyond that appearing in the published time tables. These show that the Lucknow-Lalmonirhat service is now a Lucknow-Katihar service.

(b) and (c). No. I am, however, bringing the Honourable Member's question and my answer to it to the notice of the Agent, Eastern Bengal Railway, for such action as he may consider necessary.

DISCONTINUANCE OF A THROUGH CARRIAGE ON AN EAST INDIAN RAILWAY EXPRESS.

861. *Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: (a) Are Government aware that the East Indian Railway have discontinued the running of the through bogie First and Second class carriage from Howrah by the 71 Up Express to Moghal Sarai, and thereafter by the 15 Up Express to Delhi, and this has resulted in great inconvenience to the travelling public concerned?

(b) Are Government aware that there is now no fast train from Patna on the main line for upcountry in the evening, and do Government propose to have the through carriage restored?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) The reply to the first part of the question is in the affirmative: As regards the second part, Government are aware that passengers who previously made use of the through service carriage are now likely to be inconvenienced, but they have been informed by the Agent, East Indian Railway, that when the through service carriage was running, the number of passengers travelling in it was not sufficient to justify the service being continued.

(b) The trains referred to in part (a) of the question continue to run, thereby giving an evening service from Patna on the main line for up-country stations, but involving transshipment at Moghal Sarai. Arrangements for the running of through service carriages are matters which must be left to the Railway Administration to deal with; any serious inconvenience experienced will no doubt be brought up for discussion at meetings of the Railway Advisory Committee.

Mr. O. S. Ranga Iyer: Will the Honourable Member please state to what extent the loss was sustained in regard to the running of the through service and how much they have gained by abandoning the through service?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I want notice of the question.

Mr. O. S. Ranga Iyer: Will the Honourable Member please state whether he will write to the Agent of the Railway to place this information before the Railway Board so that they may lay it on the table of the House?

Mr. P. R. Rau: If the Honourable Member will please give me notice of the question, I will consider it.

Mr. O. S. Ranga Iyer: Will the Government hereby take notice of this question because the House is entitled to have information on that matter.

(No answer.)

Mr. O. S. Ranga Iyer: As the Honourable Member has not answered my question and as he has treated my question with silence I propose to move an adjournment of the House tomorrow

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

DISCHARGE OF COMPOSITORS AND BINDERS FROM THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY PRESS.

191. Mr. S. O. Mitra: (a) Is it not a fact that the work in the East Indian Railway Press, both Calcutta and Howrah, was uniformly normal throughout 1930 and up to March, 1931?

(b) Is it a fact that, in reply to the unstarred question No. 153, dated 2nd February, 1931, Sir Alan Parsons stated that instructions were issued by the Railway Board to the Agent, East Indian Railway that on the acceptance of the recommendations of the Special Officer, he should bring surplus posts under reduction?

(c) Is it not a fact that Mr. Mackenzie, Officiating Superintendent, East Indian Railway Press, Calcutta, admitted before the Enquiry Committee under the new Trades Disputes Act at Calcutta, that the recommendations of Mr. A. F. Slater were accepted in reorganising the printing office?

(d) Is it not a fact that each department in the East Indian Railway Press is inter-connected with other departments?

(e) Is it not a fact that the recommendation of Mr. Slater was that the number of binders to be retained was to be 175 and the number of compositors was to be 79?

(f) Is it not a fact that 16 compositors and 26 binders were discharged from the East Indian Railway Press in March, 1931?

(g) Is it not a fact that there was no reduction in the supervising staff of the East Indian Railway Press?

(h) If the answers to parts (a) to (g) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state the reasons for specially selecting these 16 compositors and 26 binders for dismissal?

Mr. P. R. Rau: With your permission, Sir, I propose to reply to questions Nos. 191 to 194 together. I have called for certain information and shall lay a reply on the table, in due course.

APPEAL AGAINST DISCHARGE BY BINDERS IN THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY PRESS.

†192. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Is it not a fact that the Superintendent of the East Indian Railway Press, Calcutta, is immediately under the control of the Agent, East Indian Railway?

(b) Is it not a fact that an appeal against any decision of the said Superintendent lies with the Agent, East Indian Railway?

(c) Is it not a fact that the five persons of the Binding Section of the East Indian Railway Press, Calcutta, who were discharged by the Superintendent on the 31st March, 1931, appealed to the Agent through the Superintendent against their discharge?

(d) Is it not a fact that the said petition was not forwarded by the Superintendent on the plea that no appeal lay from such discharge?

(e) Is it not a fact that subsequently Mr. Mackenzie the Officiating Superintendent of the East Indian Railway Press, Calcutta, admitted before the Enquiry Committee under the Trades Disputes Act, that an appeal against the decision of arbitrary discharge lies with the Agent?

(f) If the answers to parts (a) to (e) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state what action has been taken or is intended to be taken against the Superintendent for not forwarding the appeal against his decision of discharge to the Agent?

CUT IN PAY OF BINDERS, COMPOSITORS, ETC., IN THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY PRESS.

†193. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Is it a fact that deduction is being made both from the pay of the ministerial as well as industrial employees of the East Indian Railway Press, Calcutta and Howrah?

(b) Is it not a fact that the industrial employees such as compositors, distributors, binders, etc., of the East Indian Railway Press, Calcutta and Howrah, are not allowed the privileges of closed holidays, bank holidays, and special early holidays like Armistice Day, like the employees of the ministerial staff in the same press?

†For answer to this question, see answer to unstarred question No. 191.

(c) Is it not a fact that the industrial employees like the compositors of the East Indian Railway Press, Calcutta, are allowed only 13 days' leave in a year under Annexure (ii) whereas the ministerial staff enjoy more holidays under Annexure (i)?

(d) Is it not a fact that the earnings of the employees like compositors, binders, etc., have come down considerably owing to the stoppage of the overtime system in the said Press?

(e) Is it not a fact that under the new revision of the scale of pay, as has been introduced from the 1st of November, 1930, the earnings of the industrial staff like the binders, compositors, etc., in the East Indian Railway Press, Calcutta and Howrah have decreased as is evinced from the fact that the binders who used to get Rs. 42 per month before November, 1930, now get Rs. 36 and even that after 2 years?

(f) Is it not a fact that the industrial employees like the Compositors, Binders, etc., submitted a memorial to the Honourable Member so far back as 12th January, 1931, stating that no consideration has been paid, at the time of fixing the initial wages, to the fact that the actual earnings were higher during the preceding twelve months and even in the past few years than the monthly wages now introduced?

(g) Is it not a fact that in the memorial, dated the 12th January, 1931, the memorialists submitted that they are to work compulsorily for about 47 hours more than what they did before the 1st of November, 1930?

(h) If the answers to parts (a) to (g) be in the affirmative, will Government state the reasons for introducing a cut in the pay of the industrial employees like Binders, Compositors, etc., of the East Indian Railway Press, Calcutta and Howrah?

DEDUCTIONS FROM PAY OF INDUSTRIAL EMPLOYEES OF THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY PRESS.

194. Mr. S. O. Mitra: (a) Is it not a fact that the deduction in the pay of the industrial hands in the Kanchrapara Workshops, Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway and in the South Indian Railway has been stopped on the ground of their earnings being decreased considerably?

(b) If the answer be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state whether they contemplate to stop deduction in pay of the industrial employees of the East Indian Railway Press, Calcutta and Howrah on the same ground? If not, why not?

STRENGTH OF SUPERVISING AND OPERATING STAFF IN THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY PRESS, CALCUTTA AND HOWRAH.

195. Mr. S. O. Mitra: (a) Is it not a fact that, in reply to the unstarred question No. 112, dated the 28th September, 1931 (regarding strength of supervising and operating staff in the East Indian Railway Press, Calcutta and Howrah), Sir Alan Parsons stated that certain information had been called for from the Agent, East Indian Railway?

(b) Is it not a fact that in reply to part (a) of the unstarred question No. 113, dated the 24th September, 1931, Sir Alan Parsons stated that information had been called for from the Agent, East Indian Railway?

†For answer to this question, see answer to unstarred question No. 191.

(c) If the answers to parts (a) and (b) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to furnish the House with this information?

Mr. P. E. Rau: (a) and (b). Yes.

(c) The information was supplied to the Honourable Member in the Railway Board's letter No. 579-E. G., dated the 15th January, 1932, a copy of which is laid on the table.

LETTER FROM J. C. HIGHET, Esq., DIRECTOR, RAILWAY BOARD, TO S. C. MITRA, Esq., MEMBER, LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY, NO. 579-E. G., DATED NEW DELHI, THE 15TH JANUARY, 1932.

With reference to the replies given to your Question No. 112 and part (a) of question No. 113 in the Legislative Assembly on the 28th September, 1931, I am directed to communicate the following information:—

GOVERNMENT PRINTING WORK PLACED WITH PRIVATE PRESSES.

196. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Is it a fact that in reply to the unstarred question No. 103 of the 28th September, 1931 (regarding Government Printing Work placed with Private Presses) Mr. J. A. Shillidy stated that enquiries were being made?

(b) If the answer be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state whether the enquiries have been finished by this time? If so, what is the result of such enquiries?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore: I propose to deal with questions Nos. 196 and 197 together. The enquiries promised by Mr. Shillidy were duly completed and their result was communicated to the Honourable Member in the demi-official letters from the Department of Industries and Labour, No. A-382, dated the 3rd and 6th October, 1931. copies of which were also placed in the Library of the Legislative Assembly.

PAYMENTS MADE TO PRIVATE PRESSES FOR GOVERNMENT PRINTING WORK.

†197. Mr. S. C. Mitra: Is it a fact that in reply to the unstarred question No. 104, dated 28th September, 1931 (regarding payments made to private presses for Government printing work) Mr. J. A. Shillidy stated that information was being collected? If so, will the Honourable Member be pleased to state the result of such enquiries?

DEDUCTION FROM PAY OF PIECE-RATED EMPLOYEES OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA PRESS, CALCUTTA.

198. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Is it not a fact that 10 per cent. deduction is being made both from the pay of the salaried staff and from the earnings of the piece-rated employees of the Government of India Press, Calcutta?

(b) Is it not a fact that the daily or piece-rated employees of the Government of India Press, Calcutta, are paid on the principle of "no work, no pay" and "pay according to the outturn"?

†For answer to this question, see answer to unstarred question No. 196.

(c) Is it not a fact that the piece-rated employees of the Government of India Press, Calcutta, are not allowed the privileges of holidays on the bank-closing days, Sundays, etc., like the salaried staff?

(d) Is it not a fact that the salaried employees of the Government of India Press, Calcutta, are made permanent under a regular systematic rule, whereas there is no rule for making the temporary piece-rated employees permanent?

(e) Is it a fact that whenever any reduction has been made in the establishment of the Government of India Press, Calcutta, the axe fell heavily on the piece-rated employees?

(f) Do the wages of the daily or piece-rated employees come under the definition of pay as given in the Fundamental Rules 9(21)(a)?

(g) If the answers to parts (a), (b) and (c) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state the reasons for introducing a cut in the earnings of the piece-rated employees on the same basis as in the pay of the salaried staff?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore: (a) Yes.

(b) There are no daily paid employees in the Government of India Press, Calcutta. The piece-workers in that press are ordinarily paid on the basis of their outturn but the principles mentioned are not strictly applied as the men are given leave with pay.

(c) Piece-rated employees of the Government of India Press, Calcutta, like the salaried staff are allowed Sundays and gazetted holidays according to the list published annually in the Calcutta Gazette.

(d) The transfer to the permanent establishment is governed by definite rules both in the case of salaried hands and piece-workers in the Calcutta Press.

(e) As piece-workers constitute the majority of the establishment in the press, any large reduction probably has effected them seriously; but no such reduction has recently been made.

(f) Not, unless specially classed as 'pay' by the Governor General in Council.

(g) The question whether the piece-workers in the Government of India presses should be subjected to the emergency pay cut of ten per cent. is being considered by Government.

DEDUCTION FROM PAY OF PIECE-RATED EMPLOYEES OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA PRESS, CALCUTTA.

199. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Is it not a fact that the earnings of the piece-rated employees of the Government of India Press, Calcutta, have been adversely affected owing to the stoppage of payment for the tiffin period?

(b) Is it not a fact that the earnings of the piece-rated employees of the Government of India Press, Calcutta, have further been decreased in comparison with their previous earning to a considerable extent on account of the abolition of the overtime system?

(c) Is it not a fact that the deduction in the earnings of the industrial workers of the Kanchrapara Workshop, Bengal, Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway and the South Indian Railway, has been stopped on the ground of their earnings being decreased considerably?

(d) If the answers to parts (a) to (c) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state whether they contemplate to stop deduction in the earnings of the piece-rated employees of the Government of India Press Calcutta? If not, why not?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore: (a) The stoppage of payment for meal intervals involved a deduction in the earnings. But it was introduced at a time when Government were granting concessions to the piece-workers in other directions which in the aggregate were estimated to involve the disbursement of much larger sums than had formerly been paid for the intervals. Subsequently petitions were received in which piece-workers asserted that the changes made, taken together, had operated to their disadvantage, and, after examination of the case, further concessions were given by Government in 1930.

(b) I am not clear as to what the Honourable Member means by the "abolition of the overtime system". If he will specify precisely the orders to which it refers I shall have enquiries made.

(c) I assume the Honourable Member is referring to the temporary cut in pay. In applying this cut special consideration has been shown to employees in Railway Workshops whose normal gross earnings have been reduced on account of the imposition of short time working. In their case the aggregate of the deduction on account of the temporary cut in pay and for short time working is not allowed to exceed their normal wages for 23 hours and no deduction on account of the cut in pay is made if the deduction for short time working is equal to or exceeds the normal wages for 23 hours.

(d) Does not arise.

EXAMINATION OF APPRENTICES IN THE RIFLE FACTORY AT ISHAPORE.

200. Mr. S. C. Mitra: Will Government please place on the table a copy of the communication from the Director of Ordnance Factories and Manufacture, No. 20239 (M. G. 1), dated the 22nd January, 1932, regarding arrangements for examinations of all apprentices—student and trade—in the Rifle Factory at Ishapore?

Mr. G. M. Young: A copy of the letter and enclosure is reproduced below.

Letter No. 20239 (M. G. 1), dated the 22nd January, 1932, from the Staff Captain to the Director of Ordnance Factories and Manufacture, to the Secretary, Public Service Commission.

I have the honour to forward for the information of Sir Ross Barker a copy of the syllabus for Ordnance Factories apprentices, with reference to Army Department Notification No. 560, dated the 19th September, 1931.

Rules and Regulations for the recruitment of apprentices for training in Ordnance Factories.

The candidates must possess an elementary knowledge of Dynamics, Statics, Mathematics up to Quadratic Equations, Elementary Trigonometry and Physics.

The education standard which will satisfy Ordnance Factories when the candidates are examined by the Public Service Commission, is detailed below :—

Mathematics—

Algebra for Beginners, by Todhunter and Loney, 1920 Edition, up to Chapter 22 together with Chapter 24.

Trigonometry—

Plane Trigonometry, Part I, by Loney, 1920 Edition, up to and including paragraph 60, Chapter 4.

Physics by Rajanikanta De—1925 Edition.

(a) Part I.—General Physics, complete book.

(b) Part II.—Sound, Chapters 1 and 2.

(c) Part III.—Heat, whole book.

(d) Part IV.—Light, Chapters 1, 2, 4 and 6.

(e) Parts V and VI.—Magnetism and Electricity up to and including Chapter 12.

NOTE.—It is considered that sufficient elementary Dynamics and Statics is contained in Part I—General Physics above.

PETITION FROM APPRENTICES IN THE RIFLE FACTORY AT ISHAPORE.

201. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Is it a fact that Mr. A. W. Connolly, the Officiating Superintendent of the Rifle Factory at Ishapore, had made an announcement to the apprentices of that Factory on the 26th February, 1932, that the theoretical and laboratory classes for the apprentices in that Factory would be shut down with effect from the 1st April, 1932?

(b) Is it a fact that the apprentices of the Rifle Factory at Ishapore have made a joint petition to the officiating Superintendent of that Factory on the 3rd March, 1932, in which they have stated how cloudy are their future prospects and how valueless their certificates, will be under the new scheme? If so, will Government be pleased to state what action they propose to take on their petition?

(c) Do Government propose to redress the grievances of the apprentices? If not, why not?

Mr. G. M. Young: Inquiries are being made and a reply will be laid on the table in due course.

STATEMENT LAID ON THE TABLE.

REPORT ON THE HOWARD-NIXON MEMORANDUM REGARDING FINANCIAL QUESTIONS ARISING OUT OF THE SEPARATION OF BURMA FROM INDIA.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster (Finance Member): Sir, I beg to lay on the table the Report by the Standing Finance Committee on the Howard-Nixon Memorandum regarding financial questions arising out of the proposed separation of Burma from India.

Report by the Standing Finance Committee on the Howard-Nixon Memorandum regarding financial questions arising out of the proposed separation of Burma from India.

The Burma Sub-Committee of the Round Table Conference, 1930 recommended that the financial consequences of a separation of Burma from India should be thoroughly explored by experts of the two Governments, and that the statements prepared by these experts should be laid before the Standing Finance Committees of the Indian Legislative Assembly and the Burma Legislative Council respectively. A Memorandum on the subject was prepared by Sir Henry Howard, K.C.I.E., C.S.I., on behalf of Burma, and Mr. J. C. Nixon, I.C.S., on behalf of India.

2. In the first place, the Committee recorded that its consent to take the Memorandum into consideration implied no expression of any views on the merits of the question of separation as such. It merely discussed the financial consequences which would ensue if Burma were separated from India.

3. The Committee has felt some difficulty in performing the task allotted to it owing to the highly technical nature of many of the issues which are involved. For this reason and also because it has had no opportunity of hearing arguments on the other side it has been reluctant to express final views. Moreover it strongly supports the view expressed by the Government of India in their despatch on Constitutional Reforms of September 20, 1929, that the main issues should be submitted to an Arbitral Tribunal.

The Committee wishes its expressions in this report to be interpreted in the light of the foregoing observations. Such expressions must be regarded essentially as advice to the Government of India as to the manner in which the case should be argued from the Indian side, and not necessarily as indicating that this Committee would not consider acceptable any other solutions than those which it has indicated.

4. Currency (paragraphs 6—17).—The Committee was generally of opinion that it would be to the mutual advantage of both countries for Burma to retain the same currency as India. Certain members considered that until Burma had discharged all its debt to India, India should have the right to insist on Burma's not changing its currency system. The Committee preferred not to express an opinion on the three alternative methods suggested in paragraph 9 for the management of Indian Currency in Burma, as it anticipated that a Central Bank would have been established before the issue arose. Certain members thought however that if a choice had to be made, then the agency of the Imperial Bank of India would be the best. The Committee preferred not to express a final opinion as to whether Burma (vide paragraph 8) should or should not be left responsible for its own sterling remittance arrangements, the essential point being that India should be safeguarded against its own financial or currency position being weakened by the conduct of finance in Burma.

The Committee agreed that if Burma retained the use of Indian currency, it should be permitted to participate in an Indian State or Central Bank when instituted. The Committee considered that the conditions proposed in paragraph 10 in case Burma continued to remain within the Indian currency system were suitable and sufficient from India's point of view. As the Committee had not contemplated Burma's introducing its own currency, it expressed no opinion in regard to the circumstances (given in paragraphs 12—17) which should accompany any such contingency. It held however that Burma would have to give India adequate notice of any such intention, the period of notice to depend on the circumstances at the time.

5. Public Debt (paragraphs 18—49).—The Committee was of opinion that, assuming present conditions to continue, rupee and sterling obligations and values should be converted at the rate of 1s. 6d. to the rupee. It considered that the Government of India should reserve the right to require Burma to discharge a proper part of its liabilities to India in sterling in London.

6. The Committee agreed (vide paragraph 27) that "allocated" debt liabilities, i.e., liabilities referable to particular assets, should be apportioned between India and Burma according to the location of the corresponding assets. It rejected unconditionally Sir Henry Howard's contention (contained in Annexure E) that the liability exhibited in the public accounts as allocated to Railways should be increased by about Rs. 39 crores representing the amount of specific "railway debt" already redeemed. The Committee also accepted the view (paragraph 28) that Burma should become directly responsible for certain debt liabilities referable geographically to Burma.

7. In regard to the "unallocated" debt, amounting on 31st March, 1930 to Rs. 226 crores, the Committee agreed that India should assume liability for the sum shown in the public accounts as due to the construction of New Delhi (Annexure G and para. 35). It observed however that India would be theoretically justified in demanding that an adjustment should be made at valuation instead of on cost figures. For the somewhat similar item involved in the Bombay Military Lands Scheme the Committee held that India should press for an adjustment at valuation and not at cost. The attitude of the Government of India in regard to both these items should however be dependent on satisfactory solutions being come to in regard to other parts of the settlement.

8. The Committee* was not in a position to arrive at any definite conclusion on the question whether it is possible (vide paragraph 30) to make a historic analysis of the elements composing the public debt in order to calculate Burma's liability to India in the matter of so-called "unproductive" debt. If it were proved that such an analysis (which many members would otherwise favour) is impossible, the Committee agreed that a composition on the lines set out in the Memorandum appeared to be the only possible course. A settlement on this question, as indeed on a number of other important questions, should be dependent on the settlement as a whole being on satisfactory lines.

9. On the assumption expressed in the last paragraph, the Committee approved of the plan proposed in the Memorandum for dividing the remaining "unallocated" debt (paragraphs 35—38). For the purpose of calculating the ratio it held that figures for Thathameda and Capitation Tax should not be excluded (Annexure I). The Committee considered however that India could press for the elimination of figures for opium receipts, but in that case it agreed that there was force in Sir Henry Howard's claim to have Excise receipts in Burma adjusted. As the margin shown in para. 7, Annexure I of the Memorandum between these relative contentions was small the Committee thought that the Government of India should be prepared to accept a compromise on the point.

10. The Committee accepted the suggested manner of calculating the rate of interest payable by Burma on its debt to India (paragraphs 42—44 and Annexures K and L). It held emphatically that Burma's debt charges to the Government of India should in the Act of Separation be made a statutory first charge on the revenues of Burma. It was not prepared to recommend the suggested repayment of principal at the rate of one crore a year as adequate. As a general principle it considered that the figure should be fixed in relation to the benefit which the revenues of Burma would receive on separation, having regard to the rates of taxation prevailing at the time.

11. Pensions.—The Committee remarked that it would be convenient to both Governments if the liability for old Family Pension Funds (Annexure J) could be capitalised, and advised the Government of India to pursue the matter and attempt to find a sufficiently accurate basis for the purpose. It held the same view in regard to the other pensionary liabilities which, according to the proposals, would have to be shared, and recommended that the Government of India should explore the practicability of a reasonably accurate manner of capitalising these also.

12. The Committee strongly supported the view expressed by Mr. Nixon in paragraph 70 of the Memorandum in regard to Burma's full liability for "live" pensions.

13. The Committee supported also the corresponding claim on Burma (paragraph 78) in the matter of "part-earned" pensions. It considered the suggestion of Mr. Nixon in paragraphs 78—81 of the Memorandum that this claim of India on Burma should be set off against Burma's claim on India for a share of the general immovable property of the Government of India situated outside Burma. The Committee considered that the case on behalf of India should be argued on the following lines. All transactions financed in the past from revenue resources or such like and carrying no present liabilities should be regarded as finally closed. The Government of India in the past has been responsible for weighing the various claims arising against the joint revenues of India and Burma and for applying these fairly and in the interests of India and Burma as a whole. In this view, Burma would have no claim on India for a share in these assets. If this is so, then the claim of India on Burma for part-earned pensions amounting to something like Rs. 4½ crores to Rs. 5½ crores would have no specific counterclaim to balance it and should be taken into account in the general settlement.

14. Leave credits (paragraph 84).—The Committee considered that India should formulate a specific claim against Burma for unexpended leave credits carried over by the joint staff at the time of separation.

15. Military charges (paragraphs 117—120).—It is of course accepted that Burma must bear the cost of any military garrison to be maintained in Burma and that this garrison must be maintained at sufficient strength to provide for all the normal requirements of Burma. The Committee, particularly having regard to the uncertainty as to the future constitutional position in the matter of the defence of India, did not feel able to make any final recommendation on the wider issue as to whether beyond this Burma ought to contribute to the general cost of the Army to be maintained in India, but it recognised that there might be grounds on which such a contribution might be demanded.

16. Tariffs (paragraph 124).—The Committee was of opinion that the two countries would find it to their mutual advantage to preserve free trade between each other in all indigenous articles and products, subject to the observation that it is understood that India would in the future replace by import duties the existing excise duties on such part of Burma's production of articles at present excisable, such as oils and silver, as may be consumed in India.

17. Other matters.—Consistent with their other views, the Committee considered that the general fraction determining the division of "unproductive" debt and pensionary liabilities should govern the apportionment of reparation receipts (paragraph 116) and of the payment on account of the British Navy (paragraph 121).

Note.

As to paragraph 8, we are not at all satisfied with the way in which the question of the allocation of the so-called "Unproductive" debt between India and Burma has been settled. It is based on the assumption that it is not possible to have a historic analysis of the elements composing this unproductive debt or to prepare a debtor and creditor account between India and Burma from the earliest years. We quite realise that a strict creditor and debtor account may not be available, but some of the outstanding features can give sufficient data for an approximate calculation. It is possible, for example, to estimate the cost of the 3 Burmese Wars which was borne by the Indian Exchequer, and an approximate idea of the same is given in the "note of the Financial Transaction between India and Burma" appended to the report prepared by Mr. Nixon. According to this note, the cost of the first Burmese War was between five and fifteen million pounds, the second Burmese War about one million pounds, and the third Burmese War between four to six crores of rupees. It will be possible for an arbitral tribunal to arrive at a satisfactory figure between these various extremes. As the Indian Exchequer has borne the cost of all wars waged by the East India Company or the Indian Government in India and sometimes even outside India it is only fair that the Burma should bear this part of the burden. Next it must be remembered that Burma must have been a deficit Province for a large number of years and its Railways had been running at a loss till recently, an attempt should be made to find out to what extent the Indian Exchequer has contributed to the financial position of Burma.

2. As to paragraph 15, we would like to add that the present strength of the Army in India is based on the need of protecting the land frontiers of the country as also for maintaining internal security. If Burma with its large land frontier and its wide area were to cut itself away from India, there must be a contribution by Burma towards maintaining the present strength of the Army, or, the strength of the Army should be proportionately reduced. It cannot be maintained that the Army should continue at its present strength and the component parts of the Empire should be at liberty to cut themselves off from it. This will be placing a premium on separation. We do not think it necessary to go into any greater detail about the various other questions raised in the memorandum and about which final conclusions for reasons mentioned therein have not been arrived at.

STATEMENT OF BUSINESS.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Leader of the House): With your permission, Sir, I desire to make a statement as to the probable course of Government business in the week beginning March, the 21st, Monday, the 21st and Tuesday, the 22nd, being gazetted holidays, the House will not sit. The House will sit for the transaction of Government business on Wednesday, the 23rd and Thursday, the 24th. The first business on

[Sir George Rainy.]

Wednesday, the 23rd will be the elections to the Standing Finance Committee and the Standing Committee on Emigration. We shall then proceed with the Legislative programme in the order indicated below :

(1) A motion for leave to introduce a Bill to establish a Medical Council in India and to provide for the maintenance of a British Indian Medical Register. It is hoped on a later date in the Session to make a motion that this Bill be referred to a Select Committee.

(2) Motions to take into consideration and pass the Bill to extend the operation of the Salt (Additional Import Duty) Act, 1931.

(3) Completion of the consideration, to be followed by a motion for passing, the Bill to supplement the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1930, as reported by the Select Committee.

(4) Motions to take into consideration and pass the Bill to provide against the publication of statements likely to promote unfriendly relations between His Majesty's Government and the Governments of Foreign States, as reported by the Select Committee.

(5) Motions to take consideration and pass the Bill to provide for the fostering and development of the sugar industry in British India, as reported by the Select Committee.

(6) Motions to take into consideration and pass the Bill to provide for the administration and discipline of the Indian Air Force, as reported by the Select Committee.

(7) Motions to take into consideration and pass the Bill to provide funds to enable Government to continue wireless broadcasting in India.

(8) Motions to take into consideration and pass the Bill to validate certain suits relating to public matters, as passed by the Council of State.

(9) Motions to take into consideration and pass the Bill further to amend the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, for a certain purpose, as passed by the Council of State.

(10) Motion to take into consideration the amendments made by the Council of State in the Bill to define and amend the law relating to partnership.

(11) Motions to refer to Select Committee :

(i) The Indian Merchant Shipping (Amendment) Bill,

(ii) The Tea Districts Emigrant Labour Bill,

(iii) The Indian Medical Council Bill.

The other items of business outstanding are a Resolution in the name of Sir Joseph Bhore in connection with the Road Fund, and a motion by Sir George Schuster to take into consideration the Report of the Standing Finance Committee on the Howard-Nixon Report.

On Thursday, the 24th, the House, after completing the election to (1) the Public Accounts Committee, and (2) the Railway Standing Finance Committee, will proceed with the business entered on the Agenda Paper of the previous day and not concluded on that day.

Friday and Saturday, the 25th and 26th March, being gazetted holidays, the House will not sit.

I desire, Sir, at this stage to intimate that in the event of the aforementioned business not being completed by the evening of the 24th March, we shall desire you to make a direction that the House shall sit on the week beginning the 28th March. Monday, the 28th March, being a gazetted holiday, we shall ask for your direction, Sir, that the House shall sit on Tuesday, the 29th, Wednesday, the 30th and Thursday, the 31st March. We have every hope, Sir, that the business of the session will be concluded by that date, but should we be disappointed it will be necessary for us to move you to make a further direction.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO THE PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster (Finance Member): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the non-official Members of the Assembly do proceed to elect, in the manner required by rule 51 of the Indian Legislative Rules, four Members to be Members of the Committee on Public Accounts in place of Mr. S. C. Mitra, Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan, Mr. T. N. Ramakrishna Reddi and Rao Bahadur M. C. Rajah, who have retired in accordance with sub-rule (4) of the same rule."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: I have to inform the Assembly that for the purpose of election of Members to the Public Accounts Committee, the Assembly Office will be open to receive nominations up to 12 noon on Monday, the 21st March and that the election, if necessary, will take place in this Chamber on Thursday, the 24th March, 1932. The election will be conducted in accordance with the principle of proportional representation by means of the single transferable vote.

THE GENERAL BUDGET—LIST OF DEMANDS—contd.

DEMAND NO. 28—EXECUTIVE COUNCIL—concl'd.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): Before taking up further consideration of Demands for Grants, the Chair would like to inform Honourable Members that in accordance with the arrangement which was agreed to by the House, the first four days have been occupied with token motions intended for the purpose of censure. The remaining two days, today and tomorrow, have been reserved for economy cuts, and the Chair holds in its hands a long list of agreed motions which are to be put before the House for the purpose of effecting economy. In that list the Chair notices a motion No. 22 which is obviously a token cut for the purpose of censure. According to the arrangement agreed to no token cuts can be taken up during these two days. The Chair however wishes to inform Honourable Members that if it is the unanimous desire of the House that the original arrangement arrived at should be varied to that extent and that the Chair should allow one more token cut to be discussed today,—as the first motion in continuation of the first four days,—then the Chair will raise no objection to such modification of the original arrangement, and would call upon the Honourable Member,

[Mr. President.]

Mr. B. Das, to move his token cut. The Chair would like to ask Honourable Members to state whether they desire such modification of the original arrangement.

Several Honourable Members: No, no.

Mr. President: Then it cannot be moved.

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadan): May I inquire if it will come up in its order?

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): Even then it is a token cut and is in conflict with the arrangement arrived at. I should like to inform the Honourable Member that the Chair could have refused to allow any further token cuts as not being in consonance with the arrangement previously arrived at, but the Chair did not wish to do so. The Chair wanted to give the House an opportunity of modifying the arrangement and to take up the Honourable Member's token cut now, but the House wishes to adhere to the arrangement which it unanimously arrived at, and the Chair cannot therefore help the Honourable Member.

Mr. B. Das: Sir, may I point out that a majority of the House, including the Government side, the Nationalist Party and the Independent Party are agreeable to it?

Mr. President: The Chair has put the matter to the House and it is clear that the House is not practically unanimous in favour of the proposed modification.

The question is:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 84,800 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1932, in respect of 'Executive Council'."

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND No. 16—CUSTOMS.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster (Finance Member): Sir, I beg to move:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 60,34,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1932, in respect of 'Customs'."

Insufficient Economy effected by Government under Customs.

Sir Abdur Rahim (Calcutta and Suburbs: Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I move:

"That the Demand under the head "Customs" be reduced by Rs. 6,57,000".

In moving this economy cut, I wish to state certain general considerations which apply not only to this motion, but also to the other motions that will follow. The amount that is mentioned here is the difference between the amount of economy recommended by the General Purposes Sub-committee and the amount accepted by the Government hitherto. The general position, Sir, so far as the proposals of economy are concerned, is this. The General Purposes Committee appointed to deal with the civil departments recommended, according to the summary given by the Government at page 77, a sum of Rs. 4,11,09,000; and the amount which the Government have so far been able to accept is Rs. 2,48,97,000, or nearly 2½ crores. There is thus a gap of Rs. 1,62,12,000. The total economy cuts effected by the Government both under the heads retrenchment and cuts in pay in the civil and military departments amount to Rs. 11,05,00,000. So far the economies that the Government propose to effect both in the civil and in the military departments are a great advance upon what they thought was possible at this time last year. At this time last year the Government thought that it would not be possible to accept a cut or to effect economies even to the extent of 2 crores; and the House will remember what a struggle there was between this side of the House and the Government Benches on this point. Sir, we feel that the Government have been able to advance in the matter of economy to a fairly substantial extent, but we also feel,—at least all the non-official groups including the European Group—that there is room for further economy both on the civil and on the military side, more on the military than on the civil, naturally, because the Military Budget is the much heavier Budget. The Honourable the Finance Member has told the House more than once with emphasis that he is prepared to go on pursuing all possibilities of further economy and will not rest satisfied until everything has been done that is possible in that connection. Sir, we accept that assurance. All that we are seeking at present is not to make up the deficiency that there is according to the committees' proposals and according to what is the demand of this side of the House, having regard to what has been done so far by the Government because the amount of 48 lakhs is the total amount of economies which could be effected if all the amounts that are on the agenda are accepted by the Government. That amounts only to 48 lakhs. It is far short even of the difference between the proposals of the General Purposes Sub-Committee and the acceptances of the Government. The difference is, as I have said, 162½ lakhs; but as the House is aware, it is not possible for us to make up the total amount, as a good portion of the Budget is non-voted. Therefore, we have to be satisfied with moving such motions as are permissible within the limits of the voted grants under the different heads. Therefore if we succeed in carrying this motion and other similar motions that are on the list, we shall only be able to effect economies to the extent of 48 lakhs and no more; and there is another difficulty in which we are placed by reason of the fact that portions of the Demands in the Budget are voted and other portions are non-voted; that is to say, we cannot in most cases lay our finger on the particular activities or the personnel which in our opinion ought to be retrenched. We have therefore to make a lump cut of the highest figure that is available and leave it to the Government to distribute the economies in the best way possible according to the recommendations made by the different Sub-Committees.

I have mentioned that at this time last year Government were not prepared even to reduce the Budget by the very moderate demand that we made at the time; our demand then was necessarily moderate, because we had not an opportunity of studying the Budget; we have been able to do that now in the various sub-committees; and the Government themselves had not been able to go into the question in the manner in which we have been able to do under the advice and directions of the Government. The financial position of the Government has been getting steadily worse for some time past. When the General Purposes Sub-Committee and the other Sub-Committees sat, the financial position was very acute and we were advised by the Honourable the Finance Member, who himself is the Chairman of the main Retrenchment Committee, that we should effect as much economy as was possible. He was also good enough to give us a rough estimate of what he thought was possible in the Demands under the purview of the General Purposes Sub-Committee; and I take it that he gave similar estimates to other Sub-Committees. We went to work on that basis, and as I have informed the House, our Committee went as carefully as they could upon the materials and evidence at our disposal, through all the different items of expenditure, and we came to certain conclusions which are embodied in the two reports, and we also gave the Honourable the Finance Member our recommendations as regards the Foreign and Political Department, with respect to which we have not been able to complete our report so far. The General Purposes Sub-Committee, for which I am in a special position to speak, consisted of members selected from all parts of the House, and also an Honourable Member of the Council of State and further of two distinguished public men from outside, the late Mr. K. C. Roy who had special experience of the working of the various departments of the Government of India and a very intimate knowledge of the composition and history of those departments, and Mr. A. Rangaswami Iyengar, who was a Member of this House some time ago and who is well known as a politician of distinction. Business experience was very well represented by the Honourable Rai Bahadur Lala Ram Saran Das, who carries on a large business in the Punjab and elsewhere, and Mr. Ramsay Scott, a member of the European Group. We had also the advantage of at least two gentlemen with experience of administration in the provinces, Diwan Bahadur Harbilas Sarda and Khan Bahadur Wilayatullah. Then we had also as our colleagues my friends Mr. S. C. Mitra and Mian Shah Nawaz. I may say that the Honourable the Finance Member will be surprised to learn that some of these gentlemen had as intimate a knowledge of the official arrangements in the Government of India as any official himself. And last, but not least, we had the advantage of having as one of our members, Mr. Nixon, a representative of the Finance Department and I may tell the House that Mr. Nixon is a man who always speaks out plainly his views, and he gave us a great deal of information on the subjects of our inquiry. He did not mince words in representing the official views and what the officials considered to be their difficulties with respect to certain recommendations that we might make. We had of course to examine official witnesses, representatives of departments, and one or two members of the public who had experience of certain departments and who were in a special position to speak of them,—men like Sir Chunilal Mehta for instance. Sir, the conviction that was forced upon us after our inquiry was that in most departments there was over staffing and that there was considerable room for retrenchment of staff without in any way impairing the efficiency of the departments, and that exactly corresponds with the general impression of the public, not only the Indian but the European public as well, as to the composition of the departments of the Government of India. My friend on the other side said that there are certain phrases current such as the administration is top-heavy and phrases of like character. These phrases are not without meaning. This is still the conviction of every one on this side of the House, and I shall be very much surprised if that is not also the opinion of many officials themselves, that the departments are in many cases top-heavy.

Now, Sir, our investigations disclosed that the general impression that prevails in the country is thoroughly well founded, and if we have made proposals for retrenchment, we have done so with the full knowledge and consciousness of our responsibility in the matter, even though we are non-officials, fully aware of the responsibility that rested upon us not to make recommendations which would in any way impair the efficiency of the working of the various departments of the Government of India. All our desire has been throughout, I can assure Sir George Schuster, to strengthen his hands so as to enable him to convince his colleagues in the Government of India that there is room for economy, and he well knows what dire necessity there is for effecting economy in the administration of the Government of India. It will not be possible for us in moving these motions to discuss every demand at length or fully, and I submit to the House, it is not necessary that we should do so, because we have before us the Reports of the different Committees. They had the time and the opportunity to study these Reports, and the Government have been good enough to supply us with a summary of the results of their deliberations, how much they have been able to accept so far and how much is under consideration and what particular recommendations they have rejected. They have also given their reasons for rejecting some of our recommendations. The House is in full possession of all that information, and it would be simply waste of time if we were to discuss the whole matter once again on the floor of the House.

Now, Sir, I come to this particular motion, and I will just make one or two observations regarding this demand. I wish to assure Honourable Members, especially my friend Sir Henry Gidney, that there is nothing about the Customs Department which particularly appeals to me. I made it a point not to look at the personnel of the different branches though we were supplied with the information, because some Members wanted naturally to know what was the pay and the strength of the department and also how it was composed. I assure the House that so far as I was concerned, I had not the time to look at the composition of particular departments. That did not form the basis of our recommendations in any way. Sir, as regards Customs, we were fully aware that this department was engaged in collecting revenues for the Government, and if we made any recommendations to retrench the staff which would interfere with that collection, then of course such a proposition Government could not accept, but to the best of our judgment we studiously avoided making any such recommendation. As regards this 6 lakhs, a good portion of it consists of what are called overtime allowances and penalty fees. That subject has already been discussed and I only want to point out this that having regard to the nature of the work which these Customs officers perform, be they Anglo-Indians or Indians, it makes no difference, they are very much overpaid. It must be remembered that there are slack seasons and busy seasons, and in slack seasons naturally the preventive staff has a slack time; but then suddenly sometimes boats come in and some of the merchants want their cargoes cleared without delay, whether it be a Sunday or a special holiday or it is night, and the merchants are quite willing to pay what are called overtime fees. Then a portion of the Customs staff is requisitioned to perform these duties,—it may be at night, say for four five or six hours,—but our case is that it is part of their duty to perform that work without any extra payment. They must be prepared when the busy time comes on to work beyond the ordinary allotted office hours. That is the position.

Then, Sir, the officers of the Customs Department of various classes are distinctly better paid than men in the provincial services who do the same class of work and are drawn from the class of people with similar, if not better, educational qualifications. We know what the responsibilities of the police officers are in the provinces. If you compare the salary of the Customs officers doing a particular kind of work, for instance the preventive work, with the salaries of provincial officers of the police doing similar work, you will find that the Customs officers are distinctly better off, and yet in the Police Department there is no such question as overtime payment. The Inspectors and Sub-Inspectors of Police are frequently called on at any time of the day or night, and they have to go and investigate cases at the spot, and some of them have to do preventive work more or less of the same class as work in the Customs Department. As a matter of fact, there is no doubt that police officers in the provinces have to work under far more arduous, difficult and risky conditions than the Customs officers. Take the preventive Inspector of Customs: his salary

12 Noos. is Rs. 575, some men get special pay. Let me take Calcutta, where the Customs officers also work. The Inspectors of Police there get Rs. 175 to Rs. 300. So, there is a very good margin, and the Customs officers are very much better off. The appraisers get Rs. 250 to Rs. 675, whereas the Sub-Inspectors of Police get, I think, Rs. 130 in Calcutta and Rs. 160, in the Delhi city. Look at this difference in pay. (Lieut. Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: "Is that the police pay?") Yes, and I am giving the figures from the Civil List. These overtime fees, penalty fees, or whatever you call them,—they undoubtedly belong to Government. The Government distributes them to the officers that work there, and also partly to certain clubs and institutes in which the seamen are interested—recreation clubs, seamen's institutes and so on. These fees amounted in 1931-32 to Rs. 12 lakhs. Whatever might have been the origin of the practice, whatever might have been their justification in easy financial days, we have to consider whether in these hard times when Government are reduced to such straits we should not be justified in asking Government not to give away the whole of it. We only suggested that, having regard to the practice that has prevailed and the expectations which have naturally formed themselves in the minds of the people, let them have half, and let the other half go to the public exchequer. Only Mr. Ramsay Scott, one of the members, held that he would be satisfied if 25 per cent was taken by the treasury to begin with, and then afterwards the proportion might be increased in favour of Government. What is the alternative that we have been faced with by the present financial position? The alternative is a crushing burden of taxation weighing heavily and most injuriously on industries, commerce, trade, and even on men of the smallest means. Even the veriest poor have to pay additional taxation. In those circumstances can it be said that our demand that 50 per cent. of these fees which belong to the Government, should be appropriated by Government, is unreasonable? That is the gist of our recommendations so far as these overtime allowances are concerned. The total Demand for Customs is about Rs. 90 lakhs, and what we are proposing now is that that Demand should be reduced by Rs. 6 lakhs. Surely, it cannot be said that this is unreasonable. If the Finance Member could satisfy the House that the financial distress is gone, that we are really on better days, and revenue will be coming in now much faster than it has been doing for the last two or three years, then other considerations might arise. But I submit that at present there is really no room for choice, and I therefore commend to the consideration of the House the motion which stands in my name. Sir, I move.

Mr. President: Motion moved:

Sir Hugh Cocke (Bombay: European): I was a little alarmed when I got this list of cuts, having regard to the largeness of the figures, but I now understand that they are really put up from the point of principle,—that Committees of this House which went into retrenchment last year with great care made certain recommendations, and Government not having accepted those recommendations in full, these cuts are put down to represent the difference between what was recommended by the Committees and what was accepted by the Government. Therefore, on that point, I think as a matter of principle one can make no complaint. The Honourable the Mover has covered a large field in his remarks, and we are indebted to him not only for his great services last year on the Retrenchment Committee, which I think this House appreciates very much (Cheers), but also for pressing home the recommendations that have been made. There is no good having retrenchment committees unless you stand firm and press the recommendations home, subject, of course, to Government satisfying us, if they can, that they have not been able to accept all the recommendations made. And putting down these cuts in this form does give the Government an opportunity of telling us why it has not been possible to accept the cuts. We have been told that Government in the aggregate have accepted about 87 per cent. I am inclined to think that that is fairly good. Certainly, in business if you write to your agent and tell him he has got to cut down his telegram expenses from Rs. 10,000 to Rs. 5,000, you naturally demand something more than he can achieve, and if he cuts down the expense by one-fourth when you asked for half, you will probably be satisfied more or less in the end. But my particular reason for rising now is to ask Government to explain to the House very carefully why they have not been able to meet all the recommendations made. Taking the items under Customs, there are six items, and in several of them the Government have accepted practically the whole of the recommendations made. In two cases they have not done so. I think it is not for us to do the talking today; certainly not until we have heard the Government. We want the Government to explain. I hope Customs will not take the whole day, and I think we should be able to get on to other items. I do hope that Government will give us their reasons for not having accepted the recommendations of the Committee.

Mr. J. O. Nixon (Government of India: Nominated Official): The Honourable the Leader of the European Group pointed out that this motion has been raised as a matter of principle: and the principle that the Honourable the Mover is attempting to get the House to agree to is really this, that, when the Government have appointed a committee of the nature of these

[Mr. J. C. Nixon.]

Retrenchment Committees, it should, without further examination, accept that Committee's recommendations ipso facto. The Honourable the Mover of this motion is putting forward that point of view now, as he put it forward in some of the introductory remarks to one of his Committee's reports, where he held that the Government wasted time and money in going over the various recommendations of Committees which they had appointed, and in endeavouring to give effect to them. He held, in practically these words, that Government should, after they appointed their Committees, accept their recommendations ipso facto. At the same time, I may point out to you, Sir, and to the House that he made a similar charge against Government in regard to their treatment of their heads of departments and subordinate officers. The Committee said:

"We are convinced that supervision and co-ordination is generally very much overdone in the Government of India. What is clearly needed is greater reliance on the sense of responsibility of the various units of administration."

That is to say, the Committee also asked Government to give more weight to the advice and recommendations of their departmental heads. The recommendations of the Retrenchment Committees were in the normal course referred to the heads of the various departments, who gave the Government of India their careful opinions in the matter. Where the opinions of those heads of departments and the opinions expressed by the various Retrenchment Committees varied, the General Retrenchment Committee omitted to lay down the principle according to which Government should proceed. In the hurry of things, Government have, to some extent unfortunately, had to follow one of the principles laid down by the General Purposes Retrenchment Sub-Committee, and they have had to lay a very considerable amount of reliance on the opinions expressed by the heads of the various departments; and after all, Sir, it seems to me that any body which claims such jurisdiction as the Honourable the Mover of this Resolution is claiming is going beyond anything that any Government, either democratic or constitutional or otherwise, could ever possibly admit. It is going a long way beyond what a legally constituted court of law would ask for. I think the members of our Committee would acknowledge that in many cases they had had to frame the charges against their accused after the evidence had been recorded and after the accused had gone. Therefore, contrary to some part of the procedure in courts of law, the accused had not before our Committees an opportunity of answering the charges that were levelled against them. Yet despite that, the Honourable the Mover of this motion suggests that there should be no court of appeal. Not only does he urge the Government to carry out retrenchment to the last anna of the recommendations which the various Committees made and exactly along those lines, but as far as I was able to judge from various expressions used by Honourable Members sitting in his neighbourhood, he and they objected to Government conducting retrenchment and obtaining economies in any other directions. This, Sir, I suggest, is a state of things which no Government, either the present or the future, will be able to accept.

The Honourable the Leader of the European Group has invited Government to examine the actual proposals of the Retrenchment Committees and to state the differences of opinion between Government on the one hand and the Committee's recommendations on the other. In regard to the Customs grant, this is a comparatively simple task. The difference between the Committee and the Government in this matter is focussed down to two items and to two items only. The Committee recommended that in the matter of Customs staff, by which I include both officers and the subordinate staff, there should be a general all round reduction of roughly 15 per cent., amounting in all to about 8½ lakhs of economy. Government, after considering the matter with the help of their heads of departments, have concluded that consistently with safety they cannot effect economy in that direction of more than 6 lakhs. I think myself that the House a few days ago did not altogether appreciate or give full value to some words which passed from the lips of an Honourable friend of mine in the European Group when he took up the subject of the Customs Department and said that in some respects the Customs Department was the last of the departments to be retrenched. It must be perfectly evident to all Honourable Members of this House that to conduct retrenchment in a sort of punishing spirit is not retrenchment at all. One is not conducting retrenchment in the Customs Department because one cannot let that department go scot free, when one was hitting some of the others. The definite object in view was to obtain economy and to help to balance the Budget, and any process which meant that we reduced the revenue collecting staffs so far that they were not physically able to collect as much revenue as before, and therefore we lost more on one side of the Budget than we gained on the other, would certainly not be described as retrenchment, and ought really to be described in terms which you, Mr. President, would probably not permit in this House. I have no doubt my Chief, the Honourable the Finance Member, will deal more completely with that aspect of the case when he takes up this subject, but there are one or two points of view in connection with this subject of the retrenchment of staff about which I should like to say a few words. The Honourable the Mover of this Resolution, at the instance of his henchman, if I may say so, quoted certain rates of pay to indicate that some of the preventive staff

Sir Abdur Rahim (Calcutta and Suburbs: Muhammadan Urban): I do not think the word "henchman" is a proper word to apply to any Honourable Member of this House.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The word is offensive and I should like the Honourable Member to withdraw it, especially as he has applied it to an Honourable Member who is a colleague of the Honourable the Mover.

Mr. J. C. Nixon: I withdraw that, Sir.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: May I point out, Sir, that in the proper interpretation of the word, there is really nothing offensive. Henchman simply means a follower. I do assure you that there is nothing offensive in the word in the ordinary sense.

Mr. President: The word has been used and it is being used in a very offensive sense.

Mr. J. C. Nixon: Sir, the Honourable the Mover of this Resolution quoted for the information of the House certain rates of pay which the preventive staff at Calcutta was getting, and made certain comparisons with the rates of pay drawn by certain police officers. If I heard him correctly, he left this House with the impression that a certain grade of preventive officer was getting a rate of pay which started at Rs. 500 a month, and made a comparison with certain grades of police officers, who started on Rs. 130 a month. If he and the Members of this House will refer to page 17 of the Demands for Grants, they will observe that preventive officers in the Customs Department in Calcutta start on Rs. 130 a month, that is, at the same rate of pay as was quoted for police officers.

There is one other aspect of this subject which I should like to refer to and that is this. The Honourable the Mover of this motion in the earlier part of the week complained of the terms which we were offering to retrenched personnel and doubted whether we were giving them sufficiently lavish compensation. In presenting the cut of the amount which he has proposed he has not struck anything out, I notice, for the additional compensation which, if the matter was in his hands, he would pay to the retrenched personnel. Therefore, I take it that his proposal at present is that, despite the fact that we are not paying adequate compensation to the staff whom we are retrenching, we should still throw out more of them.

But, Sir, that is not the main point in the amount making up the sum of 6 lakhs odd which the Honourable the Mover of this Resolution is concerned in. The large item is the item of overtime allowance and such-like. In the Demands for Grants, at the end of the Customs Demand on pages 28 and 29 is an explanatory note giving the details of the figures composing this payment and also of those composing the corresponding item of receipt. It is perhaps not well known to Members of this House, at any rate it has not been frequently expressed so far, that this is a charge levied on a certain section of the trade for certain services rendered. It has been a principle expressed by Government ever since such charges were levied that they did not intend under any circumstances to make a net profit out of the transactions; that they were putting this imposition on the trade in order to make up for the extra expenditure in which they were involved. As a matter of fact Government have not entirely kept to that principle. Certain portions of these receipts do in certain circumstances accrue to Government. However, the point that I emphasize strongly is that at present this is a payment made by the trade for services rendered. It seems to me that the Honourable the Mover of this Resolution, in proposing that Government should take to themselves the major portion of these receipts, is rather liable to entrench on a privilege of this House which this House no doubt very jealously guards; for it seems to me to amount to this, that the imposition of this payment on a particular section of the trade of India shall no longer be for services rendered, but should constitute a sort of a tax. A tax of that sort can only be imposed through an Act and through the instrumentality of this House. (Laughter.) Also, I can see, there might be considerable objections put up by the merchants themselves, who at present feel it pays them to pay for services rendered, if they felt that this was no longer being paid out to the actual officers engaged in the job but was being taken into the Government coffers.

Sir, in this matter I would like to remind the House of some words expressed by my Honourable friend on the opposite Bench during the course of this week's debate, because he and I on this occasion find ourselves seeing very much eye to eye—I refer to my Honourable friend, Mr. Mitra, who I think agrees to a considerable extent with the point of view which I am about to express. He and I quite agree that it is right and moral to take from the trade the money that we are taking for this particular purpose; he and I are, I believe, both agreed that we should pay at any rate some considerable portion of this sum to the labourer who does the work. I believe it is a principle of his that the labourer is worthy of his hire; therefore, I take it my Honourable friend, Mr. Mitra, is definitely against this motion, and that he does not think that Government can possibly appropriate this money to itself. What he thinks is that this money, instead of being paid to the present employees of Government, should be paid to another set of employees—a point of view with which I personally have very great sympathy—but I would point out to him that, if I have expressed his view correctly, it is hardly consistent that he should vote in the lobby against the Government. As regards the possibility of the overtime money being used, especially at the present moment, for giving relief to some of the men thrown out of employment, I may say that, under the instructions of the Honourable the Finance Member, the Central Board of Revenue are considering the matter.

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division: Muhammadan Rural): Then why don't you accept the theory of the Independent Group and consider it along with it? (Laughter).

Mr. J. O. Nixon: There is one other matter to which I would like to address myself, and that is to accuse the Honourable the Mover of this Resolution of what appears to me to be something of an inconsistency. You can, Sir, take a horse to the water, but you cannot necessarily make him drink. On the first page of this pamphlet which Government provided for the perusal of Members, under the head "Customs", a total was drawn of Rs. 16 lakhs odd showing the recommendations of the General Purposes Committee. The second section was devoted to those specific recommendations which Government had found themselves able to accept. The Honourable the Mover has subtracted those two sums in the motion before the House. The Committee proposed a reduction in the grant of 5.88 lakhs. Government have put it down that of those 5.88 lakhs, they have been able to achieve, as a matter of retrenchment, only 2.36 lakhs. Consequently the Honourable the Mover of this Resolution asks that this House shall reduce the grant for Customs on this account by 3.5 lakhs roughly. Had the Honourable the Mover continued his reading down that page he would have discovered at the bottom, almost the last item, a statement under the heading, "Reductions in overtime fees on account of the depression of trade", a reduction of 2 lakhs 12 thousand. Sir, we in the Finance Department and Government hardly felt that we should be right to call that "retrenchment". We are getting a saving on the expenditure side of our Budget of that 2 lakhs 12 thousand; this amount was actually in the 1931-32 Budget, but we felt that it would be a misnomer to call that a matter of retrenchment. Therefore we put it down below in a perhaps too inconspicuous place; but I do draw the attention of the House to the fact that of that 3.52 lakhs reduction, which forms part of the motion before the House, we have in fact already achieved 2.12 lakhs; and I have no doubt that as I have now pointed this out to the

[Mr. J. C. Nixon.]

Honourable the Mover, he will come up before this House and ask its permission to alter the figure in his motion by that 2.12 lakhs, because it is quite evident that this House can not expect to ask Government to subtract that figure twice over.

Sir Abdur Rahim: Will Government accept that?

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney (Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I listened very attentively to the remarks made by my Honourable friend Sir Abdur Rahim, and I was very glad indeed to receive his assurance that his desire to retrench in the Customs Service has nothing whatever to do with the personnel of that Department. I refer particularly to the Preventive Service. Let me assure him on my side that any criticism I may make will also have nothing whatever to do with the personnel. The remarks I desire to make refer entirely to the criticisms he has made and the report the General Purposes Sub-Committee submitted for retrenchment in the Customs Department. Sir, although I was not a Member of that Committee, I claim to have some inside knowledge of this Department and it is, therefore, with a sense of responsibility that I again rise to take part in this discussion. I still say I am a whole-hogger so far as retrenchment goes. I consider the Finance Member and his army of Retrenchment Sub-Committee hydra-headed monsters have done a great wrong to employees of all grades trying to empty their purses by cutting their salaries, etc. They have reduced the salaries of public servants in order to serve the interests of the general public. I submit that is a wrong policy. I know my Honourable friend the Finance Member and will never agree on that matter, so we must agree to disagree. In my opinion the Honourable Member in repeating his demand for further Customs retrenchment and demanding of Government to accept his cut is playing the role of Shylock who, in asking for his pound of flesh, want every drop of blood, forgetful of the fact that this overtime is earned at the sweat of the brow.

Mr. K. Ahmed: You are therefore acting as Portia.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: I am trying to. Sir, in his desire to obtain every drop of blood he brings this motion before the House today notwithstanding the fact that it was very fully discussed and lost on a division about three days ago. I am really very much surprised he should have thought it fit to bring this motion again before the House. Sir, I gladly admit members of the General Purposes Sub-Committee deserve the thanks of this House for the great services they have rendered. But members of the Committee have yet to realise that of times economy and efficiency are not compatible factors specially in the administration of Departments. Moreover you can carry your campaign of economy a little too far. I believe many Members will agree with me when I say that you have carried this retrenchment stunt a little too far in the present instance. And what is bound to be the result, especially in a Department like the Customs—dissatisfaction, discontent, and a threatened lowering of the morale of the men. I have not the slightest doubt the Honourable the Finance Member is not very happy in his seat today when he hears this demand being made from those of his own creation—members of the General Purposes Sub-Committee, and I am tempted to quote what the Railway Member said to me the other day, "He asked for it and he has got it". When I read this report and listened to the Mover's speech I was reminded of the fate of the Railway crew system as perpetrated by the Railway Board which was so severely criticised this morning at question time. The Railway Board introduced the crew system because they felt they were being defrauded of money by the public. They one day suddenly awakened to the fact that they must retrench the pay of the crew system to ultimately discover that the crew system make good the deficiency by defrauding the public. The Moody-Ward Committee was appointed who made drastic retrenchments with the result that today the Railway Board is losing money heavily and have a dissatisfied staff of employees. The Honourable the Mover has forgotten that the Customs is the greatest revenue earning department in the Government of India.

An Honourable Member: No.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: I hear a "No" from the opposite side. I challenge you to deny what I have just said.

Mr. President: Order, order.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: I beg your pardon, Sir. I challenge the Honourable the Mover or any one in this House to produce another Department in the Government of India that supplies the same amount of revenue to the Government of India as does the Customs Service. Sir, they cannot do it. Sir, the Honourable the Mover of this motion forgot to mention the great difference between the expenditure and the receipts of the Customs Department between 1913 and 1931. Government returns clearly show that whereas in 1913-14 the expenditure and receipts were respectively Rs. 41.34 and 1113.78 lakhs in 1931-32, these figures were 96.44 and 5445.97 lakhs. So here we have a department that is bringing into the Government as revenue more than sixty times the amount of money expended on it, and yet the Honourable Member has selected this one department for such drastic retrenchment and is insisting on Government accepting it. Sir, apart from what the Honourable the Mover has said and apart from what the Government Member, Mr. Nixon, has said on this matter, it will be interesting for this House to know what a great financier said about this Department, I mean Lord Incheape. This is what the Incheape Committee said in their Report regarding the Customs Department:

"This Committee's observation that compared with 1913-14 there was probably a falling off of trade in the period ending 1922-23 may be true of the state of trade to-day, but the precise position cannot be verified statistically. That Committee recommended that "strength and pay of the staff at the various customs houses should be examined with a view to possible economies," but "having regard to the importance of maintaining revenue", it did not recommend any further reduction. In fact it was found necessary to increase the staff, and in the case of some establishments, to enhance the scales of pay."

The Incheape Committee came to that conclusion as far as the retrenchment on the Customs Department is concerned a few years ago, and today we have the General Purposes Sub-Committee recommending the very opposite. The Honourable Member for Government explained very fully what action the Government have taken. They have, in the natural course of events, submitted the recommendations of the Committee for the opinion of the heads of the departments. And after all, I ask this House who knows better than the head of a department as to what economy is possible and what is not especially when one and all realise the acute present day financial stringency. It may be said, the head of a department has vested and even personal interests. Well, I again ask the Honourable the Mover of this motion, if an Ordinance were issued by the Government of India reducing the fees of all lawyers to a maximum of Rs. 50 per day with nothing extra for overwork, what would he, an eminent lawyer, do? Why, he would shout the law courts down. He would be up in arms.

Sir Abdur Rahim: Most certainly not.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: He would not tamely submit to this retrenchment. This is exactly what I am doing in response to his treatment of the Preventive Customs Officers. I am shouting down all his Committee recommendations and I intend to go on shouting till Government decline to accept his motion. I shall be silent only then.

Sir, on this Committee were eminent journalists and lawyers and eminent people from the Punjab, a province with no ports of its own or Customs Department, but there were no workmen on the Committee. What the Committee really needed was two or three workmen to put them in possession of actual facts. Now, Sir, what have Government done? The Government have accepted the major part of the retrenchment recommendations of this Committee. There is still a balance of about 6 lakhs which the Honourable the Mover wants to force the Government to still further retrench—his last drop of retrenchment blood—and that is the real reason why he has again presented it to this House today having failed, as I said before, in his previous efforts, three or four days ago, when my friend Mr. Mitra moved a motion before this House as a censure motion. Let us see what retrenchments have already been effected. Government have cut 10 per cent. of the staff; Government have cut 10 per cent. of pay; Government have cut down uniform and other allowances, but what is worst of all—and the Honourable the Mover cannot deny knowledge of it—is that in addition to this the men have for years found their overtime reducing, till today it is 44 per cent. below 1927, and this motion demands that this much reduced overtime be still further retrenched by 50 per cent. If any one will take trouble to work this out, he will really see how these men have suffered so far and what is now being demanded from them. Sir, the Honourable Member again drew a comparison between the Customs and the Police Departments. Surely he knows very well that the Police Department is not a revenue earning department; it is a money spending department. Surely, he realises, it does not require, as his report hints, physical force or a strong arm to demonstrate utility of an efficient Preventive Customs Officer. It wants brains, it wants a high sense of honesty and responsibility. I think the comparison is an absolutely illogical and absurd one. Then he said the police get no overtime or allowances. Surely the Honourable Member is aware of the fact that that is not so. The police do get overtime and allowances. When the Honourable Member says that they get no allowance he displays a lamentable lack of inside knowledge of the Police Department.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Additional fee for extra work.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Sir, the real point at issue is this. The Honourable Member demands of Government to deduct 50 per cent. of this overtime. He is upset because all his committee demands have not been accepted and he wants to force the hands of Government. This overtime allowance is paid, as the House knows, to the over-worked Preventive officers of this Department. This overtime comes from the merchants' purse—not the Government. It is paid to Government by the merchants and Government gives it to the men in return for their overtime services, using a part of it for philanthropic purposes and social institutions. Now, Sir, say, the Government refused to receive this money from the merchants, would the Honourable the Mover and his Committee object to the merchants giving it direct to the men for extra services rendered? Then, say, the merchants refused to give this overtime money to Government, what would be the result? Government would have to engage additional staff on high initial salaries to perform this extra work. I ask the Mover, is this his idea of economy, would this be cheaper to Government in the long run? Surely he must now see the folly, the incongruity of his insistent demand for retrenching this overtime? Surely he must see that this will neither save Government a single pie nor increase its revenue and surely he will not deny that if Government did accept his cut motion and retrenched 50 per cent. of this overtime it would be forced to engage additional staff to clear the over-work at a much higher cost; otherwise it would have to face congested ports and reduced import revenues and other dock dues. Is this the unenviable position the Mover desires to force Government into? If so, then his aim is not economy but financial loss. I should prefer to call this retrenchment pennywise and pound foolish and one that has everything to condemn and nothing to commend it. The Honourable Member says "No". I suppose these are the blood drops he wants with his pound of flesh from the Preventive Officer's overtime, utterly obvious of the profound amenia that will result in expecting overworked and underpaid officers to work long hours of overtime without adequate remuneration. Sir, I am one with the General Purposes Committee in their desire to retrench, but I really do think the retrenchments which Government have already accepted are ample. I submit, with all the emphasis I can command that if this Retrenchment Committee goes too far and if Government, in their weakness, accept any further demands for retrenchment of their staff, they will be asking for trouble. Government surely know they are today face to face with a situation of grave labour unrest. Your servants are giving you loyal service. They are silently bearing the burden of their reduced pay with increased labour loyalty and with the greatest forbearance and patience. Do not overstep the mark. I beg of Government, indeed I solemnly warn Government, do not go beyond that mark—in other words do not retrench any more—because, if they do they will only set ablaze the smouldering embers of grave discontent that today exists in every department of the Government of India and to which these Retrenchment Committees are adding fuel and which, as sure as night follows day, will result in such an unparalleled economic catastrophe that Government will regret they ever appointed these Retrenchment Committees and the Mover will equally regret he pressed his motion before this House today. With these remarks, Sir, and this warning I ask Government to reject this demand which I oppose.

(Mr. Yamin Khan rose to speak.)

Mr. President: Before I call upon the Honourable Member to speak, I wish to know how much time he is likely to take. Today being Friday, the Chair would like to adjourn the House now unless the Honourable Member is likely to finish in five or six minutes.

[Mr. President.]

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan (Agra Division: Muhamnadan Rural): I shall not take more than five or six minutes.

In the beginning I must pay my tribute to the General Purposes Sub-Committee, which took a lot of trouble in going thoroughly into this question and took great pains in examining this subject. We all appreciate the good work which has been done by this Committee. But with one remark which fell from my Honourable friend, Sir Abdur Rahim, I do not agree. He said that this Committee was composed of all parties and of all shades of opinion in this House. Unfortunately my party was not represented therein. He knows the circumstances, and I do not wish to repeat them on the floor of the House. My party was not represented, in spite of my great protests and in spite of my representations which I made at that time. But I do not wish to disclose as to who was responsible for my party not being represented on the General Purposes Retrenchment Committee. The one principle which I should like to make clear at the very beginning is this. It was decided that the reports of the various Sub-Committees should come before the main Retrenchment Committee and that the reports should be discussed there. After the interim reports of the various Sub-Committees were ready, they decided that they must give a chance to the Government of India to go through these reports without giving any chance to the main Retrenchment Committee or without allowing the main Retrenchment Committee to have any voice in the affair. So these reports are really the reports of the various Sub-Committees, and they are not the report of the main Retrenchment Committee. We have got no share or responsibility in making these recommendations, but the responsibility for each report rests on the particular Sub-Committee which sat on particular subjects. In this way I do not stand committed to any proposals made by the different Sub-Committees, and therefore we must examine each point on its own merits. We have to go thoroughly into each case and to see whether any case has been made out for retrenchment, and it is only then that we can give our support to any proposal. But if we find that any proposal goes against the principle which we have adopted and if any recommendation, whether made by one Sub-Committee or the other, contravenes the principle which we had in our view, and if that recommendation was made, ignoring that principle, then we cannot find our way to lend our support. One principle which we have to take in considering the report of the General Purposes Sub-Committee, is that we should not touch very materially the salaries of the officials who draw a salary below Rs. 500. We, in the Sub-Committee of Posts and Telegraphs, took great care in going through this question of overtime allowance and discussed it at great length. We found there were some telegraphists who drew overtime allowance. We found there were people in the railways who drew overtime allowance. So this question of overtime allowance is not peculiar to the Customs Department. We find this prevailing in so many other departments, and so we must treat this similarly and simultaneously. If we pick up only one particular department, it will not be right or fair to stop it, unless the main Retrenchment Committee comes to the conclusion in future that it should be abolished all through. But before we come to this conclusion whether overtime allowance should be retrenched or not, one principle will have to be taken into consideration and it is this: that a man who joins the service has in view the prospects in the service. He joins in the grade of Rs. 175 to Rs. 350, and he knows that he will make up over and above this Rs. 50 to Rs. 60 a month by doing extra work. If we make a sweeping retrenchment at this time, we will be depriving that man of the salary which he really expected at the time he entered service. We have already got a ten per cent. cut in the salary of all the employees. This man in the Customs Department will be deprived not only of ten per cent. of his fixed salary, but also his overtime in full. In this way he will forgo a substantial portion of his salary. This will act very harshly on the poor employee. If this recommendation is accepted, it will apply to low paid subordinates who are getting salaries from Rs. 175 to Rs. 350 and from Rs. 350 rising to Rs. 650. This is not a big salary at all. They are not people from whom you ought to take out a substantial grant of the kind which they are getting. I would not mind if 25 per cent., or 10 per cent. of this extra amount which they are getting, is also taken out. That would be quite sufficient; but beyond that, unless and until we come to one deliberate conclusion in the main Retrenchment Committee, I am afraid we cannot accept that proposal.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch Till Twenty Minutes Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Twenty Minutes Past Two of the Clock. Mr. President in the Chair.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I must at the very outset in regard to this motion, which has been described as an economic cut, make my position very clear. I was inclined to support this motion at the outset, but I have absolutely and definitely changed my mind after hearing the Leader of the Independent Party. He was the Chairman of a sub-committee known as the Retrenchment Sub-Committee and a Chairman of a retrenchment sub-committee cannot force his cut down the throats of an administration because he wants what he has recommended should be incorporated. As an Executive Councillor, he should have known—I regret his absence at present but I cannot postpone my speech awaiting his presence—as an ex-Executive Councillor he should have known that Committees are appointed to advise and, for members of committees, though they have constitutional authority, it is not the usual parliamentary etiquette, to say that every comma and every syllable of their recommendation should be carried out. I can understand the enunciation of the general principles. I can also understand the carrying out of large cuts. When my friend, Sirdar Harbans Singh, came forward with a censure cut—and I still maintain that a censure cut is a censure cut and a token cut is a token cut, but I do not understand an economic cut which is uneconomical—I say when my friend Sirdar Harbans Singh came forward with a censure cut reducing the supply to the Executive Council to one rupee, (he left one rupee so that it might be called a censure), there was not sufficient strength on the Opposition side, or for that matter there was not sufficient opinion in favour of Mr. Harbans Singh in the all-Party collaborations to stand by that motion. This is the first time in the history of this Assembly when Ordinances rage outside, that a handful of Oppositionists do not make it possible for this side of the House to censure the Government. It is absurd and ridiculous for any Member on this side of the House to stand up and say, "We moved a censure cut". No. It was an economic cut that we moved, or a Rs. 100 cut; we have not censured the administration because we had not the courage to censure the administration as the Government was censured in the past by eminent men like Pandit Motilal Nehru and Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, even when there were no Ordinances in the country. I absolutely decline to associate myself with Sir Abdur Rahim's motion as an economic cut, when neither his party nor my party nor any other party on the floor of the House had the courage to unfurl the flag of censure when confusion is raging outside. That being the case, it is ridiculous, it is absurd, to talk of an economic cut. All that the Leader of the Independent Party said to-day could have been said on a 100-rupee cut. There was nothing to prevent an economic cut being discussed under a 100-rupee cut. So much for politics and policy.

Now coming to the merits of the question, because a Retrenchment Committee recommends that you must cut down so much, certainly it is not for the Chairman of that Committee to use this opportunity in this House—though he is perfectly entitled to do so from a constitutional point of view—it is not for him to use this opportunity in this House and set a pistol to the head of the Government and say, "Take this much or I censure you on economic grounds". That is not the way to deal with a situation like this. I am not in agreement with the figures of the Retrenchment Committee nor am I perfectly in agreement with the policy of retrenchment. I am very much appreciative of the facts that they have brought forward, and we all honour Sir Abdur Rahim for the laborious days he has devoted at very great personal inconvenience to himself in a great cause, but I do not accept his judgment in regard to retrenchment. I refuse to accept his figures because his figures in my opinion are unworthy of acceptance in toto, which is what he wants.

Now, coming to the attitude that I propose to adopt on this side of the House, it is an attitude certainly not of support for this motion. Whether it is going to be an attitude of neutrality or not or of active opposition to it, the future, which is not very distant before us, will reveal. But when I say this, I say it with a due sense of responsibility attaching to myself, not in any party capacity, but as a Member who has a constituency outside and who deeply felt the inability of this House to rise equal to the occasion and support the motion of Sirdar Harbans Singh, because he made it a censure cut and because he meant that only one rupee should be left for the Executive Council; and had his motion been carried, we would not have witnessed the painful luxury of conversations that we had from this side of the House, futile and in many respects unsatisfactory—as a memorial which we have submitted to the Honourable the Leader of the House will disclose when it is placed on the table—futile and unsatisfactory constitutional discussions that emanated from this House, because had Mr. Harbans Singh's motion been carried there would have been only one rupee left and you could not raise a constitutional discussion on that one rupee; and if you raised it on that one rupee.

subsequent discussions would have fallen to the ground; but what we wanted was not business; what we wanted was not censure; what we wanted, alas! was the luxury of futilities in which we have been indulging.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju (Ganjam cum Vizagapatam: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I am very much surprised at the remarks of my Honourable friend Mr. Ranga Iyer. If I understood him aright, he is trying to cut his nose to spite his face

Mr. K. Ahmad: What face?

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: His face. He has mentioned about the cut motion of my Honourable friend, Sirdar Harbans Singh.

An Honourable Member: Speak louder.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: If he had any cause for complaint that that motion could not be discussed in this House, who is at fault?

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Who is at fault?

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: I am answering you. It is the fault of the Leader of the Nationalist Party whose cut motion was put down for that day.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Of every party; of all the parties including the Leader of the Nationalist Party.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: No. I maintain that it was not the fault of anybody else. It was an arrangement, as you know, Sir, that all the party leaders had come to a particular arrangement, and according to that particular arrangement my Honourable friend, the Leader of the Nationalist Party, had to move his cut; and when that cut was tabled, it was of necessity given preference to other cuts in accordance with the ruling you then gave on the understanding which we all unanimously agreed to follow; and I therefore say that my Honourable friend Mr. Ranga Iyer being a Member of this House is bound to obey the arrangement.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: I was not present at your party meeting.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: If my Honourable friend was not present, is that any reason why he should come now and censure us and bring this debate into disrepute?

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: You brought Sirdar Harbans Singh's motion into disrepute.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: And instead of having a quarrel with his own leader and with his own party or for that matter instead of settling the quarrels amongst themselves, he has wantonly attacked my leader. It is no use denying that fact. What has my leader done now? He wants that a certain retrenchment should be made in Customs, and he has shown the grounds why that retrenchment should be given effect to. And he has shown grounds how retrenchment could be effected. Does it lie in the mouth of a Member of the Nationalist Party to say that there should not be retrenchment effected in the expenditure of the Government simply because Sirdar Harbans Singh's motion could not be discussed? Sir, I am very much surprised. I am always anxious that we should try to understand each other and perform to the best of our ability the duty that is cast upon us. We do not want to import unnecessary and personal matters into the debates on the floor of the House. After all, we have come at a great sacrifice

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Every one has come at a sacrifice.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: I am glad to hear that every one has come at a sacrifice,—I know Members come at great personal sacrifices,—all of us have come from long distances,—to share with the Government such responsibility as we can, to tell the Government when we cannot agree with them, why we could not and what they should do. When that is our object, why should we unnecessarily quarrel and then attack each other simply because Sirdar Harbans Singh's motion could not be moved

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: The merits of that motion, the censure motion.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: My friend says it is a question of the merits of that motion. Honourable Members of this House are aware that the merits of that motion have been discussed by a Resolution of this House.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: A ridiculous and fantastic Resolution.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: It may be a ridiculous Resolution, but my Honourable friend was himself a party to it. (Applause.)

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: A party under a compromise.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: My friend says that he was a party under a compromise, but still

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: A compromise which was not observed.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: A compromise, my friend says, which was not observed. So far as I understand the position, there was no such

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: I would point out, Sir

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): Order. order: The Honourable Member must remember that he was not interrupted even once during the course of his own speech. The Chair finds that the Honourable Member who is in possession of the House is hardly allowed to complete a single sentence without being interrupted by the Honourable Member. I should like to ask the Honourable Member whether it is wise to discuss on the floor of the House what happened inside party meetings. The arrangement to which the whole House agreed has been carried out. I did not like to interrupt the Honourable Member when he was addressing the House, but it is not desirable in the opinion of the Chair that any discussion of what happened at party meetings should take place here as far as possible, and unless the question of principle is involved, it should not be brought on the floor of the House. The Honourable Member had full liberty to give expression to his views uninterrupted, and the Chair would ask the Honourable Member not to interrupt other speakers. If after the conclusion of the speech of the Honourable Member who is in possession of the House, the Honourable Member has anything to say by way of a personal explanation, the Chair will give him ample opportunity to do so, but in the interests of good debate the Honourable Member will abstain from interrupting so frequently as he has been doing.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: Sir, I am very grateful to you for your remarks. That is exactly what I am trying to convey. It is not for us to import into this question extraneous considerations.

There is just one more observation which my friend made. He said that it does not lie in the mouth of Sir Abdur Rahim, the President of the General Purposes Committee, to say that the Government should accept every one of the recommendations of that Committee, and that it was not open to them to say so. That is not exactly the position, Sir, that my leader has taken up. What he said was this, that there was considerable room for retrenchment, but still Government had not carried out retrenchments to the extent that they should have. Although we had the explanation of the Honourable the Finance Secretary and other Members, still we are not quite satisfied with the explanation offered, and we feel that Government have not effected retrenchments to the fullest possible extent.

Mr. S. C. Mitra (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Mr. Ranga Iyer should give notice of his own amendments, instead of criticising others.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Sir, this is a cut motion that the Demand under the head Customs be reduced by Rs. 6,57,000. That is called an economic cut, I understand. (Laughter.) It has been distinguished by my friend Mr. Ranga Iyer

An Honourable Member: He is your friend.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Yes, he is my friend but he does not ask me to lunch. (Laughter.) My friend has distinguished that economic cut and has called it a token cut, or a cut on a motion of censure.

An Honourable Member: What is the difference?

Mr. K. Ahmed: That is an elementary question. Now, Sir, according to my friend, by calling the cut an economic cut, it is implied that because he is a party leader he agreed to that cut, and the Honourable the President accepted it; but it is no use criticising the term, whether it is a "token cut" or a "censure cut" or an "economic cut", because now the whole country is fighting, and my friend Mr. Ranga Iyer has today forgotten—he is breathing so rapidly (Laughter)—he is not economising towards committing murder he is killing, he is inhaling and exhaling all his breath,—he is killing the insects of the atmosphere, particularly on the floor of this House. Be that as it may but the Honourable Member from Bengal, the Mover of this motion, wants to reduce a certain amount which is incurred on overtime payment for officers of the Customs Department. The figures can be found at pages 1 to 29, and it appears under head Preventive Officers. There are in the present year 273 such officers. Out of these 273 Preventive Officers mentioned by the Mover of the motion I understand that a majority of them belong to the community of my friend Colonel Sir Henry Gidney who I find is likened to Shylock, but he himself is pretending to play the role of Portia. He is rude, and instead of being tolerant, he is rough to his friends of the opposite party, forgetting that the major portion of the 273 appointments of Preventive Officers are held by members of his community and their salaries are paid out of the revenues collected from the majority community whom some of my friends represent in this House. And if he had any sense of humour (Laughter), if my friend Sir Henry had realised the situation, he would have seen that it is now over 12 years that he is representing a constituency, and if he is not doing any service to them, I am afraid that he is doing a great injustice to the constituency that he has the honour to represent; instead of trying to do good to his constituency, he is badly treating them, because he knows,—I am telling him through you, Sir,—he is sitting very cheerfully on his seat (Laughter) without realising the whole situation and treating his colleagues as if they are, what shall I say, savage beasts. (Laughter.) (An Honourable Member: "They are friends.") Yes, but he did not invite them to lunch or was even courteous when speaking. Well, if my friend knows that his constituents should be treated well, particularly in view of his nomination to this House, then he should urge that the members of his community should be properly paid, and it is his duty to make matters smooth and not to make them rough. It is, Sir, for that reason . . .

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: On a personal explanation, Sir. In view of the observations that are being made relating to my conduct, I should like to explain and it is supported by my side of the House that the question that this motion should be supported as a party arrangement is absolutely incorrect, because our party has not agreed to support the motion or to oppose it. The only arrangement was that it should be taken up for discussion, and every one of my party is a free agent. I have not therefore been a party to any breach of agreement.

Mr. K. Ahmed: That explanation should have been given by the Honourable Member much earlier or at least after I had finished (Laughter); out of courtesy he should have followed the rules of etiquette of this House or of any society and I am very much afraid that my Honourable friend is not conducting himself properly. (At this stage Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer rose in his seat to interrupt the speaker.) I am not going to yield. He is not in a proper mood and I am very sorry for him because his movement today from beginning to end shows that people in these hard days will not put up with it. We have got the licence to address this Assembly with certain understanding, under certain rules of etiquette. If we conduct ourselves and become objectionable in season and out of season, will the independent Members, particularly the elected Members, and you.

Sir, who are elected by the people—will the Members of this House allow that sort of thing when people do not like it and if anybody is objectionable people would not put up with it. Sir, I leave my Honourable friend Mr. Ranga Iyer alone.

Coming to the cut of Rs. 6,57,000, which is called an economic cut, my friend the Leader of the Independent Party wants to carry home from the point of view of economy that the rate of payment for overtime work should be reduced by half. Many other Honourable Members have mentioned that in other departments there is no overtime for extra work, for instance, in the police and the C. I. D. They work day and night; they have to wield regulation lathis and watch day and night, and where are those Anglo-Indians, where are those people who want overtime which comes to Rs. 13 or 14 lakhs? This year time has lapsed and payment will be made up to the 31st March. There is no work in the port of Calcutta; very few steamers are coming in. I do not know about the condition in Bombay and Karachi, probably it is worse. The amount of reduction which is stated in the cut by the Leader of the Independent Party will not be the right figure, because all of us know even from the income of the other departments, such as the railways and others; probably it will be much less. So, I do not think there will be very much overtime that these Customs officers will have to work. But be that as it may, it is for the sake of a principle that the fight is taking place on the floor of this House. If Mr. Nixon, who has been in the Accountant General's office, Bombay, had not used the word "henchman" to Mr. S. C. Mitra he would have done better than what he did in his maiden speech to-day. 20 years ago I used that term in respect of a Junior Public Prosecutor of Alipore and the Magistrate immediately took me to task. I was then a practitioner of three or four years' standing, and I was in the same position as Mr. Nixon is to-day. I have since grown old. Once I called a Public Prosecutor as "Private Persecutor" and I lost my case. (Laughter.) Sir Henry Gidney has forgotten his position and is fighting with the Leader of a Party who is a very educated and experienced gentleman, the second of whom you cannot get in the whole of my province. It is high time that the Honourable the Finance Member came forward and asked politely the Leader of the Independent Party to withdraw his economic cut, giving a definite promise that Government will consider and follow the rules of economy. No Government can now-a-days become spendthrift. Their debts are becoming greater and greater. I do not know what danger is ahead in the coming year. So, it will be advisable if the Government explain the situation and try to bring about uniformity in the salaries paid in different departments. The majority of these Anglo-Indians, without passing any examination or being educated in any university, draw fat salaries. My Honourable friend Mr. Yamin Khan is far away from the port of Calcutta, in an upcountry district, Meerut, with very little experience of what happens in the Customs offices in Calcutta, Bombay and Karachi. He innocently stated in his speech that to start on a salary of 130 per month you must be a graduate at least. I challenge Government and Colonel Gidney to say how many of them are graduates. Now, this jul police (Port Police), as they call it, are not getting all sorts of extra pay and allowances in addition to their salary. I happen to have experience of both the police and the Customs officers as my Chamber is situated next door, so to say. I have been there for 22 or 23 years and I know every corner of the Customs House and the police court. I know the duty discharged by the police.

[Mr. K. Ahmed.]

Is there any justification for these Anglo-Indians in the Customs office to draw Rs. 130 to 575 without passing any examinations? Is it a joke or is he a spoilt child? (Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: "Spoilt child.") If it is a spoilt child then the parents know how to treat him and he will tumble down and realise that this is not the game of a child. My friend Col. Gidney must realise which community he is representing. It is a principle for which the fight is going on, and I hope that the Honourable the Finance Member will get up and explain how he is going to observe the rules for retrenchment.

I have a personal grudge against this office, speaking on behalf of my community. There are only three Muhammadan Preventive Officers out of 273 officers. One man, who was an M.A. with first class honours, has been permanently transferred to the Education Department as Lecturer at the Islamia College on a higher salary than Rs. 130. Members of my community are told in this House, in season and out of season, that though they have passed the examination, they lack experience and they cannot pass a departmental examination. The second Preventive Officer has got 14 years' service. On account of retrenchment his post has been reduced, while Anglo-Indians with 25 to 30 years service or even more and who ought to have been reduced first have been retained. My friend Col. Gidney does not realise the position. (Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: "What is that?") My friend asks what is that. Is there any country where this sort of jobbery, pilfering and extortion goes on at the expense of the tax-payer? That poor Muhammadan lad with 14 years experience in the service has been reduced. I want to ask the Honourable the Finance Member, Mr. Nixon, and the Revenue Board how long this injustice is going to be done to my community. My friend Col. Gidney is representing the Anglo-Indians, but why should the Government give him and his community any preference over the sons of the soil? Have you heard of any country where the sons of the soil are treated like this? If a man is a Muhammadan then you think according to you he must be disqualified. This is the sort of treatment meted out to members of my community, and I challenge the Honourable the Finance Member to make an inquiry into this matter, that if the rule for retrenchment has been infringed and 3 P.M. a poor Muhammadan lad is the victim, that has got to be set right, and the sooner it is done the better, because our people are getting impatient, and the treatment meted out particularly in this department is certainly shocking.

Four years ago, Mr. President, when your predecessor was in the chair, it was myself that had taken to task a Customs officer in Calcutta, and also the Chairman of the Board of Revenue, because they would not listen to those memorials which they receive day and night. Sir, I might mention that I wrote a demi-official letter on the basis of certain information from some Muhammadan Association asking the Collector of Customs, Mr. Hardy—who was here sometime ago sitting in the seat of our Honourable friend, Mr. Nixon—but, Sir, he had not the courtesy to reply to my letter, though he is my intimate friend, as far as I am personally concerned. But, Sir, if injustice is done, in order to satisfy the Anglo-Indian community and in order to suffer illegalities known to the trade, then it is high time that something was done, so that justice may prevail, and if justice is not done, then woe to the Government. If the Government already know all the facts and still they will say, "We shall consider", but will never consider the situation, and if that boy is removed from his post while men with 25 to 30 years' service or even more are kept on, so that they might continue to draw their fat salaries, is not, I ask, the very object and its principle laid down by themselves of retrenchment frustrated? Does not the Honourable the Finance Member or Mr. Nixon, who mentioned a court of appeal, realize that this is the court of appeal for him, and that if he had to appear before that court, contempt proceedings would have been drawn against him for negligence and dereliction of duty? I ask, Sir, in all seriousness that these matters should be inquired into and justice should be done to these poor people. As far as my friend, Sir Hugh Cocke, is concerned, he says there are certain items of retrenchment which were considered—I think two of them he said—but as regards the rest, "not till he heard from the Government"—said my friend—would he do anything. Is he not, I ask, the Leader of the European Group here? Is he not independent of the Government? Has he not got his own opinion? I thought my friend was very good at arithmetic and in audit, and if he will expect that the certification will follow, I am very sorry. With regard to Mr. Nixon's statement that he wants the sense of responsibility in the departmental heads to be waited for, it was his duty, Sir, that he should have at once, instead of making a lengthy speech, told his leader, of whom according to him he is the "henchman", that he would at once advise him to take into consideration all those six items, so that the Government would try their best to help the Sub-Committee in the matter.

Sir, the ten per cent. cut is no doubt a uniform cut all through; and they have agreed I believe that the ten per cent. should apply with regard to overtime also. Well, Sir, there is also the principle of the cut in the deduction of salary including overtime. But then if a definite amount will be reduced if this motion is carried, I do not know how far the position will be affected when the Honourable the Finance Member moves his motion for granting that Demand of about 13 lakhs I believe, and if there is a reduction for the sake of economy of 6 lakhs, I do not know how far those figures will be accurate because I know for certain that the same amount will never come, even if this House passes this motion for the sake of economy. But, Sir, I expect that certain undertakings should be given by Government.

With regard, Sir, to the income, the members of Honourable friend Sir Henry Gidney's constituency, who are in the Customs Offices, are receiving. I must tell him that the income has been reduced so much and the establishment cost has increased so much that now-a-days nobody can afford to speak in the tone that he has spoken. It may be that the Police Office is engaged on imposing fines, but certainly, Sir, the Customs Department that has brought about so much misappropriation, that has so much illegality to its credit and so much negligence, as has been shown, by its officers for the last few years, surely that Department cannot be allowed to have so much latitude for the sake of its Anglo-Indian officers. Sir, only a few days ago we came to know that certain revolvers and ammunition and cartridges, etc., were despatched from a foreign country like Germany or Russia and found their way to the toll office of the Customs Department in Calcutta through the negligence of its officers, who thus were instrumental in the smuggling of these revolvers which are the instruments of killing our I. C. S. men in Bengal if not in other places. Sir, the smuggling of revolvers and the smuggling of opium and cocaine have brought in very bad results and discredit to the Customs Department, and it is high time that qualified men, with experience of police methods, educated men having experience of C. I. D. work, should be recruited; otherwise, Sir, such nefarious smuggling will bring ruination to the case of Bengal administration—I do not know so much of Bombay, Karachi and other ports. Sir, I should ask the Finance Member to give a definite written direction to the Central Board of Revenue so that they might write to the Collector of Customs to be very very careful in the matter of future appointments and to consider all these matters, because, Sir, we are fighting here to save the Government and to bring safety to the country. It is scandalous that men should draw high and fat salaries and at the same time abuse their powers, with the result that valuable I. C. S. and other officers who work meritoriously and give their services for the good of our country should be saved from being done to death through the smuggling of arms through the customs in these days of difficulty. Now, Sir, on account of the negligence and unfitness of the Anglo-Indian officers, the Customs Department could not discharge their proper duty. I would not like to trouble the House with any other question except this that merit should be considered first of all the necessary qualification and not the other question of the communal right of their pro tanto percentage in the matter of appointment. With regard to the cut motion for Rs. 6,57,000 I ask the Government to be good enough to give certain undertakings to satisfy the Leader of the Independent Party and to satisfy particularly the elected Members that they will take certain steps to meet their request.

Sir Hari Singh Gour (Central Provinces Hindi Divisions: Non-Muham-madan): Sir, I have very great pleasure in supporting the motion moved by my friend Sir Abdur Rahim and I am only sorry that the Honourable the Finance Member did not immediately get up and accept his very reasonable proposals. I would not have troubled the House were it not for the fact that some Member of my Party got up and said that he personally dissociated himself from the motion moved by the Leader of the Independent Party, in that there was no party question in it. Well, Sir, I think it is a matter upon which non-official Members, and even the official Benches, know what was passing behind the scenes. When we set out our procedure for the purpose of wasting as little time as possible on the various cuts, all Members who were present and the representatives of all parties appointed a small Budget Committee to go into the various cuts. That Budget Committee drew up its list, and on Wednesday immediately after you adjourned the House, Members met and generally approved of the action taken by the Budget Committee. They did not certainly bind the Members to any individual cut, but there was a general approval that these cuts should be tabled following the lines of recommendations made by the General Purposes Committee. Various Members who have given notices of these cuts have consequently given notices upon the strength of the recommendations of the General Purposes Committee. I therefore submit that while Members are free to speak on the merits of any particular cut, they cannot repudiate the pact that was made by the non-official Benches for the purpose of economising time.

Having said this, I wish to very clearly point out that the Honourable the Leader of the Independent Party has been, indeed, much too modest in demanding only a cut of Rs. 6,57,000. If Honourable Members will turn to page 31 of part II of the General Purposes Committee's report, they will find that from overtime and penalty the Customs receive a revenue of Rs. 12,35,000, out of which Rs. 6,47,000 out of the overtime and Rs. 3,39,000 out of the penalty realised, is paid to officers and the balance of Rs. 1,91,000 is spent in grants to various seamen's institutions. Now, what the Honourable Members of the General Purposes Committee recommended was that the payment of this last sum of Rs. 9,86,000 to the officers in addition to their pay for overtime and a share of the penalty was unjustified on two grounds. First, on the ground that they were whole-time officers and, secondly, upon the ground that these officers were well paid and in the present year of stress and national anxiety they should bear a certain proportion of the burden which falls upon every servant of the State. I submit that there is hardly anything to be said against the motion moved by the Honourable the Leader of the Independent Party. If I have understood the statement made by the Honourable the Finance Member on previous occasions in this connection aright, I understood his statement to mean this, that he is still exploring the further avenues for retrenchment and that the chapter of national economy is not yet closed. All that, therefore, we want the Honourable the Finance Member to do is to take into account the wishes of this side of the House that this item should be considered while dealing with the other factors on the subject of retrenchment. I submit that the Honourable the Finance Member's hands will be greatly strengthened by the vote of this House, and it is not merely for the purpose of making a cut on this or on other items of the Budget that we have tabled these motions. We are sincerely of opinion that there is a great room for further retrenchment, and it is in order to strengthen the hands of the Finance Department in their effort to make further retrenchments that we have tabled these cuts in a purely friendly spirit, with no desire to antagonise anyone on the Treasury Benches, but with the single purpose of strengthening the hands of the Finance and the other departments in effecting national economy. That, I submit, is our sole purpose and I have not the slightest doubt that the Honourable the Finance Member and his colleagues occupying the Treasury Benches will understand that that is our purpose and no other.

Sir, it is now quarter past three. I had hoped that, following the line of action that all Honourable Members had decided to take on Wednesday, we should be able, at any rate, to clear one page of the Agenda Paper. But unfortunately we are still on the first cut, and if Honourable Members express a desire, I should certainly ask the Honourable Members to place a curb upon their eloquence and see that all future motions are limited as to time for 10 minutes. I submit, Sir, that we must convert ourselves into a business House. Let us not repeat the lamentable spectacle which this House presented in connection with the Railway Budget, and I am sorry that I have to say so in such explicit terms today that we have wasted a greater part of today which we had reserved for formal business of moving economy cuts under the various heads of the demands. I appeal to the Honourable Members once more that these cuts were never intended to be debated upon at great length, or indeed at any length at all. The intention was that the speeches of the Members are contained in the report of the Retrenchment Committee, the facts are known to the Honourable occupants of the Treasury Benches and a formal motion by the authors of the cut would suffice for the purpose of justifying them.

[Sir Hari Singh Gour.]

I hope that that procedure will, at any rate, now be followed during the rest of today and tomorrow, so that we may be able to dispose of the business we have remaining in hand.

Several Honourable Members: The question may now be put.

Mr. President: I accept the closure. The question is:

"That the question be now put."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Sir, in spite of the ruling which has just been given by my Honourable and learned,—I might almost say omniscient—friend, the Leader of the Nationalist Party, that there is nothing to be said in answer to the motion which has been moved by my Honourable and learned friend, the Leader of the Independent Party, in spite of that ruling, Sir, I am afraid I must ask the House to listen to what I have got to say. But, I hope, Sir, reciprocating what has fallen from the lips of my Honourable and learned friend, the House will appreciate that when I ask for the full amount of expenditure for which we have asked in the Demands for Grants, I do so in a perfectly friendly spirit. Sir, there is no malice in my attack on the tax-payers' pockets. I am friendly to every tax-payer, but I am afraid that I want his money. Sir, I have received a certain amount of support in the course of this debate, and I am grateful for the support whether it comes from the Benches opposite, from my Honourable and eloquent friend Mr. Ranga Iyer or from my right, from my Honourable and gallant friend Sir Henry Gidney, or from behind me, from my loyal "henchman" Mr. Nixon (Laughter). Who has indeed in all these engagements, in all these serious battles about retrenchment rendered to me the service of a true henchman, which is to stand by the side of his leader, to ward off blows which may fall on him and to deliver shrewd blows on his opponents. Sir, I will try to observe the directions which my Honourable friend the Leader of the Nationalist Party has laid down, namely, brevity in speeches on this subject. But I stand here to convince the House, if I can—and I am confident that I shall be able to do so,—to convince the House on its merits of the justice of the demand we are now making. The case is really a very simple one. There are, as Mr. Nixon pointed out, two main points of difference between the sum which we require and the sum which, if this motion were accepted, we should get. In the first place the recommendation of the General Purposes Sub-Committee was that there should be a general cut in establishment, allowances, etc., of 15 per cent., and we have felt that we cannot safely accept more than 10 per cent. That accounts for Rs. 2,85,000. And in the second place there is a difference between their recommendation as regards overtime fees and what we feel it fair to impose upon the staff. This accounts for Rs. 3,53,000. These two differences combined give us a total of Rs. 6,38,000 which is very near to the total amount of the cut. Now, in one respect, I think the way in which this cut has been put to the House is somewhat misleading. I should like to call the attention of Honourable Members to the summary which we have circulated, where they will find that under Demand 16 the recommendations of the Retrenchment Sub-Committee were for economies of Rs. 16,03,000. If they follow the table down to the bottom, and if they eliminate the increase in compensation and assignments due to the introduction of new arrangements for receipts of Cochin

Port of 9 lakhs, which of course is not an extra expenditure at all, if they eliminate that item, they will find that in fact even allowing for increments in pay and for certain new items of expenditure, we are actually reducing the Customs grant by 15 lakhs and 85 thousand rupees. That is only Rs. 15,000 short of the Retrenchment Sub-Committee's recommendations. I freely admit that in that total is included the sum for cuts in pay. But, I do think it is somewhat unfair, in judging of the effects of retrenchment, entirely to eliminate the effects of cuts in pay; because as the Retrenchment Sub-Committee themselves pointed out very early in their discussions, we must aim at retrenchment in two ways, partly by reducing the staff and partly by reducing the pay of the staff that we are retaining. I would put it to the House that an economy of practically Rs. 16 lakhs on a grant of about Rs. 96 lakhs is a very substantial achievement. Now, I feel it somewhat unfortunate that according to the order of priority which the parties in this House have adopted, we should have all these cuts on the revenue producing departments first. I feel it is unfortunate because—and I here put myself on the same side as my Honourable friends opposite—because I am anxious that the whole question of retrenchment should be fully reviewed by this House. But in connection with revenue collecting departments there are special considerations which apply, and it is really a very dangerous thing to carry retrenchment too far. I ought of course in a sense to be pleased that this order has been adopted because our case in defending our position is very much stronger as regards the revenue producing departments than it can possibly be as regards any other departments. In the latter you can, if you desire as a matter of policy, reduce the services which the Government are rendering. But in the case of the revenue producing departments, you are risking vast sums of money. Indeed if our proposals are open to criticism on any side at all, I definitely think that it is not on the side of inadequate retrenchment, for in the case of the Customs and the Income-tax Departments, we may be actually going too far in risking reductions of staff. Now, if I turn to the substance of the recommendations of the Retrenchment Sub-Committee, they have recommended what I am afraid I must describe as an entirely arbitrary cut of 15 per cent. I have found no explanation of why they hit upon exactly this figure of 15 per cent. In other cases, they have adopted different percentages, but in the Customs, as a matter of immediate judgment based on some sort of a a priori intuition, they seem to have arrived at the conclusion that 15 per cent. is a fair amount. We, Sir, have approached the matter from the other side. We have approached it, if I may adopt the philosophical distinction, by empirical methods; we have gone down to the actual facts, considered our staff and considered what it would be safe to retrench. I would put it to the House that that is the only method which is safe when one comes to deal with a department of this kind; for it has a definite service to perform and we must not risk the efficient performance of that service. Otherwise, we shall defeat the whole object of the retrenchment campaign. Now, I have before me here a long note prepared by the Department going in very great detail into the various recommendations of the Retrenchment Sub-Committee. Obviously I cannot ask the House to bear with me in going fully through this note. But there are certain points to which I should like to call the attention of the House. To take practical example, the Sub-Committee, for example, made a recommendation that the net reduction among officers, taking Collectors and Assistant Collectors together, should be at least six. They said that the Board's proposal to make a net reduction of three, that is to say, ten per cent., was not enough. They recommended six of the posts on their ideal percentage of 15 per cent. In the first place, I would point out that a reduction of six from a cadre of 35, which is the cadre, would be a reduction of 17 per cent. and not 15 per cent. I would point out, secondly, that in fact it is not correct to show that the reduction offered by the Board is three because the Board has actually proposed a reduction of five Assistant Collectors' posts partly counterbalanced by the creation of two new posts of Chief Accounts Officer. Now one Chief Accounts Officer is to replace the Pay and Accounts Officer at Calcutta, whose pay was formerly shown under Demand No. 37, and whose post was abolished from the first December, 1931. This officer's functions were indispensable functions and would have had to be assigned to an Assistant Collector of Customs but for the creation of the post of a Chief Accounts Officer. I merely mention that detail to show that, it is very difficult to give an exact picture when you take one grant by itself, because a good many of these grants hang together. Then again the pay of a Pay and Accounts Officer, and so of each of the two new officers is on a lower scale than that of the Imperial Customs Service, and also those posts do not carry various concessions. Allowing for all those differences, we reckon that each of these new posts is equivalent to only $\frac{2}{3}$ of one of the Assistant Collectorships which has been abolished. Following out that same precise arithmetical method of calculations, we find that against a cadre of five Collectors and 26 Assistant Collectors, plus two-thirds of an officer,—the figure I put in to represent one Pay and Accounts Officer,—from a total of 31, $\frac{2}{3}$ officers, the Board has proposed a reduction to a cadre of 5 Collectors plus 21 Assistant Collectors, plus $\frac{1}{3}$ of an officer, representing two Chief Accounts Officers, a total of 27, $\frac{1}{3}$ officers which gives a net reduction of 4, $\frac{1}{3}$ officers, or nearly 14 per cent. of the original staff of officers. I merely mention those figures to show that if there is any virtue in the particular figure of 15 per cent., if we really follow out what we have done, we have got very near to it. In the case of officers, we have in fact made a reduction of 14 per cent. That is really as far as we think it is possible to go. If another Assistant Collector were to go, which would bring the total up to 17 per cent., he would have to be taken from Madras. Now, we cannot take him from Madras at present until we have had time to gauge the extent of the extra burden that the Collector there will have to bear as a result of our decision to abolish the post of Collector of Salt Revenue and make the Collector of Customs the head of the Salt Department. That brings up another connected point which of course is not quite clear from studying this grant by itself.

Now, Sir, I must apologise to this House for having gone into these details, but really until you go into the actual staff in this way it is impossible to say whether you can effect a 10 per cent. reduction or a 15 per cent. reduction, or any other figure that you like to take. I would put it to the House that we have gone most carefully through the whole position; we have endeavoured to meet the recommendations of the Retrenchment Sub-Committee as far as we possibly can, and we have gone a great deal further than our own departmental officers have advised us that it was safe to go. And I would ask the House to treat this matter,—in a sense perhaps it is a small matter but this discussion is typical of what all the other discussions will be, particularly in matters connected with revenue departments,—I would ask every Member of the House to weigh very carefully the action that he will take before he commits himself to a line of action which I maintain would be one designed to force the Government into courses which are really unsound and really contrary to the public interest.

A good deal has been said by my Honourable friend Mr. K. Ahmed about certain expectations and undertakings that he might get from me. I do not know exactly what my Honourable friend had in mind. But I can give him this undertaking—that although I stand here now and say that this is the minimum demand which we feel we can safely put before the House in the present circumstances, that is not, as I have said to the House on many occasions, our last word on the subject. We do not regard this as the sum and end of our attempts to achieve economy. We have got to go on making efforts as long as the present economic conditions remain, not merely in order to effect further reductions but in order to keep where we are. I would remind the House that we are not like a man standing on a pavement who if he stands still remains where he is; we are standing on a sort of moving platform, and unless we actually move backwards we are bound to go on moving forwards as regards expenditure, because we have to face every year this automatic increase owing to the increments of pay; and we shall certainly require an effort, as I say, not merely to reduce expenditure but to keep it at its present level. That effort, I assure the House, will be made, but I ask them not to force Government now beyond what we consider after the fullest possible consideration to be safe.

Then, Sir, I hesitate to weary the House with any further discussion of this question of overtime pay. But I would just like to put before them exactly what is the position of one of these officers who is entitled to overtime pay. We are informed that owing to the decline in business, the average rate that any man will get from these overtime fees will be reduced by considerably more than 30 per cent. The Board has actually eased of one class of men whose average earnings from fees have declined from Rs. 70 over the last three years to Rs. 37 in the current year. Now, Sir, if the House will consider the position of one of these men, it is this. Supposing his pay is Rs. 300 and he can expect from overtime Rs. 70, he loses in the first place his cut of 10 per cent. on his pay of Rs. 300 which brings him down to Rs. 270. Then instead of getting Rs. 70 on his overtime fees he actually gets Rs. 37, which brings him down to Rs. 307. Then on top of that his Rs. 37 is subject to a further cut of 10 per cent., so that he goes down to about Rs. 303 as against his former expectation of total emoluments amounting to Rs. 370. Now, whether it was right originally to allow the whole of these overtime fees to persons who were doing the work is a question for consideration. But what the House has got to realise is that these were the definitely accepted conditions of service, and I maintain that to make deductions in that form of remuneration is exactly the same and on exactly the same basis for those who have engaged to serve on those terms as to cut their pay. And owing to the decline of the amount of fees which have been received, these men are very much worse off now,—they have suffered much greater deterioration in their conditions than any other class of Government servants. I think it is important to realise those facts. There is another point in connection with these overtime fees of which I want to remind the House, although the point was made by my Honourable friend Mr. Nixon in his speech I want to put before the House that even if we were to accept the whole principle of this cut motion, we could not possibly achieve the economy of 6½ lakhs which it purports to impose upon us, because in their calculations the Retrenchment Sub-Committee have relied on getting Rs. 5,88,000 out of a change in the method of distributing overtime fees. But unfortunately the amount that we are receiving in overtime fees has declined very considerably and we could not possibly make this saving out of adopting their principle. Mr. Nixon has pointed out that that is made clear in the general summary which we have circulated, and that we have already included in economies Rs. 2,12,000 owing to this decline in the amount of fees which we can collect. So that, in any case on this principle, the cut as it stands is an impossible one.

I have said that my Honourable friends who sat on this Retrenchment Sub-Committee were acting on an arbitrary principle in selecting 15 per cent. as the proper measure of saving. I should like to read to the House one passage from their report; they say:

"The Board has offered to effect a 10 per cent. reduction in establishments; we do not consider this offer adequate in the case of this department."

And then they go on—and this is the sentence to which I wish to draw the attention of the House:

"India's overseas trade, both import and export, has declined appreciably."

I do put it to the House that in the first place that is really a misleading statement. The value of India's trade as we all know has declined appreciably. In fact as I pointed out myself in my Budget speech, it is but a bare half of what it was two years ago. But the volume of trade has not declined in anything like the same proportion, and even if it had it would be quite impossible for us, and entirely unjustifiable for us to try and regulate the extent of our Customs staff according to temporary fluctuations in the volume of trade. We cannot follow cycles in trade, up and down; we cannot deal with a staff of a department like the Customs Department on this basis; and of all that stands in that report, that one sentence seems to me to be the most misleading. "The volume of India's overseas trade has declined appreciably." I take an entirely contrary view. India's trade, like the trade of every country in the world, is suffering today; but India's trade is, if you take a long period of years, on a clear upward grade, and we can look forward to an increase in India's trade in the future. We have enormous irrigation schemes such as the Sukkur Barrage scheme which is coming to fruition; that alone may make an enormous difference in the volume of India's exports and consequently in the volume of India's imports. We are on the upward grade and one of the dangers against which we must most carefully guard is, lest under the influence of a temporary depression, we may cripple permanently the public services of this country. Sir, anxious as I am for retrenchment, that nightmare, if I may so call it, is always before me that in order to meet this temporary need we may do irreparable injury to the whole of the Government services in this country. We have tried to keep the balance fair; and I put it to the House that in these Demands—this Demand of the Customs Department—we have struck a fair balance, erring if at all on the side of going too far to meet my Honourable friend's recommendations.

I will not take any more time of the House. I trust that they recognise that I speak with sincerity on this matter. I trust that they recognise that if I had more time I could have made out an even more convincing case to them, and I trust also that they recognise that if I stand here now and say that we cannot go further today, it does not mean that I am in any sense weakening in my determination to do all that I can to promote economy and retrenchment. If they recognise that, I think that every Member of this House can feel that he can vote against this motion without in any sense putting himself on the side of those who fail to recognise that economy in public expenditure is the most vital interest of India today.

Sir Abdur Rahim: Mr. President, I do not think it was necessary for the Honourable the Finance Member to make any long speech against the motion that I put before the House, as he is sure of considerable support from a section of the Nationalist Benches. Mr. Ranga Iyer has made his position, and I believe the position of some other Members of his party, quite clear upon this motion. He is entirely opposed to the principle on which this and other motions are based, and if I understand his attitude aright, although he is in theory entirely for economy in the administration, he is not going to support any specific proposals for economy. If that is the proper attitude taken up by a section of the Nationalist Party

Sir Hari Singh Gour: I wish to point out to the Honourable Member that there is no justification for saying that that is the view of any section of the Nationalist Party. My friend, Mr. Ranga Iyer, made it plain that that was his personal view; and he is entitled to give expression to his personal view; but to impute that view to any section of the Nationalist Party is unjustifiable by anything that Mr. Ranga Iyer has said this afternoon.

Sir Abdur Rahim: Mr. Ranga Iyer is the Vice-President of the Nationalist Party, and I take it that when he speaks, he does speak at least for a section of that party; otherwise he would not have occupied the position of Vice-Leader. Further, he read out a statement which was supported, he said, by at least several members of his party, that the arrangement was not to the effect that there will be general support from his party, but that every one will be entitled to say what he has to say on the several motions and vote as he likes. If all that has any meaning, that means that the Honourable the Finance Member and the Government have considerable support in the Nationalist Party against any motion for economic cuts. In fact Mr. Ranga Iyer said that he does not care for any economic cuts when the censure cut was not moved. Whose fault was it? What censure cut was not moved? As regards the Ordinances, a motion was moved and we gave it full support; but is that any reason, whatever may have happened, why this question should not be dealt with on the merits? But as I have said, the position now is that the Nationalist Party as a whole is not going to support us on these economy proposals.

Sir Hari Singh Gour: I wish, lest there should be any misunderstanding on that point, to assure my friend, Sir Abdur Rahim,—and I have the authority of my friend, Mr. Ranga Iyer, to say—that his statement was purely personal to him and was not made by him as a representative of the party.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: Can you speak for your party?

Sir Hari Singh Gour: I can.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju: Can you?

Sir Abdur Rahim: If my Honourable friend Sir Hari Singh Gour was so sure that that was not the attitude of his party or of any section of his party, one would have expected that when Mr. Ranga Iyer was speaking he would have got up and corrected him and said that that was not the attitude of any section of his party but only the personal view of Mr. Ranga Iyer himself.

As for Mr. Ranga Iyer, we all know him and I need not point out that there are many Members of the House who would not take him seriously on this or any occasion at all. He has made his position quite clear as to these Committees and their reports. He told us on a previous occasion that he threw the report of the General Purposes Committee into the waste-paper basket; he never read it and never intended to read it; and I suppose he has done similar honour to the second report of the General Purposes Sub-Committee. After that to expect. . . .

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: On a point of personal explanation, all that I said on that occasion—and if the honourable gentleman refreshes his memory he will find it—was this, that I did not believe in reading reports distributed to us in driblets; I wanted to read them all together.

Sir Abdur Rahim: Did not the Honourable Member say that it ought to be consigned to the waste-paper basket? If he reads through his speech again he will find that he did say that. Anyway, Sir, I shall now come to the merits of the proposal before the House, but having regard to the attitude taken up by the Vice-Leader of the Nationalist Party, we do not propose to press this motion to a division.

Now, Sir, as regards the reduction of 15 per cent. in the Customs establishment, our justification was that there was a considerable decline in the volume of trade, and this was admitted by many witnesses who appeared before us, in fact some of the official witnesses who were questioned on the point said that it would take some years,—some said five, some said seven years, before we could expect a trade revival. Under those circumstances 15 per cent. reduction in the establishment could not be said to be too much. The Honourable Sir George Schuster has not told us that the volume of trade has not declined by 15 per cent., it has declined much more. These are the figures:

1929-30, it was 22 crores 93 lakhs and odd.

1930-31, it was 14 crores 49 lakhs and odd.

1931-32, it was 10 crores 93 lakhs and odd.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Would the Honourable Member inform the House what figures he is reading?

Sir Abdur Rahim: I am reading from the summary of table showing the value of imports and exports and of the total exports for each month. This is from the accounts relating to the sea-borne trade and navigation of British India.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: But these are figures of the value of trade. If I might be permitted to do so, I should like to make one point clear. I fully admitted,—in fact it was the main theme of my Budget speech—that the value of trade had fallen by about a half. In the speech which I have just made, I drew a distinction between the value of trade with the volume of trade. As to the latter I may perhaps give my friend some figures which I intended to give the House in my speech. The total number of bills of entry and shipping bills handled at all ports in 1930-31,—that is to say the last year for which we have figures,—and it was a very bad year,—was 1,319,767 as against for 1926-27, which was one of the biggest years of trade for India, 1,341,393. That is to say, there was a decline of only $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. in the total number of bills of entry and shipping bills handled at all ports. I think that gives a fair idea of the position as regards the business of the customs officials, and it shows that there has not been any sensational decline.

Sir Abdur Rahim: I ask my friend if the decline in volume could have been only 2 per cent. while the decline in value has been 50 per cent.?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Certainly it could. But the reason why there has been this fall in value is a question to which I too would like to know the answer.

Sir Abdur Rahim: As regards the Central Board of Revenue, they themselves recommended 10 per cent. My friend complained that we applied a higher figure to this department, but he will find that we did not have and could not have a uniform percentage for all departments. We had to look into the case of each department before suggesting how much should be reduced.

One general remark made by my friend was that the revenue collecting department should be treated on a different basis. In fact, in the summary that has been supplied to us, the position of the Finance Department is stated in this way:

“This second report covers the cost of collection of revenue in the Customs, Salt and Opium Departments, the expenditure on the Secretariat departments, expenditure on Ports and Pilotage and Lighthouses which is wholly or partly covered by receipts, the operations of the currency and mint departments, all of which are fields in which retrenchment by the elimination or reduction of particular activities is not possible to the same extent as in the scientific and research departments of which the activities can be temporarily suspended or restricted without grave risk to the efficiency of the administration.”

That has been the attitude of the Finance Department throughout. Their view is, cut out as much as you can in the Education, scientific and research departments, but do not make any cuts in what are called the revenue collecting and administrative departments. That is a position we could not accept. It was rather amusing that only the other day my friend Sir Fazl-i-Husain came in here and protested in the presence of Sir George Schuster that we were cutting all the scientific departments, departments to which popular opinion attached great importance. Now, what is the exact position of Government? If we handle the Education, Health and Lands Department and say that here there is too much of administration instead of real work, and therefore the superfluous officers should be reduced, they say—“Oh, you are going against public opinion”. If we deal with the administrative departments and say that they do not want so many officers, then they say, "Oh, this is dangerous to the entire administration". On this point, I shall read a reference in the General Purposes Sub-Committee's Report to the evidence of the Public Service Commission, and this is what I think Mr. Nixon referred to:

"What is clearly needed is greater reliance on the sense of responsibility of the various units of administration. This view of the position is confirmed by such an eminent body as the members of the Public Service Commission in their replies to our questionnaires. They say:— 'In most matters of importance with which the Public Service Commission deal it appears to them, as far as we can ascertain, that after the matter has been most elaborately considered by the 5 Members of the commission, it is considered ab initio, in the Government offices'."

That is the sort of procedure we protested against, and yet we find that in the whole of the Secretariat, so far as I can gather from the summary that has been supplied to us, very little of our proposals have been accepted so far as officers are concerned. We however formed a very clear conclusion that in the administrative departments of the Secretariat and other administrative departments under the Government of India if Government could reduce a great deal of the noting that goes on, the expenditure could be reduced considerably. Sir, the opinion of the Public Service Commission must be respected, and the same opinion was given by a number of persons holding very responsible positions and who knew what they were talking about. The same observation applies in the case of non-official committees and commissions. Is it not a fact that so many commissions and committees are appointed and afterwards all their labours are thrown away? Look at the constitutional inquiry that has been going on for the last four or five years, with what result? We do not know in fact whether any result whatever has been achieved so far. These are some of the directions in which economies can be effected. All that we can at present do is to ask the Finance Member and other Members of the Government to reconsider the position, because I do not think that the Government or the country is yet out of the woods. We do not know what the real financial position is. The financial difficulty must continue for some time, is bound to continue for some time, and therefore I ask with all the emphasis that I can command, whatever may be the result of the voting, if there be voting, on this motion, that the Government will go on steadily with retrenchment and economy. (Applause.)

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Demand under the head 'Customs' be reduced by Rs. 6,57,000."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President: The question which I have now to put is:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 60,34,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges, which will come in course of payment, during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1933, in respect of 'Customs'."

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND No. 17—TAXES ON INCOME.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I beg to move:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 79,21,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges, which will come in course of payment, during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1933, in respect of 'Taxes on Income'."

Sir Abdur Rahim: Our Party Members will not move any of these cuts

Mr. President: Order, order. Motion moved:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 79,21,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges, which will come in course of payment, during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1933, in respect of 'Taxes on Income'."

On that motion there is an economy cut motion* from Mr. A. Das.

Mr. A. Das (Penares and Gorakhpur Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): In view of the representation made by the Leader of my Party that the members of the Nationalist Party are not going to support the cut motions, I do not think it is necessary to move any cut motion at all.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member does not wish to move his motion?

Mr. A. Das: I do not wish to move it.

Mr. President: As the Honourable Member does not wish to move his motion, I put the original motion to the vote. The question is:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 79,21,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges, which will come in course of payment, during the year ending the 31st March, 1933, in respect of 'Taxes on Income'."

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND No. 18—SALT.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I beg to move:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 71,42,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges, which will come in course of payment, during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1933, in respect of 'Salt'."

Mr. Muhammad Azhar Ali: I do not move my cut motion.†

Mr. B. N. Misra: I do not move my cut motion.†

Mr. President: The question is:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 71,42,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges, which will come in course of payment, during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1933, in respect of 'Salt'."

The motion was adopted.

*"That the Demand under the head 'Taxes on Income' be reduced by Rs. 1,50,000."

†"That the Demand under the head 'Salt' be reduced by Rs. 1,86,000."

DEMAND No. 19—OPIUM.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I beg to move:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 69,90,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges, which will come in course of payment, during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1933, in respect of 'Opium'."

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND No. 20—STAMPS.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I beg to move:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 13,24,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges, which will come in course of payment, during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1933, in respect of 'Stamps'."

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND No. 21—FOREST.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I beg to move:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 4,93,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges, which will come in course of payment, during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1933, in respect of 'Forest'."

Mr. B. V. Jadhav: I do not move my cut motion.*

Mr. President: The question is:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 4,93,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges, which will come in course of payment, during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1933, in respect of 'Forest'."

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND No. 22—IRRIGATION (INCLUDING WORKING EXPENSES), NAVIGATION, EMBANKMENT AND DRAINAGE WORKS

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I beg to move:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 2,45,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges, which will come in course of payment, during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1933, in respect of 'Irrigation (including Working Expenses), Navigation, Embankment and Drainage Works'."

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND No. 23—INDIAN POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS DEPARTMENT (INCLUDING WORKING EXPENSES).

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I beg to move:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 10,67,90,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges, which will come in course of payment, during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1933, in respect of 'Indian Posts and Telegraphs Department (including Working Expenses)'."

*"That the Demand under the head 'Forest' be reduced by Rs. 1,25,000."

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Nominated Non-Official): I propose, Mr. President, to oppose this motion of the Honourable the Finance Member. My reason for opposing this motion is that the Posts and Telegraphs Department have made retrenchment on a very wrong principle. Sir, the Retrenchment Committees appointed by the Government of India decided that in order that there should be some saving in their expenditure, salaries of their employees receiving more than a certain number of rupees should be cut down, but in the case of the Post Office as well as some other departments like Railways and other departments having factories, the Government of India did not observe this rule. They decided that in this department, which is regarded as a commercial department, the salaries of people should be cut down irrespective of what minimum they receive. Now, Sir, I consider that a very wrong principle, because if Government wanted to save money by cutting down the salaries of people it is absolutely necessary that people getting a certain minimum should be saved from the cut, because these people have absolutely no margin for saving, and I therefore feel that the Assembly should not grant this Demand. If the Government of India accepted the principle for the employees in other departments, that people with certain minimum salaries should be free from the cut, I do not know why the postmen should have been excluded from this benefit. I cannot understand the argument that the Postal Department as well as the Railways are commercial departments. If they are commercial departments, the best thing is that they should proceed on the best commercial principle. I quoted yesterday the principle laid down by Henry Ford, and if your department is not doing well financially and if there is a depression, the worst method that people should follow is to cut down the wages of the people. This is the principle laid down by Henry Ford, a commercialist and an industrialist. Therefore the right principle for a commercial department is not to cut down wages of the lowest paid. I therefore feel that this Demand should not be granted.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt (Burdwan Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): It would not have been necessary for me to rise on this occasion but for the observations made by my Honourable friend who represents labour. He has said that the whole grant should be refused. Does he mean to say that we should no longer have Posts and Telegraphs in India? We appreciate the motive with which my Honourable friend acts on behalf of labour. We also feel for labourers. My Honourable friend must remember the dire economic distress to which the country has been reduced at the present moment. When you talk of labour, you only talk of highly paid labourers whose income is, say, Rs. 500 a year or Rs. 1,000 a year. Now we know and my friend also knows the sort of life that is led by the poor agriculturists in the villages. At present they have been thoroughly ruined. A family consisting of five or six members can hardly get one meal a day and their income is not more than Rs. 3 or 4 per month and on this they have to maintain themselves. If we find that the agriculturists, who compose more than 80 per cent. of the population, live on this small pittance, I do not think, anybody, whether he be a labour leader or commercial magnate, can censure the Government for a cut that may be made in the wages of their labourers. I know that the champions of labour act from disinterested motives, but they do not belong to the labouring class. They are well dressed and well fed men, and some of them get Rs. 100 a day for pocket money.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: I have no pocket money for myself.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: It is praiseworthy that people getting Rs. 3,000 should feel for the lot of the man getting Rs. 30 or 50 a month. I appreciate the noble motive, but I would ask them to look at the condition of the country. The agriculturists are ruined. The medical practitioners and the lawyers have got their incomes reduced by at least 50 per cent. District court lawyers, who used to earn ten to twelve thousand a year do not now earn even four or five thousand a year. People cannot afford to call qualified medical men in their homes, but take their children in their arms to the dispensary. That is the condition in the country. I hold no brief for the Committee, and it will not be proper for me to do so, but I trust that in order to keep the department itself living, my friend will not oppose this motion. There are two alternatives before us. One is to abolish the Postal Department because the Government cannot go on working the department at a loss. The ordinary expenditure of the Postal Department is 12 crores, while their income is 10 crores and the income is going down. So we cannot expect that the Government will maintain the department in order to give us the luxury of communicating with our friends and relations. There are two alternatives before the Government. Either to retrench the men or to retrench salary. Sir, none of us would like that men who, after passing the B.A. or B.Sc., entered the Postal service on Rs. 60 a month should now be thrown out of employment, after having been in the Department for some years. To ask them to get out at this stage and seek other avenues of employment is very hard indeed and I ask what is the prospect before them? Sir, we all know the enormous difficulties at the present moment of getting any job; so I would suggest that instead of championing the cause of labour, which will really not do them any good, let us be more reasonable. We won't ask the Government, Sir, to retrench a single individual: I am against that procedure; and if there has been any retrenchment of men, I strongly oppose that, because I do not think that a single individual should be retrenched and thus be deprived of his bread. It is far more humane to retrench salaries than retrenching men; by retrenching men you make them and their families starve while allowing others, the unretrenched men, to enjoy fat salaries. Sir, in this connection I may relate a story. On a journey to Bombay I met one young man drawing a salary of Rs. 200. I wanted to know his exact views on the retrenchment operations. Sir, he almost came down on his knees and said, "Pray, do not retrench a single individual. Look here, I am drawing Rs. 200 a month. Do you mean to say that if you cut out 25 per cent. of my salary and thereby saved the axing of some other man, I would mind that so much? Of course it is fortunate that I have got an appointment on Rs. 200 a month; but if I am now suddenly thrown out in the streets, I might not get even Rs. 50 a month or possibly any appointment at all. So it is far more equitable all round to retrench salaries howsoever heavily, rather than to retrench individuals with dependents". So I would ask those of my friends who really feel for labour and for their countrymen to ponder over this aspect of the case calmly and let us all advise Government not to retrench a single individual but to retrench men's salaries.

Mr. E. F. Sykes (Bombay: European): Sir, I was listening with very great interest to Babu Amar Nath Dutt's speech. I am quite sure that if I had had an opportunity on Wednesday of moving the motion that stood in my name, I should have had his support. I may now read it out to him:

“Failure of the Government to adopt the policy of reconciling the rates of pay to the low cost of living.”

Sir, I must also express my gratitude to Mr. Joshi for opposing this motion, because it did not appear to me that it was a motion on which a discussion of this kind would be germane, but as you have permitted his observations and those of Babu Amar Nath Dutt, I see no reason why I myself should not contribute to a discussion of the whole question. This, Sir, is a very important question, and it is one

Mr. President: The question before the House is that a grant be made for the Posts and Telegraphs Department, and anything arising out of that is relevant and nothing else.

Mr. E. F. Sykes: Or also arising out of the speeches delivered by Members?

Mr. President: They were perfectly relevant because they were dealing with employees of the Posts and Telegraphs Department.

Mr. E. F. Sykes: Sir, Mr. Joshi's point was that he opposed the motion for a grant to the Posts and Telegraphs Department on the ground that the Posts and Telegraphs Department had made undue retrenchments in the pay of their servants. (Mr. N. M. Joshi: “In the pay of postmen.”) Exactly, I am quite prepared to accept the limitation that Mr. Joshi suggests. Now, Sir, this matter was considered very early in the proceedings of the Retrenchment Committees and they came to certain decisions, and the Government also adopted certain decisions, but the curious thing is that in this large volume in which are reported the recommendations of the Committees and the Government's orders on them, there is no reference to the terms of these reductions. You will find under each head a lump sum shown at the end, “Cuts in pay”. Now I take it from Mr. Joshi that there is a cut in the pay of the lowest-paid man. I believe Government accepted the recommendations of the Committees that dealt with this subject and made a reduction of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of pay. Mr. Joshi considers that that is excessive. Now the department to which my Honourable friend refers is not the only commercial department concerned, and Mr. Joshi will possibly be interested in the views of the Railway Retrenchment Committee. (Mr. N. M. Joshi: “I am not at this stage interested in railway men but only in the postal men for my present purpose.”) That Committee, Sir, said:

“The next question that arose was whether the cut should be uniform or graduated. It can be argued that present circumstances have already hit the higher paid classes harder. The increased taxation, both direct (like income and super taxes) and indirect (like customs duties), has very considerably reduced not only their net income but the purchasing power of that income; and the fall in the price of foodstuffs has affected them but little as expenditure on food forms a relatively small part of their total cost of living. Nevertheless we felt that it was reasonable to maintain that the higher the pay, the more the margin of surplus of income over expenditure and the less the hardship inflicted by a cut. We therefore came to the conclusion that the cut should begin with half an anna in the rupee on incomes of Rs. 30 and under and progress gradually.”

Sir, some people might say that they see in those remarks of the Retrenchment Sub-Committee a failure in logic. Perhaps some do not. But I submit that if there is any failure in logic in their recommendations, or in the measures taken by Government as a consequence of those recommendations, there is equally a failure in logic in the process by which, when prices rose after the war, the scales of wages were correspondingly increased. However, no one is entirely guided by logic, and I think that the argument of Lala (Laughter) Amar Nath is much to the point. (A Voice: "Babu.") I beg your pardon, Babu Amar Nath Dutt—I thought he was a Kayasth. (A Voice: "He is.") Sir, Babu Amar Nath Dutt's argument is very much more relevant. My Honourable friend drew a comparison between the remuneration of persons engaged in agricultural operations and contrasted that with the earnings of postmen whose wages we are at present discussing. His view was that, so far from it being a matter of reduction by 3½ per cent., it was much more a reduction by 80 per cent. that they were suffering from. As to the exact percentage by which the agricultural labourer is worse off; I do not propose to detain the House this evening with a discussion on that subject or with any attempt to estimate closely, but if only, Sir, you observe the falling off in customs, in excise and in railway revenues, you will perceive very clearly that the agriculturist must have had a very considerable reduction in resources, which reduction is not such as can be measured by 3½ per cent. of his sources. Now, Sir, the Government have apparently accepted the recommendations of the Retrenchment Committee in this matter, but I have not noticed that they have been extraordinarily anxious to defend the recommendations or their acceptance for them. On two occasions I have raised this question. I raised it on the general discussion of the Railway Budget and the subject was carefully avoided by the Member in charge. I raised the subject again on the general discussion of the General Budget. It was equally avoided then. I tried to raise the point subsequently by means of a question put to the Government on the subject of the wages which they were paying in Delhi and which were being paid in the same place by other employers. Now, Sir, a very remarkable thing has happened. A fortnight elapsed between the time I put in my question and the time when it was answered and the Government were unable to obtain any information on the subject. The Government here are in effect the Local Government. They have a very large staff

Mr. President: The Chair sympathises with the Honourable Member in the grievance which he seems to have, but the Chair should like to ask him whether he is supporting the motion or opposing it. If he is doing either of the two, then the relevant observations would be to state his reasons why he is supporting the grant or opposing it?

Mr. E. F. Sykes: I am opposing the grant because the reduction of wages referred by Mr. Joshi is entirely unreasonable and it is one that the Government themselves, as I have shown by instances, are not in the least anxious to defend. Therefore, I am prepared to come to Mr. Joshi's assistance and oppose this grant.

Mr. Jagat Nath Aggarwal (Jullundur Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I have much pleasure in supporting the motion of Mr. Joshi. It is for various reasons that I am compelled to take this step. It is not in the words of Mr. Amar Nath Dutt that I am opposing this grant, but it is because this is a department for which I have the highest respect among the various departments of Government. Sir, our grievances on this score fall under various heads, and it is time that we ventilated them on this occasion which has come rather suddenly. Well, Sir, we may just as well recognise the solid fact that the post office is one of those departments that comes into contact with the life of every citizen, be he in a town or be he in a village. The postman is one of those ubiquitous officers of the Government who reaches every far away nook and corner of the country and who at times carries messages from friends and relations to most inaccessible corners of the country. Sir, one of the biggest monopolies enjoyed by the State is under the head of the post office, and I am glad to say that it is one of the most efficiently run departments too. Every one will be thoroughly justified in paying his tribute of respect to the unfailing performance of duty by the postman who goes from door to door both in a village and in a town. He does his work in all kinds of weather and under all sorts of difficulties. Sir, Mr. Joshi's sympathy with the postman is certainly not misplaced. If he stands up for labour, then the postman is the person who deserves the respect and the sympathy of every one. Now, Sir, what is the treatment that has been meted out to this postman? Well, Sir, he has suffered because there are so many of them who draw in small amounts a large sum from the exchequer. I will put my proposition shortly. The position is that in other departments a limit has been placed at Rs. 40 below which the retrenchment axe cannot be operated. But there are two exceptions to it, one is the Postal Department and the other is the Railway Department. What is the reason for doing so? It is not that the people in these departments who are getting less than Rs. 40 have other means of making money and therefore you are at liberty to cut away their salaries. That is not the reason. In the Postal Department there is not the least possibility of a man having any extra income, but there is every possibility of getting extra kicks. The point is that the small salaried people in the Railways and the Postal Department are so many and the amount of their salaries runs into so many crores that there is an obvious temptation that by cutting off a few annas in the rupee, the retrenchment comes to several crores. Now, Sir, that is not justifiable. Sir, if I may say so, the argument should be put in another way. People drawing higher salaries could produce by retrenchment probably a far greater saving without affecting such a large number of people than has been done by this economy campaign in the Postal Department.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: On a point of explanation, Sir. May I tell my Honourable friend that the salaries of officials in the Postal Department is only 51 lakhs whereas the pay of others comes to eight crores and by abolishing the whole lot you do not touch the fringe of the problem, viz., the deficit of two crores.

Mr. Jagan Nath Aggarwal: The explanation supports my argument. I am much obliged to my friend for these figures. Sir, I should like to know the justification for not leaving these postmen alone? I put a charitable construction on it, that the reduction of salaries of these people will bring a large sum of money and the Finance Department or the Retrenchment Committee could not forgo the temptation or the prospect of making a huge saving by a cut on salaries under that head. Well, Sir, if that is so, I am sure some means could have been found for not encroaching upon the paltry salaries of these people. Our tale of grievances, however, does not end here. If the pay of the humble official of the post office, who is doing his duty so well, is going to be cut, how does the public get the benefit of this retrenchment? You pay more and you get less. The postal rates against the wishes of this House have been enhanced to a figure which they never reached in the history of this country. For the mere pleasure of writing a letter to somebody you have to pay not half anna or an anna, but you have to pay an anna and a very inconvenient fraction of 3 pies. And for the privilege of writing a postcard and what man in this land has not got to write a postcard just as a means of salutation or of remembrance from one part of the country to the other—you have got to pay not one pice or 2 pice as it was last year but 9 pies. The public has got to pay an exceedingly large figure—something like 25 to 50 per cent. more—for using the services of this public utility department, the pay of the employees of which is going to be so ruthlessly cut down. So, there must be something radically wrong with this department. I feel, Sir, that that is the grievance which my friends have been ventilating on more than one occasion that the campaign of economy has started at the wrong end. If you look at these reports, then the inevitable conclusion you come to is: 500 men in the lower grades turned out and part of their salaries taken away. As you move upwards the scale of retrenchment grows less and less till you find that very near the top just one man moved from one place to another. That I submit is the real explanation of this discrepancy we have. The public have got a lot more to pay in services than before. The public have to use the public utility services. The faithful and humble employees of the department have got to work day and night and they get their emoluments cut down. I think there is certainly something wrong in all these matters which requires much more careful looking into and an examination from a different angle than has been done hitherto. Realising that this department cannot be put an end to as somebody suggested, nor is it possible to upset this department by bringing something else in its place, and realising the great utility of this department, I submit that the way in which we have treated it in the matter of retrenchment, etc., is certainly not the proper way. I have therefore much pleasure in supporting the motion of Mr. Joshi.

Mr. S. G. Jog (Berar Representative): We are practically reaching the fag end of this evil day. I say, Sir, evil day for various reasons. We have moved today throughout in an atmosphere of mutual distrust and we have also moved in an atmosphere of non-co-operation. I never thought for a moment that the Independent Party under the able guidance and lead of an able administrator and sportsman like Sir Abdur Rahim would have taken recourse to a spirit of non-co-operation.

Mr. President: What has that to do with this motion? The Honourable Member should come to the point at once.

Mr. S. G. Jog: The object of my rising is that we want to discuss all motions on their merits. It is quite immaterial whether one Member of a Party brings a point out or whether

Mr. President: The Honourable Member must speak on the motion.

Mr. S. G. Jog: Coming to the motion, I have great pleasure in supporting my Honourable friend Mr. Joshi; and of all the departments, if I have got regard for any one, it is for the Postal Department. For the last two years, I have come in contact with the grievances of the Postal Department, and I have no hesitation in saying that their grievances are real. As pointed out by my Honourable friend, Mr. Aggarwal, of all the departments, the Postal Department has suffered most. The Government has made an invidious distinction in not making sufficient provision in the case of Postal employees drawing less than Rs. 40. There is a maxim in Sanskrit which I should like to repeat to the House and which runs:

“Dairo dhurbala ghathaka”.

When translated it means. “God or luck or fate generally goes against the weak”. Employees of the Postal Department, who toil more than others and who take such great pains to deliver your letters in time and do all sorts of things for you, are not properly treated. It is a matter of great regret to me that the wicked hand of retrenchment should fall on the postal employees. Last year when I made a speech on this subject, I brought it to the notice of the Postal Department that their decision would not receive the approval of the public at large. My Honourable friend, Mr. Amar Nath Dutt, having been in the Retrenchment Committee, has got the Government view now, and instead of leaving the Government Members to defend the policy of retrenchment, is now supporting the Government and taking the Government view. I quite see that he may have his own reasons for making some retrenchment proposals, but we must also express our view, and I should bring to his notice that the retrenchment proposals which he has made have not received the public approval. I think it is time that Government should reconsider their decision as regards the cuts, and they should exempt the low-paid employees from the operation of the cut, and the Postal employees should be brought into line along with the other departments, and if anything more cannot be done, at least this should be done. With these remarks I support the motion of Mr. Joshi. There is no question of any sympathy with labour, and I say I do not support his motion on that ground. I hold no brief for the labour movement, at the same time I hold a brief this way, that equity should be so adjusted between all classes of labour and employees and Government and all other classes so that there will be no hardship to any one. Sir, I support my friend Mr. Joshi.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Sir, I am very grateful to my Honourable friend Mr. Joshi, who has always the good of labour at heart, for having moved the motion with his unfailing sympathy for labour, and I am wholly in agreement with every word that he uttered on this occasion, and when I say it, I do so as an ex-President of more provincial Postal Conferences than one and as an ex-President of more all-India Postal Conferences than one. Sir, on previous occasions, if Honourable Members only cared to read the report of the proceedings of this House, in those great days of Swarajism when the Opposition was surging from this side of the House, there were more advocates of labour from this side of the House than we find to-day. When the Swarajists, when the Congress people went from this House out into the country on a great national endeavour in which I, from this place, wish them early success, and incidentally the early dawn of good sense on Whitehall, when those Swarajists went out of this House, with them went out the surging sympathy that used to exist for my friend Mr. Joshi. He was not then ploughing a lonely furrow in this House, and I rise to assure him that even though the support for him in this House may be little, the support for him out in the country is large. The very fact that the Labour Commission had toured the country and made certain recommendations in regard to the future of labour and labour's own place in the constitution is a feather to the cap of Mr. Joshi inside this House and to my friend Mr. Chaman Lal outside this House in regard to the manner in which they have been fighting the cause of labour, including Postal labour.

Sir, we do not agree for a moment that Government have shown adequate sympathy to Postal employees. It may be retrenchment, but retrenchment whether it takes the shape of volumes sent to us in the shape of Reports produced slowly and steadily like the Ganges breaking out of the Gangotri Glacier, coming through different rugged mountain sides and then through the plain to meet the mother of waters, the ocean. Whether it is rapidly produced as it was produced by Mr. Shammukham Chetty, whose presence I miss to-day because he has gone on an important mission, or whether it is produced in a very ugly manner in which to delay the process, with purposes which are familiar to us, I must say that no retrenchment report, in whatever manner it has been produced, which recommends retrenchment or suggests retrenchment or creates that suggestion or impression of retrenchment out in the country so far as Postal labour is concerned, will be acceptable to the supporters of labour. Sir, under retrenchment, and owing to a sort of misguided enthusiasm for retrenchment on the Opposition Benches, it must be amazing to any one that under cover of retrenchment the poor postal employees should have been thrown into the wilderness. I know a number of people who have no jobs. Retrenchment I can understand. I know the Finance Member spoke with feeling when he said that it is a nightmare. It is something worse than a nightmare. It is a dreadful reality with which these people are faced, men whose bread is taken out of their mouths because some people say there should be retrenchment. I am opposed to retrenchment altogether unless you retrench the Military Budget and reduce the military expenditure. I have been patiently, sullenly, silently watching this progress of retrenchment talk. I carefully kept out of these retrenchment committees, for once you agree to retrenchment without the power to regulate retrenchment, you don't know what will happen because we are not sitting on those Benches (pointing to Treasury Benches). That was the position of the late Mr. C. R. Das; that again was the position of the late Pandit Motilal Nehru. We have no business to give advice to Government which they are entitled to put into the waste-paper basket; because we are only an Opposition without power. We co-operate to retrench. And what has happened? Hundreds and thousands of poor postal employees have been sent into the wilderness. I have got letters as an ex-President of the Postal Union. I have also seen men who come to me. A few men came three days ago and said, "Can you not approach the Government Member-in-charge?" I said "No". I have followed a regular policy of non-interference in this business. I say the Opposition has bungled. The Opposition has no imagination. Imagine Sir Hari Singh Gour is the Leader of the Opposition, a gentleman who was a member of a committee which was boycotted by this country,—the Central Committee. The very fact that the Opposition Leadership is held by Sir Hari Singh Gour is an indication of the fact that we in this House are committed to policies and programmes which, knowing as I do, cannot cut much ice in the country. The very fact that we have on the Independent Benches Sir Abdur Rahim, whose career was a career of notorious agreement with the policy of repression in Bengal, indicates the downfall of the Opposition. That is the position of the Opposition to-day, and that is why it has helped Government in creating this programme of retrenchment, which is responsible for this state of affairs, because Government cannot accept our suggestions. Once you agree to the principle of retrenchment, they will not accept your programme of retrenchment. Sir, it is all well and good for the Opposition to agree to the principle of retrenchment. I am opposed to the principle of retrenchment, and when I said so, the Honourable the Finance Member repudiated me last year. He repudiated me strongly. He strongly defended Sir Abdur Rahim and stated that his retrenchment report will be of “considerable” support.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Honourable Member always goes much further than the issue before the House. How is the attitude of the Opposition, the question of the position of the Leader of the Nationalist Party, the question of the position of the Leader of the Independent Party, relevant to the issue now before the House which is the grant of 10 crores and over to be made for the Posts and Telegraphs Department?

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Sir, I am thankful to you for reminding me of the relevancy, and with all the respect due to the Chair I bow to your suggestion. I only beg to suggest, with your permission, that when Sir Abdur Rahim agreed to serve on the Retrenchment Committee, he was committed to the principle of retrenchment. And there has been so much retrenchment in the Postal Department that it has resulted in sending away the postal people to the wilderness. Had only the Opposition said to the Government, “We refuse to go into your trap, we refuse to draw your allowances for the Retrenchment Committees, we are altogether opposed to the principle of retrenchment and it is your responsibility only”, then this calamity which has fallen on the Postal Department and which I am standing up here to deplore would not have happened. Sir, I maintain, and with all respect due to your rulings and with the suggestion that you have given, I believe I am right when I maintain that this policy and this principle resulted in a programme which was not duly observed. And not having been duly observed,—we know the Government,—it was observed in some other direction, namely, sending away men from the bottom, the poor labourers, the under-dog, for whom Mr. Joshi stood up in this House. Sir, I refuse this supply to the Postal Department because I do not believe in the principle of the Indian Posts and Telegraphs Department working together. If only you take some time, Sir, as you did take some time in your unattached days, to go through the expenditure of the Postal and Telegraphs Departments, and then if Honourable Members of this House will care to read the arguments that have been urged by me out in the country and urged by distinguished Members on this side on the floor of the House, it will be crystal clear that Government have always taken shelter behind the fact that they cannot go further in the direction of ameliorating the condition of the postal employees because it is a commercial department, and being a commercial department both Posts and Telegraphs must pay. I can as well say that you can join this Telegraph Department with any other department, including the department of my Honourable friend the Home Member, and then if they say that it is not a paying proposition because the Home Department is not a productive department but a spending department, the argument of Government would be as absurd as their present argument is. So if you maintain that a particular department is to be treated as a commercial proposition, then I say here and now, separate the Postal Department from the Telegraph Department. What has happened in the past is robbing Peter and paying Paul, robbing the Postal Department and paying the Telegraph Department. What, may I ask, has been the argument of Government? Their argument has been this: they say that the departments must be taken together because the purpose of the departments is the same. I beg to differ from that. The purpose of the Postal Department and the purpose of the Telegraph Department is not exactly the same. The purpose of all departments in that sense is the same. The purpose of the department of my Honourable friend Sir Lancelot Graham is as much to keep the King's Government going as it is the purpose of my Honourable friend the Home Member's department. The purpose of the Finance Department is the same; the purpose of the department of Sir Joseph Bore, that is now and that is going to be is the same. All departments are tarred with the same brush. There is no use saying that the work of the Postal Department is the same as the work of the Telegraph Department. The work that is done by the Postal Department is different from the work that is done by the Telegraph Department. The postal employees are different from the telegraph employees. The education that the postal employees have got is different from the education that the telegraph employees have got. The postal employees do not require so much technical qualification as the telegraph employees require, and you do not have so many experts in the Postal Department as Government say they should have in the Telegraph Department. Why, then did this arise, this differentiation in treatment between the postal employees and the telegraph employees? Why, I ask? Why? Because if only Honourable Members interested in the subject will look back to the old records, the telegraph employees resorted to the short cut, whereas the postal employees resorted to the constitutional way. The telegraph employees went to their own leaders outside, took their stand upon, the gospel of self-reliance and self-help and resorted to what telegraph employees in other countries have resorted, or to be more correct, they were going to resort to a general strike. They held a pistol as it were to the head of the Member-in-charge of that Department: you know the story of the highway robber in the middle ages who seeing a man wandering alone says, "Your life or your purse"; and the poor Member-in-charge of that department succumbed, painfully, abjectly, timidly succumbed as the postal employees grinned at him—but in my own opinion nobly, courageously, righteously, for he realised there could not have been this threat without actual grievances and with the responsibility due to his employees he examined their grievances and he found it was a just grievance that each one of them had got, and having found that, what did he do? He inquired, responded and satisfied them. That was an admirable move on the part of the Government in regard to the Telegraph

5 P.M.

Department. But the poor postal employees did not get the same help, and that is what I am going to develop in another half an hour or so before me

Mr. B. V. Jadhav: They went on strike in Bombay for about six weeks.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: My Honourable friend, with the information for which he is always noted in this House, says that the postal employées went on strike for about six weeks. I quite admit that his information is correct: but when I was talking of telegraph employées, I was talking of them as an organised people, the whole lot of them, not one provincial group. In the case of the postal employées as my Honourable friend, Mr. Jadhav, no doubt knows, there was no unanimity: there could be no unanimity; they are educated in a different way, or rather they were educated by their Union people in a different way. Their Union people advised them to go to the Members of the Central Legislature. It was all well and good to go to the Members of the Central Legislature; the Central Legislature in the past and in the present, and as Mr. Joshi has rightly shown to-day, will sympathise with them and work for them in a constitutional way, but when the others took to direct action, the Government yielded to them. Even in a constitutional way I admit we have made a tremendous impression on the Government. For instance, my old friend, Sir Bhupendranath Mitra, finally yielded to the pressure which was brought year after year from this side of the House, and he looked into the case of the postal employées; after very careful thinking and a little wavering—wavering not because he lacked sympathy, because he was so full of sympathy for them—but because in all these matters, as it was truly said, the master of the purse is the master of everything, he had to go to the Finance Member or Chancellor of the Exchequer and ask him, “Can I embark on this enterprise?” And if the Finance Member would not have agreed, he could not have embarked on it. He had to persuade the Finance Member; that the times were good, much better than they are now; but we have played into the hands of the Government by suggesting retrenchment and having suggested retrenchment, even those good days when the pay of the postal employées was not cut have been banished into the limbo of oblivion. Can you imagine anything more painful—and I may assure you I am expressing the feeling of a large number of unemployed people who have been thrown out into the wilderness in the name, the ugly name, even though the blessed name of retrenchment placed in the hands of the Government by an indiscreet Opposition a set of misguided but very honest and very sincere enthusiasts of retrenchment. What has happened? Poor postal employées getting less than 100 rupees a month had their salaries retrenched.

Speaking from this side of the House, I may make my position perfectly clear. I will not agree to retrenchment going too low. My friend, Sir Cowasji Jehangir, said to the Finance Member with his usual earnestness, “I do not subscribe to your doctrine about sound finance. It may not be sound finance to borrow, but it is sound policy to borrow on these occasions.” But the Honourable the Finance Member, a careful student of finance, thought it was better to take his stand on sound finance even though there may have to be retrenchment in the manner in which he practised retrenchment. I shall come to the practice of that retrenchment presently, and I shall show you how the practice of that retrenchment has affected the people. But before coming to the practice of retrenchment, I should point out very clearly to the Honourable the Finance Member that by cutting down the salary of an employee getting less than 100 rupees a month, or even less than 50 rupees a month, he came very very low. Fancy a salary like that being cut in the name of retrenchment. Honourable Members can imagine the difficulty of such a man trying to make both ends meet and of keeping body and soul together. It is a tragedy not only in this country but it is also a fact which all economists admit, all students of a certain science will admit, it is a fact that the poorer the man the larger his family. Poverty and procreation seem to advance pari passu; in this poor country, a country full of poverty stricken people, the poorest country in the world, I can say without any fear of contradiction that the employees whose salary has been cut, whose salary has been retrenched, are men who have large families. If Honourable Members on the Treasury Benches feel, and rightly feel, that they do not want their salaries to be cut down because they came under a contract,—and I admit the sanctity of contract,—unless they voluntarily cut it down, no Member on this side of the House says, "Violate the contract",—what they say is speed up Indianisation, that is our view,—when they hesitate to cut down their salaries, though they can very well afford to do it more than the poor employees I have mentioned, very much more indeed in spite of their ground that they have to maintain one establishment in this country and another establishment in their own,—when they do not want to give up what they felt they should give up, how can you expect the poor man to give up what he has been compelled to give up? Sir, unless the Government assure me that the salaries of the postal employees, the salary of the under-dog, will forthwith be restored. I may tell the Government that they are not contributing to the satisfaction of a large number of good and loyal people, people who day in and day out, through thick and thin, have stood by the Government. For, Sir, did not the wave of non-co-operation time after time pass over this land, but it left the bed-rock of the postal employees untouched, and my friend from Bengal Mr. Ghuznavi who has great sympathy for the labouring people, and who, I believe, has been in touch like my friend Sir Abdullah Suhrawardy, with postal employees in Bengal, will bear me out when I say that there is a real and genuine feeling of discontent among these unfortunate men whose salary has been cut down. Sir, I may have to face them in future; I may have to preside over their conferences (Hear, hear), and they will ask me what have I done for them. Mr. Joshi may be a nominated Member, but he is not nominated in the sense in which nomination generally takes place, for just as my friend Sir Henry Gidney is nominated for his community whom he has been vigorously representing on the floor of this House, sometimes to the embarrassment of the Opposition, even so Mr. Joshi has been vigorously representing and exercising his vote vigorously and independently, because he is acting as elected Member for labour and if there was to be an election tomorrow, and if labour were to have a constituency, Mr. Joshi will be elected unopposed, and if he were opposed

Mr. K. Ahmed: It is rather outside the subject-matter under discussion.

Mr. O. S. Ranga Iyer: I will show that it is not entirely outside the subject in a minute if you will allow me to complete the sentence. And if Mr. Joshi were to be opposed, it will be clear to his opponent that when the results are announced he would have lost his security. Therefore, Sir, such being the position of Mr. Joshi,—I say with all respect to the Honourable gentlemen who expressed a disagreement with him on this side of the House,—I am not ashamed of supporting labour, nobody on this side of the House, even those who do not see eye to eye with Mr. Joshi, is opposed to the real and legitimate grievances of labour.

Now, then, Sir, let me come to the other aspect of the question, namely the practice of retrenchment. I was up to now talking on the cutting down of salaries and pointing out that the salary was improperly cut, that it has been unreasonably cut and that it should be immediately restored. But now I am coming to the question of the practice of retrenchment, I said men have been sent away. But half a loaf is better than no loaf, and that is where the Finance Member stands on solid ground, because he says he had to cut down pay because he wanted to reduce the number of men who would be sent away. While not disputing that fact, I should have liked the retrenchment in some other form, in some other department like the Military Department. That has not taken place. I have behind me years of rhetoric, years of reasoning that the Military Department is a white elephant, and it puts its elephant foot on every other department. Why indeed, I ask, should the Military Department not be cut down to meet the necessities of the Postal Department? Why, indeed, I ask, should not the salaries of those who have been asked to accept a lower wage be restored to their old level and the military department be cut down to meet that restoration? I again ask, should those men have been sent away, because by sending them away, you have deprived them of a means of livelihood? Sir, I want you to imagine, I want to pass through the crucible of your imagination, the great trouble

Mr. K. Ahmed: I want to support you; give me a chance to speak.

Mr. O. S. Ranga Iyer: Imagine the great trouble which discharged employees are undergoing. By sending them away, Government do not seem to realise that they have sown discontent in the hearts of good and loyal people. By sending them away Government do not seem to realise that they have caused a genuine grievance for people who should not have been hurt. The Government ought to have maintained at any cost, even by borrowing, those people who have been sent into the wilderness. I am sorry, Sir, I have taken so much time, and I beg your and the Honourable Members' pardon, and I thank you and them for listening with such kindness. But I had a responsibility to my people, to the labouring classes, and as I realised that there was not sufficient support for my friend Mr. Joshi which the occasion required, especially when he raised the opposition to the whole cut, I thought my friend Sir Abdur Rahim should not have the opportunity in the future to describe any Member of this House except himself as frivolous, though the climax of frivolity has been to ask for the extension of the publication and the period of Retrenchment Committee's Reports.

Mr. President: The House will now stand adjourned till 11 o'clock tomorrow.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Saturday, the 19th March, 1932.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Saturday, 19th March, 1932.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at eleven of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT.

ALLEGED MALTREATMENT OF WOMEN POLITICAL PRISONERS.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): I have received notice from Sardar Sant Singh that he proposes to ask for leave to make a motion for the adjournment of the business of the House to-day for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely, the maltreatment of women political prisoners in the course of their transfer from the Delhi Jail to mixed Jails in the Punjab. Before I ask whether there is any objection to the motion, the Chair would like to invite the attention of the Honourable Member to the fact that under the rules governing the procedure of this House the Budget grants have to be put to the House at 5 o'clock to-day. Adjournment motions are under the Standing Orders taken up at 4 P.M. and discussed till 6 P.M. It is clearly not possible to have the adjournment motion and also secure compliance with the rules regarding the Budget grants. The Chair has therefore to ask the Honourable Member whether he would renew his request for leave for this adjournment motion on Wednesday next, and the Chair assures him that it will regard the motion on Wednesday as urgent, and that no difficulty will be raised in regard to the matter of urgency on that day. I therefore take it that the Honourable Member is agreeable (Sardar Sant Singh: "Yes") not to press it to-day but to renew his request for leave on Wednesday next when the House meets again.

Sardar Sant Singh (West Punjab: Sikh): I accept your suggestion, Sir, and I will renew it on Wednesday.

THE GENERAL BUDGET—LIST OF DEMANDS—concl'd.

DEMAND NO. 23—INDIAN POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS DEPARTMENT—concl'd.

Mr. President: The House will now resume further discussion on the grant for the Indian Posts and Telegraphs Department.

Diwan Bahadur Harbilas Sarda (Ajmer-Merwara: General): I rise to support the motion moved by my Honourable friend Mr. Joshi. . . .

Mr. President: Mr. Joshi has moved no cut motion.

Diwan Bahadur Harbilas Sarda: He wanted to oppose the motion moved by the Honourable the Finance Member, and I want to support him in what he said.

Sir, I too have been connected with the Postal Conferences of my province, and I have some acquaintance with the grievances of the staff. I believe that the lower paid staff of the Postal Department is handicapped in many ways, and I do not want to do anything further to make their position worse. Retrenchment, so far as it does not affect or impair the efficiency of any service, is not only good but necessary, but if it in any way affects the members of a particular service in a most injurious way, then it is time to cry a halt, and I think the way in which the Government have dealt with some of the retrenchment proposals deserves condemnation. I do not want that masses of men, or even groups of men, or a number of men should be thrown out of employment at this time when things are very bad. I therefore think that any unnecessary retrenchment in the shape of dismissal or discharge of numbers of people should be discouraged and should not be taken in hand.

Sir, I would ask your permission to say something about the work of the Retrenchment Committees. I have been, and I am a member of the General Purposes Sub-Committee, and certain remarks were made yesterday, and before that, to the disparagement of the work of the Committee and the members of that Committee. Consequently, as a sort of personal explanation, as I have been connected with it, I wish to say a few words. The House will remember very well that last year in March, when the Honourable the Finance Member presented his Budget and the Finance Bill and proposed fresh taxation, from every part of the House, from every corner the cry went forth that fresh taxation should not be levied but that more retrenchment should be effected and thus money should be found to balance the Budget. The Honourable the Finance Member said that he had retrenched as much as he could, and that if the Members thought that there had not been sufficient retrenchment, he would invite Members to investigate the matter and to see things for themselves thus to find out that Government had done all that was possible. In a spirit of frankness and sincerity of purpose, which do him credit, he offered to appoint a committee to go into the matter, and Members on this side, the Leaders of Parties and others, accepted that offer in the spirit that they would thereby be able to do public service and serve the cause of their country. They offered their services to effect further retrenchment so that there might be no occasion for further taxation later on. In that spirit, those of us who were nominated to these Committees agreed to serve on the different Committees. Personally my opinion is that even if any of us agreed to serve on those Committees with the object only of helping the Government—even then I think the object was laudable, but, as I have said that, so far as I am aware, all of us agreed to serve on those Committees with the sole object of helping the country to obviate the necessity for further taxation by proposing further retrenchment. Sir, when my Honourable friend Sir Abdur Rahim agreed to serve on the Retrenchment Committee and accepted the Chairmanship of the General Purposes Sub-Committee, he did so at great personal sacrifice, not only financial, but of his time and energy, and the way in which he has worked, has evoked admiration from all who know anything of the work of that Committee and who had occasion to read the two reports issued by that Committee. It has been said by an Honourable Member that the reports of the Committees should be thrown into the waste-paper basket. Sir, if anybody thinks so, it is not the fault of the reports of those Committees. I am sure that those reports are very valuable documents, and are looked upon as such by all responsible people who have read them. Not only that, but I have heard some very responsible officers say that the reports would remain valuable documents for use when financial questions arise again and when another retrenchment committee is appointed, as it is bound to be appointed in a few years. That being so, I only wish to say that the work done by the Retrenchment Committee is very useful and has been done in a spirit of public service only, and those who have worked there deserve praise, not condemnation. It is that spirit that inspired the work done by the Committees which co-operated in reviewing the expenditure in different departments. The General Purposes Committee went into the working of the different departments of the Government of India and considered the evidence placed before them with the greatest care, and such recommendations as have been made by that Committee were made in the public interest, and we expect the Government to pay proper attention to them and consider them with the same care with which the General Purposes Committee exercised to come to those conclusions, and it is our duty as members of the Committee and as Members of this House to press those points with all the force which we can command. It is a pity that certain retrenchment cuts which were proposed by my Honourable friend Sir Abdur Rahim were not pressed to a division yesterday. He would have found almost the entire Nationalist Party following him into the lobby if he had pressed that point to a division. That however is past. I have nothing further to say about that. I want to make it clear that whatever the Retrenchment Committees have done has been done in the best interests of the country and has been inspired by public spirit.

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore (Member for Industries and Labour): I confess to having felt considerable surprise yesterday when Mr. Joshi raised his objection to the entire grant for the Posts and Telegraphs Department on the ground of cuts imposed upon the lower paid employees of the Posts and Telegraphs Department. I understood from what had previously fallen from the Chair that it was generally agreed by the whole House that Friday and Saturday were to be wholly and entirely reserved for the discussion of cuts and motions to secure retrenchment. I do not now propose to take any objection to the course which Mr. Joshi thought fit to adopt yesterday. It may be that he was perfectly within his rights technically. It may also be that perhaps I might have too nice a sense of the obligations attaching to an agreement which has been definitely entered upon. Since, however Mr. Joshi took the fullest benefit of the facilities flowing from the agreement the day before yesterday, which you, Sir, will remember was allocated to the unattached Members of this House, I naturally thought that Mr. Joshi would equally rest content with honouring the obligations which were incidental to that agreement. Evidently, Sir, I have been mistaken. Labour as represented by my friend Mr. Joshi is evidently prepared to take all the benefits which it can receive and it is not prepared to subscribe to any obligation. As regards the subject-matter of Mr. Joshi's objection it is unnecessary for me to go into any detail. It has been completely replied to by the Honourable Member who followed him. I am very happy to have had so doubtful a champion as my friend, Mr. Amar Nath Dutt, who was himself a member of the Retrenchment Committee, and I need only add, Sir, that the cuts in question which were recommended by the Retrenchment Sub-Committee were cuts amounting to half an anna in the rupee on salaries and wages up to Rs. 30, one anna on those between Rs. 30 and Rs. 84 and ten per cent. beyond that. They resulted in a graduated scale of 3 and $\frac{1}{4}$ th per cent., $6\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. and of 10 per cent., and I am sure that since the graduated scale appeals so much to so many Members of this House, they will see no objection to the cuts which have been imposed. I think it is a little hard for us on this side to be threatened on the one hand with the loss of lakhs of rupees, because we have not given effect to the suggestions of the Retrenchment Sub-Committees, and on the other to be threatened with the loss of crores of rupees because we are accepting the recommendations of the Committee.

Now, Sir, I turn to my Honourable friend Mr. Sykes. Well, Sir, I confess to a feeling of utter bewilderment when my Honourable friend was speaking. When I listened to him, a very unhappy feeling crept over me that perhaps the strain of the last few months was beginning to tell upon me and that I was rapidly qualifying for entry into a home for mental defectives. It was therefore, Sir, a matter of great relief when I found that you, Mr. President, were exactly in the same position as myself and if I remember aright you asked the Honourable Member whether he was speaking for or against the motion. I confess that my bewilderment continued until almost the end of that speech and then I understood my Honourable friend to say that he agreed with Mr. Joshi in not wanting any Posts and Telegraphs after the 31st March, and that the best way of remedying these cuts on the salaries of the lower paid employees was by dismissing the latter entirely, which is the result which would have followed automatically from the elimination of this grant.

I come now to Mr. Jagan Nath Aggarwal. I always listen to him with great and close attention whenever he has anything to say, but I confess that I was unable to follow the line of argument which he adopted yesterday. What he said was that he objected entirely to cuts on the lower paid employees of the department, though he admitted that this might result in very substantial saving. On the other hand equally strongly he objected to the recent increases in postal rates, which I am glad to inform this House, have resulted in a much needed increase in our revenue so far. Now, Sir, if on the one hand you are not prepared to take measures to increase your income and on the other hand you are not prepared to take measures to diminish your expenditure, then you are heading straight for bankruptcy, and if a bankrupt institution is not to be run by the general tax-payers, then the only alternative is that it should shut down and that in fact, Sir, is, I understand, what Mr. Aggarwal was prepared to accept since he said that he supported Mr. Joshi's motion. Sir, it is impossible for me seriously to deal with a position of this sort.

I come finally, Sir, to Mr. Ranga Iyer. In the flood of rhetoric which he poured upon the head of this devoted House during the last hour of a tiring day I did try to see if I could clutch at some straw to save myself.

I think I succeeded, because there was one sentence in his speech which seemed to me to require both criticism and explanation and that sentence was that hundreds and thousands of poor postal employees have been either retrenched or sent into the wilderness. Now, Sir, I have asked myself whether that statement is a correct representation of facts or whether it is a gross exaggeration. I challenge my Honourable friend to give me even the roughest estimate of the thousands of postal employees who, according to him, have been sent into the wilderness.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Non-Muhamadan Rural): Sir, I clearly stated that thousands of employees have been sent away under retrenchment and the Postal Department has not been an exception to the rule. I also stated that their salaries have been cut which the Honourable Member is trying to elude.

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore: Well, Sir, seeing that I myself have referred to the cuts in salaries, I cannot understand how I can possibly be eluding that point. However, the only compiled figures which my friend Mr. Ranga Iyer would have had before him are those on page 6 of the statement of results of the retrenchment operations already circulated to Honourable Members, where it is noted that in the Posts and Telegraphs Department 31 officers, and 353 ministerial and other staff, of whom, I think, about 100 have retired voluntarily, and only 4 inferior staff were abolished or about to be abolished in connection with the retrenchment campaign. This gives a total of 388 men, out of a staff of about 132,000 belonging to the Posts and Telegraphs Department. These figures were compiled in February from the statements received from the heads of the service. Obviously, as many important retrenchment measures which had specifically been ordered. . . .

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Will the Honourable gentleman state how many runners were sent away?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore: Sir, if my Honourable friend will allow me to give him further information without interruption, I should like to do so. I was saying that it would take time to give to the House the full effect of all these important measures which we are bringing in, but I have no reason to think that anything of the nature of a very extensive reduction of staff will be possible or will be needed. I think that it is surely significant that no complaints about retrenchment, apart from the complaints about the cut of pay, have reached the Director General from such bodies as the Postmen's Unions, and practically none even from individuals. Sir, I do not think any thing more is necessary for me to point out how wild and without foundation is the statement that hundreds and thousands of poor postal employees have been turned out into the wilderness. I do not think there is anything further for me to say and I will now leave it to the House to decide whether they will relieve my Honourable successor from the burden of administering the Postal Department during the next financial year. (Applause.)

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I think the Honourable Member has accused me of having broken an agreement. The agreement was arrived at, as you know, in order that the House should be able to properly utilise the time at its disposal. So, when I found that the House had spare time at its disposal, I was entitled to make use of it. I have therefore broken no agreement. Moreover, Mr. President, even if I have broken the agreement, I did it for a very good reason. I am in the habit of looking after the welfare of other people; I am somewhat altruistic in tendencies. I thought some people receive very fat salaries and it is bad for them to be without any work.

Mr. President: Sir George Schuster to reply.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster (Finance Member): Sir, I have nothing to add.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 10,67,90,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges, which will come in course of payment, during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1933, in respect of 'Indian Posts and Telegraphs Department (including Working Expenses)'."

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND NO. 25.—INTEREST ON ORDINARY DEBT AND REDUCTION OR AVOIDANCE OF DEBT.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Sir, I beg to move:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 2,80,20,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges, which will come in course of payment, during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1933, in respect of 'Interest on Ordinary Debt and Reduction or Avoidance of Debt'."

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND NO. 26.—INTEREST ON MISCELLANEOUS OBLIGATIONS.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Sir, I beg to move:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 48,12,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges, which will come in course of payment, during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1933, in respect of 'Interest on Miscellaneous Obligations'."

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND NO. 27.—STAFF, HOUSEHOLD AND ALLOWANCES OF THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Sir, I beg to move:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 3,91,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges, which will come in course of payment, during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1933, in respect of 'Staff, Household and Allowances of the Governor General'."

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND NO. 29.—COUNCIL OF STATE.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Sir, I beg to move:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 90,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges, which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1933, in respect of the 'Council of State'."

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND NO. 30—LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY AND LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY DEPARTMENT.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Sir, I beg to move:

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Sir, I assure you that when I rise to oppose this motion I have absolutely no complaint against you as the head of the Legislative Assembly. But, Mr. President, I have some complaint against the Government for depriving this Legislature of one of its most cherished and valuable privileges, and that, Sir, is that whenever the Government enter into an agreement of a long-standing nature to incur expenditure, they should consult this House beforehand. At least a vote of this House is necessary to be taken before Government enters into that contract. I feel, Mr. President, that the Government of India have entered into such a contract, or are about to enter into such a contract with regard to the subvention to the N.-W. F. Province. I assure you, Mr. President, I do not wish to go into details on that question. I am simply saying that the Government of India have not paid sufficient attention to the privileges of this House. The Government of India, in my judgment, when they decided to give a subvention of about a crore of rupees to the N.-W. F. Province, should have placed a Resolution before this House

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Member for Commerce and Railways): Sir, on a point of order, I would ask for your ruling as to how far a question of this kind can be discussed on this particular vote.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Honourable Member is wholly out of order. The Chair would like to draw the Honourable Member's attention to Demand No. 78. The Government have come before the Assembly asking it to vote a definite amount for that purpose, and if that item is reached, the Honourable Member will be perfectly entitled to oppose that Demand and to give his reasons for doing so, but on the present occasion he is entirely out of order.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Mr. President, may I just say one word

Mr. President: Order, order. The ruling has been given and I do not want to hear anything more.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: May I say one word

Mr. President: Will you please resume your seat. The question is:

“That a sum not exceeding Rs. 7,09,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1933, in respect of the ‘Legislative Assembly and the Legislative Assembly Department’.”

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND NO. 31—FOREIGN AND POLITICAL DEPARTMENT.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Sir, I beg to move:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 7,74,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1933, in respect of the 'Foreign and Political Department'."

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadian): Sir, I wish to oppose this whole grant for the Foreign and Political Department. Sir, it seems that department is not responsible to this House, but is always irresponsible and always unconstitutional. Whenever it gets a chance to get out of the constitutional rut and usage, it takes advantage of that and it never recommends to the Governor General or the Governor General in Council the adoption of the constitutional procedure. Sir, most of the money which the Foreign and Political Department controls is spent on non-voted heads, and while a certain sum of money is spent on the voted side, that department generally tries to evade the constitutional procedure and does not consult this House. As an illustration, I may cite the case of the N.-W. F. Province. Sir, the Foreign and Political Department controls various other departments, such as the N.-W. F. Province, Baluchistan, Political and two or three other departments. If my Honourable friend, Sir Evelyn Howell and his colleague were alive to the situation and to the constitutional issue that was evolved, his first duty would have been to advise the Government to bring forward a motion to discuss the special subvention which has been put down in the Budget under Demand No. 78. My friend, the Foreign Secretary—of course we know what Foreign Secretaries and Foreign Ministers are (A Voice: "What are they?"), they are above constitutional Governments and above all constitutional practice—I think my friend, the Foreign Secretary, should have advised the Government to come to this House to ask its opinion whether a certain new constitutional procedure that is being adopted by that procedure of giving a subvention to the N.-W. F. Province cannot be discussed, and whether it ought not to take the assent of this House. Sir, my friend, the Foreign Secretary, should have moved the Government of India to adopt the constitutional usage. Sir, on this constitutional aspect I have got the support of various authorities. I have here a statement made by that old colleague of ours, Sir Sivaswami Aiyar, who is known to be a great constitutional lawyer and was the Advocate-General of Madras, and also a Judge of the Madras High Court. He said:

"If there is one fundamental maxim of constitutional politics more valid than any other, it is that any province which claims autonomy must be able to support itself financially. Dependence on doles or depredations is incompatible with a claim to independence. If the Central Exchequer is to meet the growing deficit in the administration of the Frontier Province, it is unquestionably entitled to have a voice in the administration."

I shall now quote the comment on this from my old friend, Mr. Kelkar—whose absence from the floor of the House most of us deplore so much—in the Maratha of the 13th March:

"In budgeting a subvention of one crore of rupees to the N.-W. F. Province the Finance Member has betrayed the Legislative Assembly. It may be considered as an act of generosity of the British Government, but to our mind it is simply an extreme violation of the principle of financial control. There cannot be a sense of responsibility in a Provincial Government which has to depend upon the Central Government to the extent of about two-thirds of its expenditure."

Later on, it comments:

"We know that the voice of the Members of the Legislative Assembly will be lost in the wilderness, but we hope that there would be a general discussion on this question, as it would be of great help to understand the exact position of the Federal Government in the future constitution of India."

Sir, it is that aspect to which I want to draw the attention of this House, and I want to point out how my Honourable friend, the Foreign Secretary, in not attending to this constitutional aspect of the question, has betrayed the confidence of this House. Sir, I am not opposed to the subvention. I very much welcome that my friends from the N.-W. F. P. have got this subvention of one crore. Yesterday when I was taking an opportunity to raise a discussion on the question of the subvention, some of my friends on the left shouted "No". These friends of course are new to the House and they forget that in the good old days when this House, influenced by the Bray Committee's Report, was against granting constitutional reforms to the N.-W. F. P. I was one of the few stalwarts who always stood up and supported the grant of reforms to the N.-W. F. P., but yesterday it was an irony of fate that I was not allowed to raise a discussion and was treated as a communalist. Let me make it clear at the outset that I am for a subvention; I am not only for a subvention to this province but to every new province which may be created hereafter and also to every old province. We may all be in need of the Central Government's assistance. During the General Discussion of the Budget, I raised the issue that Government should amend the constitution so that it will be possible for them to give a subvention to any new province; and what we find here is that the Government have got it out by the backdoor of a budget speech and want to give it to only one particular province. Why did not the Foreign Secretary take the opportunity to bring out the constitutional aspect?

One more point: Devolution Rules 14 and 15 must be amended. Who is going to amend them, the Honourable the Finance Member or the Foreign Secretary or the Government of India? It is most reprehensible on the part of Government to give a subvention to the N.-W. F. P. without settling the constitutional aspect of subventions. Subventions must be general and not specific. Do they want that when the Orissa Province is constituted, it would not get any subvention? Do they think that I will come with a begging bowl to the Treasury Benches for a little grant of a few lakhs? I want the Government to look into the constitutional aspect involved in this particular issue. I know my Honourable friend the Finance Member is going to bring forward a Resolution to discuss the financial questions arising out of the Howard-Nixon Report about the separation of Burma from India. Why did not the Leader of the House bring forward a similar motion to discuss the constitutional aspect of subvention to N.-W. F. P.? The procedure that the Government have adopted strikes at the very root of the future Federal Government whether it is evolved in the way that Government propose or whether it is evolved in the way that we on this side of the House want. On these grounds, Sir, I oppose the grant to Foreign and Political Department.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Sir, I propose to deal with only one aspect of the question discussed by my Honourable friend. Mr. Das, and that is his complaint that the House has not been given a proper opportunity to discuss this question. Now, the view that Government have taken from the start has been that the natural right and constitutional course was to put the subvention down in the estimates for the first year, and that the whole matter could be adequately and properly discussed on the Demand presented by Government. More than that, we have done our very best during the last week and this week to arrange that the discussion on the Demand No. 78, North-West Frontier Province, should take place in this House. Repeatedly during the discussions which took place between the parties and the Government Benches, in order to see what arrangements should be made for carrying on the business of this week, I drew attention to the importance of this particular Demand and the desirability that it should be discussed at an early date in the week. More than once I thought I had succeeded in bringing about that arrangement. But in the end it found no place in the agreement between all the parties in this House and I did not feel that in these circumstances Government could press the matter further, because the very last thing I should be willing to do would be to raise objections on the part of Government to an arrangement which had commended itself to all parties in the House. Since this subject, the omission of which from the programme I greatly regret, had been fully brought to the notice of parties, it was impossible to say that they did not have it in their minds. I want to make it very clear that it was the desire of Government that the matter should be discussed, and they took every means in their power to bring about that result.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: I am glad I am getting this opportunity early in the morning to speak, especially after I was not allowed to do so once before. The Honourable the Leader of the House states that the House had a full opportunity of discussing this subject. I feel that the Leader of the House was not even fair to himself when he says that the House had a full opportunity of discussing this subject adequately. The question of a subvention to North-West Frontier Province is not only a question of amount, as the Report of the Committee goes into certain other matters. If the North-West Frontier Province wants more money than is provided for in the Budget, to-day and if the Assembly is not willing, they propose that the matter should be arbitrated by some third party. Now, if those conditions to the subvention are laid down, they could be laid down only in a Resolution. That was the point which I wanted to make, namely that the proper way of bringing forward a proposal of this kind is not by putting it into the Budget, but to move a Resolution so that the conditions attached to the subvention could be discussed and could be settled.

One word more about the failure of the Foreign Secretary to give a reply to one of my speeches during the discussion on my motion for reduction of the grant for the Executive Council. I suggested to him that he should secure labour representation in the Provincial Council to be established in the North-West Frontier Province. He has not given me a reply and I wish he would give me a reply at least now.

Thirdly, I seek your assistance and guidance on a point of order. We as Members of the House have certain privileges. The Honourable the Leader of the House rose to a point of order. I do not suggest that he wanted to choke off discussion. I do not suggest that at all because he himself made a speech on that point, but the point on which I seek your assistance and guidance is this, that if a Member feels that he has a right to speak on a point of order and if the Chair gives a decision, which the Chair is perfectly entitled to do, even without hearing a Member, what I feel is this, if the Chair gives the decision without hearing the Member, I always held that the decision of the Chair was provisional because the Member has a right to be heard even on a point of order.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Honourable Member has been a Member of this House for a very long time. I take it that the Honourable Member is fully aware of the Government of India Act which governs the constitution and the rules and Standing Orders made thereunder. The Honourable Member should study those carefully if he has not done so already, and he will find enlightenment on the point he has raised.

Sir Hari Singh Gour (Central Provinces Hindi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I had taken upon myself a vow of silence in view of the pact into which all parties had entered, a pact which Mr. Joshi, whose unattached group had the lion's share of the four days for discussion, broke yesterday. That being the case, I have no doubt my friends to my left and behind me stand equally released, and as they have some cuts dear to their hearts they will be at liberty to move those cuts independently of the pact which my Honourable friend Mr. Joshi has contributed so much to dissolve. Speaking on the point the Honourable the Leader of the House has raised, that he placed the question of the subvention to the North-West Frontier Province upon the estimates. I am afraid the Honourable the Leader of the House has not exactly understood the objection of my friend Mr. B. Das. His objection was that, before you can formulate any proposal as to the grant of a subvention, much less the amount, you should have come to this House with a Resolution, and after this House had given you a mandate, it was then for you to decide as to the amount and nature and period of the subvention. That is what Mr. B. Das wanted, and on that point there has been no reply. As a matter of fact the reply of the Honourable the Leader of the House contradicts that very principle which my friend Mr. B. Das stands for. Unfortunately he has put it lower down, and it of course comes in the natural course lower down in the estimates as No. 78. The Honourable the Leader of the House knows full well that No. 78 generally falls to the lot of the guillotine, and consequently there cannot be any fair discussion. But in fairness to him I must say that he was anxious, and so were we, that the question of the North-West Frontier Province should come up during the four days that were allotted for the discussion of the policy. But the Honourable the Leader of the House knows that when you have a subvention given to a particular province persons interested in that province must naturally stand up against any discussion. Supposing the subvention had related to Orissa from which my Honourable friend Mr. B. Das comes, I am sure that Mr. B. Das would have moved heaven and earth to thwart any discussion that would raise the propriety of the question of a subvention to his own province. I am not therefore surprised that there has been an attack made upon our general rule that we should give a portion of the four days to the discussion of the North-West Frontier Province by friends who are opposed to any discussion, because they are apprehensive of the fact that the question about the policy and the amount of subvention might be raised on the floor of the House. Therefore I submit that it cannot be said that this House had any fair chance of discussing the subvention. If the subvention had been for a period of one year, the matter would have been serious, but it becomes far more serious when the proposal of the Government is that this subvention is to have a life of three years. Therefore I submit that we on this side of the House, and our successors after we have gone, must not be understood to be bound by the estimates if they are passed under head No. 78, and that the question as to the general policy, the amount and the period for which subventions should be granted will still remain an open question which this House and its successor would be free to discuss and decide upon.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Sir, I rise to associate myself with every word that my friend Mr. B. Das has uttered on this occasion. It is fortunate that it has been given to us to-day to stand united on the question of the subvention, even though we hold divided views on the question of reforms, divided views exploited out in the country by papers particularly unfriendly to me and advertising a disunion which does not exist. If my conduct has led to that misapprehension, I humbly apologise to the Leader on my right. However on the question of reforms we are divided; on the question of matters of subvention we are united, divided not in regard to the goal but in regard to the details. This is a fundamental question of the reforms on which we are united. We have not considered in detail the question of the reforms. Therefore we frankly exchanged thoughts, and I again express regret if this exchange of thought had led to an opportunity for an exploitation in the Anglo-Indian Press, particularly malicious so far as I am concerned.

Sir, in regard to the subvention, I may clearly say that this subvention cannot be handed over only to one particular province because that particular province has no responsibility to this House but to an authority outside this House. For instance, if my friend's province, the province of Orissa, is made into a separate province, notwithstanding the fact that every obstacle has been put in its way of separation during the last so many years and also by the exclusion of competent men like Mr. Das even from their legitimate right as assessors to that Committee, if a separate province of Orissa is created, that also is going to get a subvention which the Sind province is going to get. I am not at all standing in the way of the subvention. I do not oppose the subvention, and I want my Mussulman friends to understand it with regard to the North-West Frontier Province. Once you agree to a separate province, a subvention becomes necessary. But this House exists and it is for the Foreign Secretary and for the Foreign Department to introduce a precedent and consult us. We would not have stood in the way but we want to lay down a general rule and a general policy. I do not want to take more time but my friend Mr. B. Das in his admirable evidence which is now public property before the Orissa Committee has said:

"I have mentioned that statutory provision must be made for subvention to provinces from the Central Government. This is necessary as some province and certain tracts known as backward areas have remained underfed and undeveloped owing to bad finance from the Centre. If provincial finances remained 'inelastic and insufficient' in case of all the provinces, in case of Bihar and Orissa they remained spoon-fed from the outset."

Yes, Bihar and Orissa had always been treated as a Cinderella province, and when Orissa is separated from Bihar, Mr. B. Das, the stoutest champion in and outside this House of the rights of Orissa to separation, will have to see to it that a subvention in the proper form is granted. Sir, our statement on the floor of this House to-day is a request and at the same time a warning to the Government not to neglect those who cannot be neglected. Once you accept that policy of separate provinces, you are committed, and as you have got to commit yourselves in the case of Orissa, you will have to give a subvention to Orissa like every other province.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan (Agra Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, when the Members of all the Parties met in the Western Hostel to decide whether a particular question should be discussed, we had unanimously decided that if any Honourable Member wishes to bring in any particular question, that discussion should come up on the day or the period which is allotted to that particular party; or in case it is taken up by any Honourable Member who does not belong to any party, then it must come up at the time which was put at the disposal of the unattached Members. As a matter of fact, I myself was whole-heartedly for giving some time for the discussion of this particular question. And I say for this half a day was allotted; but when we found that unanimity was not reached on this point and it was found that there were two Honourable Members who wanted a discussion on this question, one my Honourable friend Mr. Das belonging to the Nationalist Party, and the other Mr. Joshi, who claimed a share as an unattached Member, it was decided by all the Members present there, that either the Nationalist Party should have this discussion within the time placed at their disposal, or if Mr. Joshi wanted to raise it, then he must forego his period which he wanted for the discussion of the labour question, and the Members were quite prepared to give him this latitude. This was clearly decided, and certain Members were not willing to take up this discussion on Friday or Saturday because they thought that they were not going to be present, and their request was that if this discussion came on, it must come earlier within the four days allotted for policy questions. I do not know how this compact which had been reached unanimously by the House and which had been agreed to for the last five days can be broken.

Mr. B. Das: On a point of explanation, I have exercised my right as a Member of this House to oppose any grant which in my own conscience I think fit to oppose.

Mr. President: No one has taken any exception to it.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt (Burdwan Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): On a point of order, may I know whether we are discussing any Demand for Grants or discussing what took place outside this House, in the Western Hostel or elsewhere?

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Chair is glad that the Honourable Member, Mr. Amar Nath Dutt, has raised this question. Since yesterday the Chair has tried to invite the attention of Honourable Members to the fact that this House is concerned with public business only which comes before it for decision and cannot deal, and ought not to deal, with matters which may happen inside parties at their meetings or even inside any meetings held by Honourable Members outside the House. The Chair carried out the agreement to which the whole House subscribed that the first four days shall be allotted for the purpose of discussing token cuts. The Chair was prepared to extend that period if a special cut was to be discussed by the unanimous vote of the House. That arrangement has been carried out to the letter and the Chair regrets that extraneous matter is being brought into the discussion. The Chair has not been strict in restricting the discussion, but the Chair trusts that Honourable Members will carry out their primary function of dealing on the floor of the House with business of a public character.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: Sir, I am glad that the objection came from Honourable Members of the Nationalist Party to the speech I was making; but if they had listened carefully to the speech of their own Leader who had raised this point, who had said that this was the compact and it had been broken, which is all I was putting before the House and before Honourable Members, I say we must stick and ought to stick to it as a solemn promise given to certain Members who do not happen to be present in this House to-day. If any Honourable Member wants to raise any question on which he has given a guarantee to the whole House that he will not introduce it on the floor of this House, and then he says, "I can get up to exercise my right although I have given a promise . . .".

Mr. B. Das: I never gave any promise to anybody.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: As soon as you, Sir, were pleased to put before the House that this was the arrangement and no Member got up to raise any objection to it, I take it that that was agreed to by every Member who was present; and if any Member says he was not present, it is his lookout if he was not present. But after having come to a certain understanding with certain Honourable Members that a particular question would not be discussed, then to come up at once all of a sudden and raise this question when nobody suspects that there will be a discussion on that point, is not fair; and I put it to Honourable Members that it is not treating those Honourable Members fairly who do not know that this will be coming up for discussion now

Mr. B. Das: I want your ruling on a point of order, Sir, whether Honourable Members who are not members of any party on this side of the House can restrict the action of different parties and groups.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Honourable Member does not seem to have understood even the ruling that the Chair gave. This House is not concerned with anything that has happened inside parties; but the House is concerned with the agreement which the House reached unanimously on the floor of the House. The Chair expects that Honourable Members instead of discussing these matters will conform to the arrangement to which the House unanimously agreed.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: Does a suit for breach of promise lie, Sir?

Mr. President: Order, order.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: I do not want to go more deeply into that controversy at this time. Even if this be a question of subvention, if my honourable friends like to say, "Oh, we are agreed to give this subvention, but we want to assert the rights of the House", that point could be raised subsequently at some other time and not at this time and at this stage.

On the merits of the question, I would say that whatever may be the position of different provinces, I have no grievance if the Government come and show that a case is made out very clearly in favour of granting a subvention for any other province: we will not hinder that or dispute their right to get money. But, I must say that the North-West Frontier Province stands apart from every other province in this matter: and that point is that it is the province which bears the whole burden of defence from attack outside and it is the guardian of India; that province has been treated as the guardian of India. Even when the reforms were given in the past that province was not given any reforms because it was thought that their circumstances differed from the rest of India. and while they bear the whole burden, they cannot produce so much money as to meet those expenses which are necessary in view of the defence of India, which is not the concern of one province but of entire India. If any money is required over and above that expenditure for the purpose of protecting the rest of India I think the rest of India will be justified in giving a subvention to the Frontier Province and the Frontier Province will be perfectly justified in demanding from the other provinces some money for a concern which is not their own but of others also. That is the position. I do not think it will serve any useful purpose to the country or of those who have the interest of the country at heart to discuss this question at this eleventh hour in this shape: if they do so they will be doing the greatest disservice if they indulge in this controversy. My advice on this point is that it will be much better in the interests of the Assembly and of the country that this question be not dragged up now: but I will not be averse to this question being discussed thoroughly at a later time at a later stage in some other way

An Honourable Member: After everything is over?

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: It is going to be over and it will not be stopped. With these words I do not agree with the proposal which has been made.

Sir Hugh Cocke (Bombay: European): I move that the question be now put.

Mr. President: On the Order Paper there is an amendment* in the name of the Honourable Member, Rao Bahadur B. L. Patil. Does he wish to move it?

Rao Bahadur B. L. Patil (Bombay Southern Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): For the reasons stated, I do not wish to move my amendment, Sir.

Sir Abdur Rahim (Calcutta and Suburbs: Muhammadan Urban): Sir, the principal question raised by the Honourable Member on my right was that the House had not been given a proper opportunity to discuss

*"That the Demand under the head 'Foreign and Political Department' be reduced by Rs. 1,33,000."

the question of the subvention. His main case seemed to be that a question like this should be brought forward by Government in the form of a Resolution, and in support of his proposition he quoted the opinion of Sir Sivaswami Aiyer, but so far as I could follow him, I do not think that opinion bears upon this question at all. The opinion of Sir Sivaswami Aiyer was to the effect that no province can ask for autonomy or should be granted autonomy unless it is financially self-contained. That is a proposition of a wide character, to which I am not prepared to give my assent, and I am quite sure on a little consideration the House will agree that it is too wide a proposition. We are sure in the near future to have a federal system of Government which will include British India, and I hope British India alone, and in that case it will be the duty of the Federal Government to see that each province is financially self-contained. For that purpose it should be possible for the Government at the centre, which controls the finances of entire India, to see if there is any deficiency in any province, and then to make up that deficiency. I do not think that is a proposition which can be disputed. In the abstract it may be said that,—“If you want to be autonomous, you must be self-contained”. But in the circumstances of India, even my friend Mr. B. Das must admit that it is not a practical proposition. For instance, Mr. B. Das himself wants that there should be a subvention granted to his province if that province is separated from Bihar. I am perfectly sure that the House will agree with me that if a proper case is made out for Orissa, there will be no difficulty in granting a suitable subvention for that province. I do not wish to discuss on the present motion the merits of the case of North-West Frontier Province, but the fact must be borne in mind that ever since the North-West Frontier Province was separated from the Punjab and was made a separate province, the Government of India's finances had to bear considerable burdens; as a matter of fact, the amount that has been granted is very much less than what the Government of India have been granting ever since the separation. The Haig Subjects Committee went into the question and proposed a larger grant, and I am not at all satisfied that the province will be able to carry on properly within the limits of the grant of one crore proposed by the Government. I believe the Subjects Committee proposed a grant at present of one crore and 40 lakhs, to be increased afterwards as necessities may arise.

Now, as regards whether the question should be brought up by Government in the shape of a Resolution, I wish that my friend Mr. B. Das had been able to cite some authority. I must admit I have not had the time to study the question myself, and if that is the proper procedure. I am sure the Government should have adopted it or ought to do it. But this much must be admitted by those who have been in negotiations with the Leader of the House as regards the arrangement of business with respect to the Budget and also with regard to other matters, that he was anxious throughout to give full opportunity to the House to discuss this important question

Mr. B. Das: That establishes my case.

Sir Abdur Rahim: Mr. B. Das also knows, at any rate, some Members of his party know, that we of the Independent Party raised no objection to that course, and we were in fact willing to help him

Mr. B. Das: I said that yesterday.

Sir Abdur Rahim: If some of the Honourable Member on his left raised objection yesterday to his proposal, that was no fault of our party. We have strictly abided by the arrangement that was arrived at with the Leader of the House. Therefore, so far as that question is concerned, we cannot be blamed in any way. I do not wish now to discuss the point raised by my friend Mr. Yamin Khan whether the Nationalist Party ought to have taken advantage of the day allotted to them in order to discuss this question

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: I did not say that. I said that the point was raised when we met together that either Nationalist Party should take the opportunity to discuss this question on the day allotted to them or they should forego it. That was our decision. I was entirely for allotting half a day for discussing this question.

Sir Abdur Rahim: I did not want to misrepresent my friend, I support my Honourable friend Mr. B. Das to this extent that for discussing questions of such importance proper opportunity should be given. But as regards the question whether the subject should be brought forward in the form of a Resolution or not, I am not at present prepared to offer any opinion. We all recognise that the Leader of the House was anxious throughout to give a chance to the House to discuss this question properly.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: Sir, thirty years ago I remember an Indian politician living in London wrote to a great Indian here stating that we have fallen upon such evil times that Chamberlain is our genius in politics and Rudyard Kipling is our poet. To-day I am reminded of the saying of that great man here, because I see that we have fallen on such evil times within the past two years that we talk of party agreements and party politics only forgetting the higher and nobler policy of those who preceded us in this House. Sir, here every one of us, defying the mandate of the greatest political institution in India has come in, on his own ticket. We know our worth; we know that we do not owe allegiance to anybody save and except probably to ourselves. That being so, I doubt whether it was very wise for such a heterogenous mass to come to any understanding

Mr. President: The Honourable Member should remember that the House is discussing the question of a grant to the Foreign and Political Department.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: Yes, Sir. I oppose this grant, and when I oppose this grant, I must criticise the statement of my Honourable friend Mr. Yamin Khan, the Leader of a great party in this House,—a Leader who has won his laurels both from the Government and probably from the members of a certain community. Be that as it may, he said that the North-West Frontier Province should have a subvention, by which I understand a money aid from other provinces. If that be so, his reasons do not seem to be perfectly clear to me. The reason given is that they are the guardians of the whole of India. In what sense are they the guardians of the whole of India? (Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: "They protect Bengal".) I fail to understand, perhaps save and except that it has got several passes through which the people residing there allow other people to come to the sacred land of Aryavarta and reduce us to the condition in which we are at the present moment. Instead of calling that province the guardian province of this great continent, I say that it is a danger zone, a menace to Indian freedom and liberty, and it were far better if that province was wiped off from the map of India, at least from the map of British India. (Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: "And made independent".) (Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: "And annexed to Bengal".) And annexed to Bengal for cultural needs, because no other province needs moral and intellectual culture more than this province. I claim some experience of the North-West Frontier Province. I lived there in my childhood, and I have seen it in later times also, and I know the people of that province too well. (At this stage there were several interruptions.)

Mr. President: Order, order.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: If we are to pay Rs. 146 lakhs for this province, why don't you pay the same amount for the province of Assam for its development? It is all very well to take it from the pockets of Bengal. You have taken income-tax, you have taken jute and everything. It is all very well to pilfer others pockets and become rich at their expense. It also gives us an opportunity of posing as patriots and benefactors of a certain community. I for one oppose this grant with all the emphasis that I can command, and I will not be a party to it, and if it were in my power I would not grant any such aid to any province whatsoever. Every province should be financially self-contained and able to maintain itself if it wants to participate in the coming federation of India, which my Honourable friend, the Leader of the Independent Party, has foreshadowed in his speech. With these words, I oppose the grant.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad (United Provinces Southern Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): The last speaker has raised an issue which I am sure the people of the North-West Frontier Province would accept with the greatest pleasure. He says that that province should be wiped off from the map of India; it means that it should be made independent. If a proposal of that kind were made, it would receive the heartiest support of the people of that province, but I doubt very much whether my Honourable friend's constituency would return him again. On this issue let us consider the question of the subvention from another point of view. My friend has taken it for granted that we are starting a new province and having a subvention for its extra expenditure. If my Honourable friend has read the book supplied to us, in which a detailed statement of the various expenditure is given, he will find that we are spending on that province already a sum of over one crore of rupees. It is not a new expenditure. It is an expenditure which we have all along been incurring, and the only thing for which the Finance Department is responsible is that they have arranged the figures in a different way; it is only a question of book keeping; it is only really a question of re-arrangement of budget figures. Therefore, my Honourable friend may raise the issue of the subvention when the constitutional question of India is before the House, but on this particular question, when all that is done is that all the money that we are already spending and for which we have been voting grant under different Demands is put together under one head,—it is really not new expenditure, it is really not a new policy; it is not really a new expenditure. Therefore, all this question of a subvention at the present moment to my mind is out of consideration

Bhai Parma Nand (Ambala Division: Non-Muhammadan): It was all given to the North-West Frontier Province when it was under the control of the Central Government, under this Assembly, but it is now a separate province altogether.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: As regards the voting of the Assembly, whatever subvention we can give, we cannot give without the vote of this Assembly. The only question is how that vote is to be given. At present, we are giving the votes under six or more different items,—under the head "Foreign and Political", under the head "Irrigation", under the head "Forest", under the head of "Education" and the various other heads. Instead of giving the votes under various heads, we are only required to give the vote under one head, and I do not see any fundamental point of difference. To my mind all the discussion about the constitutional issue in connection with this matter is out of order; it does not arise. What we are doing now is that we are incurring the expenditure under one head, the North-West Frontier Province. In fact, I raised this question two years ago that we do not know what the expenditure on the North-West Frontier Province really is and we ought to be grateful to the Honourable the Finance Member that he has put all these Demands together under one particular item, and to my mind this is not a new expenditure and it does not raise any question of policy.

Sir Evelyn Howell (Foreign Secretary): I trust you will not regard me as impertinent if I begin my remarks by pointing out, as you, Mr. President, have just reminded the House, that the question before them is one relating to the Foreign and Political Department, whereas the actual subvention comes under a lower head, No. 78, North-West Frontier Province, and if Government had any desire to stifle discussion on the subject, it might perhaps have been possible for me to raise a point of order whether this discussion was in order under head No. 31. That I did not do so I think has proved that, as the Leader of the House has pointed out, Government took a great deal of trouble to give the House every opportunity to discuss this question, a question of the greatest importance and magnitude, and if the House did not avail itself of that opportunity, the Government is not to blame.

My Honourable friend Mr. B. Das has not to-day actually raised the point of constitutional procedure or legality, but a few days ago, speaking in this House, he said:

"The view is authoritatively held in India" (and I hope authority means the Treasury Bench) "that it is not permissible" (he is here quoting from the Simon Commission Report) "to incur expenditure from central revenues on provincial subjects, or to make assignments from central to provincial revenues for expenditure on a provincial subject, except in so far as such expenditure represents payments for services rendered by the Provincial Government."

Sir, the actual facts with regard to the legality of the action taken by the Government, which Mr. Das then impugned, are that under the Government of India Act, section 45A, the Governor General in Council can make rules classifying subjects, and it is perfectly true that, when he has done so, he cannot, without making fresh devolution rules, direct the payment of provincial charges from central revenues but under the same section you find that the Governor General have plenary power to allocate revenues or other monies to the Provincial Governments, and there is no illegality whatever in the action which has been taken with regard to this subvention for the North-West Frontier Province.

Again as my friend Dr. Ziauddin has just reminded the House, the amount of this subvention is not new expenditure. Central revenues have been bearing all these charges and in point of fact a great deal more. The amount of the subvention is rupees one crore a year, but the amount recommended by the Haig Committee was, I believe, Rs. 1,17 lakhs, and the actuals of the past few years have been considerably in excess of that figure. There is therefore nothing new about it. It is only to be done for three years or until such time as the new constitution comes into force.

Sir Hari Singh Gour: May I interrupt the Honourable Member? I think the Honourable the Finance Member might be able to make a correct statement. Do I understand it aright that the subvention exceeds by 2½ lakhs of rupees, the amount that was given in previous years. I speak subject to correction, but I hope that the Honourable the Finance Member will be prepared to make a statement in view of the fact that Dr. Ziauddin assumed that the amount of the subvention is exactly the amount that is now given.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: May I reply to that point? The position is this. The figures that my Honourable friend the Foreign Secretary has given are perfectly correct, but as I explained to the House, we were faced with this position that we had to try to introduce into the expenditure of the North-West Frontier Province a measure of retrenchment which corresponded with that which has been undertaken by the Central Government in their centrally administered areas and by the Provincial Governments on the basis of that reduced expenditure, that is to say, allowing for all the retrenchments which we thought the North-West Frontier Province ought to introduce. The net amount which they would have got from the Central Government would have been 97½ lakhs, but that 97½ lakhs was arrived at after very substantial reductions in the rate of expenditure for the current year. We got to that figure of 97½ lakhs and then in order to give them some margin with which to undertake the additional expenditure, part of which was inevitable when the province was starting, we fixed the amount at the round sum of 100 lakhs. Therefore you can say the position is this, that if the North-West Frontier Province had remained in exactly the same position as it is now, the Central Government would have been expending a net amount of 97½ lakhs on the province. Under the new arrangements, the Central Government will be expending 100 lakhs on the province next year.

Sir Evelyn Howell: I am grateful to the Honourable Member for correcting me, if I was in error, and for giving an authoritative statement on the subject.

I was on the point of saying that I do not think there is any general disposition in any quarter of the House to question the necessity for doing something in the nature of that which has been done. Clearly, Sir, the North-West Frontier Province could not be deprived of its heritage for very much longer. We have heard from all sides the necessity for treating that province in matters of controlling its own destiny, matters of reforms in fact, exactly on the same footing as the other provinces. If it is a part of British India, it clearly has a right to do so, and it has been found in the light of past experience quite impossible for it to do so solely from its own resources. The Haig Committee went very carefully into this point and you will see that its conclusions were that the province could not be expected to be self-supporting for various reasons—because of its size—it is such a small unit of administration compared with the other provinces,—because of its situation, right up on the Frontier where beyond a certain line you get into tribal territory, where there is no taxation and no law and no order, and also because of its great intrinsic importance, by which almost every question that arises in that province has a knack of developing with extraordinary rapidity into an all-India question, in which all parts of the House are vitally interested. I do not think that there is any general desire on the part of the House to know exactly how this crore is to be allocated when the province has got it, but I have no doubt that the Honourable the Finance Member will be able to answer that point better than I can. I therefore say nothing more than simply ask the House “What else could Government have done, than that which they have done?”.

There was one other point which my friend Mr. Joshi raised, but I am not sure that I should be in order now in answering his question about labour representation in the North-West Frontier Province, and I therefore will not trespass into that field unless you give me permission to do so.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member can reply to that point, if he wishes to and the Chair will not object.

Sir Evelyn Howell: Mr. Joshi's point was that no provision had been made for the representation of labour in the North-West Frontier Province Council.

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division: Muhammadan Rural): There is no labour there.

Sir Evelyn Howell: My friend Mr. Kabiruddin has given the first point of my reply. There is no labour. The Royal Commission on Labour did not think it necessary to visit that province. It is true that there are a number of labouring persons there, as in any other country in the world, and when the framework of the Provincial Council was being considered, attention was drawn to that point and the local authorities were consulted. The unofficial Committee which the Chief Commissioner nominated to consider the matter also gave it their attention and recorded the opinion

Mr. N. M. Joshi: May I ask whether there was any representative of labour on that unofficial Committee or whether the Committee consisted only of landlords and capitalists?

Sir Evelyn Howell: It consisted of the gentlemen whom the Chief Commissioner thought proper to consult. Whether there was any representative of labour or not I do not actually know, but I dare say not. Anyhow, they decided that it was unnecessary and therefore the point was not pressed. The third point is that even in the Punjab, which is much more advanced than the North-West Frontier Province, there is, I believe, no actual labour representative in the Punjab Council, and the North-West Frontier Province has been clamouring for a long time past to be like the Punjab in all possible respects. Lastly the point made by my friend Mr. Joshi, with which I have a great deal of sympathy, is being brought to the notice of the Franchise Committee, which is about to visit the North-West Frontier Province, and I have no doubt they will look into the matter while they are there.

Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury (Assam: Muhammadan): I very much welcome this opportunity of discussing this question. There is not the least intention, as Sir Hari Singh Gour seemed to suggest, of shirking or thwarting discussion on this issue. I believe that there is such an overwhelmingly strong case for the subvention for the North-West Frontier Province that we should not be afraid of the subject being discussed in all its aspects. We are grateful to Mr. Das for bringing this issue before the House. His perseverance has prevailed and we have got an opportunity of discussing this important subject, just on the eve of the introduction of reforms in the Frontier, it is necessary that this House should examine the constitutional question of the extent of the responsibility of the Central Government towards the finances of the North-West Frontier Province and the manner in which they intend to discharge it.

Before I say anything on the question of the subvention, I want to impress one very fundamental fact on the Members of this House, the fact which there is a tendency to ignore. When this province was created in 1901, it was not created in response to any demand for a separate province. It was created on the ground of Imperial policy in all-India interests and it is being maintained as a separate province, not to satisfy the aspirations of the Frontier people, but it is being maintained as a separate administrative unit in accordance with the general scheme of Frontier policy of the Government of India. Now having created that province, having created the child, the Government of India cannot ignore its responsibility for its maintenance. (Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: "What about other provinces?") It has attained to political adolescence now and it is demanding some freedom and autonomy in the management of its own affairs, but that is no reason why it should be deprived of its rightful inheritance. The fact that from being a centrally administered area it is now being transformed into a political unit with control of its own Budget does not alter the material circumstance of its strategic position and its special claim on the Government of India. To create the province on the ground of Imperial necessity, and then to ask it to stand on its own legs, to be self-supporting, to bear unaided the heavy burden of overhead charges of a provincial administration is most unfair. If the province has been created to serve Imperial needs and purposes, the Central Government must bear the necessary cost of the administration. I may remind the House that the Peay Committee, while it recommended the introduction of reforms into the Frontier province, said that its finances ought to be an Imperial charge.

Now, Sir, as regards the subvention, it seems to me that there is a curious misunderstanding on the part of some Honourable Members as to the true character of the subvention. Some of my Honourable friends seem to be under the impression that because of the introduction of reforms into the Frontier province, the Government of India are going to make a gift of a crore of rupees to that province to balance its Budget. I can assure my friends, Sir, that the Government of India is not paying one single penny more than what they have been paying for the past so many years, and, if anything, they now propose to pay very much less. As regards paying a contribution for its deficits, they have been paying that contribution for the last 30 years; there is nothing new in it, and it is not a new departure. (Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: "But we have been controlling the administration.") I am coming to that. Sir, this subvention is nothing but our old ugly friend, "Contribution to deficits" dressed up in the bridal robe of a subvention.

My Honourable friend, Sir Hari Singh Gour, has said, we are paying 2½ lakhs more than we have been paying during the previous years. I shall give you the figures for the previous years. Sir, taking the central and the provincial heads of expenditure together:

In 1927-28, the deficit was 206 lakhs.

In 1928-29, the deficit was 231 lakhs.

In 1929-30, the deficit was 254 lakhs.

In 1930-31, the deficit was 290 lakhs.

Now taking the expenditure on the provincial heads alone:

In 1930-31, the deficit was 129 lakhs;

and in the Budget estimate for the year 1931-32 provision was made for a deficit of 104 lakhs, and this subvention is only for a crore this year. Now Honourable Members must not run away with the idea that the Government are paying all this money for the uplift of the province. Nothing of the kind! In the year 1929-30, if you turn to the Administration Report of the North-West Frontier Province you will find that the Government of India spent on the Frontier Watch and Ward 145 lakhs, under Political 24 lakhs, under Police 29 lakhs, under Education only 19 lakhs, under Medical only 6 lakhs and under Public Health the paltry sum of Rs. 1,05,000.

Now the only difference between the payment of a contribution in previous years and the subvention on the present occasion is this, that while in previous years the expenditure was being sanctioned by the Central Government or the Central Legislature under different sub-heads this year they are placing at the disposal of the North-West Frontier Province a lump sum which is calculated according to the Budget figures of the previous years. This, Sir, is only a natural corollary to the introduction of reforms into the Frontier Province. The Haig Committee recommended that this subvention ought to be declared to be a source of the provincial revenue under Devolution rule 14 and it ought to be made a statutory charge. The North-West Frontier Province Sub-Committee of the Round Table Conference also made a similar recommendation, I shall read out the recommendation of the Sub-Committee:

"This Sub-Committee is satisfied from the figures placed before it that under the subjects which will be expected to be classed as provincial this province will show a large financial deficit. It follows that the Provincial Government will require financial assistance from central or federal revenues. The Committee suggests that there should be a preliminary expert investigation into the allocation of expenditure between the central and provincial heads to supply the basis from which the financial subvention from central or federal revenues may be calculated. This Sub-Committee apprehend that if the subvention be paid annually by the central or the provincial legislature, the substance of provincial autonomy in the province will be impaired. It suggests that that difficulty might be met by an agreed convention that each financial assignment should remain undisturbed for a number of years."

Now my friend, Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh, asked me why should we pay the subvention while we place the administration and the expenditure of the province under the control of the provincial legislature. Sir, this question surprises me. So long as this irresponsible bureaucracy was controlling the finances of the province and spending crores of rupees, to pay the deficit every year not a word was uttered by my Honourable friend. (Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: "But this House was controlling the Budget.") And now when our own countrymen in the new Frontier province are going to control it, a hue and cry is raised.

Now, Sir, with regard to the amount of the subvention. If the House accepts the position that the Central Government have got the responsibility for the finances of the North-West Frontier Province, let us see how they propose to discharge it. In my opinion, Sir, the subvention is totally inadequate for the requirements of the province. (Hear, hear.) The Haig Committee suggested 117 lakhs as the basic figure for this subvention. They calculated it on the basis of the existing revenue and expenditure and the normal growth of expenditure. This did not take into account schemes of educational expansion or sanitary improvement which the Government had pledged to undertake, but taking all these schemes together they recommended not 117 lakhs, as my friend, Sir Evelyn Howell, said just now, but 146 lakhs which had to be increased every year by 4 lakhs till it reached a maximum of 162 lakhs. That is the position.

Now a word about the need for this excess grant. In the Summer of 1930 a deputation of the frontier people waited on the Chief Commissioner of the North-West Frontier Province to impress upon him the necessity of incurring more expenditure on the nation-building departments and to bring the administration of the province into line with that of the Punjab. The Chief Commissioner assured them that he would aim at securing for the province the same standard of administration as that which obtained in the Punjab. He also assured them that their standard of taxation would not be higher than in the Punjab. Now, Sir, in education the Frontier people are very much behind those of the Punjab. I will give you some figures from the report of the Hartog Committee. During the years 1917-22 the total number of male pupils in the recognised institutions has increased in the Punjab by 33.8 per cent. and in the North-West Frontier Province it has increased by 18 per cent. Between 1922-27 it has increased in the Punjab by 103 per cent. and in the North-West Frontier Province it has increased by 26 per cent. Between 1917-1927 it has increased in the Punjab by 172 per cent. and it has increased in the North-West Frontier Province by 48 per cent. As regards the total number of pupils in the recognised schools, the percentage of increase in the Punjab between the years 1917 and 1922 is 31.3 per cent; in the North-West Frontier Province it is 19 per cent. Between the years 1922 and 1927 the increase in the Punjab is 96 per cent and the increase in the North-West Frontier Province is 27 per cent. Between 1917 and 1927 the increase in the Punjab is 128 per cent., in the North-West Frontier Province it is 53 per cent. As regards the total number of recognised institutions in the province, in the Punjab the increase has been between the years 1917 and 1927, 115 per cent., and in the North-West Frontier Province the increase has been only 9 per cent. As regards the direct and indirect expenditure on the recognised institutions in the province, the increase in the Punjab between the years 1917 and 1927 has been 164 per cent., whereas in the North-West Frontier Province, it has been 101 per cent. Then, Sir, if we take the proportion of the male scholars to the total male population, the percentage in the Punjab is 10 per cent., whereas in the North-West Frontier Province it is only 6 per cent. From these figures it will appear to the House that the Frontier has still a great leeway to make up as regards education. Still, in this subvention the Government make no provision for the educational expansion in the province. Therefore for the two or three years that the subvention will remain in existence, the nation-building departments will be starved.

Now, Sir, let us see what the Financial Secretary has said about the subvention. In the Explanatory Memorandum circulated to the Members by the Financial Secretary, he says:

"The North-West Frontier Province Subjects Committee also listed a large number of projected schemes of expansion involving recurring and non-recurring expenditure, which it presumed would be taken into account by the Government of India at the time of determining the amount of the subvention. In the present state of the finances of India and of the world it is impossible for either the Central Government or any Provincial Government in India to contemplate embarking on an ambitious programme of expanding activities, and it has had to be recognised that these could find no place in a subvention which is to operate at the most for the next three years."

Sir, here the Financial Secretary is looking at the problem merely from the point of view of an accountant. He has ignored the wider and the more vital aspect of the question. To spend money in order to bring the primitive and warlike people of the Frontier within the orbit of modern civilisation may ultimately prove more economical than the Financial Secretary seems to realise. One school established, one hospital opened will in the long run lead to one military post closed in the Frontier. In this connection, I should like to read out to the House an extract from the evidence given by Sir Denys Bray before the North-West Frontier Sub-Committee of the Round Table Conference. This is what Sir Denys Bray said:

"It would be, for instance, a grim thing if the future Minister for Education were suddenly to say 'The pressure on our own schools is so great that we cannot find any room or these trans-border fellows'. Similarly, with our hospitals. We have just built magnificent hospital in Peshawar. The Government of India were induced gradually and under great pressure to make an adequate subvention towards it, and" — (I would draw your special attention to this sentence, Sir) — "the argument I had to use the whole time was that this hospital is serving all-India interests. We want it to be open to the trans-frontier men. There is no greater civilising influence than a good hospital. Its influence will extend far beyond Peshawar into the trans-frontier and beyond into Afghanistan.

What I am trying to suggest is this. All-India has great interest in the Frontier Province. It is right therefore that All-India should foot a very large part of the Frontier Province Bill. It is doing it now. It will have to do it under whatever regime it is set up."

Now, Sir, the Government of India are not only cutting down the expenditure of these nation-building departments but they are doing something more. As the result of their mal-administration all these years, they are leaving to the reformed Frontier Province a legacy of 10,000 Ordinance prisoners. These prisoners will have to be fed and clothed out of the attenuated resources of the Frontier Province. The Frontier under the reforms will be financially in a very much worse position than it was in pre-reform days. The inadequacy of funds will hinder the development of the Province. And like the magician who produces rabbits out of empty hats, the Minister will be expected to produce progress and prosperity out of the empty exchequer. He is bound to fail and the result will be that people will come forward and say that the reforms in the Frontier have been a failure. If the Government are desirous of making them a success, then I think they ought to take the earliest opportunity of revising the subvention and fix up the amount at the figure suggested by the Haig Committee.

Major Nawab Ahmad Nawaz Khan (Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I thank all the Members who have taken part in this important question of the subvention. To me it seems that many Members who have opposed the subvention have trodden over the old ground and used the same old arguments which we have been hearing for the last ten years. Every objection that has been raised has already been given a very good reply several times. So, there seems to be nothing new on which I should like to give any reply to those who have opposed and criticised the subvention. So far as the technical side is concerned, the Government Member has given a full reply. The main point to which I would respectfully like to draw the attention of the House is that it is not right on the part of Honourable Members to deprive us of the right to govern ourselves when the province is going to be raised to the status of a Governor's province and when we are about to be given a full share in the responsibility of expenditure there. Honourable Members know very well that this is the smallest amount of money which we are going to get this time. There was no objection taken when the province was given a greater amount of money. However, I do not wish to create any controversial question but I should like to tell the House the plain fact that most of these arguments were based simply on communal lines. (Voices: "Not at all.") If that is not the case, I think the Honourable Members ought to have said that objections were raised in a technical way and not to deprive the province of its rights.

I am glad that some Honourable Members support the principle of giving the subvention to my province, but some for the sake of 1 P.M. procedure want to oppose the subvention.

An Honourable Member: Nobody opposed.

Major Nawab Ahmad Nawaz Khan: My Honourable friend, Mr. Amar Nath Dutt, opposed it. He spent his childhood there and perhaps the general impression of childhood is sweeter, but the impression of his childhood is quite the reverse. He wants to take revenge for it in his advanced age. If you compare the N. W. F. P. with any other province you will find the services that the people are doing to India and to the British Empire—this word may please somebody or it may displease some others which I do not mind—the services that we the people in the N. W. F. P. are doing to Government and to the peoples of India are very great. If you go there and see things for yourself, you will come to the conclusion that the Government have not wasted money on that province. Unquestionably it is a Muslim province. I cannot deny it. But that Muslim province is a source of great help to the Imperial policy of Great Britain and for the good and for the safety of the British and the Indians in the British Empire. The great help that the people are giving is the result of the good treatment of the British officers there. We do not want any other rule there except the British rule. I may clearly say that even if the King of Afghanistan or the King of Persia were to ask us to come under their rule, we will refuse to do so. Our loyalty to the British is a source of safety for India. If the people of N. W. F. P. had liked to come under any other rule than the British, it would have been then a source of great danger to India both internally and externally. So far as I know the province is loyal to the Government and to the interests of the Indian nation comprised of all classes and communities. I do not want to speak only about Muslims. My Honourable friend Bhai Parmu Nand, who is sometimes accused, or shall I say honoured, by being described as an advocate of communal questions and interests, must be thankful of the poster or advertisement that I gave him yesterday. In the N. W. F. P. we, the Muslims, are very friendly to other communities and we look after the interests of the non-Muslim communities there. In an informal Committee where I was a Member I pressed that the fifth seat should be given to the Hindus. I asked my friend Sir Abdul Qaiyum to join with me in the request, and he did so, with the result that the fifth seat was obtained for the Hindus. But one thing I must make plain, and that is that we all wish to remain under the British rule. We cannot join and we have not joined and we shall never join any anti-British movement or with any anti-Government movement there.

Sardar Sant Singh (West Punjab: Sikh): Even if the Government are unreasonable?

Major Nawab Ahmad Nawaz Khan: It is all a legal quibble, my dear friend. I can give you a reply.

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): The Honourable Member has got into the habit of addressing individual Members. He must address the Chair.

Major Nawab Ahmad Nawaz Khan: You allow other Honourable Members to break the rule. When they break it, I have also to do the same.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member should always address the Chair.

Major Nawab Ahmad Nawaz Khan: With due respect I shall obey. I was saying that we, in the N. W. F. P., are doing very great service to the safety of the Indian Empire. If the people there had liked to join they would have joined the independent tribes whole-heartedly with any movement that was anti-Government or anti-British. Then you would have seen lakhs and lakhs of Indian money, rightly or wrongly, poured into the

[Major Nawab Ahmad Nawaz Khan.]

N. W. F. P. and also thousands and thousands of soldiers rushed from every Cantonment of India for the safety of India. You would have found thousands of people killed there. I was in London last year and I was thankful, along with many other friends, that the King of Afghanistan was just and neutral towards us. When there was the Congress movement launched all over the province and when the organizers of the movement were trying their best to obtain recruits to their movement, there was no response from the people. On that occasion if the King of Afghanistan, or some independent tribes, had shown the slightest activity against you, it would have been found that munitions and soldiers would have been brought in there from many places making these camps big like Delhi. It was on account of the wise policy of the British Government in spending lots of money there as to make the people there friendly and loyal to the British rule, it was on account of this policy that the people are of peace-loving habits. You should never say for a moment that money is wasted there or that money is spent recklessly.

An Honourable Member: What about Ordinances?

Major Nawab Ahmad Nawaz Khan: If it is not irrelevant, I am ready to reply to any question my dear friend.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member should address the Chair.

Major Nawab Ahmad Nawaz Khan: Sir, if I may give a reply, with your permission, to my Honourable friend, I will say about the Ordinances, that they are the very things we want. By these Ordinances, the Government have averted a lot of trouble to the public from the Congress, which has been conducting a lot of harmful propaganda against the Government there. We could not control the people there, I mean the riff-raff, but not the gentlemen there. I do not care to discuss that question at any further length, but I come now to the question of the subvention. Having full regard to the interests of retrenchment, the Honourable the Finance Member has given us only this amount. It is much less than what the Committee recommended. However I am thankful to Government for this subvention and I will be thankful to the House if they grant this subvention without division and without further criticism.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Twenty Five Minutes to Three of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Twenty Five Minutes to Three of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

Mr. B. N. Misra (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, with regard to this controversy, I have to say a few words. Much has been said about the subvention to the North-West Frontier Province and about Orissa. I am not speaking in a spirit of envy because the Frontier Province got it, but in a different spirit. Probably, Sir, you know the custom in Indian dinners of Bhojanasabha, where you don't ask for the food yourself directly, but you ask that it should be brought to your neighbour-guest so that you may be served. That is the spirit in which I speak now and not in a spirit of opposition because a subvention has been given to the North-West Frontier Province. Much has been said about that province. It has been said that that province protects India from foreign invasion. Sir, our own memory is very treacherous and it is our greatest enemy. It may not be known to all that my province of Orissa is the Middle Eastern Frontier Province. Before Christ, about 200 B. C., it was King Kharabela and King Raktabahu of Orissa that saved our country, India, when there was an Ionian invasion from the seaside, and prevented them from entering the country. Sir, I think I can claim with greater force that if there is a Frontier Province which has saved India from foreign invasion it is my province of Orissa, which prevented the entry of foreigners through the sea. My Honourable friend Mr. Yamin Khan spoke of the North-West Frontier Province as the guardian angel and all that. The fact remains that all the Muhammadan invasions and other invasions were made through that country, which allowed invaders to come in from that side. But it is my province which protected India from all the invasions and attacks from the seaside. Even very recently during the German War the German battleship "Emden" came and shelled Madras and when it came to Puri it was stopped. Of course people who are superstitious say that it was the Lord Jagannath who is not the god of any single province or community, but the Lord of the Universe, that stopped it, but the fact remains that its further progress was stopped near the Puri coast. So even very recently foreign invasion was prevented. Therefore I say that Orissa should be treated as a frontier province,—the Middle Eastern Frontier as I call it. It is that province which requires protection, but the attention which has been paid to that province is well-known to all. Sir, the Government deserve our thanks for they have appointed a Committee for the formation of a province. But, Sir, they have done it in a very half-hearted manner. Sir, mark the wording of the reference to the Committee. "If an Oriya Province is to be formed what will be the boundaries of the province and what will be its effect on other provinces". Sir, mark that small word "If". If the Government have not after 30 years of struggle decided to have a province, what is the use of finding out all this about boundaries and so on? Was it done in the case of the formation of the Provinces of Bihar and Orissa and Sind, etc.? This is a stepmotherly treatment to Orissa and shows that Government have appointed this Committee with great reluctance as a show. Sir, if they have not made up their mind why have they brought a man from 6,000 miles away as a member, and one gentleman from Assam, and a millionaire from Bombay? When they have to make a province, they should do it well, not in this half-hearted manner. Say definitely without "If".

Mr. President: Order, order. The Honourable Member is speaking on the Foreign and Political Department and he is hardly in order in discussing the formation of the Orissa Province.

Mr. B. N. Misra: Sir, I am talking of the middle Eastern frontier and it deserves attention. The other day His Excellency the Viceroy in addressing us spoke as follows:

"The course suggested is the grant of a Central subvention to the North-West Frontier Province. The need for such a subvention and its probable amount are under inquiry by my Government. It is our intention to consult the Indian Legislature when the details have been worked out."

[Mr. B. N. Misra.]

Sir, I am speaking about the Government's attitude. His Excellency did not speak a word about Orissa; and the Foreign and Political Department have not treated the case of Orissa with as much attention as they should have done. I think when my turn comes, I shall speak about that also; but I say they have not paid as much attention to the middle Eastern frontier, though they have paid a great deal of attention to the North-West Frontier. I think the middle Eastern frontier deserves more attention from other parts of India and other parts of India must remember that my province has done more than the North-West Frontier has ever done. I began by saying that memory is treacherous; the past is always forgotten; past gratitude for benefit received is always forgotten; people deal with the present; but I hope my friends will remember when the claim of Orissa is pressed.

Several Honourable Members: The question may now be put.

Mr. President: I accept the closure. The question is that the question be now put.

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Sir, I do not intend to trespass very long on the time of the House in dealing with what has passed in this debate. You, Sir, according to this House a very full latitude, have in fact allowed the question of the subvention to the North-West Frontier Province to be somewhat fully discussed on this vote of 7 lakhs for the Foreign and Political Department. We on these Benches really welcomed the line which you allowed the House to take; but I must crave a certain amount of indulgence from the House in that I had not myself expected that this question would be fully debated this morning and that my opportunities for collecting my papers in the luncheon interval were interrupted by other and more pleasurable occupations. I trust the House will take that as some explanation of my not dealing very fully with this subject. In any case I think it would have been difficult to attempt any full exposition now. In the first place I would like to congratulate my Honourable friend Mr. Das on the success which he has in the final end achieved in getting this subject discussed. I understand my honourable friend had perhaps a double motive in moving as he did in this matter, and I think I can sympathise with him in both sides of that motive. In the first place, I think he wished to ensure that a matter of great public interest should be brought before the House for discussion. In the second place, he desired somehow or other—I am not quite sure by what exact lines—but I feel sure he desired somehow or other—to peg out a position which would in future be favourable to his own beloved province of Orissa. I am sure we all of us sympathise with the Honourable gentleman and with the Honourable Member who has just spoken in their affection for their motherland; and if they can benefit that part of India without casting an unduly heavy burden on the rest of India, I am sure we should all welcome their success.

I think the House has already had put before it a full account of the attitude which the Government have taken in this matter, and I feel sure that all Honourable Members are satisfied that it was our earnest desire to give the House an opportunity for discussing this very important question. We did consider very carefully how it could best be brought up; and whether we were right or whether my Honourable friend Mr. Das is right, I hope he will accept it from me that, after very careful consideration, we felt that the proper and logical way of bringing up this question was in connection with the Demands for grants; and that if we offered to the House sufficient time for the discussion of the Demands for grants, it ought to be possible with goodwill on every side, and with a business like use of time, to arrange for a really thorough debate on the whole subject. We have certainly done our best; and if the debate has not been such as to satisfy everybody, no Members in this House regret it more than we do.

I was very interested in the speech that was made late in this debate by my honourable friend, Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury. He had obviously gone very carefully into the financial aspect of this question and had arrived at the conclusion that in all the circumstances the subvention which we are proposing now is not adequate to meet the needs of the situation. I have already dealt with that question in my Budget speech; and I am sure that the House will appreciate what I then explained, namely, the very great difficulty in which we were placed in fixing a subvention just now. On the one hand we certainly wanted to give the new province a fair start. On the other we could not ignore our obligations to the rest of India; and it would have been impossible to justify starting a province off with a subvention under the present economic conditions, which would have left them in a position to undertake expenditure on a scale which the rest of India had had to deny themselves. Therefore we had to go very carefully into the whole question, and without now attempting to go into the details I would inform the House that there were full discussions between the Finance Department and the Foreign and Political Department and representatives from the North-West Frontier. And I think that it was recognised that in all the circumstances the subvention which we now propose was reasonable and fair. It is very difficult to say what the future is going to be and how it is going to develop. I can only say this, that if the House listened with appreciation to what fell from Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury, I hope that, if the Government should at any time consider that the subvention was inadequate, the House would look at the matter as sympathetically as my honourable friend who spoke on that subject. I cannot say more upon that now.

There is just one small point which I would like to clear up in this connection, because inadvertently I think I gave information, which was not in every detail accurate, to my honourable friend the Leader of the Nationalist Party when he asked me what was exactly the additional expenditure this year. I gave him the figure of 2½ lakhs and I told him that that was arrived at in this way: that we had in considering the North-West Frontier Budget cut down the net amount that was required to 97½ lakhs; and then we decided in order to give them some little margin to play with to make it up to a round sum of 100 lakhs and so we had added 2½ lakhs. But I did not make clear that before arriving at the sum of 97½ lakhs, we had actually included in the estimates of expenditure, two items which are new items, which would not have been included if this new constitutional arrangement had not been proposed. One of these items is 2½ lakhs for the new administrative machinery, the Legislative Council and all that sort of thing, and the other is one lakh for new Public Works staff; because it is now proposed that two extra civil divisions should be created and the Public Works service should be taken over by the province from the military engineering services. That in a sense does not represent extra expenditure, because in the normal way the military engineering service would have been paid establishment charges on account of the work they undertake; but actually in the forthcoming year new works will be so restricted that to some extent one can say that one lakh expenditure might not have been put on to the North-West Frontier Province Budget unless that change had taken place. So really the sum and substance of the matter is this, that we have added $2\frac{3}{4}$ lakhs as a margin, and we have included two new items, one of one lakh and one of $2\frac{1}{4}$ lakhs to meet new needs. The total therefore that we have added to what would otherwise have been budgetted for if the province had remained directly under the Central administration, is the total of $2\frac{3}{4}$ plus 1, plus $2\frac{1}{4}$ lakhs, that is to say, a total of 6 lakhs. That is exactly the position, but I would remind the House that those 6 lakhs are added to a very severely reduced Budget, as we have cut down the Budget provision in proportion to what has been done in the rest of the field which is administered by the Government of India.

I think the House will not require anything further from me on this subject. I would merely repeat that on a subject of very great difficulty we have tried to keep the balance fair between the interests of India and the interests of the new province, and that we have tried to give the House an opportunity to discuss the matter. Indeed I feel that after what has happened today, perhaps Honourable Members, at any rate those who are here, will feel satisfied that the issues have been ventilated and that their main purpose has been served.

Mr. President: The question which I have now to put is:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 7,74,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges that will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1933, in respect of 'Foreign and Political Department'."

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND No. 32—HOME DEPARTMENT.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Sir, I beg to move:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 5,48,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges that will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1933, in respect of 'Home Department'."

Sirdar Harbans Singh Brar (East Punjab: Sikh): Sir, instead of moving my amendment, I propose to oppose the Demand as a whole.

Mr. President: Then you are not moving your amendment?*

Sirdar Harbans Singh Brar: No, Sir. I oppose the grant for the Home Department on account of the unsatisfactory manner in which they have carried out the administration of the Ordinances and for pursuing a policy of ruthless repression throughout the country. Everyday early in the morning one can see on the first page of the newspapers headlines such as "Lathi blows here, dispersal of processions there, maltreatment of ladies" and things of that kind. Not a single day passes without such sensational and sickening news, and this is all due to the very bad administration of the Government. In the jails political prisoners are badly treated. At

* "That the Demand under the head 'Home Department' be reduced by Rs. 86,000."

Mooltan jail particularly, we have seen from the papers, that political prisoners were placed alongside of prisoners suffering from tuberculosis, and in spite of protests on this score, political prisoners are still sent to Mooltan jail. How detrimental such an association will be to the health of political prisoners, will be clear from the news sent by the correspondent of the Tribune and published in its issue of the 5th March:

“Tubercular patients in Multan Jail.

Danger to political prisoners.

T. B. cases should be segregated.

In the New Central Jail, Multan, there are a large number of ordinary prisoners suffering from tuberculosis. This is a great danger to A and B class political prisoners and State prisoners who are in that jail and who are putting up in the neighbouring barracks. The political prisoners, it is reported, have made a request that prisoners suffering from the above disease should be transferred from that jail.

Besides the Multan Municipality considers the presence of such a large number of such patients so near the city as a danger to the public health of the town, especially in view of the fact that the death rate from this disease in Multan is already alarming. At a meeting held on the 29th February, it passed a resolution asking the Punjab Government to kindly see that tuberculosis patients are removed from this jail.

It is hoped that higher authorities will take immediate action in the matter and order the transfer of all patients suffering from this disease from the Multan jail. In the interest of prisoners suffering from consumption as well as in the interest of other prisoners it is necessary that T. B. cases should be segregated and kept in a separate jail.”

The prisoners have also made a representation separately complaining about their being grouped together with prisoners suffering from tuberculosis, and I do not wish to dwell at length on what we read this morning in the papers about the forcible transfer of lady prisoners from Delhi, because it will come under a motion for adjournment next week, but the news was very depressing indeed and showed in what savage manner even the lady political prisoners, highly respectable. A class lady prisoners, are dealt with by the police.

Now, I come to other happening more or less of the same kind. In Madras we have heard of Dr. Paton, and even the Secretary of State has expressed regret over the incident, but we have never heard any regret expressed either by the Madras Government or by the Government of India. Mrs. Gandhi had been placed in C class, now altered into A class, similarly Mrs. Shyamlal Nehru, wife of an ex-M. L. A. and a relation of Pandit Motilal Nehru is also treated in the same way. (An Honourable Member: “Mrs. Jammalal Bajaj.”) And here I am reminded by an Honourable Member that Mrs. Jammalal Bajaj is also similarly treated. Sir, if this is the way in which the Government of India are carrying out the administration of the Ordinances, ordering lathi charges and opening fire almost every day at one place or the other, if this is to be called moderation and restraint, then I do not know what they will do when they give up that moderation and adopt really extreme measures. The next step will be to resort to artillery and machine guns. I hope that such a thing will not happen. Not only in carrying out the administration of the Ordinances, the mentality of the Magistracy and the police has undergone a great change, but even in other spheres of life a feeling of hatred is shown by those in authority. An incident recently took place in the place which I represent but where I do not any longer live, I mean Ferozepore. There was a meeting of the District Board at which the

[Sirdar Harbans Singh Brar.]

Deputy Commissioner who is the official Chairman was present and the meeting was held on the 6th of January. We carried a proposal as a measure of retrenchment and decided to dispense with the services of all persons who have served 25 years or are over 55 years. We did not mean to apply the rule to any particular individual, but it was intended to apply to all persons who were above 55 years of age, though among them was a favourite of the Deputy Commissioner. We have an official Chairman. In Punjab we have not the privilege of having even an elected Chairman of the District Board even though local self-government has been a transferred subject for the last 12 years. That motion was carried. The Deputy Commissioner did not take any objection. But on the 6th evening or the 7th morning we saw promulgation of the Ordinances. The next meeting was held on the 6th February and the Deputy Commissioner, without any previous notice to the Members and on that very day when we entered the hall at 11 o'clock, put on the Agenda Paper a resolution rescinding our resolution of the 6th January. That was the mentality brought about by the Ordinances. Next to me was sitting a member of the Punjab Council, an advocate of long standing, the Vice-President of the District Board, but a nominated member. I was sitting next to him and the Deputy Commissioner was near him. The Deputy Commissioner told him, "I ask you to support this resolution and vote for it". He asked, "Why? Is it an order?". In the hearing of everybody in the District Board hall, he said, "I order you as a nominated member to support and vote for this resolution". That is the way in which the magistracy change with the issue of the Ordinances by the Government. On the previous occasion we discussed the matter at great length, and we carried the motion by an overwhelming majority—out of 40 members we carried it by a majority of 13 or 14. At that time he was quiet and did not do anything. That is the way in which the magistrates change with the issue of these Ordinances. In the jails in the winter of January and February, they had just a barbed wire compound, and tents which the military considered unfit for further use were pitched there, and the political prisoners were put in there with one blanket on. I myself went to the jail, the Superintendent was there, the Magistrate too, and the Public Prosecutor who was coming there to a case in the jail. There the prisoners said, "Sir, we get only two chappaties a day which are not sufficient, and the food is not good". Those are the complaints of people who are in the jails which are administered by the Home Department here and the Home Departments in the provinces. Even though they are administered by the provinces, the ultimate responsibility is here, as jails are still a reserved subject. Even Lord Lothian said in the House of Lords that repression is no remedy. Political discontent needs political cure, but the noble Lord's agents in the Government of India appear to think otherwise. Not only that, even Mr. Ramsay MacDonald has said the same thing, but here not only do they consider repression a remedy, but the administration of that repression goes beyond the limits of any civilised humane treatment. A few days ago we had continuously lathi charges in the Chandni Chowk. I myself, like my Honourable friend Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh, happened to visit those places. The policemen with regulation lathis fell upon the crowd like vultures. They even came on the other side of the Clock Tower though people were collected only in the compound of the Municipal Hall.

It appeared to a disinterested spectator that the police had almost run amuck, but the Home Member protested in this House that they are doing these things with the utmost moderation and restraint and that the minimum of force was being used. But people go to the hospitals with serious injuries inflicted upon them by the lathi blows dealt by these policemen. If more bamboo pulp is used for paper, I think the Government of India may be at a loss to get lathis enough in India to beat the Congressmen with; they may have to import them, because bamboo will be very much in demand for paper. (Laughter.) Sir, Mr. Lloyd George also has laid down that the wishes of the inhabitants must be the supreme consideration. That applied even to countries like Africa. But here when we want self-determination, we are considered as agitators; we are considered as breaking law and order, and we are treated as rebels and beaten with lathi blows. Is that the way in which the Government, which claims to have come to India for giving law and order and to bring us to a realisation of self-government, should behave? I am at a loss to understand why that should be the treatment meted out to a constitutional movement like the one which the Congress has launched. How can we, on these sides, at all, having come here as the representatives of the people, be parties to voting supplies to a Government. . . .

Mr. President: Will the Honourable Member speak a little louder?

Sirdar Harbans Singh Brar: Yes, Sir. This morning we heard from the gallant Member from the North-West Frontier Province that the people of that province like the Ordinances and that they are welcome to them.

An Honourable Member: It is his personal opinion.

Major Nawab Ahmad Nawaz Khan: I said for law and order.

Sirdar Harbans Singh Brar: Not many days ago we heard from an equally important authority, I mean Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi, one of the leaders of the Muhammadan community (An Honourable Member: "He is not.") Nobody can deny it. (A few Honourable Members: "We deny it.") Sir, he went to the North-West Frontier Province at the invitation of His Excellency's Government and made enquiries into the administration of the Ordinances. What he said is in complete contradiction of what the noble Nawab from that part of the country has said. Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi said:

"I came close to some young men and I found that they had a much more sorrowful story to tell. They said:

'You have come at the right moment. We are stripped naked, beaten, practically to such a degree that we are not able to move about, and then we are put in cold water'."

That is the way the people have described the administration of the Ordinances and how they welcome it and I had it on the authority of Sir Abdul Qaiyum that the younger generation in the Frontier do not like it. The noble Nawab may have welcomed it, but he has no authority to speak of the people of the Frontier as a whole. (Major Nawab Ahmad Nawaz Khan: "The majority welcome it.") Government must realise that the people who were considered the stand-by of the Government, their families have now joined the movement and have gone to jail. That should be an eye-opener to the Government, that the movement is not restricted to that one great organisation known as the Congress. Even persons outside it who were considered the stalwarts of the Government, the members of their families have gone to jail. As I see from the papers, a daughter-in-law of the late Sir Ganga Ram has gone to jail. The son of my friend Mr. Bhagat Ram Puri, M.L.A., has gone to jail as dictator of the Lahore Congress. When people like this join hands with the Congress to demand from the Government the right of self-determination, the right to have their own Government, then Government should realise that the movement is widespread and has been carried to every homestead throughout the length and breadth of the country. If the C. I. D. is efficient, then they can find that even Government servants who are the agents of the Government and who draw heavy salaries from the Indian exchequer are dissatisfied with the way in which the administration of the Ordinance is carried out. As my friend Mr. G. P. Singh pointed out, two ex-M. L. A.s Mr. Nilkantha Das and G. C. Nag, have gone to jail and the treatment meted out to them is very bad. Many of them are in C class. The Zutshi sisters of Lahore, the daughters of an Advocate of Allahabad, who are all graduates and one of them was a professor in Government College have been very badly treated and have been put in the C class. If this is the method in which Government are going to conduct the administration by treating badly the future mothers of the persons who will hold the reins of administration, it is a very sad picture of the civilization which they have brought out to this country. The British Government and their sub-agents, the Indian Government, have never learnt by experience. They tried to carry out the same policy in America, in Ireland, in Egypt and they did not succeed. We have the example of America, and Ireland, and I think India will not be long in repeating the same experiment, and it is only when the people also resort to force that the Government will surrender power. Their statesmanship and experience ought to have taught them that what did not succeed in the past is not likely to succeed in future. They cannot suppress a nation of 350 millions of people by oppression. The movement may quiet down for a month, two months, a couple of years, but they cannot crush the spirit which is engendered in every man and woman in the country that they must be masters of their own destinies and of their own country. Even the great Lord Morley, to whom we owe the first reforms, said that moral and intellectual conditions are not the only motive force in a community, nor are they even the most decisive, political and material conditions set the limit at which speculation can do either good or harm. Government know that they have brought us to a condition of things which has reached that limit. They have brought us to the limit, and they must note that the present state of things can only do harm and no good. It is advisable for them, even now, although two months have passed since the inauguration of the present policy, to retrace their steps, and to come again to the old reality of things which they realized last year this very month when they announced to us that the method of negotiation and conciliation was the best.

(At this stage Mr. President vacated the Chair, which was taken by Sir Hari Singh Gour.)

I wish, Sir, that, like last year, they would even now retrace their steps and give up ruling by Ordinances, give up the maltreatment meted out to the best sons of the land who have gone into the jails, and discuss at what is an oval rather than round table with the real representatives of the people all combined, liberals, nationalists and the representatives of that great and mighty organization, which commands the largest backing, I say, throughout the length and breadth of India, the Congress, and whose sole delegate is known to everybody as the most peace-loving man on the face of this globe (Hear, hear), and whose honesty and desire for peace is not doubted by even his bitterest opponents. Sir, he is, as was so truly said by that great Empire statesman, General Smuts, whom the Commonwealth of British nations have come to recognize as one of the greatest statesmen of the British Empire, he is the only man in India who can deliver the goods. Sir, even General Smuts said that it is Mahatma Gandhi and he alone who can deliver the goods on behalf of India. (Mr. K. Ahmed: "What about the Hindu Mahasabha?") And, Sir, General Smuts said this from personal experience of his, because he had to deal with the same Mahatma in another field in earlier days. He knew the man about whom he was speaking; and the British Government even have set apart that good, that noble, that useful advice given by him for retracing their steps and coming to grips with the realities of the situation and meeting together and evolving a formula for the solution of the problem. Repression, Sir, has not succeeded in any country. Spain and Greece tried it and failed; Portugal tried it and has not succeeded. It was tried in Ireland and it failed. Here this is being tried. I say the Government will have to retrace their steps, and I am sure that the time will not be long, though at this moment we are not likely to meet with any response in this direction from the Honourable the Home Member—when the Government will have to retrace their steps. when, I say, the methods of negotiation and conversation will again have to be followed. If so, why delay the agony? Why not come at once to the issue before the country and all meet together and deliberate on the supreme issue and give up the rule by Ordinances and abandon this ruthless policy which nobody can possibly like? Sir, the attitude of the Government of India appears to me to be such as can be put in one sentence:

Invention is exhausted, reason is fatigued, experience has given judgment, but obstinacy is not yet conquered.

Pandit Satyendra Nath Sen (Presidency Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir I rise to join my Honourable friend, Sirdar Harbans Singh Bar, in opposing the entire Demand in respect of the Home Department, on account of its utter failure to preserve law and order in the country by their mishandling the present political situation. Sir, the present policy of Government is one of wilful and unalloyed repression, while true statesmanship, as followed by men like Lord Irwin, demanded it otherwise. Sir, it is an undeniable fact that at present we are being ruled not by ordinary laws but by Ordinances—Ordinance after Ordinance, one Ordinance followed by another Ordinance ad infinitum and ad nauseum. I confess that I failed to keep pace with them, and after closely studying only a few of them, I had to give up the subject in despair and in disgust. Sir, from the point of view of political emancipation, I do not grudge this repressive policy of Government, because that will only act as a hastening agent for the purpose of political emancipation. But what I do object to is that by their repressive policy, Government have made the country quite unfit for living in, at least for peace-loving citizens. Sir, the only thing that remains to be done by Government is to amend that section of the Government of India Act, which confers on the Members of the Legislature some little right and privilege to enter into a fruitless discussion of the Government's policy on particular days and within a particular arena.

[Pandit Satyendra Nath Sen.]

Sir, what has been the effect of these Ordinances? My life is not my own, my property is not my own. My property is being snatched away, my bank deposits are being snatched away. As to personal safety, the less said, the better. (Hear, hear.) The newspapers are teeming with innumerable instances, and I am not going to cite one or two out of innumerable cases, and thus to minimise the gravity and the seriousness of the situation. Sir, not to speak of men, even women are being roughly handled. Even women in an advanced state of pregnancy are not being spared. It was only three or four days ago that we came across a newspaper account that a woman named Dhana Lakshmi gave birth to a child in prison. This birth in prison reminds us of a similar birth in prison about 6,000 years ago in Muttra which delivered the country from the tyranny prevailing there at that time. Sir, is there any Indian who has not been directly or indirectly affected by these inhuman atrocities, and with our nearest and dearest ones thrown into prison with their limbs maimed and injured, do Government expect that we can co-operate with them like good boys for long? Sir, in the matter of repression the present Government have beaten all previous records. We are believers in the Puranas. In the Puranas we have read the story of Jarasandha who threw into prison hundreds of chiefs who ventured to open their lips against his tyranny. We have also read the story of Kamsa who, apprehensive of danger from all quarters, like the present Government, ordered a massacre of innocents. We have also read the story of Ravana and the stories of Shumbha and Nishumbha who committed outrages on women. Needless to add that they were destroyed by the divine hand in due course. Sir, each of these had only one charge against him, but the present Government have to their credit all the three charges combined together. And what has been the result? They have to face opposition even from unexpected quarters. While speaking on the Press Bill during the last Simla session, I charged the Government that they have spoilt and misled our young men. I am now here to say that they have exasperated our young women also. I am almost prepared to say that they have spoilt our young women. Sir, young Hindu girls with revolvers in their hands are shooting human beings. (Mr. K. Ahmed: "Whose fault was that?") That is the fault of the present repressive policy of Government. My friend, Mr. K. Ahmed, with his characteristic levity, which is no respecter of occasions, has come forward to interrupt me and I prefer to let him alone. Sir, who will be the worst sufferers from this sort of tyranny? It is not the British people but the people of this country who will be the sufferers. The Britishers may at most be compelled to shift to another part of the globe but the culture and training which will be left by them will go on disturbing the peace of the country for centuries to come. Sir, my reference to the Ordinances may be interpreted to mean that we enjoyed much happier days before the promulgation of the Ordinances. Not a bit of it. In this connection I shall read out a few lines from the report that was published in the Liberty of Calcutta on the 8th October 1931 regarding the treatment of the Police towards three schools in the district of Chittagong. This is the report submitted by the Secretary, Saroatali H. E. School, to the Chief Secretary to the Government of Bengal:

"At 10-30 A.M., on the 31st day of August, 1931, a large posse of Gurkhas led by two European officers entered the school premises and beat mercilessly right and left all the students of classes III to X, after barricading the compound, even the staff Members having their due share of the bayonet and baton wounds. The boys fled from room to room in panic and then from inside to outside and then again, from out to in, still under pressure of constant beating, till finally most of them were kicked out and back again kicked in. In this confusion, we were only silent onlookers. When the boys ran into Headmaster's room terror-stricken, he could scarcely afford any protection to any. A great majority of them had had their clothes taken off, their shorts torn to pieces, some in the melee running hither and thither stark-naked, their books and umbrellas and everything else left behind. The school house is now deserted by the boys and perhaps we won't be able to run the school for some days. Some deadly hurt on the head were profusely bleeding, drops of blood yet staining the floors of the school house.

It is a pity that this indiscriminate beating went on in spite of our producing three boys on demand by the officers. All the books were then scattered away, shutters, glass panes and many furniture, were badly damaged."

Now, with regard to another school, Rahatali School, a similar report goes on. I shall quote only a few sentences from it:

"The military officers then went to the classes X, IX, and VIII and asked the Assistant Headmaster to explain to the classes that they had come, under the orders of the Government, to punish the boys for taking part in the Ram Krishna-day demonstration. These being explained to the boys, the military then entered the class-rooms and flogged all the Hindu boys indiscriminately. Some of the boys were bleeding profusely and two or three boys fell senseless on the floor."

Sir, in their hurry and excitement they lost all sense of decency and reasonableness, because the report goes on to say:

"They also struck some Muhammadan boys on the heads along with them. The Assistant Headmaster then sent for the doctor and arranged for first aid to the injured after which several gentlemen of the locality and members of the Managing Committee, came and witnessed the horrible sight."

There is also another report to the same effect but I am not going to take the time of the House by quoting from it.

Sir, I asked a question on the floor of the House on this subject and the Honourable the Home Member came forward with the reply that the enquiry was not yet completed. I think it will never be completed. Comments are superfluous. This is the brilliant record that the Home Department has got behind it and with this record they have come forward to ask the House to vote for a grant for that Department. I propose that the grant be refused.

Mr. N. R. Gunjal (Bombay Central Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Made a speech in Marathi, a translation of which will be found later as an appendix to these proceedings.

Mr. T. N. Ramakrishna Reddi (Madras ceded Districts and Chittoor: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, it may be asked, what has this policy of handling or mishandling the present political situation in the country by the Government got to do with the Demand for grant for the Home Department? I shall submit that it has got every relationship with it. I would request the House just to look back to the second Round Table Conference. In the midst of this Conference there happened to be a general election in England, and we all know that the Conservatives were elected to Parliament by a thumping majority. Then we suspected that the whole policy of the Government in India might change and our suspicion grew into alarm when we saw that it was not Mr. Benn but Sir Samuel Hoare who became Secretary of State for India. We know that Sir Samuel Hoare is a merchant prince and is entirely in the hands of the Lancashire people. We know that Lancashire trade has suffered enormously from this boycott movement, and so we on this side think that the whole repressive policy of the Government pursued at present after the second Round Table Conference was entirely dictated by the Great Moghul in England. Now, Sir, what was the state of affairs in India when Mahatma

4 P.M.

Gandhi returned from the Conference? At the Round Table Conference Mahatma Gandhi, who was the sole representative of the Congress, was now and then giving expression to his opinion that it was not possible to get any substantial reforms from the present Government in England and that he would be forced to revive the civil disobedience movement in India. Sir Samuel Hoare was not slow to tell his country that the Government of India was fully armed to meet any emergency that might arise in India after Mahatma Gandhi's arrival if the movement of civil disobedience was revived. Now, Sir, we shall see the condition of the country when Mahatma Gandhi returned. There was, it is alleged, a sort of no-tax campaign or rather preparations for a no-tax campaign going on in the United Provinces. It was also said that there was a red shirt movement in the North-West Frontier Province. If these are proved to be facts, they are to be considered as abnormal phenomena. I am not at present dealing with these abnormal phenomena that took place in a particular province, nor am I speaking of the alleged or supposed terrorist movement that was existing in Bengal. All this Government have been armed with special powers to deal with. But I am speaking of the normal phenomena in which this movement was expressing itself in the country. Broadly speaking, the movement has been expressing itself in two or three activities, namely, peaceful boycotting of liquor shops, peaceful picketing of foreign cloth shops, and meetings held in furtherance of these objects. These are the ordinary activities which the Congress people have been pursuing, and I submit there was absolutely no justification for the promulgation of these Ordinances, one after another, in quick succession, to meet this so-called emergency. At the beginning of this session, the Government distributed to us volumes of printed matter justifying the action taken by the Government in promulgating these Ordinances in various provinces. In those volumes I find there are only a few lines, about three lines, devoted to the situation that was obtaining in the Presidency of Madras which in the opinion of the Government justified the promulgation of these Ordinances. I make no apology to the House for reading those three lines in extenso because it is so short and distressingly sweet. These are the actual words:

"The Madras Government report that while Congress have worked contrary to the spirit of Delhi settlement, they have, generally speaking refrained from breaking the letter. In particular, they have not been so far ostensibly responsible for any rural agitation since the settlement, but individual Congress hotheads have spoken guardedly of a no-tax campaign in connection with the resettlement operations in progress in Kistna and Godavaries."

This is all the justification of the Government for promulgating these extraordinary measures in the Presidency of Madras. The Congress people have not gone into the rural parts; there was absolutely no Congress movement in rural parts; they have kept the letter of the Pact; but the Government say that some people have taken it into their heads to spread a sort of no-tax campaign in the Godavari and Kistna Deltas. I may explain in a few words what that sort of campaign is. During these days of economic depression the Government of Madras enhanced the water rates in those deltaic areas by three or four times. Naturally the ryots and others affected by this enhancement made representations to the Government not to levy those abnormal taxes at this time, and some leaders also took up the cause of the ryots and they were holding meetings here and there and sending representations to Government. That is all that was taking place; Government simply gave the name of no-tax campaign to the movement. Just as one would give a bad name to a dog to hang it, so they gave the name of no-tax campaign to this movement in order to suppress and stifle the legitimate expression of grievances of the people; and we find that one of our ex-M. L. As. Mr. N. G. Ranga is in jail on account of this. Government is least justified in the Madras Presidency in putting these Ordinances into force, and it is there that the Ordinances are worked with the greatest vigour. I am not speaking, at this late hour, about the every day occurrences of the lathi charges and breaking of skulls and other things, because everybody in this House is familiar with what is taking place in the country. But I shall refer only to a few glaring instances of the way in which Government have been handling this situation. I will take one instance, the Swadeshi Exhibition in Madras. On Xmas eve there was a big Swadeshi Exhibition organised near the Congress House in Madras, and it was opened by one of the greatest and most revered sons of India, Sir M. Visveswarayya; and the Exhibition went on for some days. Just as it was about to be closed, about the 10th January,—just one day previous to its closing,—the police under the orders of the Police Commissioner or some other like authority came and drove away the shopkeepers and others and bundled up all the goods and refused to deliver them. The very next day the Exhibition would have closed automatically, but just one day earlier the Government took this high-handed action to put down the Khaddar movement. This clearly shows that the Ordinances are not so much directed against suppressing any terrorist movement, but are really intended to suppress this boycott movement in order to help the Lancashire and foreign trade.

Then comes the case of Dr. Paton which has become a matter of history by this time. He is a Scotch nobleman who has settled in this country and sacrificed everything and placed all his large property at the service of this country. In a place called Tiruppattur in the Madras Presidency, where I had the pleasure of visiting him, he has opened a big hospital, distributing medicine free to all poor people, and he has also opened some agricultural farms just to encourage the local agricultural development, and thus he has been devoting himself to this philanthropic work. He happened to hear so many reports from Madras about the beating of the picketers by the police and breaking of heads, and so he wanted to see whether he could open a hospital at Madras to treat those persons who were receiving injuries under lathi charges. With that idea he went to Madras, and while he was passing on the road he was beaten and coloured water was turned upon him with a hose pipe and his clothes—which by the bye were Khaddar—were soiled. Government did not leave the matter at that, but added insult to injury by framing certain charges against him, saying that he had posted some people for picketing and that he was lecturing about the boycott movement. These charges were quite unfounded and they were subsequently withdrawn, and we know the subsequent conduct of the case, and even the Secretary of State the other day had to admit it was a mistake of the Government

[Mr. T. N. Ramakrishna Reddi.]

In spite of all that, the Government have not taken it into their mind to express regret to the person himself. There is one more incident wish to state, and that is the beating of Mr. Sambamurti. He is a revered man of Andhra Desu; while he was attending a meeting about the beginning of this year, the police, without any provocation and without serving any notice that the meeting was unlawful or any such thing, came and beat him till he became unconscious.

We are also familiar with the "thali" incident; that is, a lady who was convicted by the court at Talacherri was asked to remove her thali to pay up the fine. For a Hindu lady thali is considered as a very sacred jewel, and though it is not very costly it is removed only on the death of her husband, such thing has occurred in open court. A wave of indignation passed throughout the length and breadth of this country and yet the Government did not take proper action against the offenders. They were satisfied that the magistrate was wrong and he expressed his apology to the Government. Well, Sir, we are now quite familiar with the policy of vicarious retribution which the Government are employing in asking the father to pay the fine of his son, or asking the mother to pay the fine of her daughter, but we have not yet heard this vicarious acknowledgment of apology in any part of the civilized world. In this case the wrong is personal and the apology must satisfy the person wronged. It is absolutely no consolation for the poor woman who is rotting in jail, if some apology was given by the magistrate behind her back. Such things are taking place in the name of law and order, and this is the way in which the Ordinances are being worked day in and day out, and it is stated that they are worked with moderation and with restraint. I clearly see, Sir, that the present policy is not directed so much by the Government here as it is dictated by the Home Government and by the Secretary of State. Hence I support the motion to cut down the whole Demand for the Home Department.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: The question may now be put, Sir.

Mr. Chairman (Sir Hari Singh Gour): The question is that the question be now put.

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sir James Ogerar (Home Member): Sir, I must express a very considerable measure of surprise at the course which this debate has taken. From the notice of motions received I understood that the matter which Honourable Members opposite, who were specially concerned with this particular Demand, desired to raise related to the measures which had been taken for retrenchment in the Home Department and also general questions of the secretariat machinery which should affect, more or less, all departments of the Government of India. Consequently, Sir, the speech of the Honourable Member who spoke first in this debate, though I regret to say that practically three-fourths of it was inaudible to me, did occasion me very much surprise. It appeared to me that the questions which were being raised were precisely the same questions which were earlier raised in this House, which we debated for nearly two whole days and which were disposed of by a majority of this Assembly. That being so, Sir, and in view of the fact that at this earlier stage I already had occasion to trespass very long upon the patience and indulgence of this House, I do not think that I should be tempted to swerve from the course of virtue on this occasion by inflicting upon the House a long re-statement of matters which have already been stated as clearly and as fully as is possible for me to do. In truth, Sir, I do not think that there was anything that was stated today, any incident of the various incidents which were referred to today—any arguments employed or any speech made today—which might not more properly, if at all, have been brought forward in the course of the previous debate. The House will, therefore, I am sure, absolve me from any discourtesy to Honourable Members opposite if on this occasion I record my opinion that it would not be proper for me to repeat to the House once more a defence on the policy of Government which was debated at great length and which was approved by a majority of the House six weeks ago.

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

“That a sum not exceeding Rs. 5,48,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1933, in respect of ‘Home Department’.”

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND No. 33—PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Sir, I beg to move:

“That a sum not exceeding Rs. 1,33,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1933, in respect of ‘Public Service Commission’.”

Mr. K. P. Thampan (West Coast and Nilgiris: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, the motion that I have to make is that the Demand under the head ‘Public Service Commission’ be reduced by Rs. 1,23,000. I really do not know whether I shall be able to do justice to this subject within the short time that I have at my disposal, but I will try my best to confine my observations to the salient points and briefly deal with them. Sir, the Public Service Commission was constituted by way of implementing section 96C of the Government of India Act. That section provided for the appointment of Public Service Commissioners to discharge such functions as by rules the Secretary of State might delegate to them. The appointment of the Members is made by the Secretary of State, their salary is fixed by the Secretary of State, and their tenure of office is also fixed by the Secretary of State under rules. The Public Service Commission as at present constituted consists of a Chairman and four Members; the Chairman gets Rs. 5,000 per month as salary and the Members get Rs. 3,500 each. This body has got a Secretary who is paid Rs. 1,250 and also a special pay of Rs. 400 per month, and the entire cost of the Public Service Commission comes to about Rs. 3,72,000 as budgeted for next year. The officers cost Rs. 2,22,000 and odd, and the balance is for meeting the establishment charges, contingencies and such things. The General Purposes Sub-Committee, which was so ably presided over by our esteemed and distinguished friend, Sir Abdur Rahim, went into the whole subject and suggested as many as 10 points for the consideration of Government, clearly making out that the expenditure of this branch could be reduced by Rs. 1,36,200. The Government, however, accepted only a reduction of Rs. 13,200, and my motion relates to the balance of Rs. 1,23,000; that is why I have said that the Demand be reduced by Rs. 1,23,000. The case has been very well made out by the General Purposes Sub-Committee, which is set out at pages 65 to 73 of their valuable Report. The Sub-Committee recommends in the first place that instead of having five Members on the Commission, their number might very well be reduced to three. That is the main recommendation, and that is the chief item which will go to reduce the expense on the Public Service Commission. The Commission themselves agree that they can very well carry on with three Members. They say:

"It cannot be said that the volume of the Commission's work requires as many as five Members and so far as the volume of work is concerned it could be done equally well with three Members."

When the authority affected by the proposal says that the whole work can be managed by three Members, I really do not understand why the Government should not accept it. Instances have been pointed out by the General Purposes Sub-Committee as to how Service Commissions are being worked in Madras or other places. I am myself acquainted with the conditions prevalent in Madras. We have a Chairman and two Members of the Public Service Commission. The establishment and other paraphernalia is not half as much as you find here. The General Purposes Sub-Committee also refers to such Commissions in other parts of the British Empire. The British Commission itself consists of a Chairman and two Commissioners, one of whom acts also as Secretary. The South African and Canadian Commissions are believed to have only one Member and the Australian Commission two. Reference is also made in the Report to the Bill which was introduced in the Punjab Legislative Council, but I do not know whether it has been passed into law or not. Now, what we are concerned with is this; a specific recommendation was made by the Retrenchment Committee that the number of Members should be reduced to three, and the Public Service Commission themselves have accepted that proposal. But, Sir, Government do not accept it. Why? The only objection, so far as I could see, that was put forward against that proposal, was that the reduction of the number of Members to three would disturb the confidence of the European members in the services. Questions affecting discipline and such other things have to be referred to the Commission, and the I. C. S. and other European members, it is afraid, will demur to the European element being reduced in the Commission. That aspect of the question has been effectively answered by the Public Service Commission itself. If you will allow me I can not do better than read a line or two from the Report. This is what the Commission themselves say:

"The experience of the last five years shows that the Indian and European Members of the Commission are equally anxious to do justice to the members of the services whether European or Indian. The Indian Members of the Commission are as careful as the European Members to do justice to European appellants. If the past is a safe index of the future, it is not unreasonable to hope that a majority of Indians on the Commission would not prove detrimental to the interests of European officers."

I can not therefore understand why the Government should persist in keeping five Members on the Commission. Of course, I am aware that one Member is on leave and that his place has not been filled up. But you will find there is a provision for all the five Members in the Budget for next year. Another objection which the Home Department has raised is this, that the proposal requires the sanction of the Secretary of State. I know that not only this branch of administration but the whole administration of the Government of India is subject to the superintendence, direction and control of the Secretary of State. There was no difficulty for the Secretary of State to approach Parliament and to get passed an Act which enabled the Government of India to reduce by 10 per cent. the salaries of the statutory services. But this does not require that. If the Government of India will only see their way to accept the proposal, they can easily get the permission of the Secretary of State. Therefore, that kind of plea would not hold good. The fact of the matter is, they do not want any retrenchment to be made in this department.

There is another aspect of the question which the Government of India have to consider. We have effected large retrenchments in the services, and the chances are that for at least two or three years to come the Government of India will not have to make fresh appointments; at any rate, the work of the Commission will not be as much as it used to be. I understand that retrenchment at the rate of 10 per cent. has been made in the personnel of all departments of the administration. The Commission will not have that amount of work as it used to have before. I do not propose at this late hour to go through seriatim all proposals of the R. S. Committee. I only say due consideration has not been given to them. At this time of acute financial distress, when the country has been burdened with unbearable taxation, when all avenues of retrenchment are being explored, if the Government are really earnest in their desire to effect retrenchment, it is imperative that such reasonable proposals as have been put forward by the Retrenchment Committee should be accepted.

(At this stage Mr. President resumed the Chair.)

Before I conclude, I wish to refer to another aspect of the matter which I consider is very important. The Public Service Commission, as constituted at present, is a purely advisory body. It has not got supreme powers, or in other words, it is not a body which has got a final voice in the matters that go before it. I really do not know whether the framers of the Government of India Act intended that it should be so. At any rate section 96-C of the Act is not capable of that interpretation. It is very often complained by our public men that what is given by the Parliament and by our benign Sovereign is whittled down by the rules framed by the Secretary of State. I find on reference to Professor Keith's book on responsible Government in the Dominions, that in all the Dominions the Public Service Commission has got absolute rights, and I am quite sure that in adopting the same model the original idea of the framers of the Government of India Act was that the Public Service Commission in India also must be endowed with such supreme or plenary powers. There is no necessity to have Members on the Commission with such salaries as they are now drawing if their function is purely advisory. I do not think any man worth his salt will accept the position of a Member of the Commission which can only tender advice. The salary of the Chairman is Rs. 5,000, which is the salary of a Chief Justice of a High Court. Unless there is a finality in regard to matters referred to the Commission, so long as it has not supreme or absolute powers, it will not be worth while for any respectable man to accept a place on it. (An Honourable Member: "There is money.") There are only very few people among men of the highest public standing with whom money counts. The point I wish to make is that, so long as this Public Service Commission continues to be a body of advisers, it is not worth while keeping them. That is my humble opinion.

I do not propose to take the time of the House by reading certain extracts from Professor Keith's book regarding the constitution of the Public Service Commissions in the Colonies and in the Dominions. My desire is that the Public Service Commission in India must also be of the same model. So long as that is not done, the provisions of section 96-C of the Government of India Act will not be fulfilled and it is not worth while to maintain such a costly body in this country. With these few words I commend my motion to the acceptance of the House.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Sir, I must congratulate my Honourable friend Mr. Thampan on taking up this motion. We had almost feared that this motion would come under the guillotine, and I express my deep and sincere gratitude to the Leader of the Independent Party for having co-operated with us in enabling us to reach this important cut. It may be that this will be the last cut that will be discussed to-day, and I hope that I will leave at least ten minutes for the Honourable Member to reply. But this, Sir, is in a sense more important for the achievement of Swaraj itself. For we want Swaraj first in the Public Service Commission. The same Swaraj that we have got, so far as the High Court is concerned, the same independence and integrity that we have, so far as the post of Auditor General is concerned,—the same integrity, the same independence, the same status and the same position should be accorded to the Members of the Public Service Commission. Unless that position is accorded, it would lead,—and I do not cast any reflection at present on a single Member of the Public Service Commission—to jobbery. It will detract from the purpose for which the Public Service Commission is appointed. That purpose is nothing less and nothing else than purity in filling jobs. Sir, in this unfortunate country there has been such a thing as making men get jobs not because they are necessarily qualified, but because of other considerations. If those other considerations were not in existence, my friend Mr. Yamin Khan would not have stood up and pressed for his own communal privileges, for after the position that was conceded by this House last year, here at any rate I am not going to rake up my exception to it. Then there is my friend, Colonel Gidney, who time and again says that his community does not find so much favour as it used to do. It is good that his community does not find so much favour as it used to do, because the Public Service Commission has been appointed. Sir, Swaraj is coming to this country. Federalism is on the horizon, and I would ask the Government to tell me straightaway that they will communicate with the Secretary of State and give the Public Service Commission the same position as the Public Service Commissions in the Colonies. It should not be tied to the apron strings of the Secretary of State for India. My friend Sir Hari Singh Gour said in his speech the other day that we want an immediate advance in the direction of responsibility. The same could be said with even more correctness about the Public Service Commission.

We want an immediate acceptance of the position of absolute and unmitigated independence for the Public Service Commission. Mr. Thampan has spoken with his usual ability and clearness. He is a great public man, was a newspaper proprietor in Madras when I was a humble sub in his own newspaper. With his large public experience, and with his great career in the public life of Madras and his work on the Provincial Council of which Members are not aware, he was looking forward to giving this lead. If his health had permitted him, he would have put his case even more strongly than he did, because he has accumulated information on this subject. Government must make up their mind here and now that they will communicate to the Secretary of State all the points that Mr. Thampan has placed before them. Another point in this connection is that Government must decide that no Member of the Public Service Commission will be eligible for any higher job.

Sardar Harbans Singh Brar: Or any lower job.

Mr. O. S. Ranga Iyer: My friend, with his usual sense of humour, thinks that men will prefer even lower jobs to unemployment. Yes, they should not be given a higher job or a lower job. After their service, they must be banished into the wilderness of pension, and unless that is agreed to, the Commission will not be independent. They will yield to the pressure of—I do not say of the Government as a body nor individual high officers of Government,—but their own ambitions for once you place before the Public Service Commission higher ambition, you will impair their efficiency, an efficiency includes not only the term integrity but also the term independence. Why do the Government not give the Auditor General any other job? Why do they retire him? The same consideration must prevail in regard to the Public Service Commission. Sir, a Retrenchment Committee which is performing its job with its usual, what I may call, leisured zeal, a Committee which carried on its work right through 8 or 9 months, as if an immediate production of a complete report was not a valuable thing, a Retrenchment Committee whose members have drawn allowances which do no reflect credit, allowances of over Rs. 2,000, should hide its head in shame, because it has cast a reflection on this side of the House that we fellows, who go to retrench, raise a discussion that there should be retrenchment for the Retrenchment Committee. The Retrenchment Committee should hide its face in shame as contrasted with the work which the Hope Committee executed in England. They finally recommended that there should be three Members of the Public Service Commission, a very good recommendation, an excellent recommendation, a result which could have been accomplished in one week. To achieve this recommendation they have taken such a large space of time, only because its leadership, its Chairmanship is afflicted with that senility which is not the proper phase for Chairmanship of a Committee which should execute its work, only because its Chairman has lost his admirable vigour which we expected of him, only because of what the Retrenchment Committee has at last stated, what after all I could have stated in one week, what my Honourable friend, Mr. Chetty, could have stated, what my Honourable friend, Mr. Neogy, could have stated, or my Honourable friend, Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh, if he was a member (Laughter) could have stated. After so much labour you want to do that much. Sir, the work of this inglorious Committee is belated. My surprise is that these gentlemen have been afflicted with the double dose of moderatism. (Mr. B. Das: "My Committee has not yet reported: why do you singularize?") I am at present concerned with Sir Abdur Rahim's Committee. Sir, Mr. B. Das says that his Committee has not yet concluded its work. Sir, my Honourable friend, Mr. B. Das, has not yet had the advantage and honour of having been an Executive Councillor such as my friend, Sir Abdur Rahim, has had. (Laughter.) Sir, this Retrenchment Committee has insulted the intelligence of the House by saying that there should be a body of three Public Service Commissioners. Why should there be three Commissioners is what I cannot understand. Sir, I think one man ought to have been quite enough, but if there is a communal issue, then have one Hindu and one Muhammadan, because the Public Service Commission is only an advisory body. Why have an Englishman on that Commission? Not that I am against Englishmen, but I would retrench all Englishmen on that Commission because their recommendation after all goes up before another body. Let there be only one Hindu and one Mussalman, whomsoever you like, let them be the worst of communalists or the best of nationalists, I do not care; let them be men drawn from the public service of the country, but I say there should be only two, and not three as recommended by this wretched Retrenchment Committee of which Sir Abdur Rahim is the head, who, licking the boots of a foreign Government, says that here should be three men.—one Hindu, one Mussalman and one Englishman—otherwise, where do the three come in? Now that is exactly what I want to know. (Sardar Harbans Singh Brar: "What about the minorities?") My Honourable friend, Sardar Harbans Singh Brar, asks, "What about the minorities?" If only you think of the minorities, they are, Sir, a legion in this land. Sir, Lord Birkenhead once said that so far as India was concerned, her future was on the knees of the gods and the gods were legion in that country. Sir, I refute that proposition of Lord Birkenhead, for unity in diversity underlies our religion. There is one godhead behind so many gods, but unfortunately I am not in a position to say yet about the minorities that there is that underlying unity among them, but if there are minorities, then the proper thing would be to cut down the salary of every Member of the Public Service Commission to Rs. 500 a month and give my friend, Sardar Harbans Singh Brar's community representation on the Commission. Sir, that salary is what Mahatma Gandhi recommended, and here is a Committee presided over by Sir Abdur Rahim—whose record is over there in the Bengal Council, his record of how he crossed the T's and dotted the I's of his Government alike in regard to repression and oppression—and this Retrenchment Committee wants to oppress us with a load of salary to which we are not agreeable. I stand, Sir, in the same position, so far as the salaries of the Public Service Commissioners are concerned. I take my stand on the same ground as Mahatma Gandhi. Why did not this Retrenchment Committee, if it was an honest body and not a mealy-mouthed flatterer of Government, if it was a really honest body

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): If that is the Honourable Member's view, he could have moved an amendment to the grant for the Public Service Commission by reducing it to a figure which would be sufficient for employing a smaller number of Members on a monthly pay of Rs. 500 each. It was perfectly open to him, instead of indulging in this sort of criticism, to put constructive work before the Assembly and to say that he wants to go much beyond what the Retrenchment Committee has recommended.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Thank you, Sir. I always value your suggestion as you yourself know: and if I did not put forward a constructive suggestion, it is because my purpose is frankly destructive. I do not want to give them one single penny; I want to refuse them the entire supplies

Mr. President: Certainly you can if you like to oppose the motion.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Sir, I do oppose the whole motion, but I want to do that in such a manner that my reasons may be known to all. I am refuting the reasons given by the Honourable gentleman of the Independent Party, who has run away from the debate after producing his report! I am opposing the recommendations of a gentleman who wants to give fat salaries to the Public Service Commissioners which my poor country cannot afford. I hope I have your authority and your permission to make that suggestion with the same kindness and courtesy which you have always shown when the refusal of supplies is raised. I am sorry I could not raise more refusals of supplies on this occasion, but I hope when the occasion comes in future, then though it may be that I would draw the fires of both sides, as my record during some past years would show, I shall not hesitate to stand and perform my duty alone and solitary, ploughing the lonely furrow on the floor of this House. (Hear, hear.) Sir, I have never been afraid of that position. I stand before an audience much greater, much mightier than the puny audience I am addressing today. My words, Sir, are being heard in the gallery, but they are also being overheard out in the country: and, Sir, a man who has not yet become very old (Hear, hear), one on whom the chilling penumbra of old age and second childhood has not begun to set, I have to look a little wider than the elderly gentleman sitting on that side of the House. Sir, I value the freedom that my party has given to me on this occasion, because these things had not been made party questions: otherwise I should have bowed to their verdict and observed a vow of silence. Sir, so long as I am in the trammels of office and party bondage, I cannot function fully; but so much for that.

Now I did not give a token cut, because I do not believe in token cuts when I have reason to oppose a motion completely. That is why I did not make a constructive suggestion. Sir, you cannot construct unless you are prepared to destroy. Supposing I want to build a big palace where you are sitting, I have to pull down your seat. Sir, before I build a palace there. Now supposing I want to reorganize the Public Service Commission, I have first to tear it from its foundations, and reduce the Commissioners' salaries and that is what my Honourable friend, Mr. Thampan, said when he was talking about the policy. Why should we be dictated to from Whitehall? Why should we play the part of a gramophone reproducing the orders of Whitehall? So far as the Public Service Commission is concerned, why should there not be men on it like my esteemed friend, Sir Hari Singh Gour—a distinguished man, with a legal and judicial intellect,—because that is the position of a Judge? A man who has been able to handle cases so skilfully all his life as Sir

[Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer.]

Hari Singh has handled cases, a legal author, a man who can weigh the pros and cons of things, a man who can give impartial justice, Sir, such a man should have been on the Commission! Here is a man, a sedate man, who has not yet had opportunities of being on any of these Commissions! (Loud Laughter.) Sir, he would not have cared for a salary. Money is no consideration to him. (Laughter.) He says he is fabulously wealthy, but the honour of being Chairman of the Public Service Commission he would not, I dare say, have declined, if he was freed from the trammels of Whitehall. Would he have declined Rs. 500 if Mahatma Gandhi had imposed it upon him, and the position was a judicial position of honour? (An Honourable Member: "Would my Honourable friend, Sir Hari Singh Gour, have accepted Rs. 500?") You do not know my Honourable friend so well as I do (Laughter)—Sir, he would. Money has not been any consideration with him. For that matter, have not our great public men like Mahatma Gandhi, or for that matter that great leader, Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, spurred "filthy lucre" for service? But I am talking of a lawyer, a competent lawyer, an eminent jurist. It is a place for an eminent jurist and it is not a place for men who are in Government service or have retired from Government service. The salary of the Members of the Public Service Commission should be reduced. Sir, supposing, for instance, you retire from the position of the Presidentship of the Assembly some day when you choose to retire, for we want you here as long as God can spare you in that seat, then that will be a position for you. You will not care for salary. You will care then to serve the cause for which your whole life has been devoted and you will then be able to say that for Rs. 500 an Indian can serve on the Public Service Commission and through that Public Service Commission create such a purity in public service that it would be the ideal thing for which all of us have been aspiring.

Sir, now I wish to quote to you from A. B. Keith as to what is happening in the Colonies. (Interruption from Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh.) My friend, Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh, says that only four minutes are left and I should look sharp. Therefore, I must look sharp; I bow to his suggestion from behind. I hope it will very soon be from in front. But, Sir, I find the quotation is long, and therefore I shall not quote it. I am very grateful all the same to my Honourable friend, Mr. Thampan, for having placed this quotation at my disposal and several other quotations. For instance, he gave me the quotation that a Public Service Commissioner could be removed only by an address of both Houses of Parliament. That is what is happening in the Commonwealth of Australia with better models than those of Canada to follow. Why should such a thing not happen here? Why should the Secretary of State, Sir Samuel Hoare, like his predecessor, Mr. Wedgwood Benn, dictate to us about the Public Service Commission from Whitehall? I would ask Government to tell me all about it.

Mr. S. C. Mitra (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I do not know whether the Honourable gentleman who spoke last supported or opposed the motion of my friend Mr. Thampan. He gave an economy cut as we suggested to retrench the number of the Commissioners by two. Out of five Members we wanted to have only three. The position was that one man should represent the services, another should represent the Hindus, and the third should represent the minorities, including the Mussalmans. I do not care to follow my friend Mr. Ranga Iyer in his vituperations against Party leaders. It is not possible that a sane man should go after a mad dog. If a mad dog bites at random everybody that passes on a road, then passers-by should not be expected to bite the dog. (Laughter.) All that the people may be expected to do is to save themselves and to go to a safer place. Now, it seems that without any rhyme or reason he abuses all people of importance. His leader may think himself flattered today by his eulogy, but he was rebuking his leader the other day, no less than he is Sir Abdur Rahim, today. . . .

Sir Hari Singh Gour: I wish to say that I am thoroughly ashamed of it myself.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: As regards the main point, I would like to repeat that the intention of the General Purposes Committee was that three men were sufficient and they are able to represent all the parties. At present out of these five Members, three are Europeans, and even if the two Indian Members unite, they are in a permanent minority and helpless to protect Indian interests. They can never out-vote the block majority votes of the Europeans. So, let it be on a fair basis. Let there be one gentleman who has experience of the services, the other man representing the Hindus and the third representing the minorities. This was the viewpoint from which we suggested a reduction and I find that my friend, Mr. Thampan, has also supported it from that standpoint alone. Government, on the other hand, contend that they require more than three men. But the reply is that in the self-governing Dominions there are not even three; in some cases there is only one.

(It being Five of the Clock. Mr. President put the motion.)

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Demand under the head 'Public Service Commission' be reduced by Rs. 1,23,000."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

AMOUNT OF CONTRIBUTIONS FROM DIFFERENT NATIONS TO THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

862. *Mr. K. P. Thampan: Will Government be pleased to state:

- (a) the total amount contributed by India to the League of Nations every year ever since its inception;
- (b) the amount contributed by Great Britain and the several British Dominions;
- (c) what the principle is on which these contributions are made; whether it is on the basis of population or total revenue of the respective countries;
- (d) what was the amount contributed by China, Japan, France and Germany during the last three years?

Sir Lancelot Graham: (a), (b) and (d). A statement is laid on the table.

(c) On the basis explained in the Report of the 4th Committee to the 6th Assembly of the League which the Honourable Member will find in Appendix II, Annex. XIII to the Final Report of the Delegates of India to that Assembly.

Mr. K. P. Thampan: May I know whether India has derived any specific benefit by being a member of the League of Nations?

Sir Lancelot Graham: I should imagine that India has derived the benefit which the rest of the world has derived from the League of Nations.

Mr. K. P. Thampan: In view of the fact that the authority of the League Council has not been respected by Japan in regard to the Manchurian question, will the Government of India consider the desirability of stopping their contribution to and withdrawing from the membership of the League of Nations?

Sir Lancelot Graham: May I know if that arises out of the question?

Mr. President: I think it does.

Sir Lancelot Graham: In that case I must reserve my answer.

Sardar Sant Singh: May I know if India has ever voted independently of Great Britain in the League of Nations?

Sir Lancelot Graham: I would ask for notice of that question.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Will Government be pleased to consider as a measure of retrenchment the reduction of India's contribution to this pleasant club called the League of Nations?

Sir Lancelot Graham: The Honourable Member is asking the Government to consider what is quite impossible. We have either got to remain in the League of Nations or not: we cannot reduce our subscription as we please.

Mr. K. P. Thampan: Is it a fact that, constituted as at present, India only helps Great Britain to increase its number of votes in the League?

Sir Lancelot Graham: Certainly not.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Is it not a fact that other countries have as a matter of retrenchment reduced their contributions?

Sir Lancelot Graham: It is certainly not a fact.

REFUND TO EMPLOYEES OF THE POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS DEPARTMENT OF DEDUCTIONS FROM THEIR SALARIES.

863. Mr. Bhuput Singh (on behalf of Rai Bahadur Sukhraj Rai): Have Government decided to refund with interest the amount to the employees of the Posts and Telegraphs Department, that is being deducted from their salaries, if the Department makes profit in future?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore: No, Sir.

CUTS IN LOW PAYS IN THE LOCAL GOVERNMENTS AND THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

864. Mr. Bhuput Singh (on behalf of Rai Bahadur Sukhraj Rai): Is it a fact that the cut in the Local Governments affects those whose pay is above forty, while in the Imperial Government it affects even those whose wage is one rupee only? If so; why is this differential treatment?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I presume the Honourable Member refers to the distinction which has been made between the two great commercial departments—that is the Railways and the Posts and Telegraphs and the other Departments of the Central Government. In the latter the cut was at the uniform rate of 10 per cent., subject to the exemption of those drawing not more than Rs. 40 a month. In the Railways and the Posts and Telegraphs the rate is half an anna in the rupee up to Rs. 30 a month, one anna in the rupee from Rs. 30 to Rs. 83½ and 10 per cent. on pay in excess of that figure. It was found impossible to effect the necessary economies in the two commercial departments, if the limit of Rs. 40 a month was retained, owing to the fact that the wages bill of the lower paid employes is a very large proportion of the total pay of the staff.

CUT IN PAY OF TELEPHONE OPERATORS.

865. Mr. Bhuput Sing (on behalf of Rai Bahadur Sukhraj Rai): (a) Is it a fact that Government have applied the cut scheme to the telephone operators, with a view to meet the loss incurred by the Postal and Telegraph Branch? Is it a fact that the telephone branch is not a losing concern?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state whether the privileges that are enjoyed by the Postal and Telegraph employees are equally enjoyed by the telephone operators? If not, what is the reason for such differential treatment?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) The emergency cut in salaries has been applied to Government servants in general, and the question of the profit or loss of the Telephone Branch (though it is expected to work at a small profit in 1932-33) does not arise in this connexion.

(b) If by privilege the Honourable Member means all conditions of service the reply is in the negative. Conditions differ in different branches of the service, according to the nature of, and other circumstances connected with, the duties performed. Any scheme of complete uniformity would be very extravagant.

EXPENDITURE ON THE ECCLESIASTICAL DEPARTMENT.

866. Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: (a) Is it a fact that about Rs. 32.46 lakhs is spent annually on the Ecclesiastical Department in India; and the whole of it is non-voted, and charged to civil estimates? If so, why?

(b) Is it a fact that the General Purposes Retrenchment Sub-Committee unanimously recommended that "the maintenance of the ecclesiastical establishments by the Government of India is inconsistent with the accepted and avowed policy of religious neutrality and non-discrimination in favour of any creed"?

(c) Do Government propose to put a stop to this expenditure? If not, why not?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) The Ecclesiastical Budget estimates for 1931-32, including provision in the various Area Demands, amounted to Rs. 32.46 lakhs, and the revised estimates to Rs. 30.47 lakhs. It has always been the practice to show the expenditure in question in the Civil estimates. Under section 67A (3) (v) of the Government of India Act, expenditure which is classified as Ecclesiastical is non-voted.

(b) Yes.

(c) I would refer the Honourable Member to page 119 of the "Summary of the Results of Retrenchment Operations in Civil Expenditure (including Posts and Telegraphs but excluding Railways) and in Military Estimates", copies of which were supplied to Members of the House.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Will the Honourable Member be pleased to state if the report of the Retrenchment Committee has been considered in this respect by the Government and what is the result of it?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Certainly, the report was considered by the Government and the result of that consideration was the statement to which I have referred, which has been placed in the hands of Honourable Members.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Is it not then for the Government of India to ask the Secretary of State to have the Government of India Act amended so that this expenditure may not be included in it?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: No doubt the Government of India could do so, but they have not yet found sufficient reason for doing so.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: What are their reasons for not doing it?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I think that the reason for doing it first requires to be established.

Sardar Sant Singh: Is it not a racial discrimination?

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: The Government say they are not going to move in this direction and for that they must have some very cogent reasons. I want the Honourable Member kindly to inform the House the reasons why the Honourable Member is not prepared to do it now; and if not now, will they lay the information on the table hereafter?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I am afraid I cannot add to the answer I have already given.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Is it not a fact that the Finance Member said in his reply very clearly that the question is one of policy and not of retrenchment?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I believe that is correct.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Is it a fact that a considerable part of this expenditure pertains to the Army Department and if so, why has the whole of this expenditure been put on to the civil estimates?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I have said in my answer that this has been the invariable practice for a long time, but the proper allocation of the expenditure is a different matter which Government would be quite prepared to consider and indeed we are considering it now.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Is the Honourable Member aware that practices are changing nowadays and this should also change?

(No answer was given.)

INTERCEPTION OF A TELEGRAM SENT BY MISS MIRA BEN.

867. Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Will Government kindly state whether the following message from Miss Mira Ben was intercepted? If so, will Government please state their reason for such action?

"To

Tom Williams, M.P.,
House of Commons,
London.

Whole nation under rule of drastic ordinances. India-wide response to national call despite wholesale arrests leaders. Seventy-nine Congress bodies declared unlawful Bombay, forty-five Calcutta. Editor, Bombay Chronicle, arrested strangulation press expected. Lathi charge and curfew order Cawnpore, lathi charges firing

Benares. Here Principal and two leading professors arrested dead of night National college and Mahadevbhai Desai Ashram as suspects. Mrs. Kamaladevi Chattopadhyaya and eight other ladies arrested Bombay. Secretary, Government of India, has issued long misleading statement in which he makes no mention Gandhiji's efforts to secure interview with Viceroy besides other serious misrepresentations. In view of developing situation would suggest Bertrand Russel joins deputation contemplated by Horace Alexander wire acknowledgment this cable—Mira, Ahmedabad, 7-1-1932."

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: With your permission, Sir, I will reply to this question and questions Nos. 868 and 869 together.

The reply to the first part of the questions is in the affirmative. These messages were misleading and intended as mischievous propaganda against action which Government had been compelled to take, and at the time of their interception they were held, in my opinion rightly, to be objectionable and therefore intercepted under the provisions of section 5 of the Indian Telegraph Act.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: May I know what are the particular passages which are incorrect or misleading?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I think my description of the messages applies to them as a whole.

INTERCEPTION OF A TELEGRAM SENT BY MISS MIRA BEN.

RETRENCHMENT OF OFFICIALS ON STATE RAILWAYS NEARING THE AGE OF SUPERANNUATION.

870. Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: (a) Will Government please state whether the clause relating to "those nearing the superannuation age" has been applied to officials on State Railways as a measure of retrenchment?

(b) If the answer to part (a) be in the affirmative, how many officers have been retrenched for this reason alone?

(c) If the answer to part (a) be in the negative, how many officers are there on the various State Railways today whose ages are between 52 and 55 years, i.e., nearing superannuation?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) and (b). No superior officer has recently been discharged on State-managed Railways on the ground that he was nearing the age of superannuation.

(c) The number of officers in service on the State-managed Railways who were born prior to March, 1880 is 96. This number includes officers on leave preparatory to retirement.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Will the Honourable Member please inform this House why is it that no officer nearing the age of superannuation has been discharged?

Mr. P. R. Rau: The procedure relating to the discharge of superior officers was fully explained to the House in the course of the Budget debate by Mr. Hayman, and I have nothing to add to that explanation.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Will the Honourable Member please say whether it is a fact or not that in regard to discharging officers one set of rules is applied to officers and another set of rules is applied to subordinates?

Mr. P. R. Rau: No, Sir; it was explained by Mr. Hayman that the same rules applied both to officers as well as to subordinates, and I believe he gave certain figures to show that the number of subordinate staff retrenched as nearing superannuation was very small in proportion to the total number.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: In view of the Honourable Member's reply, will he kindly inform this House why, if that is the case, no officers have been retrenched when the same rules apply?

Mr. P. R. Rau: As I have already stated, the reasons were given fully by Mr. Hayman, and I do not think it is necessary for me to repeat them on the floor of the House.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: That is evasion, Sir.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: What is the superannuation age, is it below 50?

Mr. P. R. Rau: It is 55.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Was not the rule applied in some cases to persons who had not even reached the age of 50, but were only 47 or 48?

Mr. P. R. Rau: The rule laid down by the Railway Board, I think, referred to persons nearing the age of superannuation.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Will the Honourable Member consider the cases of certain individuals where this superannuation rule was applied to persons who were below 50 years of age?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I am not aware of any particular cases, but as I have already stated, the total number was less than 700 out of a total of 40,000.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Will the Honourable Member kindly consider any individual cases if they are brought to his notice in which the superannuation rule was applied to people who were above 47 or 48 but below 50 years of age?

Mr. P. R. Rau: If the Honourable Member will supply me with a list of such cases, I will look into the matter.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Thank you.

APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTOR OF REGULATIONS AND FORMS.

871. * Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Is it a fact that the appointment of Establishment Officer, Army Department, has been abolished and an appointment designated Director of Regulations and Forms created in its place? If so, has any saving resulted from this arrangement?

(b) Is it a fact that the present Director of Regulations and Forms is paid out of the Military Estimates, whereas the late establishment Officer, Army Department, used to be paid from the Civil Estimates? If so, what difference has it produced on the total expenditure of Government?

(c) Is the appointment of Director of Regulations and Forms a permanent or only a temporary measure?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) The post now held by the Director, Regulations and Forms, was created as a temporary appointment two years ago, with practically no extra expense, as the ministerial establishment was found from Army Headquarters, and other officers' posts were reduced then or about that time. When the post was made permanent, it was found possible to dispense with the appointment of Establishment Officer also, and this resulted in a clear saving to Government of the whole of the Establishment Officer's pay.

(b) The answer to the first portion of this question is in the affirmative. I have explained in my answer to part (a) how the saving was effected.

(c) The appointment is now permanent. Its creation has already led to large economies, apart from the reduction of the post of Establishment Officer. The expenditure under the heads now controlled by the Director, Regulations and Forms, has diminished from Rs. 19,16,000 in 1930-31 to Rs. 15,38,000 in 1931-32, and is estimated at Rs. 15,07,000 in 1932-33.

PAYMENT OF AN HONORARIUM TO MR. PAGE OF THE ARCHÆOLOGICAL DEPARTMENT FOR PREPARATION OF A BUDDHIST DESIGN.

872. *Mr. Uppi Saheb Bahadur: (a) Will Government please state if it is a fact that Mr. Page of the Archæological Department prepared a design of a Buddhist Vihara for one of the Indian States or a Buddhist Association a few years ago?

(b) If the reply to part (a) be in the affirmative, did Mr. Page receive any honorarium for the work? If so, did Government permit him to accept it?

(c) What was the total amount received by Mr. Page?

(d) Is such honorarium free from income-tax; if not, has the income-tax been recovered from Mr. Page; if not, why not?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: (a), (b), (c) and (d). Mr. Page prepared a design for a Buddhist Vihara in Calcutta in 1917 at the request of the then Director General of Archaeology in India. No honorarium was paid to him for this work. He was, however, paid an honorarium of Rs. 3,000 with the permission of Government for preparing the design for a temple in Mayurbhanj State. The question whether income-tax was paid on the amount is under investigation.

REPORT OF THE ARCHÆOLOGICAL DEPARTMENT.

873. *Mr. Uppi Saheb Bahadur: (a) Will Government please state if any date has been fixed by them for the issue of the annual report of the Archæological Department? If so, has the report for 1931-32 issued? If not, when is it likely to be issued?

(b) What is the latest report issued by the Department? Is it a fact that the report, for 1927-28 has only recently been issued and others are still due? Will Government please state why reports are not annually issued?

(c) Will Government please state who is responsible for this delay and what action they propose to take to bring the reports up to date?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: (a) Yes, the 1st January following the year to which the annual report relates. The report for the year 1931-32 has not yet been issued. It will appear some time in 1933.

(b) and (c). The latest report issued by the Archæological Department is that for the year 1927-28. It was published in 1931. Reports for the subsequent years are still due. The delay is regretted but appears to have been due to the complexity of the factors involved in the publication, e.g., preparation of plates, careful editorial revision by the Director-General of Archaeology in India, etc., which have to be regulated with the utmost care in order to ensure, so far as possible, the technical perfection and scholarly accuracy for which the publications of the Department are noted. The pressure of administrative work on the officers concerned is also a contributory factor. Government are, however, asking the Director-General of Archaeology in India to examine the possibility of expediting the issue of these Departmental reports, and hope that it will be possible to shorten the time that has so far generally intervened between the appearance of a report and the period to which it relates.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: The Honourable Member did not say anything about the Reports for the years 1928-29, 1929-30, and 1930-31?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: I am afraid the Honourable Member did not follow what I did say on that point. I said that the Reports for the subsequent years are still due, that is to say, they have not yet been published.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: Will the Honourable Member please inform this House how often Government have given the same explanation as the one contained in the last sentence of the Honourable Member?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: That, Sir requires, I am afraid, a certain amount of historical research (Laughter), but I can assure him that within my experience of the Department, this is the first time that the answer has been given.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: Does the Honourable Member contend that technical perfection and scholarly accuracy are required only in respect of Reports of this particular Department or they are required in respect of all Reports in all the Departments?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: I should say, Sir, that these are required in all Departments.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: Then why is this delay of four or five years in this particular Department?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: I have already stated the reasons, viz., that the Reports which this Department issues are very bulky Reports; they run to 300 to 400 pages, and what is more, they trench upon a field which seems to be particularly susceptible of live controversy whether a particular view is correct or not. It seems to be only right, therefore, that the Director-General of Archaeology should make sure of the accuracy of the statements he makes.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: In view of the fact that the Report does not deal explicitly with the results of research work, is it desirable to wait till the controversies upon the various theories are solved?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: Well, Sir, I do not for a moment subscribe to the suggestion of the Honourable Member that these Reports do not contain points which are the results of historical research or careful reflection, and, as regards the suggestion that the Department might wait until the results of research have been carefully tested by other people, I would point out that it is only by publication that the world can have an opportunity of testing the results of the researches made by the Department of Archaeology.

RETRENCHMENT IN THE ARCHÆOLOGICAL DEPARTMENT.

874. Mr. Uppi Saheb Bahadur: (a) Will Government please state if retrenchment has been made in the Archæological Department in accordance with the orders issued by the Home Department?

(b) Is it a fact that the Director General of Archæology made an arbitrary selection of personnel for retrenchment without consulting any of the Provincial Superintendents? If so, why?

(c) Did the Director General keep in view the question of maintaining communal proportion in each category and class of appointments? If not, why not?

(d) Is it a fact that the proportion of the Hindus as compared to Muslims has increased, so far as their proportion before retrenchment is concerned?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: (a) Yes, so far as practicable.

(b) The Director-General of Archaeology had to use his own discretion in the matter as the urgent need for economy did not permit of consultation with Circle Superintendents.

(c) The answer to the first part of the question is in the affirmative. The second part does not therefore arise.

(d) The proportion of the Hindus has increased by 1.3 per cent.

ABOLITION OF THE POST OF ASSISTANT ENGINEER, ARCHÆOLOGICAL DEPARTMENT, AGRA.

875. *Mr. Uppi Saheb Bahadur: (a) Is it a fact that the United Provinces Government have refused to take over conservation in the United Provinces?

(b) If so, will Government please state reasons for their abolishing the post of Assistant Engineer attached to the office of the Archaeological Superintendent, Agra?

(c) What is the total amount of money spent on conservation both in the Agra and Lahore Circles of the Department?

(d) Is it a fact that there is an Assistant Engineer at Lahore? If so how do Government justify the abolition of the post of the Engineer at Agra leaving only the Superintendent to supervise the whole work? Is it a fact that the work is on the increase there in comparison with the Lahore Circle?

(e) Do Government propose to consider the question of the appointment of the engineer at Agra?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: (a) Yes.

(b) The post has been abolished as a measure of retrenchment.

(c) A statement giving figures for the last three years is laid on the table.

(d) and (e). There is an Assistant Engineer at Lahore, but the question of retransferring the execution of Central archaeological works to the Provincial Public Works Department in the Punjab is under consideration. There was more work in the Agra Circle before than in the Lahore Circle but the drastic reduction in the future provision for conservation work makes it impossible to say how the requirements of the two circles in this respect will compare in future and whether it will be possible to employ an Engineer for Agra.

Statement showing the figures of expenditure on conservation in the Lahore and Agra Circles for the years 1928-29, 1929-30 and 1930-31.

Years.	Lahore Circle.						Agra Circle.
	Rs.						Rs.
1928-29	1,07,259	1,49,589

PERCENTAGE OF HINDUS AND MUSLIMS IN THE ARCHÆOLOGICAL DEPARTMENT.

876. *Mr. Uppi Saheb Bahadur: (a) Will Government please state the number of (1) Epigraphical Assistants, Assistant Surveyors and Munshis, (2) Photographers, (3) Draftsmen Photographers, (4) Modellers and (5) Stenographers, in the Archæological Department, both Hindus and Muslims and their percentage before and after retrenchment?

(b) Is it a fact that all the Muslims in these categories have been retrenched? If so, what steps do Government propose to take to remove this inequality?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: (a) and (b). I place on the table of the House a statement which shows the result of retrenchment in the clerical and other subordinate categories of the staff of the Archæological Survey of India in complete detail. Honourable Members will observe from this that while in some categories Muslims have suffered more than a strictly proportionate reduction, in others Hindus have been similarly dealt with, and that, taking the staff as a whole, the burden of sacrifice has been equitably distributed.

RETRENCHMENT OF MUSLIM RAILWAY SERVANTS.

877. Mr. Uppl Sahab Bahadur: (a) Are Government aware that the operation of retrenchment in the Punjab has caused widespread complaint among Muslim employees, in that the principles governing discharge of Railway employees as laid down in rule (6) of the rules regarding the discharge and dismissal of State Railway servants have not been properly observed and that no serious attempt has been made to alleviate distress by absorbing the discharged servants in other branches of service?

(b) Are Government aware that there is a feeling among Muslims that in effecting retrenchment, subordinate officials belonging to other communities have been able to manoeuvre high officials into making discrimination against efficient Muslim employees thereby defeating the object of the repeated assurances given by the Honourable Sir George Rainy and other high authorities to the effect that special attention would be devoted to the equitable claim of the Muslims?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) Except for the fact pointed out in paragraph 11 of Mr. Hassan's report that two divisions of the North Western Railway overlooked the instructions of the Agent that the percentage of Muslims and minority communities must be maintained in the same proportion as before retrenchment. Government are not aware that the operation of retrenchment has caused widespread complaint among Muslim employees.

(b) No, Sir. Government consider there is no ground for such a feeling.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: The Honourable Member has just stated that the retrenchment has not created widespread dissatisfaction. If the Honourable Member go into the country and ascertain the true facts, he will realise that that is not correct.

Mr. P. R. Rau: I said that it had not caused widespread complaint among Muslim employees in particular, but obviously any scheme of retrenchment must cause widespread discontent among employees in general.

WATER SUPPLY OF AJMER.

878. Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Sahab Bahadur: (a) Will Government please state whether it is a fact, (i) that no filtered water is supplied to the citizens of Ajmer by the Ajmer Municipal Board, (ii) that the water supplied by the said Board to its citizens is kept for several days in little tanks exposed to all sorts of nuisance and unprotected by barriers, and (iii) that a sufficient quantity of water is not supplied to the citizens of Ajmer?

(b) Will Government please state whether they are aware (i) that throughout the whole day refuse and night-soil carts ply in the main streets of Ajmer city, (ii) that night-soil mixed with foul water is carried in the said carts in contravention of the rules framed for their removal, (iii) that sweepers are allowed and directed to throw foul water in the streets and in the lanes even at the time when a few drops of water happen to fall from the sky in the Ajmer city, (iv) that the water supplied to Ajmer citizens for drinking has been declared unfit for human consumption by the Health Officer in the past years several times, and (v) that no steps for purifying the water has been taken by the Municipal Board and people are obliged to use the same dirty water?

(c) Are Government aware that Mr. G. W. Disney, the Sanitary Engineer, Eastern Bengal and Assam, has passed the remark that efficient water works mean a large saving of human life and of much misery?

(d) If what are stated above are facts, what steps do Government propose to take to set matters right in interest of the public?

Sir Evelyn Howell: With your permission, Sir, I propose to answer questions Nos. 878 and 879 together. The information is being collected and will be given to the House in due course.

MANAGEMENT OF THE FINANCES OF THE MUNICIPAL BOARD, AJMER.

1879. Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: (a) Will Government state whether (i) it is a fact that a sum of Rs. 5,388-1-8 was written off as no papers concerning the said sum were traceable by the Municipal Board, Ajmer, (ii) they are aware that no heed is being paid by the said Board to the Government auditor's objections that sanction of the General Committee to grant advances does not appear to have been obtained in any case and that grant of advances of big amounts to the members of the Committee and their non-adjustment for long periods is a serious irregularity, and that no advances be made to a member for the execution of work or for the purchase of articles, and (iii) it is a fact that, in 1931, the Ajmer Municipal Board spent Rs. 337-5-4 more than the amount sanctioned by the Chief Commissioner for the maintenance of suburban roads?

(b) If what are stated above are facts, what steps do Government propose to take to set right the management of pecuniary matters of the Municipal Board, Ajmer?

INCREASE OF SUPERIOR OFFICERS ON THE EASTERN BENGAL RAILWAY.

880. Mr. N. M. Joshi: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that since the formation of the Personnel Branch of the Eastern Bengal Railway the number of superior officers has been increased from one to three at an increased cost of Rs. 1,500 per mensem approximately?

(b) If the reply to part (a) is in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state the justification of this increase in expenditure when thousands of subordinate employees have been retrenched and several thousands are under the retrenchment axe?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) I am informed that the reorganisation of the arrangements for Personnel work in the Headquarters Offices of the Eastern Bengal Railway has been effected without an increase in the number of superior officers who were formerly engaged on Establishment work in these offices.

(b) Does not arise.

†For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 878.

ALLEGED THREATENING OF MUSLIM CLERKS IN THE RAILWAY CLEARING ACCOUNTS OFFICE.

881. Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad: Are Government aware that R. E. Faqir Chand, Deputy Director, Railway Clearing Accounts Office, threatens Muslim clerks of this office that he would retrench them if they would form or join a Muslim Union?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I understand that there is no foundation for the allegation.

PAYSHEETS OF THE RAILWAY CLEARING ACCOUNTS OFFICE.

882. Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad: Will Government be pleased to lay on the table a true copy of the paysheets of the Railway Clearing Accounts Office for the month of January, 1932?

Mr. P. R. Rau: If my Honourable friend had known that the pay sheets of the Clearing Accounts Office consist of 123 pages, 27" x 17" in size, exclusive of about 300 deduction lists, etc., I am sure he would not have made this request.

SENIORITY LIST OF THE RAILWAY CLEARING ACCOUNTS OFFICE.

883. Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad: Will Government be pleased to lay on the table an up-to-date copy of the seniority list of the Railway Clearing Accounts Office?

Mr. P. R. Rau: Government regret that they are unable to place on the table documents of purely departmental interest.

ALLEGED INJUSTICES TO MUSLIM EMPLOYEES ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

884. Sir Abdullah Suhrawardy: (a) Is it a fact that the Railway Board was requested to appoint a special committee to redress the injustice done to the Muslim employees under the Crew System in the East Indian Railway?

(b) If so, what action, if any, was taken by the Railway Board?

(c) Is it a fact that the posts of two Passenger Superintendents who held the ranks of Subedar and Jemadar were retrenched?

(d) Were the two retrenched officers provided in the T. T. E. staff?

(e) Is it a fact that the senior officer was given lower rank and pay? What are their names?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) Government are unable to trace that any such request was made.

(b) Does not arise.

(c), (d) and (e). Information is being obtained from the Agent, East Indian Railway, and a reply laid on the table in due course.

TERMS FOR DISCHARGE OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES.

885. Sir Abdullah Suhrawardy: (a) Is it a fact that clause V, sub-clause 2, of the circular issued by the Railway Board to the Agents on 3rd March, 1931, directed that, "Employees discharged from the services on reduction of establishment should be granted all leave on full or average pay at their credit subject to a maximum of four months, provided if such leave at their credit is less than one month, they should in lieu of it be allowed one month's pay in lieu of notice. When under these orders leave of not less than one month is granted it should be made clear to the employee that his service will not be required on the termination of his leave and that he will not be entitled to a further notice of discharge or pay in lieu of such notice"?

(b) Was the benefit of the above rule given to the persons acting in the Crew Department of the East Indian Railway? If not, why not?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) Yes.

(b) I have called for information from the Agent, East Indian Railway, and will lay a reply on the table in due course.

LACK OF A WAITING ROOM AT KOSMA.

896. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Are Government aware that there is no waiting room at Kosma, a station on the Shikohabad-Farrukhabad Branch of the East Indian Railway?

(b) Do Government propose to include the cost of its construction in the next year's Budget?

Mr. P. R. Rau: Government are not aware of the arrangements at this particular station. I am sending a copy of the Honourable Member's question to the Agent of the East Indian Railway, but it is unlikely that he will be able to find funds for any alteration in the station buildings next year.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: The cost of providing a shed at a small station hardly exceeds a couple of hundred rupees.

Mr. P. R. Rau: I am afraid I am unable to reply to that question without notice.

ALLOWANCES PERMITTED FOR CERTAIN PRISONERS DETAINED UNDER REGULATION III OF 1818.

887. Mr. K. O. Neogy: (a) Will Government be pleased to state what allowances have been fixed in the cases of Mr. J. M. Sen Gupta, Mr. Subhas Chandra Bose and Mr. Sarat Chandra Bose who are now detained under Bengal State Prisoners Regulation III of 1818?

(b) What circumstances have been taken into consideration by Government in fixing the said allowances and determining their adequacy "to the supply" of the detenu's "own wants and those of his family, according to their rank in life"?

(c) Will Government be pleased to lay on the table the reports received under section 6 of the said Regulation as regards these State prisoners?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) Allowances totalling Rs. 167 a month plus a sum of Rs. 294 for the purchase of clothes, furniture and other necessities have been sanctioned for Mr. Sen Gupta himself and Rs. 1,000 a month for the support of his family.

As regards Mr. Subash Chandra Bose, I would refer the Honourable Member to the answer I gave on the 2nd March to Mr. Nabakumar Sing Dudhoria's question No. 600.

No allowances have yet been fixed for Mr. Sarat Chandra Bose whose case is still under the consideration of the Government of Bengal.

(b) The status in life of the State Prisoner and his own wants and those of his family.

(c) I am not prepared to lay the reports which have been submitted for the information of the Governor General in Council on the table. I may say, however, that the reports show that the degree of confinement to which these State Prisoners are subjected to is not liable to injure their health.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Has the Honourable Member's attention been drawn to certain Press reports regarding the state of health of Mr. Subash Chandra Bose, particularly to the complaint that he is not allowed to go out, except within the limited space of a small courtyard, for taking his walking exercise?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I have not seen the Press report to which the Honourable Member has referred.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: May I take it that the reports that the Honourable Member has received under section 6 of the Regulation do not mention anything about the health of these prisoners?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: Yes. I understand that their health is satisfactory.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Is the Honourable Member in a position to give us the date of the latest report received on the subject?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I do not remember the precise date. I must ask for notice of that.

REPORTS ON THE HEALTH AND TREATMENT OF CERTAIN PRISONERS.

888. Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) What authorities have been instructed by Government to visit Mr. J. M. Sen Gupta, Mr. Subhas Chandra Bose and Mr. Sarat Chandra Bose, and what instructions have been given to such authorities under section 4 of Bengal State Prisoners Regulation III of 1818?

(b) Will Government be pleased to lay on the table such reports, as may have been received under section 4 of the said Regulation, regarding the health and treatment of each of the said prisoners?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) The Deputy Commissioner, Jalpaiguri, in the case of Mr. J. M. Sen Gupta and the Resident Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Seoni, in the cases of the two latter. The instructions issued require the officers appointed to visit and report on the State Prisoners once a month.

(b) I am not prepared to lay copies of reports on the table. I may state however for the Honourable Member's information that the latest reports show that Mr. J. M. Sen Gupta, who before his detention was in indifferent health, is doing as well as can be expected. The present state of health of both the other prisoners is reported to be fair.

ALLOWANCES OF TRAVELLING TICKET EXAMINERS.

889. Bhai Parma Nand: (a) Is it a fact that the running train checking staff was from its very start getting mileage allowance, like guards as part of their pay?

(b) Is it a fact that at the time of introducing the crew system, the Travelling Ticket Examiners were getting average allowance and ticket collectors under them were getting mileage allowance?

(c) Is it a fact that from time to time special modes of checking were introduced, but ultimately the work of Travelling Ticket Examiners only was appreciated and maintained?

(d) Is it a fact that the work of the former Special Ticket Examiners was recently condemned by the Agent of the North Western Railway?

(e) Will Government please state whether by changing the cadre of Travelling Ticket Examiners to Special Ticket Examiners and by reducing their mileage allowance (daily allowance), the authorities have lightened their duties also; if not, what was the reason for this reduction?

(f) Is it a fact that the emoluments of other running staff like guards, etc., have also been reduced? If not, why not?

(g) Is it not a fact that while the train is running, the checkers are busy at their work, while the guards sit in the brake and do nothing?

(h) Is it not a fact that the majority of the former Travelling Ticket Examiners were recruited from among the guards and are Government aware that the present reduction of allowance affects them very injuriously?

(i) Will Government lay on the table a comparative statement of income earned by Travelling Ticket Examiners and by other modes of checking?

(j) Are Government contemplating the reduction of a guard's mileage allowance, if not, what is the reason for differential treatment?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) Yes, as part of their pay and subject to a maximum of 75 per cent. of pay.

(b) and (h). Information will be obtained and a reply will be laid on the table in due course.

(c) Special modes of checking have been introduced from time to time. Travelling Ticket Examiners were under the control of the Chief Auditor prior to 1928 when the organization for ticket checking was transferred to the control of the Commercial Branch. After further investigation, the present system was introduced in the year 1931 in order to secure permanent economy without detriment to efficiency.

(d) No.

(e) By abolishing the cadre of Travelling Ticket Examiners and absorbing them in the cadre of Special Ticket Examiners the work of Special Ticket Examiners who were formerly Travelling Ticket Examiners has been lightened, in that previously their duties were entirely connected with the checking of passengers' tickets in running trains, whereas under the new organization they are not exclusively employed on running trains but are employed for station duties also.

(f) and (j). The rates of pay and allowances of other running staff, e.g., Guards, etc., have not been reduced as their duties remain the same.

(g) No.

(i) The information is not readily available. I may add that the so-called earnings of Ticket Examining staff do not furnish a true measure of the efficiency of any particular system.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Will the Honourable Member be pleased to say whether the grievances of these Ticket Examiners were brought to the notice of and were considered by the Railway Court of Enquiry?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I believe it was considered by them.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Can the Honourable Member say how it was disposed of?

Mr. P. R. Rau: To the best of my recollection, there are no special recommendations made on this subject, as they thought it was outside the scope of their enquiry.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: If this was considered by the Court of Enquiry, then it would have been mentioned somewhere in the report. Is any reference made in the report of the Court of Enquiry?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I cannot at this moment lay my hand on any particular passage, but to the best of my recollection, as I said, they did not go into it in detail as they considered that it was outside the scope of their enquiry.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: You may take it from me that it was not considered by them. Has the Honourable Member noticed the number of questions that have been asked about T. T. I.'s and T. T. E.'s in this Assembly?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I can claim to be excused from replying to further questions on that subject on that very ground.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Is it not a fact that some of these T. T. I.'s visit the houses of M. L. A.'s and get these questions put in the Assembly?

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: The very fact that these things are asked clearly shows that they have been wronged.

Mr. P. R. Rau: I know that there is a considerable amount of feeling on the subject.

ALLOWANCES OF TRAVELLING TICKET EXAMINERS.

890. Bhai Parma Nand: (a) Is it not a fact that in June, 1912, the matter of reduction of allowances of Travelling Ticket Examiners was thoroughly considered and it was decided that the Travelling Ticket Examiners were entitled to mileage allowances?

(b) Is it a fact that while the daily allowance is given, the checking staff is required to work at night? Is this permissible under the rules?

(c) Is it not a fact that the mileage allowance of the Travelling Ticket Examiners was a part of the terms and conditions of their service?

(d) Is it not a fact that while reducing the allowance of the Travelling Ticket Examiners the authority gave them one day's notice only requiring them either to accept the reduction or consider themselves dismissed; if so, was this permissible under the Fundamental Rules or any other rules?

(e) Will Government please state whether the reduction made is permissible under Fundamental Rule No. 15?

(f) Is it a fact that Travelling Ticket Examiners were also put to work at stations on certain occasions and what allowances were they paid for that period?

(g) If the answer to part (f) of the preceding question is in the negative and the duties of the Special Ticket Examiners, formerly Travelling Ticket Examiners, are not lightened and their work is the same, will Government please state the reasons why their allowances have been reduced, when those of other running staff are maintained intact?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) Information is not available as to what happened in this respect during 1912.

(b) The reply to both questions is in the affirmative.

(c) Yes, so long as the posts of Travelling Ticket Examiners existed.

(d) I understand that the staff were not advised that they would be dismissed in the alternative.

(e) Fundamental Rule No. 15 does not apply to cases of this nature.

(f) Information is not available.

(g) Does not arise, as the duties are different.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Arising out of the Honourable Member's reply, to part (c) of this question, is it or is it not a fact that the travelling allowance these men are now receiving is not 1/10th of what they were receiving before?

Mr. P. R. Rau: Possibly, Sir, but I cannot say off hand that the figures are accurate.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Is the Honourable Member aware of the fact that this is not honest retrenchment?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I did not hear the Honourable Member. Will he please repeat the question?

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: What is the use, Sir?

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Is it a fact, as was pointed out in one case, that an officer checked a bogie carriage and found 37 out of 42 passengers were without tickets?

Mr. P. R. Rau: The Honourable Member is giving me information.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Is it a fact or not a fact that when the allowance of the T. T. E.'s was reduced by the Agents of the various railways, the T. T. E.'s were threatened that if they did not accept the reduction they would be dismissed from service?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I have just replied to that question. I understand from the Agent of the North Western Railway that it is not a fact.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Does this apply to the Eastern Bengal Railway or not?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I want notice of that question.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: Will the Honourable Member make inquiries? I say it is a fact.

Mr. P. R. Rau: If the Honourable Member will give me notice of that question, I will make inquiries.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Does this not apply to the East Indian Railway as well?

(No reply was given.)

RECRUITMENT OF MUSLIMS IN GOVERNMENT OFFICES.

891. Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: (a) Is it a fact that the Home Department issued orders on 17th July, 1931, to the effect that Muslims employed temporarily who had not passed the examination of the Public Service Commission may be allowed to hold their appointments without being replaced by qualified non-Muslims until passed Muslim candidates became available?

(b) Is it a fact that the Army Department issued instructions to the Army and Royal Air Force Headquarters on 20th August, 1931, that the vacancies reserved for minority communities must be given to Hindus?

(c) Is it a fact that the Army Department communicated to the Army and Royal Air Force Headquarters a copy of the Home Department orders referred to in part (a) in September, 1931?

(d) Is it a fact that four Muslims were discharged from the Quarter-master General's Branch on the 5th October, 1931, and replaced by Hindus?

(e) Is it a fact that the Army Department cancelled their instructions referred to at part (b) on the 7th October, 1931?

(f) Is it a fact that the four Muslims referred to in part (d) were reinstated on the 8th October, 1931, and an equal number of Hindus were discharged instead?

(g) Is it a fact that three Muslims were discharged from the Medical Directorate on the 9th October, 1931?

(h) If the answers to the above be in the affirmative, will Government state the circumstances in which:

(i) the Home Department orders mentioned in part (a) were issued,

(ii) the Army Department instructions mentioned in part (b) were issued and subsequently cancelled,

- (iii) the four Muslims mentioned in part (f) were discharged and re-instated,
- (iv) the Army Department took full two months in communicating the Home Department orders mentioned in part (a) to the Army and Royal Air Force Headquarters,
- (v) the three Muslims mentioned in part (g) were discharged?
- (i) Is it a fact that three out of the four Muslims referred to at parts (d) and (f) were again discharged on the 1st March, 1932? If so, why?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) No, Sir. The orders were to the effect that temporary appointments of unqualified Muslims and lady clerks might be made, or retained, in those posts only which were intended to be held permanently by Muslim or lady clerks as the case might be.

(b) The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the reply given to part (a) of Maulvi Badi-uz-Zaman's starred question No. 943 on the 24th September, 1931. The instructions issued by the Army Department were shortly afterwards withdrawn. They would have involved the filling up of certain posts by the only qualified candidates then available, who were Hindus.

(c) The orders referred to in part (a) of the question were issued to the Public Service Commission, who communicated them to the Army Department on the 17th September. The Army Department communicated the orders to all Branches of Army Headquarters on the 18th September and cancelled their previous instructions on the 6th October.

(d) No, Sir. Notices of discharge were issued, and withdrawn before they took effect in the case of 3 out of 4 Muslim clerks. The fourth clerk was discharged about the 5th October, but was re-employed from the 13th October. No clerk was replaced by a Hindu.

(e) Yes.

(f) The Honourable Member is referred to the reply which I have just given to part (d).

(g) Yes, because these clerks were not employed in vacancies intended for members of their community.

(h) (i). The circumstances were the failure of Muslim candidates to qualify for vacancies which had been set apart for them.

(h) (ii), (iii), and (v). The answers have been given in my replies to previous parts.

(h) (iv). It is not the case that the Army Department took two months to act upon the orders.

(i) Yes. The ministerial establishment of the Quartermaster-General's Branch was subsequently reduced as part of the general retrenchment. As these clerks were temporary and unqualified, and considered the least efficient, there was no alternative but to select them for retrenchment before others.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Is it a fact that unqualified clerks who failed at the examination two years ago are being retained in the office, and trained at the expense of the State, in order that they may be able to pass at the next examination, while candidates belonging to other communities who duly passed at the open competitive examination are not being offered employment?

Mr. G. M. Young: I cannot say about other clerks. The clerks to whom I have referred have not been retained.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Is it a fact that this concession of allowing failed candidates to continue in service until such time as they can pass the examination applies only to lady clerks and Muslims; and if so, are Government prepared to extend this concession to other minority communities also? If not, why not?

Mr. G. M. Young: I must ask for notice of that question.

RETRENCHMENTS IN THE ARMY DEPARTMENT.

892. Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: (a) Is it a fact that in November, 1931 about a dozen appointments were retrenched in the Army Department?

(b) If so, will Government state the age, length of service and salary at the time of retrenchment of the men concerned?

(c) Is it a fact that one of the men (an Indian) retrenched by the Army Secretary had less than 20 years' service at the time of retrenchment?

(d) Is it a fact that in the Army Department extensions of service have been granted to a man belonging to the European community for the last five years and another extension of service after the age of 60 has been granted?

(e) Will Government explain why the appointment mentioned in part (d) was not retrenched in preference to that mentioned in part (c)?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) 12 appointments were retrenched; 9 men were discharged and 3 vacant posts were not filled up.

(b) A statement is laid on the table.

(c) and (d). Yes.

(e) The European clerk in question was recruited at the age of 43, and has, therefore, only 17 years' service. He is a clerk of outstanding ability and industry. He was retained at the time of retrenchment, and has been given his latest extension entirely in the interests of efficiency. Under Fundamental Rule 56, a ministerial servant should ordinarily be retained in the service, if he continues to be efficient, up to the age of 60 and may be retained thereafter in very special circumstances, which have to be recorded in writing. I lay on the table a copy of the order recorded at the time that the extension in question was granted. The selection of individuals for retrenchment was carried out, in conformity with the principles laid down by Government, by a Committee consisting of all the officers in the Department, whose conclusions in each case were unanimous. The clerk referred to in part (c) of the question was the only clerk with less than 20 years' service who was retrenched. He was discharged on the first of the grounds laid down for compulsory retirement, vis., his work was considered to be so consistently unsatisfactory that to retain him on the cadre, while others were discharged from it, would have been unjustifiable.

Statement showing the age, length of service and salary of the personnel retrenched from the Army Department.

8	Mr. D. N. Bose	40 0	15 4	260
9	Mr. M. N. Banerjee	49 4	24 9	196

Fundamental Rule 56 (b).

The grant of an extension to a ministerial servant after he attains the age of 60, can only be sanctioned for very exceptional reasons, which must be recorded in writing.

2. Mr. S.'s great handicap has been the fact that he entered Government service when he was 43 years old, and has thus got only 17 years' qualifying service to his credit. Had he started service at the normal age he would no doubt have been at least in the Superintendent's grade by now.* Although 60 years of age, he is in full vigour and in the best of health and bodily condition. Perhaps it would not be out of place to mention that last winter he met with a serious motor accident, when he was knocked down senseless by a passing motor car; but this accident has not in the least affected his physical or mental condition. He is extremely useful; and it is contemplated, when another Upper Time scale assistant proceeds on long leave next March, to place him in charge of a Section. We have recently carried out heavy retrenchments in the office establishment, and have still to reduce three more First Division appointments gradually on the occurrence of vacancies. So that, if Mr. S. is made to retire, no replacement would be permissible in his place. With the retrenchments that have already been made, it would not be in the public interest to dispense with the services of this fully trained and very useful assistant at the present moment.

(Sd.) A. P. DUBE.

15th February 1932.

I agree, for the above reasons, that Mr. S. should be granted a year's extension from the date on which he attains the age of 60.

(Sd.) G. M. YOUNG.

16th February 1932.

* I agree: his work and particularly his noting are of an unusually high standard.
(Sd.) G. M. YOUNG.

Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: May I know the special circumstances under which a man over 60 was entertained.

Mr. G. M. Young: I have just laid a copy of the order on the table.

Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: Will the Honourable Member kindly enlighten the House on the order?

Mr. G. M. Young: I have laid a copy of the order on the table of the House. That is the best way, I think, of enlightening the House.

Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: What were the special reasons?

Mr. G. M. Young: They are given in the orders I am placing on the table.

COMMUNAL COMPOSITION OF THE ESTABLISHMENT AND CASH SECTIONS OF THE ARMY DEPARTMENT.

893. Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether the work relating to recruitment, discharge, promotion, etc., of clerks in the Army Department and offices subordinate to it is done in the Establishment or Cash Section?

(b) Will Government state the communal composition of the establishment of the sections mentioned above?

(c) Is it a fact that within the memory of the present generation the charge of any of the sections mentioned above was never held by a Muslim?

(d) Is it a fact that Muslims have been excluded from the Establishment or Cash sections of the Army Department, the Adjutant General's Branch, the Royal Air Force Headquarters, the Military Secretary's Branch, the office of the Judge Advocate General, the office of the Assistant Director of Ordnance Services (Provision), and the Contract Directorate?

(e) Is it a fact that there is only one Muslim clerk in the Cash sections of each of the General Staff Branch, the Quartermaster General's Branch and the Engineer-in-Chief's Branch?

(f) Is it a fact that amongst the 12 recipients of the Cashier's allowance under the Army Department there is only one Muslim?

(g) Have Government authorised the Army Department to follow a policy whereby Muslims should be excluded from establishment or Cash sections? If so, why?

(h) Are Government prepared to consider the desirability of instructing the Army Department so to arrange things by inter-sectional transfers that at least one-third of the appointments of the establishment and Cash sections under him are given to Muslims?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) Yes.

(b) A statement is laid on the table.

(c) The reply is in the negative. One Muslim held such a post recently.

(d) No, Sir.

(e) The reply is in the affirmative so far as the Engineer-in-Chief's Branch is concerned. There is no separate cash section in either of the other Branches.

(f) Yes.

(g) Certainly not.

(h) No, Sir.

DEFINITION OF "INEFFICIENCY" FOR PURPOSES OF RETRENCHMENT.

894. * Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: (a) Have Government prescribed that one of the grounds on which permanent Government servants may be retrenched is inefficiency?

(b) Will Government state whether there have recently been any instances in which permanent Government servants have been retrenched for inefficiency? If so, will Government state the criteria by which the inefficiency of the retrenched men was determined?

(c) Do Government propose to consider the desirability of prescribing definitely what should constitute "inefficiency" for purposes of retrenching a permanent Government servant?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) Yes, it has been laid down that the first category of selection for discharge shall include those officers whose work is considered to be so consistently unsatisfactory that to retain them in service while others are discharged would be unjustifiable. It must, of course, be understood that Government servants are being retrenched on other grounds and no assumption of inefficiency attaches to retrenchment.

(b) The answer to the first part is that this criterion for selecting individuals for discharge has been applied. As regards the second part, no criterion beyond that already stated has been or can be laid down. The decision as to what constitutes inefficiency must necessarily depend upon the past record of the officer concerned and the judgment and experience of those officers who are competent to select men for discharge in their departments.

(c) As I have already indicated, the course suggested by the Honourable Member is impracticable.

REDUCTION OF SIMLA HOUSE RENT ALLOWANCE.

895. Mr. N. R. Gunjal: (a) Is it a fact that Government contemplate to reduce the Simla house rent allowance by ten per cent.?

(b) Are Government aware that most of the Government of India subordinates have leased their houses for a further period of one year at the same old rentals?

(c) Are Government aware that most of the landlords, when approached, have refused to curtail the rents charged?

(d) Is it a fact that Government do not contemplate to reimpose the House Accommodation Act and that the pay of their subordinates has been reduced by ten per cent.?

(e) If the replies to parts (a) to (d) above be in the affirmative, are Government prepared to leave the Simla house rent allowance untouched? If not, why not?

The Honourable Sir James Orerar: (a) No such action is at present under contemplation.

(b) and (c). Government have no information.

(d) Yes.

(e) Does not arise.

NOTICE UNDER THE EMERGENCY POWERS ORDINANCE SERVED ON MUFTI-KIFAYATULLAH.

896. Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: (a) Is it a fact that a notice under section 4 of the Emergency Powers Ordinance II of 1932, was served on Mufti Kifayatullah, in Delhi the other day? If so, why? Can a copy of it be laid on the table?

(b) Is Mufti Kifayatullah President of the All-India Jamiat-ul-Ulema? If he is guilty of any offence, why do not Government bring him to trial under ordinary law?

(c) Is it a fact that Government considered his visit to the North-West Frontier Province undesirable? Is it a fact that an invitation to visit the Frontier Province was extended only to those gentlemen, who were considered "safe" from the Government point of view?

The Honourable Sir James Orerar: (a) Yes. The reasons are stated in the order of which a copy is placed on the table.

(b) Yes. Mufti Kifayatullah, having acted in contravention of the order, was arrested on the 11th March, 1932, and has been prosecuted and convicted under section 21 of the Emergency Powers Ordinance.

(c) Yes. The reply to the latter part of the question is "no".

The following order by the Deputy Commissioner, Delhi, was served on Kifayat Ullah of Delhi on Wednesday the 9th of March, 1932 :

"Whereas the Chief Commissioner of Delhi has invested me with powers to issue orders under section 4 (1) of the Emergency Powers Ordinance II of 1932 and whereas, I am satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for me to take action against you, Kifayat Ullah, both because you have continually delivered bitter speeches against Government to influence members of your community and because it is learnt that you and your co-workers contemplate issuing a proclamation or statement attacking Government now therefore I direct that you shall abstain henceforward from acting in a manner prejudicial to public safety or peace or in furtherance of any movement prejudicial to public safety or peace and from any form of anti-Government action or propaganda whatever. Any contravention of these orders is punishable under section 21 of the Ordinance with imprisonment which may extend to two years or with fine or with both."

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: May I know why the intended visit of this gentleman was considered undesirable?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: The visit was considered undesirable because it was believed that it would be prejudicial to law and order.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Is it a fact that the visit was considered undesirable because he is not in the good books of Government, as some others who were invited?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: No.

Sardar Sant Singh: May I ask why Government put a ban on the visit of those gentlemen who give the other side of the picture?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I think the Honourable Member's question is rather in the nature of an argument than one calling for information.

VISIT OF MAULANA SHAUKAT ALI TO THE NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE.

897. Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: (a) Did Maulana Shaukat Ali apply for permission to visit the North-West Frontier Province recently? Was he allowed to visit the Frontier Province under any conditions? If so, what?

(b) Will Government kindly lay on the table the correspondence, if any, that might have passed between the authorities and Maulana Shaukat Ali, relating to his visit to the Frontier Province?

(c) Are Government aware that black flags were shown to Maulana Shaukat Ali, at some of the places, such as Charsadda and others, which were visited by him during his recent tour in the North-West Frontier Province? How many persons were arrested for carrying black flags; and under what law have they been dealt with? Is it an offence to carry black flags to greet an unwelcome visitor?

Sir Evelyn Howell: (a) No, Sir.

(b) There was no such correspondence.

(c) Government are not aware of black flags having been shown in any of the places visited by Maulana Shaukat Ali or of any arrests made on this account. The remainder of the question therefore does not arise.

Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi: Are the Government aware that the movements of Maulana Shaukat Ali have been brought to the notice of this House because he is opposed to the movement of non-co-operation at this stage and has the courage to proclaim it from the housetops and to act in accordance with his convictions?

Sir Evelyn Howell: Government have no information, Sir (Laughter).

Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury: Is the Government aware that a magnificent reception was accorded to Maulana Shaukat Ali when he arrived at the Peshawar station by all sections of the Muhammadan community?

Sir Evelyn Howell: I have seen a statement to that effect in the Press, Sir.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Will the Foreign and Political Department kindly ascertain the actual facts so that a proper certificate of good conduct may be accorded to Maulana Shaukat Ali?

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Is it the business of the Foreign and Political Department to inquire whether a reception was or was not given to a particular individual at any railway station in British India?

Sardar Sant Singh: Is it a fact that Maulana Shaukat Ali was not allowed to address a Muslim meeting at Lahore?

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: May I ask why Maulana Shaukat Ali was allowed to go to the Frontier although he did not apply for permission whereas some other gentlemen who did apply for permission were refused such permission?

Sir Evelyn Howell: I have nothing to add to the information which has already been given to the House.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: Will Government be pleased to state whether they will give permission to my Honourable friend, Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh, to visit the North-West Frontier Province?

Sir Evelyn Howell: Permission is not required, Sir.

SAVING ON ACCOUNT OF THE ABOLITION OF THE POST OF ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF INTELLIGENCE, INDIAN STORES DEPARTMENT.

898. Sardar Sant Singh: Will Government please refer to page 4 of the Administration Report of the Indian Stores Department for the year 1930-31, where a saving of Rs. 2,000 has been shown on account of the abolition of the post of Assistant Director of Intelligence, and state how this saving has been arrived at?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore: The saving referred to by the Honourable Member is the result of the re-organisation in the Indian Stores Department explained in paragraph 10 of the Administration Report of that Department for 1930-31, which includes inter alia the abolition of the post of Assistant Director of Intelligence. A statement indicating how this saving has been arrived at is laid on the table.

DOMICILE OF MR. J. S. PITKEATHLY, CHIEF CONTROLLER OF STORES, INDIAN STORES DEPARTMENT.

899. Sardar Sant Singh: (a) Are Government aware that the domicile of Mr. J. S. Pitkeathly, Chief Controller of Stores, Indian Stores Department, was accepted as European on his own statement, while in the case of other gazetted officers they had to prove this by documentary evidence?

(b) Are Government aware that Mr. Pitkeathly is domiciled in India? If so, what do they propose to do in this matter?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhole: (a) No.

(b) Mr. Pitkeathly is not domiciled in India.

TRAVELLING AND HOUSE RENT ALLOWANCES.

900. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Is it a fact that the Delhi moving allowance granted to Army Headquarters establishment is subject to 10 per cent. cut?

(b) Will Government please state whether the Simla house rent allowance stands on the same footing as the Delhi moving allowance?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) Yes.

(b) No.

THE INDIAN NATIONAL CONGRESS.

901. Mr. S. O. Mitra: (a) Will Government please state whether they have declared the Indian National Congress as an unlawful organisation?

(b) Are Government aware that the creed of the Indian National Congress, viz., "the attainment of Swaraj by all peaceful and legitimate means" is alone mandatory?

(c) Are Government aware that the programme of the Indian National Congress has been changed from time to time at its annual session?

(d) Are not Government aware that the resolutions accepted in the Indian National Congress are recommendatory and not mandatory like its creed?

(e) Will Government please state if they intend to prevent the regular session of the Indian National Congress being held this year, as announced, at Puri? If so, why?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) The Indian National Congress has not been declared an unlawful association.

(b) If the Honourable Member has rightly stated the position, he will, I think, agree with me that the civil disobedience movement is inconsistent with the mandate.

(c) and (d). I note the Honourable Member's suggestions on these points.

(e) Until the question arises in a practical form, Government do not propose to come to any decision in regard to it.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Will the Honourable Member be pleased to state if the Government have laid down any rules categorically showing which acts of the Indian National Congress would be considered illegal?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: No, Sir.

Mr. K. O. Neogy: Is it a fact that the present Dictator of the Indian National Congress is at the present moment acting in the closest co-operation with Government and is a guest at the present moment of one of the Members of the Governor General's Executive Council at New Delhi?

Will Government be pleased to state as to whether it is not a fact that the Presidents of the Indian National Congress, almost all of them, have one after another been arrested and detained in custody, and if so, what is the reason for treating the present President differently?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I think, Sir, this question is more in the nature of an argument than one calling for information.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: May I ask if it is contemplated to arrest the said President as soon as she leaves the precincts of the Honourable the Executive Councillor's residence?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I have not considered it.

Sardar Sant Singh: Has the present President been served with any notice yet under the Emergency Powers Ordinance?

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: Will Government be pleased to consider the advisability of appointing Mrs. Sarojini Naidu—the acting President of the Congress—as a peace emissary to meet Mahatma Gandhi with a view to bringing about a happy settlement of the national situation?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: The Honourable Member's suggestion is an interesting one.

Mr. Lalchand Navairai: Will the Honourable Member be prepared to state whether when the Congress holds a meeting and there are bystanders who are only standing to see what is going on, the latter are also liable for arrest?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: It depends a great deal, Sir, on the conduct of the bystanders.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: Is it a fact that the Chairman of the Reception Committee of the next Congress has been sent to Hazaribagh jail so that the Congress may not be held this year?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I did not quite catch the Honourable Member's question.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: Is it a fact that the Chairman of the Reception Committee of the Puri Congress is in Hazaribagh jail—namely, Pandit Nilakantha Das, a former Member of the Assembly—and are the Government going to release him in order to permit of the session of the Congress being held at Puri?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I must ask for notice of the question.

Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury: Is it not a fact that orders under the Emergency Powers Ordinance were never issued on any President immediately on the assumption of the duties of the Presidentship, but that there has been some interval between the issue of the order under the Emergency Powers Ordinance and the assumption of the duties of the office?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I am very sorry I could not follow the Honourable Member's question.

Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury: Is it not a fact that there has always been an interval between the assumption of the duties of the Congress President and the passing of an order under the Emergency Ordinance in the case of previous Presidents?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I must ask the Honourable Member to give me notice.

Mr. H. P. Mody: If the Indian National Congress is not an unlawful association, will Government be pleased to state whether there is any special reason for showing such marked hospitality to all the Presidents of the Congress? (An Honourable Member: "Hospitality" or "hostility"?)

PROMOTION OF INDIAN PRINTERS TRAINED IN ENGLAND.

902. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Will Government be pleased to state how many apprentices sent to England for training as printers for employment in the Government of India Presses have returned after completing their course and how many are still under training in India and in England?

(b) Is it a fact that the posts of Assistant Managers in the Government of India Presses at Simla and Aligarh have been lying vacant for the last four or five years and none of the England-returned men have yet been provided for in those posts?

(c) Is it a fact that a Time-Checker and Section-Holder of the Simla Press have been officiating as Assistant Managers for the last several years in supersession of the England-returned men?

(d) Are Government aware that great discontent prevails among the qualified England-returned men owing to their not being given officiating chances as Assistant Managers in the Government of India Presses, Simla and Aligarh?

(e) Is it a fact that the Controller of Printing and Stationery has recently recommended very strongly for the confirmation of the present temporary Assistant Managers of the Government of India Presses, Simla and Aligarh, in preference to the highly educated and technically qualified staff specially trained for the purpose in England for filling the said posts?

(f) Is it a fact that the Government of India issued orders to the effect that both the officiating Assistant Managers should not be confirmed in their appointments? If so, will Government be pleased to lay the papers on the table?

(g) Is it a fact that the present Assistant Manager of the Aligarh Press was punished and transferred from the Simla Press? If so, for what reasons was the punishment awarded?

(h) If the reply to the preceding questions be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state whether they propose to revert the present officiating incumbents to their substantive appointments and fill the posts immediately by the England-returned staff? If so, what steps do they propose to take?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhow: (a) Three apprentices sent to England for training have returned and three are still under training in England. I should, however, point out that no guarantee is given to apprentices under training in England that they will be appointed to Government of India Presses. Four apprentices are now under training in the Calcutta Press.

(b) and (c). Press employees whose permanent appointments are time-checker and section-holder have for some years been officiating as Assistant Managers in the Simla and Aligarh Presses. No apprentice returned from England has been appointed to these posts, but no question of super-session arises as they have no prescriptive claim to such appointments and have been provided for elsewhere.

(d) Government have no information.

(e) and (f). Government are not prepared to disclose the nature of the recommendations made by the Controller or their orders thereupon.

(g) The present Assistant Manager of the Aligarh Press was transferred from the Simla Press on account of his connection, through his family, with a private press in Simla.

(h) Does not arise.

QUALIFICATIONS OF THE OFFICIATING ASSISTANT MANAGERS OF THE SIMLA AND ALIGARH GOVERNMENT OF INDIA PRESSES.

903. Mr. S. O. Mitra: What are the educational qualifications of the present officiating Assistant Managers of the Simla and Aligarh Presses and those of the England-trained staff?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore: Of the three men who have been trained in England and who are now employed in the Government of India Presses two are graduates and one has passed the Intermediate examination in Arts. Government have no information regarding educational qualification of the officiating Assistant Managers of the Simla and Aligarh Presses.

RENT-FREE QUARTERS OF THE OFFICIATING ASSISTANT MANAGER, GOVERNMENT OF INDIA PRESS, ALIGARH.

904. Mr. S. O. Mitra: Is it a fact that the officiating Assistant Manager of the Aligarh Press is allowed a rent-free bungalow whereas the England-trained staff is deprived of this concession and not given any house-rent in lieu? If so, why?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore: Assistant Managers in the Government of India Presses are not entitled to rent-free quarters. The Assistant Manager in the Aligarh Press has hitherto been allowed rent-free accommodation as he was required to live in the premises of the press in connection with his duties in the Postal Workshop. There is no question of discriminating in the matter of the grant of rent-free quarters between any officers who may be appointed as Assistant Managers. In view of the recent abolition of the Postal Workshop the question of withdrawing the concession of rent-free quarters from the Assistant Manager at Aligarh is under consideration.

QUARTERS OF CERTAIN PRISONERS IN THE DELHI JAIL.

905. Mr. S. O. Mitra: (a) Will Government please state the number of prisoners who are being detained in the Delhi Jail under the Emergency Powers Ordinance?

(b) Is it a fact that these prisoners, among whom are included Mr. Asaf Ali, Bar.-at-Law, L. Desh Bandhu, Director of the Tej, and Mr. Raghunandan Saran, M.A. (Cantab.), are being kept in an ordinary mud-plastered barrack with a small courtyard and that the barrack is not even provided with cross ventilation and other facilities?

(c) Is it a fact that the above-mentioned prisoners have been segregated from all other political prisoners? If so, why?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) At the end of February the number was 8.

(b) No. The prisoners in question have ample and comfortable accommodation, with two courtyards. There is no want of ventilation.

(c) Yes, for purposes of discipline.

ALLOWANCES AND TREATMENT OF PRISONERS IN DELHI.

906. *Mr. S. O. Mitra: (a) What allowance, if any, is being provided for the prisoners in Delhi under the Emergency Powers Ordinance and their families?

(b) What facilities are being provided to them for exercise, recreation and study?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) No such allowance is given.

(b) Two fairly spacious courtyards are at their disposal affording ample room for exercise. In addition, they have been permitted to walk on the jail lawn in front of their barrack for half to three quarters of an hour every evening after lock up time. They have been allowed to have all the books and reading material they desire subject to censorship by the jail authorities.

FACILITIES FOR PRISONERS DETAINED UNDER THE EMERGENCY POWERS ORDINANCE.

907. *Mr. S. O. Mitra: (a) Will Government please state whether detention under the Emergency Powers Ordinance is mere detention or punishment?

(b) If the former, will Government please state whether all the facilities available to those ordinarily detained are given to the above prisoners? If not, why not?

(c) Do Government propose to issue instructions that all such facilities should be immediately provided to them?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) Detention under section 3 of the Emergency Powers Ordinance is not a judicial punishment.

(b) and (c). The treatment of such persons is a matter within the competence of Local Governments, which I have no doubt, is properly exercised.

RECALL OF A PROVISION PASS PREVIOUSLY IN POSSESSION OF THE SUB-DIVISIONAL OFFICER, NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

908. *Mr. S. O. Mitra: (a) Will Government please state if it is a fact that the Sub-Divisional Officer, North Western Railway, Sargodha, has been in possession of a provision pass for importing provisions from Lahore?

(b) Is it a fact that this provision pass was taken away from Mr. Vasudevan, Sub-Divisional Officer, Sargodha, on the ground that as he was an Indian officer, his standard of living was lower than that of a European and he did not therefore require the use of a provision pass?

(c) Is it a fact that when Mr. Vasudevan represented his case he was warned by the Divisional Superintendent, Rawalpindi, for insubordination?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I am obtaining the information required from the Agent, North Western Railway, and will lay a reply on the table of the House in due course.

SUB-LETTING OF A RAILWAY BUNGALOW IN RAWALPINDI.

909. Mr. S. O. Mitra: (a) Will Government please state if it is a fact that Mr. V. O. Raynor took over charge of the office of Divisional Transportation, Rawalpindi, on or about the 3rd of November, 1931?

(b) Is it a fact that the Divisional Superintendent, Rawalpindi, recommended to the Agent, North Western Railway, that Mr. Raynor might be allowed to rent out the bungalow allotted to his post to an outsider and himself live elsewhere as he could not afford to pay the rent due to the Railway?

(c) Is it a fact that the Agent refused to comply with the Divisional Superintendent's request in his letter No. 10/5/A. C./O., dated 13th November, 1931, stating that this arrangement could not in any circumstances be countenanced?

(d) Is it a fact that inspite of such clear orders the Divisional Superintendent has allowed Mr. Raynor to let out his bungalow to two Military Officers, Lt. Neville and another?

(e) If the answer to the above be in the affirmative, will Government please state what action they are going to take against the Divisional Superintendent?

Mr. P. R. Rau: Information is being called for and will be placed on the table.

RECRUITMENT OF MUSLIMS TO GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS.

910. Mr. Muhammad Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Has the attention of the Government of India been directed to certain articles which have appeared in the Eastern Times, a Muslim journal of Lahore, and which make certain allegations against the Public Service Commission in respect of examinations conducted by that body for recruitment to the ministerial establishment of the Government of India?

(b) Is it a fact that under the orders of the Government of India, a certain number of vacancies was reserved for Muslims in the 1931 examination for such recruitment?

(c) Is it a fact that the Commission were unable to obtain the requisite number of qualified Muslim candidates to fill these vacancies?

(d) Is it a fact that the Commission did not communicate to the Army Department (who were principally concerned) the orders of the Government of India issued in July, 1931 regarding the method of filling posts for which qualified Muslims were not available?

(e) Is it true that the Commission fixed a higher qualifying mark for the 1931 examination than for the preceding examination in 1926?

(f) Is it true that in 1926 the Commission reduced the qualifying marks for the benefit of the Muslim candidates but did not make a similar reduction in 1931?

The Honourable Sir James Orerar: (a) Yes.

(b) Yes.

(c) Yes. Orders were issued that unqualified Muslims should be allowed to continue to hold temporarily permanent vacancies reserved for members of that community until qualified Muslim candidates are available.

(d) It is not the business of the Commission to communicate or circulate the orders of departments of the Government of India. In this case the Home Department circulated the orders in the ordinary course.

(e) The qualifying mark in 1926 was 43 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent. (160 out of 375) as against 40 per cent. (200 out of 500) in 1931. Consequently the qualifying mark in 1931 was proportionately lower.

(f) No. I would invite the attention of the Honourable Member to the reply I gave on the 16th instant to part (d) of question No. 826, asked by Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur.

PROMOTION OF GUARDS ON THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

911. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: (a) Will Government be pleased to state:

(i) the number of posts of Guards grades IV, III, and II on North Western Railway in the year 1926-27, and

(ii) the number of posts in the various grades at present?

(b) Is it proposed to reduce further the strength of higher classes, namely grades III and IV? If so, to what extent?

(c) What are the reasons for decrease in the strength, if any, in grades III and IV?

(d) How does the decrease compare with other classes of service on the North Western Railway?

(e) Is it a fact that grades III and IV guards posts are largely manned by Anglo-Indians and Europeans?

(f) Are Government aware that a large majority of guards grade II have been waiting at the maximum pay of the grade for several years, and that some of them have even been blocked for seven to eight years?

(g) What steps do Government propose to take to ensure proper chances for promotion of grade II guards to grade III and onwards?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I have called for information from the Agent, North Western Railway, and will lay a reply on the table on its receipt.

ALLOWANCES AND DUTIES OF GUARDS ON THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

912. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that the rates of allowance per 100 miles paid to guards differ according to the pay of the employee?

(b) Is it a fact that the grades III and IV guards on the North Western Railway are able to earn more mileage than the guards in grade II?

(c) Do Government propose to suggest to the North Western Railway Administration so to arrange the duties of guards in various grades that they run nearly equal mileage in a month?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) Yes.

(b) and (c). Government have no information but will bring the Honourable Member's question to the notice of the Agent.

BELATED CLAIMS OF EX-MILITARY MEN TO PAY, PENSION, ETC.

913. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: (a) With reference to the answer given to parts (a), (b) and (f) of the unstarred question No. 91 on the 23rd February, 1932, will Government please state whether it is a fact that under the provisions of paragraph 44 of Financial Regulations for the Army in India, Part I, belated claims of ex-military officers, etc., in respect of arrears of their pay, pension, allowances, etc., are being entertained by the authorities concerned, if the cause of delay in submission of claim is satisfactory?

(b) Is it not a fact that under the provisions of para. 809 of Regulations for the Army in India (1930 Edition), service records of discharged soldiers are kept for a period of 25 years, from the date of their discharge? If so, why are the records pertaining to their accounts in respect of outstanding credit balances, etc., not kept for that period?

(c) Is it a fact that the names of officers who hold the records of disbanded units have been widely published in all vernacular papers of the different languages of India, and also by pasting posters at open public places, especially in towns and villages?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) Yes.

(b) Yes. The accounts records are much bulkier than service records and it is not possible to retain them for the same period as the latter. Under the existing regulations, pay accounts records of soldiers are required to be retained for five years, but pay accounts for the months of June and December in each year are retained for 30 years for purposes of reference and verification.

(c) No such publication was undertaken by Army Headquarters. If there was any it must have been done by local authorities.

CREDIT BALANCES DUE TO MEMBERS OF TRANSPORT UNITS, LABOUR CORPS ETC.

914. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: (a) Will Government please refer to the answer to unstarred question No. 92 (a) of 23rd February 1932, and say if it is not a fact that while preparing the lists of outstanding credit balances due to persons of Animal Transport Units, Labour Corps and Mechanical Transport Units, the following dues are not included therein by the authorities concerned: (i) service gratuity, (ii) war gratuity and (iii) kran exchange compensation for the period of their service in Persia, if any?

(b) Do Government contemplate, in the case of persons so affected, to make the omission good by adding these dues in the lists of outstanding credit balances now?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) No, Sir.

(b) Does not arise.

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

TRANSFER OF POSTAL OFFICIALS IN THE PUNJAB AND NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE POSTAL CIRCLE.

202. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Is it a fact that in the Punjab and the North-West Frontier Province Postal Circle transfers of post office officials of the selection grade have been suspended of late except in cases in which transfers are necessary in the interest of service?

(b) Are there any orders that transfers of officials of the selection grade to certain stations be made in communal proportion?

(c) If the reply to part (a) be in the affirmative, and to part (b) in the negative, will Government please state why the Muslim officials are still being transferred, namely, the transfers to Lahore (Head Office) of Messrs. Jan Mohammed, Mahbub Ali, Mohammed Azim, Mohammed Wazir and Khan Sahib Bashir Hussain? Is there any justification for these transfers?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) It is a fact that owing to the present financial stringency, transfers from certain posts which normally are due to take place periodically have been restricted.

(b) No.

(c) The transfers in question were made by the Postmaster General in the interests of the service in two cases, and, at the request of those concerned without expense to the State, in the other cases.

REVERSION TO SUBSTANTIVE APPOINTMENTS OF CERTAIN POSTAL OFFICIALS IN THE PUNJAB AND NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE POSTAL CIRCLE.

203. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Is it a fact that in the Punjab and North-West Frontier Province all Postal Circle officials of the time-scale of pay, who are officiating in the selection grades, were reverted to their substantive appointments a few months back in order to make room for permanent officials of the selection grade, whose posts were brought under reduction and also for Inspectors of Post Offices whose posts were held in abeyance?

(b) Is it a fact that some of the Inspectors, whose posts were held in abeyance, were posted in the selection grade posts in the general line in the Circle in leave vacancies?

(c) Is it a fact that there still remain many such Inspectors whose posts have been held in abeyance but who have not been provided for for want of vacancies?

(d) If the reply to part (c) be in the affirmative, will Government please state why a clerk of Wazirabad Post Office, officiating as Town Inspector at Lahore, has not been reverted to his post?

Mr. T. Ryan: Enquiries are being made and a reply will be placed on the table.

TRAINING OF APPRENTICES IN THE RIFLE FACTORY AT ISHAPORE.

204. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the article with the heading "Apprenticeship in Engineering (English method)" published in the Times of India, of 8th December, 1927, on page 17, as also to that of the "Royal Ordnance Factories Scheme for training of Engineers", dated the 26th January, 1923? If not, will Government please refer to them?

(b) Are Government prepared to reconsider their decision for curtailing the theoretical training of apprentices in the Rifle Factory at Ishapore? If not, why not?

Mr. G. M. Young: A reply will be given when copies of the articles mentioned by the Honourable Member have been obtained.

MINIMUM MARKS REQUIRED FOR PASSING INTO A HIGHER STANDARD IN SCHOOLS IN AJMER-MERWARA, RAJPUTANA, ETC.

205. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Will Government please state whether it is a fact:

- (i) that up to January, 1932, it was a general rule in Government-aided High Schools and other schools excepting the Government High School, Ajmer, in Ajmer-Merwara, to promote a boy to a higher class if he could secure only 33 per cent. of the marks allotted in each subject for his examination,
- (ii) that the passing marks in the Government High School were 36 per cent. for each subject,
- (iii) that the Board of Secondary Education for Ajmer-Merwara, Rajputana, Central India and Gwalior, has issued a circular with the consent of the Ajmer-Merwara, Education Department, requiring the Head Masters of all its affiliated High Schools to increase the minimum passing marks from 33 per cent. to 40 per cent. for the boys of classes V to IX and 50 per cent. for those of classes III and IV, and
- (iv) that the Head Masters of the said schools have asked the guardians of the students reading in their schools to sign the conditions of the said circular in the month of February, 1932?

(b) Are Government aware that the annual examination of the boys reading in the schools referred to in part (a) above will be held in the coming month of April, 1932?

(c) If what are stated in parts (a) and (b) above are facts, will Government please state what were the reasons which necessitated the said Board to issue such circulars before the commencement of the yearly examinations?

(d) Will Government please state whether it is a fact that the conditions of the circular referred to in part (a) above are to be applicable to the results of this year? In case it is applicable to the examination results of this year, do Government propose to take any action regarding the said circular? If so, what?

Str Frank Noyce: (a) (i) and (ii). Yes.

(iii) and (iv) of part (a) and parts (b), (c) and (d) can most conveniently be answered together. The Board of High School and Intermediate Education, Rajputana, Central India and Gwalior had nothing to do with raising the minimum of pass marks for schools in Ajmer-Merwara. The facts of the case are as follows :

The Board has nothing to do with examinations of classes lower than the 10th (High School). Annual promotion examinations of other classes are held by Head Masters of individual institutions who have their own standards for promotions. The Head Masters of High Schools in Ajmer-Merwara recently formed an Association with a view to secure uniformity of standards in the work of all schools, and, at a meeting of the Association held sometime in February last, resolved among other things, that with a view to securing a uniform standard of class promotions, marks normally required for a pass in all subjects should be 50 per cent. in classes III to V, and 40 per cent. in classes VI to IX. They also laid down rules for promotions by grace. The resolution of the Association has been accepted by the Superintendent of Education, and is now being circulated to the heads of all recognised schools for guidance. It will evidently be brought into force with effect from the promotion examinations of 1933.

It is quite likely that Head Masters of individual schools who are all members of the Association may, on the strength of the Resolution referred to above, have issued circulars to the guardians of students intimating the rise in the minimum of pass marks, but not with the Superintendent of Education's permission. There is, however, nothing to prevent the Head Masters from raising the minimum pass marks without consulting the Department.

MINIMUM PASS MARKS IN SCHOOLS IN RAJPUTANA AND DELHI.

206. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Are Government aware that Rajputana is the most backward Province as regards educational matters?

(b) Is it a fact that both the Chairman and Secretary of the Board of Secondary Education for Ajmer-Merwara, Rajputana, Central India and Gwalior are outsiders?

(c) Is it a fact that in Delhi the passing marks in each subject for the boys are 33 per cent. in their annual examinations for all classes? If it is not so, will Government please state the minimum passing percentage for Delhi Province in each subject, which is essential for promotion?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) If the Honourable Member refers to Ajmer-Merwara, the reply is that it is not educationally the most backward province in India.

(b) Both the Chairman and Secretary of the Board are outsiders, but they have great experience of educational work, and in the case of the Chairman, local knowledge and experience of Rajputana.

(c) No. In the Delhi Province there is no uniform percentage of pass marks for each class or each subject. Usually in the higher classes of schools, 33 per cent. is the accepted pass percentage, but the pass percentage may vary in different schools and depends on the standard of work prevailing therein.

EXPENDITURE OF THE AJMER MUNICIPAL BOARD.

207. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: Will Government please state whether it is a fact:

- (i) that the Ajmer Municipal Board purchased grass at a higher rate than the market price and accepted an inferior quality of it in 1930;
- (ii) that the said Board spent no money on urinals and latrines in 1926-27 and 1927-28; and
- (iii) that in 1922-23 the infant mortality was 48·42 per cent., but it increased to 61·45 per cent. in 1927-28 in the said Board area?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: The information asked for by the Honourable Member will be obtained and supplied to the House in due course.

EXEMPTION OF MOTOR CARS FROM OCTROI DUTY IN AJMER-MERWARA.

208. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: Will Government please place on the table of the House (1) a list (relating to the Municipal Board, Ajmer), showing the exemption of persons with their names from the payment of octroi for one year for their newly bought motor cars in 1930, and (2) the copies of the Resolutions Nos. iv, viii, ix, x and xi, dated the 14th January, 1930 of the said Board?

Sir Evelyn Howell: With your permission, Sir, I propose to answer questions Nos. 208, 209, 214, 215, 216 and 217 together. The information is being collected and will be given to the House in due course.

MISCELLANEOUS EXPENDITURE OF THE AJMER MUNICIPAL BOARD.

†209. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Will Government please state whether it is a fact that the miscellaneous expenditure in the Municipal Board, Ajmer, was Rs. 2,460 in 1922-23, Rs. 5,298 in 1923-24, Rs. 5,761 in 1924-25, Rs. 3,556 in 1925-26, Rs. 4,718 in 1926-27, and Rs. 36,660 in 1927-28?

(b) If what are stated at part (a) above are facts, will Government please state what were the reasons for the sudden increase in the said expenditure in 1927-28 to such a large extent?

EXCISE REVENUE COLLECTED BY THE LOCAL ADMINISTRATION IN AJMER-MERWARA.

210. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: Will Government please state whether it is a fact:

- (i) that the Local Government, Ajmer-Merwara, collects seven lakhs of rupees annually as excise revenue from the said area,
- (ii) that there are many big shops for selling the excise stuffs in the heart of the city of Ajmer,
- (iii) that excise stuffs coming into Ajmer city are exempted from octroi tax, and

†For answer to this question, see answer to unstarred question No. 208.

- (iv) that the Local Government gives no grants to the Municipal Board, Ajmer, towards the health of the Ajmer citizens or for the drainage work of the said Board?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster (in reply to questions 210 and 211): The information is being collected and will be laid on the table in due course.

INCOME AND EXPENDITURE OF THE EXCISE DEPARTMENT, AJMER-MERWARA.

†211. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Will Government please state what was the total income and expenditure of the Excise Department Ajmer-Merwara in 1927-28, 1928-29, 1929-30 and 1930-31?

(b) Will Government please state what is the cause of the continual increase in the excise revenue in Ajmer-Merwara and do they propose to take steps in the interests of temperance in that province? If so, what?

BIRTH AND DEATH RATES IN AJMER-MERWARA.

212. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Will Government please state whether it is a fact (1) that the total death rate in Ajmer-Merwara was 33·95 in 1913-14 against 32·70 in 1912-13 while the birth rate was 19·15 and 19·16 for the said years respectively, and (2) that the number of deaths exceeded the number of births by 1238 in the said province for the said period?

(b) Will Government please state whether it is a fact that on the 4th July, 1907, Major P. J. Lumsden, I.M.S., Civil Surgeon, Ajmer, passed the remark that so large an excess of deaths over births is due to the bad sanitation of the city?

(c) If what are stated at parts (a) and (b) above are facts, have Government taken any steps, so far, to set the matter right? If not, what steps do they propose to take in the matter and when?

Sir Frank Noyce (in reply to questions 212, 213 and 218): The information asked for by the Honourable Member is being collected and will be furnished to the House in due course.

BAD DRAINAGE OF AJMER CITY.

†213. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Will Government please place on the table of the House a copy of the report made by Dr. Mullen, M.D., Civil Surgeon, Ajmer, about the bad drainage of the Ajmer City in 1896-97?

(b) What steps have Government taken to bring into effect the plan suggested by the Civil Surgeon referred to above upto this time? If no steps have been taken, what steps do they propose to take to set things right in this respect?

ELECTION OF CHAIRMAN OF THE AJMER MUNICIPAL BOARD.

§214. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Will Government please state whether it is a rule for the Ajmer Municipal Board to elect its Chairman from among the voters enlisted for the election of its membership? If

†For answer to this question, see answer to unstarred question No. 210.

‡For answer to this question, see answer to unstarred question No. 212.

so, will Government please state whether it is a fact that the name of the present Chairman of the Municipal Board, Ajmer, Colonel Howson, was not on the list of voters on the day when he was elected its Chairman?

(b) If what are stated in part (a) above are facts, will Government please state how the said action of the Municipal Board, Ajmer, in electing Colonel Howson as Chairman is justified?

REPRESENTATION OF DARGAH AND PUSHKAR AND OF CLOTH AND SUGAR MERCHANTS ON THE AJMER MUNICIPAL BOARD.

†215. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Will Government please state whether it is a fact (1) that the Ajmer Municipal Board annually realises Rs. 25,000 from the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway, as visitors' tax from the Dargah and Pushkar fair, Rs. 1,02,515 on account of octroi duty from the cloth merchants of Ajmer, and Rs. 23,491 on account of octroi duty from the sugar merchants of Ajmer, and (2) that the said Board has three representatives of the said Railway together with two nominated members of the Local Government as its members and (3) that the said sugar and cloth merchants and the Dargah and Pushkar people have no representatives of their own on the said Board?

(b) If what are stated in (a) above are facts, do Government propose to take steps to have representatives of sugar and cloth merchants and the Dargah and Pushkar people on the Board? If so, what?

OCTROI DUTIES IMPOSED BY THE AJMER MUNICIPAL BOARD.

†216. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Will Government please state whether it is a fact that an octroi duty of only half an anna per rupee is being imposed, by the Municipal Board, Ajmer, on rich food-stuff used by rich men while that of 9 pies per rupee is imposed on simple food-stuffs such as carrots, etc., used by poor persons?

(b) If what are stated in (a) above are facts, what steps do Government propose to take to set the things right for the poor public of Ajmer?

OCTROI DUTY PAID BY THE WEAVING MILLS AT ANASAGAR.

†217. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Will Government please state whether it is a fact (1) that the weaving mills at Anasagar, Ajmer (where about 125 hands work), annually pay Rs. 3,000 as octroi, while the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway (where about 12,000 hands are working) pays an annual octroi duty of Rs. 25,000; and (2) that the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway would be liable to pay the said duty to the extent of three lakhs of rupees annually, calculated at the rate of the said Anasagar Mill?

(b) If what are stated in (a) above are facts, what steps do Government propose to take to make the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway liable to pay the duty?

HIGH DEATH RATE AND INFANT MORTALITY IN AJMER.

†218. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Will Government please state whether it is a fact (1) that the infant mortality is 34 per cent. of the total deaths in the Ajmer municipal area, and (2) that the death and birth rates in the said area are 86 and 23 per cent. respectively?

(b) If what are stated in (a) above are not facts, will Government please state the correct figures?

(c) What steps do Government propose to take in the matter referred to in (a) and (b) above, in case the death rate and infant mortality are higher in Ajmer than in other important towns of British India?

NUMBER OF MUHAMMADANS IN THE RAILWAY AUDIT SERVICE.

219. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: Will Government please state:

(a) what is the number of men holding permanent appointments in the Railway Audit Service in each grade, viz., officers in higher and lower grades, Auditors, Senior and Junior, and clerks in class I and class II; and

(b) what is the number of Muhammadans holding permanent appointments in each of the above grades?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: With your permission, Sir, I will reply to questions Nos. 219 and 220 together.

Enquiry is being made and complete replies will be laid on the table in due course.

APPOINTMENT OF MUHAMMADANS IN THE RAILWAY AUDIT SERVICE.

†220. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Is it a fact that the proportion of Muhammadans is very small in the Railway Audit service? If the answer is in the affirmative, will Government please state what steps they are taking to redress this grievance?

(b) Are Government prepared to select some suitable Muhammadan young men from among the present audit staff of each State-owned Railway and to appoint them as probationary auditors and officers on those Railways? If not, why not?

APPOINTMENT OF A GUARD AS JANITOR, HEADQUARTERS OFFICE, NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

221. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: (a) Will Government please state if it is a fact that Guard Hay on the North Western Railway was appointed as Janitor of Headquarters Office, North Western Railway after he was injured in an accident?

(b) Is it a fact that as Janitor he is drawing more salary than he would have drawn as a Guard?

(c) Is it a fact that he is also allowed free quarters?

(d) Is it a fact that he is allowed an assistant?

(e) Is it a fact that both of these officers only look after the work of 20 sweepers and 20 chowkidars of the Headquarters?

(f) During these days of retrenchment, have Government considered the possibility of bringing this post under retrenchment and appointing a Sanitary Inspector on lower wages?

Mr. P. B. Rau: Government have no information.

†For answer to this question, see answer to unstarred question No. 219.

APPOINTMENT OF JANITOR, HEADQUARTERS OFFICE, NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

222. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: (a) Will Government please state if the post of Janitor of the North Western Railway Headquarters Office is reserved for Europeans and Anglo-Indians only? If not, have ever applications been invited for the said post from deserving and fit Indians? If not, why not?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I am obtaining information from the Agent, North Western Railway and will lay a reply on the table of the House in due course.

TRAFFIC MANAGER, NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

223. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: (a) Is it a fact that during the years 1916 and 1924 there used to be only one Traffic Manager on the North Western Railway drawing a salary of Rs. 2,500 managing the whole of the line?

(b) Is it a fact that the earning capacity has now gone down and the number of trains been reduced?

(c) Is it a fact that where one Traffic Manager used to look after the whole of the North Western Railway, now two principal officers have been appointed in his place drawing Rs. 2,700 and Rs. 2,500 plus the Lee concessions?

(d) Do Government propose to consider amalgamating the duties of both the officers into one and thus reduce expense?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) Yes; until the autumn of 1924 there was one post of Traffic Manager the incumbent of which was responsible under the order of the Agent of the Railway for dealing with all the business of the Railway in Transportation (Traffic) and Commercial matters; but even then it was recognized that the work was too heavy for one officer to handle efficiently.

(b) The earning capacity of the Railway has not gone down, but increased from year to year. The number of trains now run in greater than in 1916 or 1924.

(c) On the introduction of the Divisional System on the North Western Railway in 1924 one post of Chief Operating Superintendent on a salary of Rs. 2,750—125—3,000 and one of Chief Commercial Manager on Rs. 2,500 were created. The Chief Operating Superintendent is responsible for important classes of work not previously allotted to the Traffic Manager.

(d) No; Government do not consider that amalgamating the duties of both these officers would be conducive to economy.

LEAVE RULES ON THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

224. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: (a) Is it a fact that New Leave Rules were framed in 1930 on the State Railways?

(b) Is it a fact that they were applied from 1927 with retrospective effect on the North Western Railway?

(c) Is it a fact that the same rule was made applicable to the Audit Department of the North Western Railway in 1929?

(d) If the rules were made in 1930, will Government state why they were applied with retrospective effect?

(e) Was any undertaking in writing taken in this respect from the employees before the year 1930?

(f) Were these rules made applicable to the new comers joining between 1927 and 1930? If so, why?

Mr. P. R. Rau: New Leave Rules for Government servants employed in the Railway Department were issued in 1930. The new rules had been under discussion for some years and from 1927 subordinates appointed on the North Western Railway were required to sign a declaration to the effect that they understood that they would be liable to be brought under the revised rules when these were issued. The new rules have been applied to all who signed such declaration. In 1928 the Railway Board ordered that similar procedure should be followed by all the State-managed Railways. Certain offices did not actually introduce the practice until 1929.

NON-AVAILABILITY OF INTERMEDIATE CLASS PASSES BY MAIL TRAINS.

225. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: (a) Is it a fact that inter-class pass-holders are not allowed to travel in inter-class compartments in mail trains on foreign railways, while second class pass-holders can travel in any foreign line trains?

(b) Will Government please explain the policy underlying this discrimination, and do they propose to give the same facilities to inter-class pass-holders as are being given to second class pass-holders and to issue necessary instructions to all State Railways and Company-managed Railways to issue passes available by all mail trains, as is being done in the case of second class pass-holders? If not, why not?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) Over foreign railways, inter class passes are not available by mail, but second class passes are available when issued:

(i) to staff drawing Rs. 400 per mensem or over;

(ii) to staff drawing Rs. 126 per mensem but less than Rs. 400, when travelling 600 miles and over;

(iii) on medical certificate.

(b) The restrictions in the availability of passes by certain trains are intended to prevent the limited accommodation available on these trains being taken up by pass-holders to the discomfort and inconvenience of the public. Government see no reason for interfering in the matter.

ENDORSEMENT OF PASSES OF OFFICERS AND CLERKS ON THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

226. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: (a) Is it a fact that the practice of endorsing the passes with ink by the officers on the North Western Railway has been stopped and for the clerical staff and outdoor-staff it still continues?

(b) If so, why has such a differential treatment been made?

(c) Are Government prepared to remove this differential treatment on the North Western Railway? If so, when? If not, why not?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a), (b) and (c). The differentiation pointed out exists at present. The Agent, North Western Railway has been asked to consider the necessity for its retention.

REVISION OF THE SCALE OF PAY OF THE LOCAL ENGINEERING AND TRAFFIC SERVICE.

227. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: While revising the scale of pay of the Local Engineering and Traffic Service from Rs. 250—20—750 to Rs. 350—30—800 under the new Local Gazetted Service, will Government please state if they considered the present economy campaign? If not, why not?

Mr. P. R. Rau: The scale of pay for the Lower Gazetted Service was fixed before the need for retrenchment of expenditure on a large scale became apparent.

QUALIFICATIONS OF LADY STENOGRAPHERS AND TYPISTS ON THE NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.

228. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: Is it a fact that lady stenographers and lady typists are being recruited on the North Western Railway without any regard to their educational qualifications, while 3rd Division Matriculates are not entitled to the posts of stenographers and typists? If so, do Government propose to remove this racial discrimination or fix the same educational qualification for ladies as well as male candidates? If not, why not?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I have called for information from the Agent, North Western Railway and will lay a reply on the table in due course.

PAY OF LADY TYPISTS ON THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

229. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: Is it a fact that male typists on the North Western Railway are being appointed on Rs. 39 and lady typists on Rs. 68 per month? If so, do Government propose to bring lady typists also on the same scale as male typists? If so, when? If not, why not?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I have called for information from the Agent, North Western Railway and will lay a reply on the table in due course.

PROMOTION OF TYPISTS ON THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

230. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: (a) Is it a fact that on the North Western Railway orders have been issued that 3rd division matric and non-matric typists are not allowed to be transferred to other sections of the office?

(b) Is it a fact that a typist cannot rise to higher posts due to the number of posts being limited in lower grades?

(c) Is it a fact that non-matric and 3rd division men in other sections can rise and have risen to gazetted officers and Superintendents?

(d) If the facts mentioned in part (c) are correct, do Government propose to withdraw this order and remove the bar?

(e) Are Government prepared to increase the number of grades in the Copy Branch of the Headquarters Office, North Western Railway in the same proportion as in the other sections?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I have called for information from the Agent, North Western Railway and will lay a reply on the table in due course.

CASUAL LEAVE FOR OFFICERS AND CLERKS ON THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

231. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: (a) Will Government be pleased to state how many days casual leave an officer on the North Western Railway is entitled to take during the year?

(b) Is a member of the clerical staff also entitled to a similar privilege?

(c) How many days at a time can an officer take casual leave on the North Western Railway?

(d) Does a member of the clerical staff enjoy a similar privilege?

(e) Is any record kept of the casual leave taken by officers during a year? If no such record is kept in the case of officers will Government be pleased to state reasons for not doing so?

(f) Do Government propose to fix the casual leave for officers as is done in the case of clerks and other staff?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) to (d) and (f). Ordinarily casual leave is allowed on the North Western Railway up to 15 days in a calendar year and to 10 days at a time. These limits can, however, in exceptional cases be exceeded at the discretion of the authorities competent to grant casual leave. These principles apply to officers as well as to clerical staff.

(e) The answer is in the negative. The question whether a record should be maintained is under consideration.

RETRENCHMENT OF OFFICERS AND WORKMEN ON THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

232. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: (a) Is it a fact that heavy reduction in labour establishment, i.e., mistries, fitters and coolies and running trains has been made previously in Loco. Sheds on the North Western Railway?

(b) Is it a fact that due to this reduction the work has been much reduced?

(c) If the reply to (b) above is in the affirmative, will Government please place on the table a statement of Divisional Rolling Stock Officers, Assistant Rolling Stock Officers, Shed Foremen, Assistant Shed Foremen, Mechanical Boiler Inspectors, Loco. Inspectors, Fuel Inspectors, Divisional Boiler Makers, Boilermaker Chargemen, who have been brought under reduction due to the decrease in work in proportion to the reduction in the labour establishment, i.e., mistries, fitters and coolies and running trains? If not, why not?

(d) If the reply to the part (b) above is in the negative, has the work of men so retrenched been put on the shoulders of the other workmen at present employed? If so, why?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a), (b) and (d). The strength of the classes of establishments referred to has been reduced owing to a reduction in the volume of work and to measures of reorganisation.

(c) I have called for information from the Agent, North Western Railway and will lay a statement on the table in due course.

RETRENCHMENT OF WORKS MANAGERS, ETC., OF THE LOCO. AND CARRIAGE SHOPS, NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

233. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: (a) Is it a fact that heavy reduction in the labour establishment, i.e., mistries, fitters and coolies, has been made previously in Loco. and Carriage Shops on the North Western Railway?

(b) Is it a fact that due to this reduction the work has been much reduced?

(c) If the reply to part (b) above is in the affirmative, will Government please place on the table a statement of Works Managers, Production Engineers, Assistant Production Engineers, Assistant Works Managers, Foremen, Assistant Foremen and Senior Chargemen who have been brought under reduction due to the decrease in work in proportion to the reduction in labour, work and hour? If not, why not?

(d) If the reply to part (b) above is in the negative, has the work of the men so retrenched been put on the shoulders of other workmen at present employed? If so, why?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a), (b) and (d). The strength of the classes of establishments referred to has been reduced owing to a reduction in the volume of work and to measures of reorganisation.

(c) I have called for information from the Agent, North Western Railway and will lay a statement on the table in due course.

FAMILY PASS RULES ON THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

234. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: (a) Is it a fact that passes are being issued to North Western Railway employees for their widowed mothers also according to the definition of the "family" in the Pass Rules?

(b) Is it a fact that provision has already been made in the Pass Rules for the grant of passes to adopted sons on production of court certificates of their adoption and to step sons of the North Western Railway employees?

(c) Is it a fact that no passes are being issued to the adoptive widow-mothers of the North Western Railway employees?

(d) If the reply to parts (a), (b) and (c) is in the affirmative, will Government please state who is to be called the mother—the woman who has adopted one as her son or who has actually given birth to one—as far as the grant of passes on the North Western Railway is concerned? If the former, will Government please explain the reasons for refusing passes to them?

(e) Do Government propose to issue instructions to all concerned to issue passes for the adoptive widow-mothers of the Railway employees? If not, why not?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) and (b). Yes.

(c) Government have no information.

(d) and (e). The issue of passes to dependents of employees is governed by rules drawn up by each Railway Administration, and Government do not consider that their intervention in points of detail is called for.

PASS RULES ON RAILWAYS.

235. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: (a) Is it a fact that great difficulty is being experienced on all State and Company-managed Railways due to difference in Pass Rules?

(b) Is it a fact that a great many local rulings have been issued on the North Western Railway regarding issue of passes to its employees?

(c) If the reply to parts (a) and (b) above is in the affirmative, do Government propose to prepare uniform Pass Rules in concurrence with all State and Company-managed Railways like the New Universal Leave Rules and issue instructions to all concerned not to add their local rulings to the uniform Pass Rules? If not, why not?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) Government have no reason to think so.

(b) At present each railway has its own pass rules which it may alter or modify to suit local conditions.

(c) Government have under consideration the issue of uniform pass rules for State-managed Railways.

HEAD DRAFTSMAN, LOCO. HEADQUARTERS OFFICE, NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

236. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: (a) Is it a fact that the present Head Draftsman, Loco. Headquarters Office, North Western Railway, is a non-technical man?

(b) Is it a fact that he was previously a Tracer and then a Photographer in the Publicity Section of the Headquarters Office and has never worked on boards?

(c) If the reply to parts (a) and (b) above is in the affirmative, have Government considered the question of replacing him by one of the qualified A or B class Moghalpura College apprentices?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I am making enquiries from the Agent of the North Western Railway and will lay the information on the table of the House after his reply has been received.

PAUCITY OF HINDUS IN WORKSHOPS ON THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

237. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: (a) Will Government be pleased to place on the table a statement showing the total number of employees working in various Workshops, Loco Sheds and Train Examining Staff on the North Western Railway according to community and the grades and rates of pay held by them and also state the number of Hindus engaged in them in comparison with the Muhammadans for the last five years separately working on different posts such as Workmen, Mistry, Junior Chargemen, Chargemen and Assistant Foremen?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state the reason for such a small number of Hindus in the above shops and do Government propose to see their way to equalize the number of Hindus? If not, why not?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) Information is being collected by Mr. Hassan of the communal composition of the employees in the workshops of the State managed railways and a copy of his report on the subject will be laid on the table.

Government regret they cannot undertake to collect similar statistics for the locomotive sheds and train examining staff.

(b) Until the figures are collected Government are not in a position to say whether any special action is called for.

MEDICAL TREATMENT OF EMPLOYEES ON THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

238. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: (a) Is it a fact that subordinate employees of the North Western Railway are compelled to undergo the treatment of the Railway doctor during their illness whether the treatment agrees with them or not?

(b) If the reply to the above is in the affirmative, are Government prepared to issue instructions to amend or cancel these instructions and allow employees to undergo the treatment which agrees with them best whether it is allopathic or any indigenous method?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) No.

(b) Does not arise.

MEDICAL CERTIFICATES REQUIRED FROM NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY EMPLOYEES.

239. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: (a) Is it a fact that the Chief Medical Officer, North Western Railway, had issued orders for the North Western Railway employees to attend their headquarters dispensaries for necessary medical certificates of fitness after their recovery after illness?

(b) Is it a fact that the Medical Officers at out-stations can only issue admission certificates to Railway employees and cannot issue discharge certificates?

(c) Are Government aware that this system causes unnecessary trouble and expense to the North Western Railway employees other than officers who are exempt from this?

(d) If the reply to parts (a), (b) and (c) above is in the affirmative, do Government propose to cancel or amend this order or appoint reliable medical officers at other stations than headquarters so as to enable them to issue discharge certificates also? If not, why not?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) The answer is in the negative. It is at the discretion of Medical Officers to require the attendance at headquarters dispensaries of employees in particular instances, where the circumstances demand it, prior to the issue of discharge certificates.

(b) The answer is in the negative.

(c) and (d). Do not arise.

REDUCTION OF THE PAY OF THE CHIEF ENGINEER, CONSTRUCTION, NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY, AND HIS STAFF.

240. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: (a) Is it a fact that the construction work on the North Western Railway has been stopped due to financial stringency?

(b) Is it a fact that the office establishment has considerably been reduced?

(c) If the reply to parts (a) and (b) is in the affirmative, will Government explain the reason for not reducing the pay and cadre of the Chief Engineer Construction? Was this post only temporarily sanctioned for the new construction work? Do Government propose to abolish the post in question and those of the Office Superintendent, Head Clerks, etc., and to reduce the strength of the office to the same footing as it previously was at the time of Deputy Chief Engineer Construction?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) Yes, except for urgent Bridge renewals and the completion of works in hand.

(b) Yes.

(c) The post of Chief Engineer Construction and Survey is to be abolished with effect from the end of April. The question as to what supervisory posts in the subordinate establishment of the construction office should be abolished is a matter for decision by the Agent of the railway whose attention will be drawn to the Honourable Member's question.

APPOINTMENT OF INDIANS AS FOREMEN, ETC., IN MILITARY WORKSHOPS, ETC.

241. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: Is it a fact that all Mechanical Engineers, Foremen and Assistant Foremen in Military Workshops, Factories and Inspection Departments are Europeans or Anglo-Indians except in the Gun and Shell Factory, Cossipur, where there is one Indian employed as Assistant Works Manager? Do Government propose to stop further enrolment from among Europeans and Anglo-Indians in order to reserve sufficient numbers for Indians in the departments?

Mr. G. M. Young: There are at present two Indians holding gazetted appointments of Assistant Works Manager (under training) and Assistant Chemical Inspector, one in the Ordnance Factories and one in the Inspection Section.

There are one Indian Foreman and 12 Indian Assistant Foremen in the Ordnance Factories. There are no Indians at present in the Inspection Section and Arsenal workshops. There is no bar to the employment of qualified Indians in any of the above departments. Recruitment of candidates is now done through the Public Service Commission, and all qualified men are eligible for recruitment. The question of stopping further enrolment of Europeans and Anglo-Indians in order to reserve sufficient numbers for Indians in the departments does not therefore arise.

PASSES ISSUED TO LADY EMPLOYEES ON RAILWAYS.

242. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: Is it a fact that 2nd class passes are granted to the lady employees irrespective of their pay on the State and Company-managed Railways? If so, why are not 2nd class passes issued to the ladies of male employees irrespective of their pay?

Mr. P. R. Rau: The pass rules of the State-managed Railways show that on some of these lines certain classes of lady employees are allowed second class passes irrespective of their pay. The class of pass admissible to an employee's family is determined by the class of pass admissible to the employee himself.

REFLOORING AND RELINING OF WALLS IN THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY HEADQUARTERS OFFICE.

243. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: Is it a fact that the work of reflooring and relining of walls has been done in the North Western Railway Headquarters Office, and that this work includes the use of card boards in relining the walls by removing tiles in good condition? If so, will Government be pleased to explain the necessity for incurring this expenditure on such work?

Mr. P. R. Rau: Government have no information, but think it unlikely that card boards would be used for the purpose.

B CLASS MACLAGAN ENGINEERING APPRENTICES ON THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

244. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: Is the scale of B Class MacLagan Engineering Apprentices on a level with the scales of Apprentice Permanent-Way Inspectors, Bridge Inspectors, and Signal and Interlocking Inspectors on the North Western Railway? If not, are Government prepared to bring it to the same level?

Mr. P. R. Rau: The reply to both parts of the question is in the negative.

APPOINTMENT OF INDIANS AS OFFICERS ON STATE RAILWAYS.

245. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: Is it a fact that the Foremen on all State Railways and especially on the North Western Railway are being promoted to officer's grade while formerly the latter were recruited from England? Is it their policy to stop Indianization on all State Railways? If so, why? Are Government prepared to see their way to filling the permanent posts of Assistant Rolling Stock Officers and Assistant Works Managers by Indians in future and not by Foremen?

Mr. P. R. Rau: Foremen are eligible for promotion to the lower gazetted service and also to the superior service. The number of vacancies in the superior service reserved to be filled by promotion of subordinates and officers of the lower gazetted service is limited to 15 per cent. of the total vacancies to be filled. These arrangements have been in force for some time and they do not operate to retard the progress of Indianization of the superior services and Government do not propose to alter them in the direction suggested by the Honourable Member.

APPOINTMENT OF INDIANS AS SHOP FOREMEN, ETC.

246. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: (a) Will Government please place on the table a statement giving the number of different communities working as Shop Foremen, Shop Assistant Foremen, Shed Foremen and Assistant Shed Foremen, Electricians, Divisional Electricians, Divisional Rolling Stock Inspectors, Mechanical Boiler Inspectors, Loco Inspectors and Fuel Inspectors on the North Western and other State Railways and explain why Indians are in such a minority?

(b) Are Government prepared to Indianize the North Western and other State Railways, and to fill the vacancies by Indians who have qualified themselves in B.Sc. (Mechanical and Electrical) in England or India in future? If not, why not?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) Government regret that they are not prepared to supplement with figures for individual classes of establishment the information in regard to communal representation given in the Annual Report by the Railway Board on Indian Railways.

(b) The declared policy of Government in the matter of Indianization of the Superior Services on State-managed Railways has been given full effect to in recent years and 75 per cent. of all vacancies have been filled by Indians. I would add that in view of the fact that the first batch of Special Class Apprentices of the Mechanical Engineering and Transportation (Power) Branches would not complete their training until 1933. Government made special arrangements as a temporary expedient to recruit a few Indian Officers to these Branches during the last 2 years.

HIGHER GRADES IN ESTABLISHMENT BRANCHES OF HEADQUARTERS AND DIVISIONAL SUPERINTENDENTS' OFFICES ON THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

247. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: (a) Is it a fact that the number of higher grades allotted to Establishment Branches of the Headquarters and Divisional Superintendents' offices, North Western Railway, is comparatively higher than that allotted to other Branches in the same offices?

(b) If the reply is in the affirmative will Government explain the reasons? Is there any difference in the qualifications of the staff employed in Establishment and other branches? Do Government propose to consider the question of allotment of a proportionate number of grades in branches of Headquarters and Divisional Superintendents' Offices?

(c) If the reply to part (a) is in the negative, will Government place on the table a statement showing the total number of staff and the total number of each class of grades allotted to each branch?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I have called for certain information from the Agent, North Western Railway and will lay a reply on the table in due course.

PROMOTION OF CLERKS AT THE HEADQUARTERS OFFICE, NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

248. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: Is it a fact that in the Establishment Branch of the Headquarters Office, North Western Railway there are clerks with a few years service at their credit, who are working in higher grades and that clerks of their standing in other branches are blocked from five to seven years or so? If it is true, do Government propose to consider the cases of those blocked up in their grades in preference to the former?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I have called for certain information from the Agent, North Western Railway and will lay a reply on the table in due course.

GRANT OF CONCESSIONS TO CLERKS OF NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY OFFICES FOR ATTENDING OFFICE ON SUNDAYS AND HOLIDAYS.

249. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: Is it a fact that no compensatory casual leave or tonga hire is allowed to the clerical staff employed in the offices of the North Western Railway for attending offices on Sundays and other holidays? If so, do Government propose to issue orders on the subject to the North Western Railway authorities for the grant of the concessions? If not, why not? Is it a fact that such concession is allowed to the clerical and inferior staff employed in the offices of other State Railways, vide Railway Board's letter No. 6560-F., dated 17th July, 1930?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I am collecting certain information on the subject and will lay a reply on the table in due course.

INCREASE OF HOURS OF CLERICAL ESTABLISHMENT ON STATE RAILWAYS.

250. Lala Rameshwar Prasad Bagla: Is it a fact that the Railway authorities are going to increase the duty hours of the clerical establishment on the State Railways in order to reduce the number of clerical staff?

Mr. P. R. Rau: The Railway Board propose to discuss the matter with Agents of railways in April next.

COMMUNAL INEQUALITIES IN THE NORTH WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE.

251. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: With reference to the reply given by Government to unstarred question No. 236, asked on the 2nd March, 1931, by me, will Government be pleased to state if the review declared by Government to be still being made in regard to the effect of the orders of the 5th February, 1926, relating to communal inequalities, has now been completed and final conclusions arrived at?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: The review has recently been completed but Government have not yet come to final conclusions as to what action, if any, is required.

APPOINTMENT OF MUSLIMS AS COPYHOLDERS IN THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA
PRESS, NEW DELHI.

252. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan: Will Government be pleased to state how many posts of copyholders fell vacant in the Reading Branch of the Government of India Press, New Delhi, since 1928 and how many of them were filled with Muslims? If none, why not?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Blore: I propose with your permission, Sir, to answer questions 252 to 258 together. Government have no reason to suppose that the procedure laid down in the Home Department Memorandum is not being observed in the presses. In applying this procedure to the industrial staff, the Controller of Printing and Stationery has been instructed that the communal composition should be determined with reference to the aggregate strength of the press and that the procedure need not be applied individually to each class of appointment. Further the procedure is not applicable to promotions. For these reasons and because these appointments are matters of administrative detail for which the Controller is responsible, I cannot undertake to supply particulars of appointments to various grades made since 1927 or later. But I shall have inquiries made with a view to satisfying myself that the procedure laid down by Government for filling vacancies is being duly observed.

APPOINTMENT OF MUSLIM PEONS IN THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA PRESS, NEW DELHI.

†253. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan: Will Government be pleased to state the number of permanent posts of peons in the Government of India Press, New Delhi, and how many of them are Muslims? If there are no Muslims, what step do Government propose to take to make up the deficiency of Muslims?

APPOINTMENT OF MUSLIMS TO THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA PRESS, NEW DELHI.

†254. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan: Will Government be pleased to state how many posts in the scale of Rs. 80—4—140 were created in 1927 in the Government of India Press, New Delhi, and how many of them were filled with Muslims? If none, what step do Government propose to take to redress the communal inequalities in future?

REDRESS OF COMMUNAL INEQUALITIES IN THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA
PRESS, NEW DELHI.

†255. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan: (a) Are Government aware that the Home Department Memo. No. F.-1761/25-Ests., dated 5th February, 1926, regarding the reservation of one-third of all permanent vacancies for the redress of communal inequalities was not duly observed in filling up the vacancies in the Government of India Press, New Delhi?

(b) How many posts of the grade Rs. 80—4—140 fell vacant from 1929 to 1931 and how many of them were filled with Muslims? If none, why not?

APPOINTMENT OF A MUSLIM AS ACCOUNTANT AND CASHIER, GOVERNMENT OF INDIA PRESS, NEW DELHI.

†256. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan: Will Government be pleased to state whether a post of Accountant and Cashier fell vacant in 1928 in the Government of India Press, New Delhi? Is it a fact that applications from qualified Muslim candidates were received? If so, why were their applications not considered favourably?

†For answer of this question, see answer to unstarred question No. 252.

APPOINTMENT OF MUSLIMS IN THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA PRESS, NEW DELHI.

†257. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan: How many Muhammadans are there in the upper grade in the Government of India Press, New Delhi and what qualifications do they possess? Are they considered for officiating cases? If not, why not?

APPOINTMENT OF MUSLIMS IN THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA PRESS, NEW DELHI.

†258. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan: Will Government be pleased to state how many permanent vacancies in the upper and lower grades fell vacant in the clerical establishment of the Government of India Press, New Delhi, since 1928 and how many of them were filled up by Muslims? If none, why not?

GRIEVANCES OF MUSLIMS IN THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA PRESS, NEW DELHI.

259. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan: Are Government aware that great discontent has been prevailing among the Muslim employees of the Government of India Press, New Delhi, owing to the repressive policy of the administration against them? If the answer is in the affirmative, what remedy do Government propose to remove their grievances?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore: The answer to the first part is in the negative. The second part does not arise.

RETRENCHMENT IN THE MORADABAD ENGINEERING WORKSHOPS.

260. Mr. N. M. Joshi: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that 40 men have been retrenched from the Moradabad Engineering (East Indian Railway) Workshop with effect from 8th March 1932?

(b) Is it a fact that several of these men with a longer service have been retrenched while those much junior to them have been retained?

(c) Is it a fact that the wages of these men were demoted much before the notice of retrenchment was issued?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I have called for information from the Agent, East Indian Railway and will lay a reply on the table in due course.

NUMBER OF OFFICERS IN THE CIVIL ENGINEERING DEPARTMENT, EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

261. Mr. N. M. Joshi: (a) What is the sanctioned number of officers in the Civil Engineering department of the East Indian Railway from 1st April 1932?

(b) What is the total number of engineers at present?

(c) Is it a fact that they are in large excess of the necessary number?

(d) If so, how is the excess to be utilised?

(e) Is it a fact that probationers are still being taken for the engineering service? If so, what is the need of enlisting them?

†For answer to this question, see answer to unstarred question No. 252.

(f) Is it a fact that several engineers have been posted as traffic officers in excess of their number?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) The total number of posts in the sanctioned cadre of the Superior Service Civil Engineering Branch of the East Indian Railway is 76.

(b) 94.

(c) The excess is 18.

(d) and (f). Some are employed against administrative posts open to officers of all Branches of the Superior Railway Services and, as a temporary arrangement the remaining number in excess are utilized in vacant posts in the Lower Gazetted Service of the Engineering Branch and in other Branches of the Superior Services.

(e) Government have decided that for the present recruitment to the Indian Railway Service of Engineers (which includes the Superior Engineering Service of the East Indian Railway and of all the other State-managed Railways) should be severely restricted. This year only one such appointment was made.

NUMBER OF OFFICERS IN THE MECHANICAL ENGINEERING DEPARTMENT, EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

262. Mr. N. M. Joshi: (a) What is the total sanction of officers in the Mechanical Engineering Department including Power, Rolling Stock and Electrical Branch for the next year on the East Indian Railway? What is their present permanent strength?

(b) Is there any excess of such officers? If so, how is it proposed to absorb them?

(c) If there is a shortage of these officers why are not surplus engineering officers transferred to this branch instead of recruiting probationers?

(d) How many officers of the above department will retire within the next three years?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) The total number of posts in the sanctioned cadre of the Superior Service, Mechanical Engineering and Transportation (Power) Branches and of the Electrical Branch of the East Indian Railway is 72. Against this number, 65 officers are employed.

(b) The answer to the first part is in the negative, the second part, therefore, does not arise.

(c) The Railway Board have issued orders to the Agent of the East Indian Railway to employ Civil Engineers temporarily against vacancies in these Branches provided they are qualified to discharge the duties attached to the vacant posts.

(d) The number of officers in the Superior Service, Mechanical Engineering and Transportation (Power) Branches and of the Electrical Branch of the East Indian Railway who will attain the age of superannuation within the next three years, is 8.

EXCESS OF CIVIL ENGINEERS ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

263. Mr. N. M. Joshi: (a) How many civil engineers were taken for temporary capital work on the East Indian Railway? How many of them have been discharged and how many remain still?

(b) Is there any work of construction now, and if not do Government propose to discharge all of them?

(c) Is it a fact that some of these engineers have been or are being provided against permanent vacancies instead of promoting subordinates to the extent of the full number fixed for their promotion?

(d) How many of the Civil Engineering officers are due to retire?

(e) Do Government propose to recommend Company Lines to take the officers in excess on the East Indian Railway?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) I have called for information from the Agent, East Indian Railway, as regards the number of Temporary Engineers engaged during the last five years and will lay a reply on the table in due course.

(b) and (c). A few Temporary Engineers will be retained on grounds of long service and good record. Temporary Engineers are considered for appointments in the Lower Gazetted Service. Funds for two projects which are nearing completion have been provided for during 1932-33.

(d) The number of officers in the Superior Engineering Branch of the East Indian Railway who will attain the age of superannuation this year is 2.

(e) No, as there is no excess on the East Indian Railway over the total sanctioned cadre of gazetted posts

PROMOTION OF SUBORDINATES IN THE CIVIL ENGINEERING AND TRAFFIC DEPARTMENTS, EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

264. Mr. N. M. Joshi: (a) How many posts are allotted to subordinates in the Civil Engineering and the Traffic Departments respectively and how many are at present being held by them?

(b) How many subordinates officiating in each branch have been reverted from officers rank in the East Indian Railway during the current year?

(c) How many officers of superior grade have been posted in the places of such subordinates?

(d) How many of these reverted subordinates belong to the old East Indian Railway and Oudh and Rohilkund Railway staff respectively?

(e) How many subordinates of the old East Indian Railway and the old Oudh and Rohilkund Railway staff respectively holding officers' rank are Europeans, Anglo-Indians, Hindus and Muslims?

(f) When is it expected that these reverted subordinates will be re-promoted to the officer's rank again?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) The Honourable Member presumably refers to the Lower Gazetted Service. The sanctioned cadre of the Engineering and Transportation (Traffic) and Commercial Departments of the East Indian Railway Lower Gazetted Service is 19 and 24 respectively.

(b), (c), (d), (e) and (f): I have called for information from the Agent, East Indian Railway and will lay a reply on the table in due course.

SUBORDINATES PROMOTED ON THE EAST INDIAN AND OUDH AND ROHILKUND RAILWAYS.

265. Mr. N. M. Joshi: (a) How many subordinates in the East Indian Railway and the Oudh and Rohilkund Railway were holding officers' ranks before the amalgamation of the two Railways and how many are working in the officer's rank at present?

(b) Is the East Indian Railway number less and, if so, why?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I have called for information from the Agent, East Indian Railway, and will lay a reply on the table in due course.

MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT.

ALLEGED MALTREATMENT OF WOMEN POLITICAL PRISONERS.

Mr. President: Order, order. Honourable Members are aware that Sardar Sant Singh proposed to ask for leave to make a motion for the adjournment of the business of the House to-day for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance as follows:

"Maltreatment of the women political prisoners from Delhi Jail in the course of their transfer to mixed jails in the Punjab on the 18th March, 1932."

I have to enquire whether any Honourable Member has any objection to this motion?

The Honourable Sir James Orerar (Home Member): Yes, Sir, I take objection to this motion. I understand that the Honourable Member is relying for his motion upon a Press report. I have enquired about the allegations of maltreatment made, and I have satisfied myself that they are entirely unjustified. I do not wish to make a long statement but, briefly, the position was this. In order to provide better accommodation for a certain number of women prisoners, arrangements were made for their transfer to another jail so as to relieve congestion in the Delhi jail. They offered violent resistance to their removal and had to be removed with some force. In the case of two or three who had to be removed, this was done entirely by Police women, who, I am told, behaved extremely well on the occasion. Now, Sir, these being the facts, I submit that the Honourable Member would have taken a more reasonable course if he had put down a question, if necessary a short notice question, which I should have been perfectly willing to answer. Even now, I am willing to answer a short notice question if the Honourable Member will put it in specific terms. That, I submit, is the more reasonable course for the Honourable Member to take. And I submit further that if we are to have motions for the adjournment of the House on mere rumours or on uncorroborated Press reports, the procedure of the House will be in grave danger of being seriously abused. On these grounds I object to the motion.

Mr. President: As objection has been taken, I would request those Honourable Members who are in favour of leave being granted to rise in their places. As no less than 25 Members have risen, I declare that leave is granted and that the motion will be taken up for discussion at 4 P.M. this afternoon.

STATEMENTS LAID ON THE TABLE.

NUMBER OF POLITICAL PRISONERS DETAINED UNDER RECENT ORDINANCES.

Complete reply to Mr. S. C. Mitra's starred question No. 111 regarding detention of persons in jail without trial.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar (Home Member): The total number of persons detained in jail without trial on the 31st January, 1932 under the various Ordinances was 2,919.

APPOINTMENT OF CHIEF DRAFTSMAN ON THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

Information to be laid on the table of the House by Mr. P. R. Rau in regard to questions Nos. 467, 468 and 469 asked by Bhai Parma Nand on 22nd February, 1932.

Question No. 467.—(a) Before indenting for the services of an Assistant Chief Draftsman to be recruited in England, the post was advertised in India, but none of those who applied were considered qualified to fill it.

(b), (c) and (d). The reply is in the affirmative.

(e) Mr. Stone holds the post substantively and therefore the question of confirming Mr. Keith Hitchens as Chief Draftsman does not arise for so long as the former is in service. When the post becomes permanently vacant, it will be filled by a suitable man already in service with due regard to merit and seniority irrespective of nationality.

Question No. 468.—(a) Mr. S. R. Woodmore was a "B" Class Apprentice Fitter and Erector from 5th April, 1923 to 4th April, 1928 and on completion of his course of apprenticeship was appointed as a Journeyman on 5th April, 1928 and promoted to the post of Senior Chargeman on 5th August, 1930.

(b) Mr. Woodmore is holding the post in an officiating capacity.

(c) There were only four "A" Class Apprentices in the service at the time Mr. Woodmore was appointed to officiate as Chief Draftsman.

One of these "A" class Apprentices has been promoted to a post of Assistant Works Manager and two were junior to Mr. Woodmore as apprentices and are now working as Senior Chargemen. The remaining apprentice was tried in the grade of a Foreman, found unsuitable and reverted as Senior Chargeman.

Question No. 469.—(a), (b) and (c). The reply is in the affirmative.

(d) It is not a fact that the only training received by Mr. S. R. Woodmore, officiating Chief Draftsman, was a course of drawing in the Production Office for a period of five months. He was a regular apprentice for a period of five years from 5th April, 1923 to 4th April, 1928, during which period he underwent practical training in the workshops and theoretical training in the MacLagan Engineering College Lahore.

(e) These appointments are ordinarily made from amongst staff in service and the claims of all suitable men are considered when making such appointments irrespective of the nationality or community to which they may belong.

NET EARNINGS OF CERTAIN NEWLY CONSTRUCTED RAILWAY LINES.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Member for Commerce and Railways): Sir, in fulfilment of an undertaking which I gave on the 19th February, 1930, during the general discussion on the Railway Budget, I lay on the table a statement, giving the information at present available as to the net earnings of certain newly constructed railway lines, during the financial year 1930-31, and a comparison of the return given by these earnings on the capital outlay with the return anticipated in the original estimates.

Statement showing net earnings during the financial year 1930-31 of new lines opened after 1st October 1927, throughout for traffic for a full year.

ALLEGED RESTRICTIONS ON THE PRESS IN BENGAL.

The Honourable Sir James Orerar: I lay on the table a complete reply to Mr. S. C. Mitra's starred question No. 562 regarding alleged restrictions on the Press in Bengal.

(a) (i) I understand that some Local Governments have warned newspapers that the publication of matter intended or likely to further the civil disobedience movement might expose them to penalties. It is not unlikely that some difference in treatment arises from difference in local conditions.

(ii) I do not know whether Pundit Malaviya's letter was published in the newspapers of all provinces; so far as Bengal is concerned extracts from the letter appeared in most of the papers.

(iii) It is not correct that any restrictions are placed on such reports in Bengal.

(iv) In Bengal, newspapers have been warned to be careful in regard to the publication of statements by accused persons aiming directly at the furtherance of the civil disobedience or terrorist movements.

(v) I have no reason to believe that this is the case. The only instance of excision from such reports in Bengal was a dozen words in one sentence contained in a telegram.

(vi) A letter from these two bodies addressed to the Governor of Bengal was withheld from publication as the local Government considered that it was obviously intended to be used as propaganda for the civil disobedience movement.

(b) The action of Local Governments in different provinces must to a certain extent be dictated by local circumstances. I have not yet seen anything which renders the issue of general instructions necessary or desirable.

SIKH REPRESENTATION IN REGARD TO RETRENCHMENT IN THE ARMY AUDIT OFFICE.

Reply to starred question No. 740.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Yes. A representation was received from the President, Shri Gurusingh Sabha, Lyallpur. No action was necessary on this representation, as under the instructions issued by the Government of India in connection with the retrenchment of personnel, no member of the Sikh community became liable to discharge from these establishments.

DISPOSAL OF INCOME-TAX APPLICATIONS IN SIND.

Information promised in reply to starred question No. 652 asked by Mr. Lalchand Navalrai on the 7th March, 1932 regarding the number of cases in which application for reference to High Court under Section 66 (2) of the Indian Income-tax Act were refused in the Income-tax Department, Sind.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I regret that I cannot undertake to supply the information asked for by the Honourable Member. Separate figures are not available for Sind and, while the number of Sind cases must be very trifling, their extraction from the records of the whole Presidency would involve searching through hundreds and hundreds of revision petitions. With staff reduced by retrenchment this would be an impossible task. I will only add that the latter part of the Honourable Member's question seems to involve a misconception. No application for a reference to the High Court can have been rejected on the ground that the court of the Judicial Commissioner, Sind, was not a High Court within the meaning of Section 66 of the Act. The Commissioner of Income-tax has never held the view that there was no High Court to which assessors in Sind could claim a reference, and consequently if he had held that the court of the Judicial Commissioner, Sind, was not a High Court, it would have followed that an assessee in Sind could claim a reference to the High Court of Bombay.

RETURN OF FEES DEPOSITED BY APPLICANTS UNDER THE INDIAN INCOME-TAX ACT.

Information promised in reply to starred question No. 656 asked by Mr. Lalchand Navalrai on the 7th March, 1932, regarding refund of fees deposited under Section 66 (2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) The Honourable Member's question as worded appears to betray a misconception of the position. The refund of fees paid under Section 66 (2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, is governed by the proviso to that Section and not by the intentions of the Government of India. Under that section a fee can only be refunded if the applicant withdraws his application after the Commissioner has decided the question of law raised in the application and not otherwise. The fee cannot legally be refunded when an applicant withdraws his application simply because the Commissioner of Income-tax has declined to make a reference to the High Court. If however the intention of the Honourable Member's question was to ascertain whether Government have any intention of getting the present law altered I may inform him that we propose, when a suitable opportunity arises, to introduce a Bill to amend inter alia the proviso to section 66 (2) so as to entitle an assessee to the refund of the fee, that he has to pay with his application for a reference to the High Court, if the application is rejected on the ground that no point of law arises.

(b) This is no doubt a fact, and the procedure of the Commissioner of Income-tax was in accordance with the law.

(c) I regret that I cannot undertake to collect the information asked for.

(d) No, because, as already explained, the action of the Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, was in accordance with the law.

THE HINDU MARRIAGES DISSOLUTION BILL.

PRESENTATION OF THE REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC PETITIONS.

Mr. Arthur Moore: Sir, I present the Report of the Committee on Petitions on certain petitions relating to the Hindu Marriages Dissolution Bill.

THE HINDU UNTOUCHABLE CASTES (REMOVAL OF DISABILITIES) BILL.

PRESENTATION OF THE REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC PETITIONS.

Mr. Arthur Moore: Sir, I present the Report of the Committee on Petitions on certain petitions relating to the Hindu Untouchable Castes (Removal of Disabilities) Bill.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO THE STANDING FINANCE COMMITTEE.

Mr. President: Honourable Members will now proceed to elect Members not exceeding fourteen in number to the Standing Finance Committee for the financial year 1932-33. There are 23 candidates whose names are printed on the ballot papers which will now be supplied to Honourable Members in the order in which I call them.

(The ballot was then taken.)

ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO THE STANDING COMMITTEE ON EMIGRATION.

Mr. President: Honourable Members will now proceed to elect eight non-official Members to sit on the Standing Committee on Emigration. There are nine candidates whose names are printed on the ballot papers which will now be supplied to Honourable Members in the order in which I call them.

(The ballot was then taken.)

THE ANCIENT MONUMENTS PRESERVATION (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Sir Frank Noyce (Secretary, Department of Education, Health and Lands): Sir, I move that Sir Cowasji Jehangir be appointed to the Select Committee on the Bill to amend the Ancient Monuments Preservation Act, 1904, for certain purposes.

The motion was adopted.

THE INDIAN MEDICAL COUNCIL BILL.

Sir Frank Noyce (Secretary, Department of Education, Health and Lands): Sir, I move for leave to introduce a Bill to establish a Medical Council in India and to provide for the maintenance of a British Indian

[Sir Frank Noyce.]

Medical Register. The objects of this Bill are so clearly set forth in the Statement of Objects and Reasons and also in the very detailed notes on the clauses, which I venture to commend to the special consideration of this House, that it is unnecessary for me to say more at this stage than that this measure is one which has undoubtedly aroused a great deal of interest and some controversy. I am certain that much of that controversy is based on a misconception of its exact aim and scope and I trust that in the course of the debates on the Bill, it will be possible to remove it. Sir, I move.

Mr. C. C. Biswas (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadian Urban): May I ask the Honourable the Mover one thing? I do not propose to go into the explanations

Mr. President: This is not the stage for doing so.

Mr. C. C. Biswas: I should like to ask how far Government had given effect to the recommendations of the Conference which was held at Simla in 1930. I believe a conference was summoned by Government in Simla in 1930

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): This is the introduction stage; the discussion will take place in due course when the Bill comes up for consideration or for reference to Select Committee.

The question is:

"That leave be granted to introduce a Bill to establish a Medical Council in India and to provide for the maintenance of a British Indian Medical Register."

The motion was adopted.

Sir Frank Noyce: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

THE SALT ADDITIONAL IMPORT DUTY (EXTENDING) BILL.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster (Finance Member): Sir, I move that the Bill to extend the operation of the Salt (Additional Import Duty) Act, 1931, be taken into consideration.

Those Honourable Members who have had time to study the second Report of the Salt Industry Committee of this Assembly will, I think, find no difficulty in understanding the course of action which we are putting before the House in this Bill, but it would be as well if I recall very shortly what are the salient facts in the position. The House will recollect that as a result of a continuous expression of public opinion, the Government decided to appoint a Tariff Board Inquiry into the salt industry with a view to seeing whether India could be made self-supporting as regards the production of salt. The Tariff Board reported that that object could be achieved. What was required for that purpose was that Indian sources should be developed for the supply of about 500,000 tons of fine white crushed salt which had hitherto been imported from foreign sources into Calcutta. The Tariff Board recommended that in order to ensure the development of Indian industry, what was above all things required was the assurance of stability of prices at a fair level, and they further reported that if stability could be assured at what they considered to be a fair level, which was Rs. 66 a hundred maunds on ship at Calcutta, if that price could be secured over a period of years, in the long run the consumer would be better off than he had been in the past. The Board in order to achieve their object recommended that the Government should step in and control all supplies of imported salt and eventually should set up a non-Governmental Marketing Board. Government felt some difficulty accepting that proposal because they realised that there would be very great practical difficulties in putting it into operation, and as in the whole matter our attitude had been one of endeavouring to meet the wishes of this Assembly, we adopted the somewhat unusual course of proposing that a Committee of this Assembly composed of non-official Members should study the Tariff Board's Report and recommend how best the objects which we and the Tariff Board were aiming at could be put into operation. The Committee recommended a much simpler scheme. They felt that, at any rate to start with, the most practical way of achieving the desired object was to impose a special import duty on a foreign salt, a duty so fixed that, taking the current market price, those producers who would be protected by the duty could rely on what the Tariff Board regarded as a fair selling price, that is to say Rs. 66 a hundred maunds. Therefore, in order to secure that, they recommended an import duty of $4\frac{1}{2}$ annas per maund. But that was not the whole of their recommendation, and I want to put to the House that this must not be regarded as an ordinary scheme of protection. There was a special feature in the plan. Coupled with the protection given by the import duty to Indian sources of supply was a provision that the Government should have the right to buy the whole production of those sources that got the advantage of that protection at the Tariff Board's fair selling price of Rs. 66 a hundred maunds. Therefore, the result would be that on the one hand in the absence of foreign competition at levels which had hitherto not been attained, in the absence of foreign competition which would have pushed the basic price down below the average that had been prevailing for the last year, those producers could rely on getting Rs. 66 a hundred maunds, but if they tried to put prices up above that and to profiteer at the expense of the consumer, the Government could come in and take over the whole supplies at that level. The House approved of those proposals and passed the Salt Import Duty Act last year to take effect only for one year so that we might have the opportunity of seeing how it worked in practice.

We can now review the results of the past twelve months, and I think we may claim that the scheme has been entirely successful in achieving its object. First as regards price, the immediate result of the imposition of the duty was to put up the price of that quality of imported salt at Calcutta from the prevailing level of about Rs. 40 a hundred maunds to Rs. 62 a hundred maunds. It stayed at Rs. 62 for a short period, and then it gradually crept up to Rs. 66, a level which it reached in October, where it has remained steady ever since. We can, therefore, say that we have achieved the result of stabilising the prices for that quality of salt at what the Tariff Board regarded as a fair selling price, and that thus far the object has been achieved. On the other hand, results show that the object of encouraging Indian producers has also been achieved to a very remarkable extent. I can give the House some figures. In the first nine months of the current financial year, compared with the corresponding period in the previous year, clearances of foreign salt for consumption in the Bengal ports of Calcutta and Chittagong fell from 80 lakhs of maunds to 24 lakhs of maunds, while clearances of Indian salt,—and Indian salt for this purpose includes Aden salt,—rose from under 41 lakhs of maunds to just under 80 lakhs of maunds, that is to say, Indian salt production doubled while foreign salt clearances fell to a little over a quarter of what they had been for the same period in the preceding year.

I want now to turn to what is perhaps the most difficult feature in the situation, and in order to do so, I will further analyse the figures for the imports of Indian salt. Indian salt, as I just explained to the House, includes for the present purposes salt produced at Aden, and the House will recollect that the Tariff Board recommended that Aden should be treated as part of India for this purpose. Now, if we analyse the total clearances of 79½ lakhs of maunds at the Bengal ports for the first nine months of the current financial year, we find that out of those 79½ lakhs of maunds, 65½ lakhs of maunds came from Aden, and that the Aden production went up last year as compared with the preceding year from 32½ lakhs to 65½ lakhs of maunds, that is to say, it more than doubled, while the production from other Indian sources from Karachi, Bombay, Tuticorin, Okha and Navulakhi went up from 8½ lakhs of maunds to just over 14 lakhs, that is to say, Aden salt more than doubled, it went up by over a hundred per cent. while other Indian sources increased by about 75 per cent. Those are the results of the working for the past year, and the question now is what we ought to do. In accordance with the recommendation of the Assembly Committee on salt, the Committee remained in existence, and the Government referred the whole matter to them when they were able to prepare the Report on the working of the first nine months. The first thing that the Salt Committee had to do was to consider whether the time had come to alter the general plan, that is to say, whether the Government could now consider setting up a Marketing Board on the lines recommended by the Tariff Board. We had in the meanwhile consulted Provincial Governments on that question, and they were all very much against it. They saw very great difficulties in operating it and regarded the advantages to be obtained as not worth the risks. The Assembly Committee were impressed by these opinions and decided that the time had not yet come to adopt the Tariff Board's Marketing Board scheme. We therefore fell back on the idea of continuing the present scheme of quasi-protection. The Committee fully recognised that, if the objects of a scheme of that kind were to be achieved, some security must be given to producers. They can hardly be expected to develop their business unless they can look forward to the future with a certain amount of assurance. It would therefore have been the desire of the Committee, on the results of the year's experience, to recommend the adoption of a scheme for a period of years which would have given the producers that measure of assurance which they desired; but on the other hand, the Committee felt that they were faced with a very great practical difficulty. And the practical difficulty is this. From the figures which I have given, it is quite clear that the producers who have been mainly benefited are the Aden producers, and the Committee felt, and we in the Government felt also, that there was a considerable danger that, if this scheme went on in its present form, Aden production might expand to such an extent that the sources of production on the mainland of India might be crushed out of existence. That I put to the House would be a result which is precisely contrary to what Honourable Members here intended, and precisely contrary to the recommendations of the Tariff Board. The Tariff Board, if I might put their recommendations in a brief and summary fashion, took the following line, that if we were considering the interests of India, salt production could be divided into three classes. The class of production which would be of the greatest benefit to India would be production from inland sources of supply. That would, first of all, give a fairly substantial measure of employment to labour; it would give substantial freights to Government railways; and above all, it would give India a source of supply on which she could rely in case of war. I would remind the House that one of the reasons why Indian opinion came to feel so strongly about making India self-supporting as regards salt was the difficulty of obtaining supplies during the last Great War. For that purpose, obviously you would have to develop inland sources of supply. The Tariff Board then considered what were the advantages of developing the sources on the sea-coast of India, and they came to the conclusion that, although it might be of some benefit to India, from the economic point of view the benefit was not very great. There would not be very much employment for labour, and as regards security in time of war, as salt from Karachi or Okha has to be brought round to Calcutta by sea, the risk of interference with that trade would be almost as great as the risk of imports from the Red Sea ports. The Committee of the Legislative Assembly also felt the same about that, but they did point out that as regards those sources on the sea-coast of India, there was at least this advantage that, although transport by rail might not be the most economical method of bringing salt from Karachi to Calcutta, still it would be possible, and therefore in time of war those sources of supply would have some advantage over the Red Sea ports.

That, then, is the second class of Indian production, and under the third class the Tariff Board and we on the Assembly Committee would have put Aden. Aden in a sense represents India. Indian interests have developed to a large extent the salt production of Aden, and the Government of India derive income-tax from the profits of Aden producers. But looking at it from a broad point of view, it cannot be said that the advantages of developing Aden production are quite as great to India as the advantages of developing the sources of production on the mainland of India. That is the way in which we looked at the matter, and we naturally then came to the conclusion that, if the result of the scheme was to develop Aden at the expense of the sources of supply on the mainland of India, that would be failing to achieve the objects which we understood the House would have approved. Having arrived at that conclusion, it is not at all easy to see how best effect can be given to it. On the one hand we must, and I am sure all Members of the House will agree with me in this—we must be fair to Aden. Aden is part of India, and as I have reminded the House, there are Indian interests and taxpayers to the Indian exchequer there. We must be fair to Aden not only because they belong to India, but also because they have helped us considerably in the past year by developing their sources of production to achieve the object which we had in mind. But looking to the future, supposing—let me put it in this way—supposing the total production which we require is 500,000 tons, and supposing the Indian sources of supply on the mainland of India are capable of being developed to the extent of 300,000 tons per annum, we could not allow Aden to secure a position in which they would take, say 450,000 out of the 500,000 tons for which there is a market. Looking at the matter in that way, we on the Committee felt that we might eventually have to come to some scheme for allotting quotas to the various sources of Indian supply. They might then work on the assured basis of an allotted quota and with an assured selling figure. That we feel is the line which has got to be examined in the future, but that, again, is obviously not an easy line to examine, because in the present period when the sources of supply on the mainland of India are still in their infancy, and when Aden is fully developed, Aden obviously can get a bigger share than she ought to get in 5 or 10 years' time, and therefore the quotas will have to be varying quotas. Aden would have to have a steadily declining quota as the sources on the mainland of India developed. In all these circumstances, we thought that the best plan would be to recommend an extension of the Act putting an import duty on foreign salt—to recommend its extension for one year and to put it to the House that during that year we in the Government would call a conference of producers and endeavour to arrive at a fair, reasonable and practicable arrangement. We feel it much better to be frank with these producers, to tell them exactly what the position is and to ask for their co-operation in working together for the object which the Indian Legislature will support. We believe in that way, although doubtless Aden would not get all that they might ask for—in that way it would be possible to devise a scheme which will put Aden in a reasonable position and secure the co-operation of the Aden producers during the intervening period when we need their supplies because the supplies on the mainland of India will not be fully developed.

That, Sir, I think sufficiently clearly puts the position before the House. There is only one other point to which I would refer in conclusion. Our attention on the Salt Committee was called to the fact that certain of the factors on which the Tariff Board had based their estimate of what was a fair selling price, had materially changed in the last 18 months. The freight from Aden, for example, we were informed, had dropped something like Rs. 10 per hundred maunds. Some of the members of the Committee therefore felt that the time had come to revise that price of Rs. 66 per hundred maunds. They felt that Aden was getting too big an advantage out of the present arrangement. But after full discussion the general feeling on the Committee was that it was too early yet to attempt to revise that price. After all in cases of this kind where Tariff Board inquiries are set up, one has to rely on the findings of that Board. They go into the matter very carefully, and although we know that certain factors must fluctuate from year to year, if we are trying to carry out a policy of this kind, I would put it to the House that it is impossible to attempt to follow up all those factors from year to year and vary the price too frequently. Therefore we recommended to the House that this matter should be studied together with the other matter which I have mentioned in the coming twelve months but for the present that we should make no change in the level of the import duty. Sir, I move.

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadan): This is the first occasion on which I not only bless a Bill which has been introduced by the Honourable the Finance Member, but entirely endorse every word that he has spoken. It is seldom that we agree with the Treasury Benches, but this is one of those supremely felicitous occasions when the Finance Member has understood the spirit in the country and has agreed to protect the salt industry. Sir, in some future years if I am to write the history of different Finance Members, when I write of the period of Sir George Schuster, I will say that he conferred one great benefit on India and that was to protect the salt industry of India. He has tried his level best to make India self-supporting as regards her salt production. We have heard from previous Finance Members that it was a sentiment with us to demand the protection of salt, and also to ask for a differential duty on foreign salts, so that India could be again self-supporting as regards her salt requirements. The present Finance Member agreed with that demand of this side of the House and introduced a measure last year when protection was given to the salt industry for one year. This measure again has been brought before us asking this House to continue the protection for another year. Now the proviso contained in paragraph 4 of the second report of the Assembly Salt Committee is this—that the protection is to be assured for an adequate period. So it means that by agreeing for the second year to protection for the salt industry, we agree to protection of the salt industry for an adequate period, so that India shall be self-supporting in its requirement of salt.

Sir, I must point out, as I have pointed out in the past, whenever the country demands protection, a certain set of exploiters, known as Managing Agents, who are themselves not capitalists but who exploit the capitalists' money and the investors' money, bring up certain representations to the Government which are contrary to the policy of all schemes of protection. I was surprised that the Indian Salt Association of Bombay should have the cheek to ask the Government to abandon the contemplated development of salt from inland sources. There are half a dozen manufacturers in Aden and in Bombay and these people in order to make money for themselves want that there should be no salt manufacture in Orissa, Madras, Bengal or from the Central sources in Khewra and Sambhar, and which was an essential part of the recommendation of the Tariff Board. If there are any representatives of those capitalists on the Bombay side in this House, I ask them to particularly read this representation which has been circulated to every Member of the House and also circulated to members of the Salt Committee through the Government. It is these people who, with their inordinate zeal to exploit, want to exploit the masses of the country, so that they may get higher dividends. I found this particular memoranda of the Indian Salt Manufacturers' Association had been signed by Mr. Kapilram Vakil, Honorary Secretary of the Salt Association. I cannot understand how the Committee of that Association has subscribed to this principle. The same representation has come from the Karachi salt manufacturers. They also say that the contemplated development of inland sources be abandoned. Once or twice I have stated on the floor of the House that the greed of the Bombay capitalists is beyond all limit; it is boundless; and these men in Okha, Karachi and Bombay want to supply the whole of India and make all the money they can and the Honourable the Finance Member has already narrated what would happen in case of war and how a salt famine would occur. Everybody knows the high railway freights on salt from Karachi to Bengal, and in time of war one cannon shot will put all the salt carried on steamships into the bottom of the sea. I particularly refer to this, so that my Honourable friend Mr. Mody will take note of it. My friend Mr. Mody knows that the interest of all parts of India is the same, that India wants to be self-supporting, that Indian industries should be supported, and protected, but when one becomes a bloated capitalist, one forgets all the decencies of life and makes such statements that no civilised human being can make and the Bombay Salt Association has made it. (Interruption by Mr. Mody.) When I make these observations, I want to give a warning not only to the salt producers in Bombay and Aden, but also to all those future industries and industrialists who want to come before this House for protection. Sir, let them not think of themselves: let them think of the country as a whole.

1 P.M. Sir, my Honourable friend, the Finance Member, pointed out that Aden, under the Sea-customs Act, is not a part of India, but for all administrative purposes it is part of India. Sir, in the Select Committee it came as a surprise to most of us to discover that Aden is not part of India and that it is a free port, and naturally we began to wonder whether it would be wise to give protection to certain industries operating there, with the result that they might prove strong rivals to salt production from indigenous sources, such as the Government sources in Khewra, Bengal, Orissa and Madras and also private sources. Therefore the recommendation as the Honourable the Finance Member read it out, was made that there should be a salt quota, and that the Aden quota of salt for Indian consumption should be restricted. Personally I entirely agree with that. I think India cannot at present manufacture all the salt that will be required, but in five or six years, if the Government of India themselves become active and develop their salt sources in Khewra in Rajputana and apply pressure and force on the Provincial Governments to develop their internal sources of salt, then India will not have to remain indebted to Aden at all. Now, what are the sources of supply at Aden? The largest source of supply is an Italian company, and that company has no Indian directors. I do not know if it even pays proper income-tax to the Government of India. Sir, in para. 14 of the second report we have recommended this:

"Finally, it should be stated that some of our members are very anxious that in view of the great benefits received by the Aden manufacturers from the policy adopted last year, steps should be taken by the Aden Salt Works on the lines indicated in paragraph 103 of the Tariff Board Report to have the concern transferred to a rupee company with a suitable proportion of Indian directors. We understand that the Government will communicate to the proprietors this expression of opinion."

Sir, of course this was a unanimous report which some of us did not like; I find my friend Mr. Morgan afterwards wrote a minute of dissent; but I did not like that this pious communication from the Government of India should only be addressed to the proprietors of that particular firm.

It is time the Government should legislate so that it can compel alien firms like this Italian firm, who are growing fat at India's cost, to convert their concerns into rupee capital concerns and to take in a sufficient number of Indian directors. Not only that, Sir, but Government should I think see that such business houses do not evade all the income and other taxes that any other firm manufacturing in India is liable for. How this can be managed it is for the Government to devise. During the last 4 or 5 years when protective measures have been discussed, this side of the House has every time insisted on the Government that it was high time that they should legislate so that this recommendation contained in paragraph 14 should become operative by legislative enactment.

Sir, when last year this House gave sanction to the protection of the salt industry for one year, the Honourable the Finance Member brought forward a Resolution whereby one-eighth of the funds collected by the additional import duty should go to the Government of India for the purpose of developing the Central Government's salt sources, the remaining money being distributed on a consumption basis to the provinces that were importing foreign salt, and a Resolution was passed which recommended that those provinces should spend that money for the purpose of developing their salt sources. This Resolution was moved on the 1st April 1931. None of us thought when the Honourable the Finance Member moved the Resolution that it would be regarded by the Provincial Governments as a mere recommendation. Sir, we know that when we non-officials pass a Resolution, it has the force of a recommendation only to the Government of India and does not become binding. But at that time, none of us foresaw that there was a loophole whereby a Resolution moved by the Government of India themselves through the Honourable the Finance Member would not become binding on the Provincial Governments. What do we find? We find in the Report by the Central Board of Revenue on the working of the additional import duty on salt, on page 7, para. 27, a summary of the action taken by the Provincial Governments which runs thus:

"In its Resolution dated 1st April 1931 the Legislative Assembly suggested"

—Sir, we thought at the time that the Government Resolution gave a mandate or rather an order to the Provincial Governments how to spend that money, but from the Report as it comes from the Central Board of Revenue we find that its tone has gone down, that it was "suggested"—

"that the attention of the Local Government receiving a portion of the above duty should be drawn to the desirability of applying this revenue in part to the development of salt production where such development was economically feasible in any province. The matter has been referred to the Governments concerned. Up to date all Governments except that of Burma have replied. Bengal and Assam do not propose to devote attention to the object mentioned since there is no salt industry to develop, and no scheme that is economically feasible for the production of marketable salt in Bengal has been produced."

Sir, I am not here standing as a champion of Bengal. When my friend, Mr. S. C. Mitra, and my friend, Mr. K. C. Neogy, rise, they will say how this reply of the Bengal Government is absolutely false. Sir, there was a time when Bengal was manufacturing all its salt requirements and producing its own salt. A reference to the Assembly debates in the past will show that Mr. Neogy, Mr. Mitra and others have brought out the true facts of the situation, how since the import of Cheshire salt in 1823 and thereafter, Bengal salt sources in Hijli, the Sunderbans and Chittagong were all restricted in their system of manufacture and were allowed to die a natural death. Sir, the Government of Bengal's primary function is to develop these industrial concerns, but they write point blank that "No scheme that is economically feasible for the production of marketable salt has been produced". Sir, I have seen reports saying that the Bay of Bengal gets too much fresh water through the Ganges and her estuaries so the sea-water has become less saline. (Laughter.) I do not know that during the last 150 years the climatic condition of India has changed and that the Bay of Bengal has become less saline. How is it that it was not less saline in 1823 and before, when salt was manufactured by the Government of Bengal and the Government of India up to 1853 in Hijli and also in Orissa? I will come to the case of my own province, Orissa, later on :

"The amount due to Madras is negligible. The Government of the United Provinces agree to apply their share to development of salt production in that province and are considering measures of development, the cost of which must be strictly limited to their share of the yield as it is impossible to allow any part of the cost to go against ordinary provincial resources."

Sir, I take my hat off to the United Provinces :

"The Bombay Government are still making enquiries as to the necessity and feasibility of economically developing salt production in the Presidency, while the Bihar and Orissa have deferred the formulation of proposals till Mr. Pitt's recommendations on the potentialities of Orissa are known to them and Mr. Pitt has communicated his views on two applications received for manufacture of salt on the Orissa coast, which they have referred to him."

Sir, I take my hat off also to the Government of Bihar and Orissa. That brings me, Sir, to the report of Mr. Pitt. Mr. Pitt assisted Sir Chunilal Mehta and was a member of the Salt Survey Committee which went into the sources of salt of the Government of India in Rajputana and the Punjab. The first Assembly Salt Committee recommended that the Government of India should inquire into the sources of salt production in Bengal and Orissa before they issued their second report. So, Mr. Pitt, the General Manager of Khewra, was deputed by the Government of India to inquire into those aspects. I am sorry the report has not yet been placed in our hands. We are given to understand that the Press is too busy with the printing of Assembly Debates, and so the Central Board of Revenue has not yet been able to get the book printed. However, we were supplied with a summary; it was supplied to us on the 18th February last. I cannot understand why the Government of India have not been able to publish the book so far. Anyway, Mr. Pitt's recommendations regarding salt manufacture in Orissa and Bengal are very outspoken. Mr. Pitt suggests experimental farms at two places in Orissa, and I hope the Government of India will draw the attention of the Government of Bihar and Orissa to this and insist that they will start these experimental farms and give any surplus money that they may have in their hands to other private manufacturers for the development of other salt sources. Incidentally, I may ask the Honourable the Finance Member whether he is thinking of again bringing forward a similar Resolution before the House like the one he moved last year, because this protective measure is no more a temporary additional duty, but it is now a permanent fixture of the Government revenues. If the money so funded is specifically earmarked for distribution to the provinces for the development of salt sources, I would suggest to the Honourable the Finance Member to bring forward in his Resolution this year definite recommendations—not in that milk and water way but in a more definite manner,—because, I maintain, that no Provincial Government has a right to spend any money that is derived from the Central revenues in any manner it likes. The first Assembly Salt Committee recommended that this money could only be disposed of by Provincial Governments towards the development of salt sources. What right therefore have the Bengal and Assam Government to say that they have no funds and therefore they must spend the amount as they like because they have gone bankrupt and they must spend it to meet their deficit Budgets? They should not do that. If a Provincial Government cannot spend the money to develop the salt sources, let the money come back to the Central Government and the Central Government can spend that money for the development of their salt sources at Khewra, Sambhar and other places. I hope my Honourable friend, the Finance Member, will bring forward such a Resolution and the House will give it its entire sanction.

Sir, I welcome the idea of the conference of Indian salt manufacturers, but I do hope that the Honourable the Finance Member or the representatives of the Central Board of Revenue, when they meet these Indian salt producers in Simla, will make it clear to the manufacturers that the Government will lay down definitely, for a period of five years, as to what will be their quota on a territorial basis. It is no use their raising false hopes in the beginning and then coming to the Government of India for a larger quota, or for a greater period of protection. And I hope also that the Honourable the Finance Member will consult these people as to what is the exact period that they think will be adequate for which the additional salt duty should be imposed.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Twenty-Five Minutes Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Twenty-Five Minutes past Two of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

Mr. S. C. Mitra (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions: Non-Muhamadan Rural): Sir, the Honourable Sir George Schuster in a very lucid speech discussed all the points that were raised in the Report of the Salt Committee, and my Honourable friend Mr. B. Das discussed the other two extraneous points that were left out for discussion. Yet I rise to speak on this Bill, because I know there is a very strong feeling in Bengal as regards this import duty on salt. As a matter of fact, the Bengal Legislative Council once during this session and once last year passed Resolutions opposing the additional import duty on salt. I can very well realise their point of view, because the people in Bengal think that salt, being one of the primary necessities of life, and also being an item in the category of inelastic demands, even the poorest man cannot avoid paying this tax. It really preys very heavily on the poorest cultivator. That is the standpoint from which they all along raised their voices against any additional duty on salt. Yet when we support this additional duty, I think we owe it to the people of Bengal and the Bengal Legislative Council to explain our view point. If I had not been convinced that India could produce her own salt if sufficient protection were given for a few years, I would have been the last person to help in imposing this additional duty on salt. The Expert Committee, of which Sir Chunilal Mehta was the Chairman, says in page 11 of the Report:

"We think that there is no ground for assuming that, with imports from Aden, India cannot easily be made self-supporting in the matter of salt supply and that even the continent itself can when areas suitable for salt manufacture but at present lying idle are developed, supply all the crushed salt that Bengal needs."

That is the view of the Expert Committee. The Tariff Board itself in their Report came to the definite conclusion that it was not a distant ideal but within practical probabilities to make India self-sufficient in her salt manufacture. At page 30 of the Report, they say:

"It may be pointed out that our conclusion on the question of increasing the output of salt in India suitable for consumption in the Bengal market is materially different from that of the Central Board of Revenue as stated in their Report on the recommendations of the Taxation Committee. In paragraph 24 of the Report, the Central Board of Revenue arrived at the finding that it is impossible in the near future so to expand the output of salt in India as to render the country self-supporting. We have definitely rejected this finding for reasons which have already been explained. As regards Tuticorin we agree with the Central Board of Revenue that it offers little promise of development as a source of supply for the Bengal market."

Later on they say:

"Even if it were decided to exclude Aden, our conclusion would not be necessarily vitiated. There are indications that the extent to which the output of salt, especially in the Government sources in Northern India, could be expanded is greater than we have estimated and pending a fuller investigation of the possibilities of the Northern India sources, it appears to us hardly consistent with the public interest to accept a conclusion adverse to the claim of India to be self-supporting in the matter of its salt supply."

So it is clear that not only an expert committee like the Tariff Board but also the Salt Survey Committee was definitely of opinion that India may be self-supporting in the near future as regards her salt supply. As regards Bengal, my Honourable friend Mr. Das said that Bengal once produced her own salt and even taking a parochial view, we need not depend on other parts of India for our salt supply. As a matter of fact the Tariff Board said about the past history of salt manufactured in Bengal:

"Before the advent of British rule salt was manufactured in Bengal from sea water. The salinity of sea water along the coast of Bengal is much reduced by the admixture of fresh water from the Ganges, Brahmaputra and other rivers. The low salinity of the sea water of the Bay of Bengal and climatic conditions combined to make boiling the only possible process of manufacture in this part of the country. A system of monopoly was developed by the East-Indian Company and survived till 1862. But by 1835 Cheshire salt began to find its way to Calcutta, where partly owing to its superior quality and cheapness and partly perhaps as a result of the direct encouragement of the East Indian Company its sale rapidly extended. In 1863 Government abandoned the monopoly, and local manufacture was permitted subject to an excise duty. Owing to the weakness of the brine supply, lack of fuel and other natural disadvantages, the cost of production of local salt far exceeded the selling price of imported salt and in 1898 local manufacture was entirely prohibited. Since that time, the Bengal salt market has been supplied almost entirely from foreign sources."

So the Report says that in earlier days Bengal had not to depend upon imported salt, but later on when they had a conflict with the interests of officers of the East India Company, they had to give up the local manufacture. Now, the main question in Bengal is that we could get salt at much cheaper rate at present, if there had not been this import duty. As a matter of fact when we first imposed this duty last year, salt was selling at Rs. 35-0-0 per one hundred maunds. But the main contention before the Tariff Board, with which we all agree, was that though at that time the price was ruling at that particular rate, there was no certainty that within a few months the price would not have gone up again. We found that during the last three or four years the price was ranging from Rs. 70 to Rs. 130, generally above Rs. 100 on many occasions. It was also found that with keen competition from foreign manufacturers who had a reserve of more than one crore of rupees, they could easily wipe the Indian manufacturer out of competition, and then they could raise the price to any extent. So we found that even from our selfish interests it was better to have a stabilised price under which it would be possible for Indians in different provinces, and most likely also in Bengal, to manufacture their own salt, that would be really a cheap supply of salt permanently in India. That was the reasons why we, the representatives of Bengal, were not opposed to this imposition of fresh duty. But really it pained us very much when we found that when money that was set apart for Bengal to spend it in making experiments for the manufacture of salt at a cheaper cost, the Bengal Government absolutely refused to make even an experiment of it. Mr. Das read out from the Report of the Central Board of Revenue:

"It is clear that Bengal and Assam do not propose to devote it to the object mentioned since there is no salt industry to develop."

I do not know why they say that there is no salt industry to develop. As a matter of fact even by that time Mr. Pitt's report was not complete. I find that though Mr. Pitt is not very optimistic, yet in a summary he has said that an experiment might be made in some places. In item 42 he says:

"Samples of salt made locally in the Sundarbans and the Contai area show that salt of reasonable purity and cleanliness can be obtained by local manufacture."

Then in item 44 he says:

"An area of 100 acres may be assumed to be the minimum useful economic unit that could be utilised for an experimental work. Clearing jungle may cost from Rs. 30 to Rs. 60 per acre and a suitable furnace and boiler will cost probably about Rs. 10,000 to Rs. 15,000. A capital amount of about Rs. 25,000 will therefore be necessary to erecting one experimental factory."

As a matter of fact we also prefer these small factories where even the villagers, by putting all their small capital together, may try to produce their own salt.

Later on in item 49 he says:

"The areas in which an experiment of this kind might be carried out are Lothian Island in the Sundarbans, though there may be many areas more suitable in the Sundarban districts. A factory might be placed on the coast line near Chittagong and a suitable site appears to be at the junction of the Balasore and Cuttack districts about 20 miles south of Balasore itself."

I find that in paragraph 16 also he says:

"The evidence is not such as to justify optimism, and is barely sufficient to justify investigation on an experimental scale. But experiments may prove that manufacture at an economic rate to supply local demand is feasible."

[Mr. S. C. Mitra.]

As a matter of fact we also demand that this salt should be manufactured at an economic rate for local supplies. We are not much in favour of large scale production alone, but if salt can be produced even on a cottage industry basis, that will help the unemployment question a great deal. In the report of the Salt Committee, we say in paragraph 11:

"Now that Mr. Pitt has made his report we must express a strong hope that the Governments of Bengal and Bihar and Orissa will in future find means to spend the money accruing to them on local salt development work."

So it has been put there in a way, but I agree with my Honourable friend, Mr. Das, that this portion of our recommendation should be stressed by the Government; and I hope that Government will take steps to see that this money, which is now obtained from the poorest people who consume salt, is spent for a purpose by which in future they can get salt at a cheaper rate. If that is not possible for the Bengal Government,—which I for one shall not concede,—then this money should be spent even by the Central Government for purposes of making salt cheaper in Bengal.

The only other point on which I have a slight difference with the Committee was about the Marketing Board. I do not say that it will be possible to have a Marketing Board to control the sale of salt, but what we suggested in our last report was to have some model shops. I do not know why some attempt should not be made to follow this. In page 6 of the report of the Central Board of Revenue they quote from the report of the Salt Industry Committee of the Legislative Assembly:

"The next step, therefore, is the investigation, in consultation with Local Governments, of the practicability of such control, including possibly such experimental measure as the opening of model shops selling salt of standard quality and at standardised prices in selected areas."

The reply is:

"The proposal was referred to the Local Governments which agreed in objecting to the retail control of salt prices as unnecessary."

The Local Governments would be correct if they say that there should not be any attempt to control the retail prices, but I think our recommendation was on a slightly different basis. What we suggested was to open model shops selling salt of standard quality and at standardised prices. Thus people in the villages would see that salt might be had at cheaper prices and then the middlemen could not raise the price of salt. It was the sad experience of many of us that, whatever may be the ruling price of salt at headquarters, these middlemen carry on things in such a way that the retail buyers actually pay a higher price than what the standardised price should be. So I still press on the attention of the Honourable the Finance Member that he will kindly see if that is possible because salt being a prime necessity of life, a slight rise in prices affects even the poorest people.

With these words, I support the Bill.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Sir, I feel that I need only reply on two points which have been mentioned in the speeches of my two Honourable friends who have just spoken. On one point they both agree in laying emphasis, and that was that the Government of India should do all that they possibly could to persuade the Government of Bengal to vote such money as they get from the proceeds of the Salt Import duty to the development of the sources of production in Bengal. I am quite willing to give my Honourable friends an assurance that we will take the matter up again with the Bengal Government and call their attention to what has been said in this debate and press upon them to do something in this direction. We cannot go beyond persuasion in this matter. So far as we can go by arts of persuasion we certainly will go. I would however point out to my Honourable friends that the amount of money which is likely to be available for this purpose is a good deal less than we originally supposed and that is because the results of our import duty have been much more immediately effective than we anticipated. The amount of duty collected now is being reduced almost to a negligible sum, because practically the whole of the salt which is being imported into Bengal is coming from Aden and from other Indian sources of supply. However, so far as anything can be done with the very much reduced sums available to the Bengal Government we will try to get them to do it.

Then, Sir, my Honourable friend who has just sat down referred to a recommendation in the first report of this Assembly's Salt Committee that something should be done on the lines of opening model shops so that we might thereby have some means of controlling the retail prices or at least giving an opportunity to retail consumers to buy at standard prices. It is true that we have not received much encouragement for this plan from the Local Governments, but I am inclined to agree with what my Honourable friend Mr. Mitra has said that the rejection by the Local Government of a scheme for a general Marketing Board does not necessarily convey with it any condemnation of the modified plan.—the rather small and unambitious plan,—of starting these model shops. I shall take up that question again and see if anything can be done on the lines of that suggestion. Apart from that, both my Honourable friends who have spoken have supported the principle of this Bill, and I trust their feeling is shared in all quarters of this House.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill to extend the operation of the Salt (Additional Import Duty) Act, 1931, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 2 was added to the Bill.

Clause 3 was added to the Bill.

Mr. G. Morgan (Bengal: European): Mr. President, I move the amendment which stands in my name, which runs thus:

"That after clause 3 the following new clause be added:

4. In section 5 of the said Act,

Amendment of section 5,
Act XIV of 1931.

(a) to sub-section (1) the following words shall be added, namely:—

'except Aden, and shall not, save as hereinafter provided, be levied and collected on salt produced in Aden save to the extent of one anna six pies per maund.'

(b) to sub-section (4) the following words shall be added, namely:—

'In the case of Aden the price to be paid shall be fifty-four rupees five annas per hundred maunds.'

My object in moving this amendment is that when this Bill was brought up last year, we, who opposed the Bill, stated definitely that the people who would benefit most by the Bill imposing the additional duty, would be Aden, and that very little benefit would accrue to the indigenous suppliers of Indian salt. Now, you will have seen from the second report of the Salt Committee that that is exactly what has happened, and we have got into rather a mess. I distinctly say a mess, because it is so and I shall show you later on what the position is. In paragraph 14 of that report the following words occur:

“that in view of the great benefits received by Aden manufacturers from the policy adopted last year”.

This amendment which I have brought forward meets both my Honourable friends, Mr. Das, and Mr. S. C. Mitra. Mr. Das says that the foreign capitalists, by which I presume he means a certain firm in Aden and the Bombay capitalists, have no right to make the money they are making out of the consumer. Mr. Mitra is very anxious that Bengal should spend some money in the manufacture of salt in Bengal. I can tell him, and the Honourable the Finance Minister has just confirmed what I am going to say, that there will not be any money, or practically none; the money which has been collected up to date was mostly on cargoes which became subject to the additional duty after they had already left their export port and arrived in Calcutta or Chittagong after the duty had been imposed. That is not going to occur again. Bengal got something between 3 to 4 lakhs of rupees which they have not seen their way to spend on exploring the avenues of salt manufacture. That being so and as they will have practically no more money during the coming year from this additional salt duty, they will have no money to spend on the object which my Honourable friend, Mr. S. C. Mitra, is so anxious about, and also my friend, Mr. B. Das. They are both very anxious from the Bengal and Bihar and Orissa point of view that money should be spent on that particular object. I am not going into the question whether that is a feasible object or not; but there is no mistaking the fact that there will be no money for that object, and from that point of view it also affects the Government of India because they get one-eighth of anything that may be collected, and they have only that one-eighth to go on developing the vast resources of Khewra, Pachbhādra, Sambhar and to help other manufacturing centres. What I want to do is this. Aden undoubtedly has not only got great benefits, but has got greater benefits than were anticipated, from the additional duty—i.e., they have got a benefit of about 10 rupees per hundred maunds over and above the Tariff Board's figures: that is to say the selling price was fixed at Rs. 66 per 100 maunds, the average freight being fixed at 8 rupees per ton. Now it is all very well to say that we have to be very careful about rates of freight. I quite agree; but I have not been able to find out why the Tariff Board fixed the price at Rs. 8 a maund, unless it was that they took in one or two years of extraordinarily high freights during the war, which we never take in calculating averages. On the Tariff Board's own figures, at page 36 of their report, there was no reason why it should be put so high. Last year, when the additional duty was brought on, the rate was between Rs. 5-8-0 and Rs. 6—about Rs. 5-10-0 on an average. This Bill is only for one year, and I am perfectly certain my Honourable friend the Finance Minister will bear me out when I say that there is not much prospect of a rise in freights in the year which is coming—1932-33; and I think that for that one year Aden might give us, and it will be giving back to Bengal, a very small moiety of what has been already taken out of Bengal, in order that we may have a little money to spend on this experimental manufacture of salt, and so satisfy my friends like Mr. Das and Mr. Mitra, that all is being done to see whether it is possible to manufacture salt in the Chilka Lake or in the Sundarbans. I know both places and I am not going to offer any opinion just now; when the reports and definite schemes come up, one may have something to say. But at the present moment, unless we have some money we simply cannot satisfy my Honourable friends by making a start or trial as to whether this manufacture is feasible or not.

The Bill last year was a very hasty piece of legislation; and it has landed us in a position which many of us anticipated. Stabilising of prices is a very simple matter, and although the Government may take credit for having done that, I do not think that there would have been any great difficulty in doing that in other ways. Therefore, Sir, I consider that if my amendment is accepted, it would merely mean that Aden would be returning to Bengal, and incidentally to the Government of India, that extra Rs. 10 a hundred maunds which the Tariff Board in their figures never anticipated they would be getting, and it is only for one year. The whole question of selling price has got to be investigated. Values have changed, standards have changed, and the world has changed, since the Tariff Board reported, and there is not the slightest doubt that Rs. 66 is not the proper figure now. If the Tariff Board were to report this year, Rs. 66 is not the figure they would fix as the fair selling price. Sir, in connection with this additional salt duty, it is a curious thing that stocks in Calcutta golas have run down, since the 15th of June to the 9th of March, from 38 and odd lakhs of maunds to 18 and odd lakhs of maunds, and in those figures common salt is very nearly a constant figure. It is something between 10 to 11 maximum and 8 to 9 minimum between those dates.

Now, there is another curious thing in connection with these figures. If you go back to June, you will find in stock in golas 6,43,000 of Port Said Fine Salt, and 2,30,000 of Massowa salt, both of which are salt suitable for the Bengal market. This month the only alteration in the figures is this, Port Said Salt 5,17,000 maunds, Massowa 2,11,000, so that they are practically unaltered, and today they represent, if you take off the common salt, 50 per cent. of the fine salt in golas, and we are down to a dangerous stock level of fine salt in Calcutta golas. I merely want to draw attention to this fact, because it may develop into a very serious position. Very often a good deal has been made of the fact that if you give Aden 16 annas, it gives back 2 annas, or whatever it may be in income-tax. That is quite true; but personally I would rather have the 16 annas. The Government of India may be very glad to have something in the shape of income-tax, because it is not going to get anything out of the salt as additional tax, but the balance of that money has got to come out of the purchasing power of Bengal. I know that the point is always put forward that the consumer is not affected to any appreciable extent, but that does not get away from the fact that with the tax and the extra amount paid for the salt from the time this additional duty was put on Bengal's contribution is something like 18 lakhs of rupees, and that has got to come out of the consumer, and it means that Bengal has paid out 18 lakhs more for purchasing her salt than she need have done had she been buying salt at Rs. 40 to Rs. 42 the rate before the duty was put on. And having got into this position, which is a most unfortunate one, but not unforeseen, I would impress upon the Government the desirability of calling the conference of producers as soon as possible, my reason being that I am not satisfied that the quota, although it is a very good idea, will work for the supplies of Bengal during the two years, leaving out this year. —I do not know what is going to happen this year,—I very much doubt whether with the possible quota some of the indigenous places in India will be able to supply the Bengal market with fine salt. I have noticed certain figures—I refer to common salt,—and these figures are rather disturbing, therefore I think that the conference of producers should be convened at the earliest possible opportunity and a definite arrangement come to as to how the Bengal market is going to be supplied with fine salt.

These remarks are slightly away from my amendment, Sir, but if Bengal and Bihar and Orissa are going to have a chance of investigating their own indigenous sources of salt manufacture, they are not going to get out of this salt tax as it stands at present anything to help their object, and therefore it is only fair that the Aden producers should return that Rs. 10 a hundred maunds which they are getting over and above what they should have got under the Tariff Board's figures, and so let the provinces have a little money with which to investigate the manufacture of salt in their own provinces. Sir, I move.

Mr. H. P. Mody (Bombay Millowners' Association: Indian Commerce):

3 P.M. Sir, my friend Mr. Morgan has made a very reasonable speech in support of a very unreasonable amendment. I listened to him very carefully, but I am afraid I was not able to deduce from his remarks one single good argument in favour of the amendment that he has thought fit to move in connection with this Bill. My friend's chief grievance seems to be that Aden would benefit principally from the extension of the Salt Act for another year. I would like to ask my friend, what if that is so? Supposing Aden were to benefit a little more than the Indian Salt Works, what does it matter? After all, Sir, Aden is still a part of India, in spite of the reactionary proposal to take it away from the jurisdiction of the Bombay Government; still for the time being at any rate Aden is part of India, and my friend knows very well that the Salt Works. . . .

Mr. G. Morgan: Might I just explain my point? My Honourable friend has told the House just half of what I stated. Aden is benefiting, and I repeat, it is benefiting, but at the expense of Bengal. That was the only reason for my amendment.

Mr. H. P. Mody: If my friend had only waited for a few seconds more, he would have seen that I was going to give him not merely the other half, but a little more than the half. I was going to say that of the concerns which are carrying on operations in Bengal, the majority are Indian. It is true that there is an Italian manufacturer who manufactures more than the quantity manufactured by any other single works, but taken all together, the Indian interests at Aden are very considerable, and I cannot understand my friend wanting to penalise those Indian interests.

My friend talked about the question of freights and the benefit which Aden was deriving from the fact that freights had gone down by something like Rs. 10 in the course of the year. But my friend knows that freight is a very variable quantity, and no one can forecast what is going to happen in the next 12 months, and it is just possible that the freight market, which is in a very demoralised condition at the present moment, may look up, and freights may move up. At the present moment there is no question that they are at a very uneconomic level. After all, the best answer has been provided by the Committee of the House which has put up a very admirable report, and by the speech which my Honourable friend the Finance Member made this morning. It is because of these various considerations—the question of freight, the question that Aden is exporting a considerable quantity of salt, and that Indian works are not looking up as fast as we would expect them to—it is because of all these considerations that it is proposed to extend the operation of the Act for only one year. As a matter of fact, I was thinking of moving an amendment for still further extending the operation of the Act, for the reason that, as the Honourable the Finance Member himself admitted this morning, the producers must have some sort of assurance that protection would continue if they were to expand and develop to their fullest capacity. But in view of the various considerations urged in the excellent report of the Salt Committee of the House and what the Finance Member has said, I do not think I can object to the proposed extension of just one year. The only thing which salt producers require is a categorical assurance that it is not intended, by putting a time limit of one year, to do away with protection at the end of that period, but that this is merely a stop gap arrangement for the purpose of exploring the various factors in the situation.

Sir, I should not have much to say to my Honourable friend if he had merely put his amendment on the ground that he was afraid that Aden would get away with a large part of the booty. But my Honourable friend went on to talk, though very guardedly, of the interests of the consumer, and that compels me to offer a few observations which I am afraid may not prove very palatable to him.

Of late, a great many philanthropists and protectors of the poor seem to have arisen in Bengal. (Laughter.) Only the other day a very intensive campaign was carried on by a section in Bengal with regard to the import duties on textiles, and the suggestion was put forward that the iniquitous and wholly indefensible excise duty should be re-imposed. It never occurred to the people who are talking like this, that for years when foreign countries were exploiting the consumer in India, his champions of to-day never raised their voices, never raised their little fingers, much in the same way, my Honourable friend comes forward here to-day, and talks of the interests of the consumer. May I ask him where he and his friends were when the consumer was being systematically exploited by foreign manufacturers of salt, who according to the Tariff Board's report did the consumer out of a crore of rupees in the space of 10 years? (Mr. S. C. Mitra: "3 years.") 3 years, I stand corrected. Might I also remind him that when Aden salt first came into this market in competition with foreign salt, the result was a drop by as much as Rs. 30 per 100 maunds in the space of a fortnight? What was that done for? That was done to squeeze out all competition, and if we take into consideration the limited capacity of the Indian and the unlimited resources of the foreign manufacturer—if you take that into consideration, and if you refuse to treat Aden on the same footing as you treat the Indian manufacturers of salt, what would happen would be that Aden's competitive capacity would be very greatly curtailed, and to the extent to which it was curtailed the foreign importer would have the benefit, and what happened years ago would happen once again, namely, that foreign manufacturers would squeeze out the infant salt industry in India after they had squeezed it out in Aden. Therefore, I am very sorry that my Honourable friend should have thought fit to place such an amendment before the House.

There are various aspects of this question, very controversial aspects, which I would not like to touch upon. I would like my Honourable friend to remember that there is such a question today before the country as that of commercial discrimination, and before he asks this House to discriminate against the Indian manufacturers of salt at Aden, which is part of the Indian Empire, he had better take into consideration the implications of his proposal on the larger issue now before the country. I hope that no section of this House will think fit to support the amendment of my Honourable friend.

Mr. C. C. Biswas (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadan Urban): The House may well remember that last year I was one of the few who felt it their duty to raise their voices of protest against the imposition of the additional duty. I showed that the effect of the duty would be. . . .

(At this stage Mr. President vacated the Chair which was taken by Sir Abdur Rahim.)

I pointed out that the effect of the duty would be mainly to benefit the manufacturers at Aden at the expense of the Bengal consumer. When I was pleading for the Bengal consumer, I certainly was not doing so from the point of view from which some of my Honourable friends over there (referring to the European Benches) would do it. I can honestly claim that I did it solely in the interests of the consumer.

Rightly or wrongly, the Bengal consumer was paying a comparatively small price for the salt he was consuming and had been consuming for many years past. What was suggested last year was that in order to keep out foreign competition for the benefit of India—that is how it was put, Aden was included in India for that purpose—it was suggested that in order to keep out foreign competition and help forward Indian industry, it was necessary to put on an extra burden on the Bengal consumer, and that the Bengal consumer ought not to demur. That was a proposition to which I was not prepared on my part to accord my wholehearted assent, because I had my misgivings as to whether or not the ultimate benefit to the consumer would be secured. My fears then were—and the report that the Assembly Committee have now placed before the House bears it out—that the party who stood to benefit most from this new additional imposition would be the Bombay merchants alone who were carrying on the salt trade at Aden, as well as another concern there which was of Italian origin, and was Italian in its constitution all along the line. It was stated at that time that one ought not to grudge this additional boon to Aden, because Aden ought to be regarded as part of India. I rejoice to find that that position has been abandoned now, and that is why I have not hesitated to put my signature to the present report of the Assembly Committee. It has now been practically recognised that Aden was really out to establish a virtual monopoly of the Bengal market—that that which had been anticipated by some of us had come to pass. Sir, when the Honourable the Finance Member this year came to examine the facts for himself, even he was impressed with the situation with which he was faced. If matters were left where they were, in other words if nothing more was done than to extend the period of the Act for a further term, then the last state of things would have been very much worse than the first. Instead of anything being done to help forward the development of the salt industry in the mainland of India, what would have happened would have been an expansion of the works at Aden only to such an extent that even indigenous competition, meaning thereby competition in the inland of India, would have been stifled out.

Some of my friends who have spoken before have already pointed out the claim which has been put forward on behalf of the Aden manufacturers before Government this year. Encouraged naturally by the preferential treatment which was accorded to them, they were opening their mouths as wide as they could, if I might use that expression, and this is what they solemnly and seriously suggested to Government—I am reading from the report of the Indian Salt Association, or rather the representation of the Indian Salt Association to the Government of India which we find as an appendix to the Central Board's report. On page 8 of their representation, the Salt Association "respectfully" recommend—(a) that necessary legislation be enacted extending the life of the Salt Additional Import Duty Act 1931 for a period of about 10 years from 1st April, 1932, (b) that the rates of fair selling price fixed under the existing Act be raised for the present at least by 10 per cent. under the new Act, and (c)—this is the most interesting of the recommendations—that the contemplated development of the inland sources be restricted, in other words, that the main object which was put forward in justification of the additional duty should be thrown aside altogether, and that the Act should be extended for at least a further period of ten years in order that Aden alone might thrive, nay, dance on the graves not merely of the foreign manufacturers of salt, but of the indigenous salt-producer in India itself! These recommendations, Sir, indeed furnish a key to the mentality which lay behind the movement which led to the passing of the Act last year, and that is why I had felt it my duty to cry, and cry myself hoarse, though in vain, against that proposal. This year, however, the facts were there to stare everyone of us in the face, facts which could not be brushed aside by rhetoric or by sentimental arguments, and because the facts did tell and my Honourable friend Sir George Schuster was good enough to see the implications of those facts, we felt no difficulty whatsoever in accepting the report which you now find before you. Far be it from any one of us to be wishing to hit down or kill Aden. During this interregnum, so to say, Aden has certainly been doing a great deal to help India, though if Aden is helping India, India is helping Aden even more. While inland sources of salt supply would take time to put themselves on a sound basis, you must have some source of supply on which you could rely, and if it were a choice between Aden and Liverpool, I would certainly support Aden in preference to Liverpool. You will find in the present report the Committee recommend that Government should at once introduce an inquiry into the whole position so as to prevent the result—I might say, the calamity,—which we all apprehended last year, namely, that Aden should be enabled to establish a virtual monopoly in Bengal, and it was a very wise suggestion, if I may say so with respect, which the Honourable the Finance Member made that there should be a conference of all the salt manufacturing interests concerned at which the position could be very fully and frankly discussed, because after all you must be fair to all. If there is to be a system of rationing, as has been foreshadowed, it is just as well that the manufacturers should be warned beforehand, so that they might not find themselves plunged in a situation which they had not foreseen and which they certainly would not deserve. Therefore this suggestion of a conference is an eminently sound and reasonable one, and we have a right to expect that after that conference Government will bring forward proposals before this House which will ensure that while Aden is not unnecessarily or unreasonably sacrificed, Aden does not at the same time gain an undue predominance at the expense of the development of inland sources of salt supply.

So far as the year just about to close is concerned, there can be no gainsaying the fact that the Bengal consumer has put an unnecessarily large amount into the pockets of the Aden merchants, but it is probably too late for us now to quarrel with that. Not only have Aden manufacturers got the benefit of the additional import duty, they have also gained in another way in the unexpected reduction in the freights, but it is just as well to remember that because there has been a temporary fall in the freights, that does not justify any hasty action on the part of the Government in the way of adjusting the "fair selling price". As the Honourable the Finance Member has pointed out, such readjustments of fair selling prices which the Tariff Board have fixed after elaborate inquiry are to be deprecated, because that would create unsettled conditions, and unsettled conditions could never achieve the objects which the Tariff Board inquiries had in view.

My friend, Mr. Mitra, had some observations to offer regarding the attitude of the Bengal Government in the matter of developing the local salt industry in that province. Sir, my friend has read out from the report of the Central Board of Revenue, where it is stated that :

"Bengal and Assam do not propose to devote their share of the extra duty to the object mentioned, since there is no salt industry to develop, as in Assam, and no scheme economically feasible for the production of marketable salt in Bengal has been produced."

Sir, confining myself to Bengal, it is only fair to point out that at the date this reply came from the Government of Bengal, Mr. Pitt's report was not in their hands. That report came later, and I am sure that when that report is before the Government of Bengal, the latter will not be wanting on their part in making all efforts to see salt industry, which once formed a characteristic feature of Bengal economic life, not merely restored but placed on a much stabler and sounder footing. (Mr. B. Das : "Let us hope so!") I say, "Amen, let us hope so", and I hope that hope will not be belied. As a matter of fact, for the information of my friends over there I may mention that a few months ago some persons who were taking some interest in this matter in Bengal started an association called the Bengal Salt Manufacturers' Association. That was a company formed under section 26 of the Companies Act and was registered. No profits were to accrue to any of the members, it was to be on an experimental basis, and the whole idea was to explore possible methods of developing the salt industry in Bengal. The company is only a few months old. It recently obtained a licence from the Government of Bengal. The latter have been very helpful in this matter. When Mr. Pitt went down to Calcutta, some of those who were interested in this concern interviewed him, and they got every encouragement from Mr. Pitt. I gladly acknowledge all that. Therefore,

I say the Government of Bengal are not wanting in sympathy for this project. The reason why they say they have not been able to apply the proceeds of this additional duty to the specific purpose for which they were earmarked is that up to then no definite scheme had been placed before them. It is no use recalling the old days when the salt industry flourished in Bengal. It is no use recalling the circumstances which led to the strangling of that industry. Let us forget and forgive. (Hear. hear.) Let us work in the present with an eye for the future, and let us see, all of us, that that future is worthy of the province and worthy of the country.

Mr. B. Das: Sir, I would ask my Honourable friend, Mr. Morgan, to withdraw the amendment which he has moved, because he was a member of this Assembly Salt Committee and he knows that all of us discussed every aspect of the question he has raised in his amendment, and he knows that a year hence the Salt Committee will meet and discuss every aspect of the question afresh. But whether any Committee of this House can subscribe to discriminating taxation between one part of India and another part of India is a question for the Committee to decide. I do not think however this House will ever be a party to that principle, which is the underlying principle of his amendment; but as my Honourable friend, Mr. Mody, has pointed out, the freights may go up, and I think if the freights go up, Mr. Morgan will be a party to that because he might belong to that caucus, the shipping caucus, which controls freights in India. The data available before the Committee were not sufficient for all purposes. They were mostly supplied by my friend Mr. Morgan. I hope Government in the meanwhile will set their machinery going to collect all the information about freights, and let us wait till a year hence; and if we find that the salt manufacturers are getting an unequal and unfair advantage, then the rate of additional import duty of 4 annas 6 pies could be reduced, but I cannot subscribe nor do I think can anybody on this side of the House subscribe to any discriminating system of duties between one part of India and another part and I do hope my friend will withdraw his motion.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Sir, I shall take only a very limited time of the House in dealing with this question. I have a good deal of sympathy with my Honourable friend who moved this amendment, particularly in his playing a lone hand as he is apparently doing in the House. We all of us know what he is after, and we all of us have a good deal of sympathy with it, but I think the only sound ground on which we can take our stand now is the ground mentioned by my Honourable friend, Mr. B. Das, who just spoke, and also mentioned in the concluding passage of his speech by my Honourable friend, Mr. Mody, that the principle of discrimination in duties against different countries, or different parts of India in this case, is one which contains within itself the most dangerous possibilities. I think the House would be very ill-advised to commit itself to a principle of this kind. Therefore, although as I say I know what my Honourable friend is after and I have a certain amount of sympathy with him, I must strenuously oppose this amendment. I would also put another point to my Honourable friend and that is this, that we are admittedly only bringing forward a provisional measure now and the whole point of dealing with the situation in the way we propose is that we feel we have not yet had sufficient experience of how this whole plan is working and that we want another 12 months to see how things are going, another 12 months within which perhaps we can devise some plan which will achieve our main object and guard against certain dangers to which I have already called the attention of the House. I was puzzled by one line of argument in my Honourable friend's speech, and he himself helped me to some extent by saying that he had got rather far from his original point. I think he had in fact got so far from it that he was unconsciously arguing on the other side. He tried to frighten us with his picture of the position as regards the stocks now available in Calcutta. But surely, if there was any danger of that kind hanging over the market in Calcutta—and as a matter of fact I entirely disagree with my Honourable friend on that point—if there was any danger of that kind, surely we should increase the danger if we made the position for Aden as producer more difficult than it is at present. We are and have been during the past year relying very largely upon the Aden production, and therefore from that point of view if we want to be assured with regard to our supplies, it is surely to our advantage to do everything to encourage Aden to increase her supplies. As a matter of fact, I entirely disagree with my Honourable friend that there is any danger of shortage of supplies and I think that he has drawn and put to the House wrong conclusions from the statistics as regards the stocks. That, Sir, is all that I need say on the subject and I would ask the House to oppose this amendment.

Mr. Chairman (Sir Abdur Rahim): The question is:

"That after clause 3 the following new clause be added:—

"4. In section 5 of the said Act,—

(a) to sub-section (1) the following words shall be added, namely:

'except Aden, and shall not, save as hereinafter provided, be levied and collected on Salt produced in Aden save to the extent 5, Act XIV of 1931, extent of one anna six pies per maund.'

(b) to sub-section (4) the following words shall be added, namely:

'In the case of Aden the price to be paid shall be fifty-four rupees five annas per hundred maunds'."

The motion was negatived.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and Preamble were added to the Bill.

(At this stage Mr. President resumed the Chair.)

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Sir, I move that the Bill be passed.

The motion was adopted.

THE BENGAL CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT (SUPPLEMENTARY) BILL—contd.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That clause 2 of the Bill to supplement the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1930, do stand part of the Bill."

Mr. E. F. Sykes (Bombay: European): Sir, I move:

"That in clause 2 after the word 'jail' where it occurs for the second time the words 'in any Governor's Province' be inserted."

Mr. President, sometimes when listening to speeches in this House, I have detected in the speakers a belief that Governments sit up late designing measures for the oppression of the people. You, Sir, with your very wide experience, administrative and other, are aware that for want of leisure, if for no other reason, this cannot be the case. The wrongs that Governments commit are more usually traceable to one or both of two causes; the first want of information and the second an obstinate refusal to admit errors and reverse a policy embarked on on insufficient information. The former is unfortunately a common case. The highest compliment one can pay is to describe a man as "well-informed", a proof of the extreme difficulty of this art. We can therefore extend our sympathy to and withhold our reprobation from a Government in such a case. For the latter, no leniency is deserved. To know the better course and follow the worse is, I think, called sinning against the light. I hope in the following observations to make good the deficiencies in the information before the Government and the House; it will then be for the House to see that the Government do not fall into the latter error.

I would like to make it clear that any observations I have to make are not directed against the Bill. I do not say that the Bill could not be better, nor that the Government are not displaying an unwarranted degree of patience and forbearance having regard to the nature of the persons at whom the Bill is directed. But this is no time for attempting to modify the main principle of the Bill. The House by sending it to Select Committee has approved the principle of the Bill. The Bill has been referred to the Select Committee and it has been returned with a report as nearly unanimous as can be expected, in a Bill of this nature, and no alteration whatever has been made in it. To attack a Bill under these circumstances would be to tilt at windmills, an occupation that attracts few practical men.

But there are many of us who hold that the manner of administration of laws is not less important than their formulation; and that the bad administration of a good law may deprive it of all its virtue. Now it is rarely possible to attack or to seek to modify a Bill on grounds of bad administration; administration cannot begin till the Bill becomes an Act, and in most cases there is no reason for announcing the manner of administration in advance. In this particular case however the Government have told us what they are going to do with the detenus, the subjects of this Bill, in the event of it passing into law. They have announced that they are preparing to send them to a place which they profess to believe and wish the House to believe to be salubrious and remote—in short to Deoli in Rajputana. The question of salubrity will not detain us long. I suppose the primary meaning of salubrious is health-bringing. As regards the secondary meanings of the word, there may be some difference of opinion. This has been known to occur with other words. Browsing the other day on the Times of India I came across a review of a Directory of Delhi. The Reviewer says:

"One is intrigued by a paragraph in which appears:

'The climate of Delhi is congenial....During the hot weather hot winds blow at times and are often the cause of death—-. The rainy season is followed by malaria.....'

We may take it that salubrious is not likely to come off any better than congenial. The fact about the climate of Deoli is simply this, that it is so salubrious that the Political Agent is unable to remain there throughout the year, even though the alternative is Mount Abu! For a considerable part of the hot weather the Luh blows day and night. Perhaps the House is not wholly familiar with the word "Luh". It is a word which in some Indian languages, as well as in German and Scottish, primarily means "flame". I was tickled to death at an earlier stage of this Bill when Members appealed to the Government to reproduce Bengal conditions in Deoli. I have lived on the fringe of Bengal and have some idea of its conditions, and have passed some years not too far from the Banas, and the idea of creating the conditions of the Hughli on the banks of the Banas was full of humour. I advise Members who are interested in this matter to take advantage of the Easter concessions to visit the Banas. From Nawai station, fifteen miles in a motor-bus will bring them to the Banas crossing. A little further on is Tonk, which is thirty-six miles from Deoli, and the conditions do not vary much. The House will probably agree that this is enough about salubrity.

I must now ask from you, Sir, and the House a little patience while I deal with the matter of remoteness. Rajputana is divided up by a number of quite large rivers, which affect the history of the area by forming the boundaries of States and by having only a few convenient fords and ferries to determine the lines of communications. One of these is the Banas, which after forming the main drainage of the Mewar State, passes through a number of others and finally joins the Chambal, the great arterial river of Rajputana and Malwa. Rajputana has few trunk roads and one of the principal is the North and South road, which proceeding from Ajmer through a number of States, particularly Bundi and Kotah, reaches Jhalrapatan, and then branches in two directions through Malwa. Its crossing of the Banas and the Chambal is controlled by Deoli and Kotah. Deoli is a cantonment on the right bank of the Banas; it is the only bit of British territory on that bank. I have not been able to ascertain precisely its history; but it seems likely that after the unfortunate affair of the Kotah contingent in 1857, it was carved out of the Mewar State and formed into a cantonment in which was located an irregular force maintained at the expense of some of the States for the purpose of carrying out the obligations of the Government to maintain the integrity of these States. In this respect, it resembles on a small scale the cantonments of Secundarabad, Bangalore, Baroda and many others which are British territories in a highly technical sense. There is a further patch of British territory on the opposite bank, but it is not clear whether this was taken over as a Bridge-head or whether it was the result of the complicated adjustments following the dispossession of the Mahrattas. Beyond that we come to a ring of Indian States. Marching with it, or at no great distance are the States of Mewar, Shapura, Kishengarh, Jaipur, Tonk and Bundi.

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division: Muhammadan Rural): We are marching too remote.

Mr. E. F. Sykes: The Honourable Member evidently does not know what marching means. But I will not take you through the long history of the Deoli force. It is sufficient to note that it is now represented by a small Political force—the Mina Corps. Its duties are still considerable as the events of last June showed; and it is sufficiently occupied to be unable to be used as a guard for any detenus that may be sent there.

Not only is it an important point on the main trunk road, but it is at the junction of it with another branch road which proceeding through Tonk, crosses the Banas and through Jaipur leads to Delhi. It is therefore an important junction, and regular bus services run to it from all directions. The site of the proposed Jail is actually on one of the roads, and it is interesting to note that while one department of Government commends it on account of its remoteness, another department is contemplating spending out of the petrol fund a lakh of rupees to improve the Banas crossing and increase its accessibility.

Now, Sir, it is possible to expound the reasons for regarding it as an unsuitable place for a jail for Bengali detenus. The first one is highly general. It is an objection shared by all parts of India. I will not take you through all the opinions of the Bill. The House is doubtless familiar with them. I will take as typical the remarks of the Government whip in a previous incarnation. An excellent idea, says he, but of course we could not have them in our province. One other opinion. The Commissioner of Ajmer-Merwara gave his blessing to the scheme in general, but, says he, if they are sent to Ajmer jail, I hope we shall be allowed to choose our guests! It had not then occurred to him that they would be sent to any other place in his jurisdiction, evidently overlooking the power of Government to declare any place to be a jail. In short everyone approved the idea, but was content to leave the burden of putting it into practice to some one else.

Coming to particular objections, it has already been shown that the chosen site is at one of the important road junctions of the country. There is a further and more important objection. Judging from the questions asked in this House, many Members appear to be familiar with the advantages and drawbacks of cantonments. I can therefore assume that most Members know that, in spite of the traditions of a brutal and licentious soldiery, the good order and just administration of cantonments have attracted to them a volume of business out of proportion to the immediate necessities of the place. And the same has happened in Deoli. Although the total population is about 5,000, as a market it is of greater importance than towns many times its size. I had prepared a map to illustrate to the House the distribution of markets in Rajputana, but it is extremely difficult to give a map which will be visible to the whole House. I will lay it on the table. But the principal point about the distribution of the markets is that from Deoli you have to go 56 miles in one direction to Nasirabad, or a hundred miles to Jaipur or a hundred miles to Baran or 120 miles to Bhawani Mandi, before you come on any market which is worth consideration. You will understand from this distance that the position of Deoli is rather like the centre pip of 5 in a pack of cards. It is therefore easy to understand that if Deoli has a market far removed from it the inconvenience would be considerable. Then, Sir, although there is common agreement that the presence of these detenus is undesirable, the grounds of the objections are not given in great detail. It appears that they are likely to have letters smuggled into them or out from them, and particularly that they will corrupt jail discipline, and these difficulties are thought to be insuperable. But whatever the objections may be in other places, that objection will hold in Deoli. Either they are a nuisance to the neighbourhood or they are not. If not, then a convenient detention camp would be either in Fort William under the eyes of the Government of Bengal, or in the Purana Qilla under the eyes of the Government of India. But if they are, it is obviously improper to plant them at a road junction at the market centre of a large area. How can business be carried on if travellers are to be subjected to the inquisition of the police, and perhaps be required to furnish themselves with passes? It may be said that there is nothing to be afraid of but it is better to be safe than sorry. No doubt to the large centres a place like Deoli may be a small matter; when an elephant places his foot on an ant hill, he may be surprised at the commotion he causes and wonder why the ants are scurrying about and neglecting their business. But you, Sir, have a sufficiently sympathetic imagination to understand the point of view of the unfortunate ants.

To come to my amendment. It is perhaps not well drafted, but it is enough for me that it serves my purpose. If the Government will give an assurance that they will abandon this project and choose for the location of these gentlemen some really remote place, I am willing to withdraw it. If any modification is suggested which will meet my objection I am willing to accept it. But I am not at present satisfied that any change is needed.

Mr. President: Order, order. Sardar Sant Singh.

MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT.

ALLEGED MALTREATMENT OF WOMEN POLITICAL PRISONERS.

Sardar Sant Singh (West Punjab: Sikh): Sir, I beg to move that the House do now adjourn. The matter of urgent public importance which I want to discuss is the mal-treatment that has been meted out to the lady prisoners while they were being transferred from the Delhi jail to the various jails in the Punjab. Before I proceed to put the facts before the House, I want to give an assurance to my Honourable friends. This has become necessary on account of the remark which fell from the Honourable the Home Member this morning that I have taken my clue as regards the facts from the reports published in the Press. I acknowledge this much, that the idea of moving this adjournment motion originated with me after reading the facts in the Hindustan Times of the 20th March. But later on I verified these facts by making inquiries from the eye-witnesses of the whole affair; and so I am in a position to place the facts before you for the judgment of the Honourable Members of this House with the confidence what attaches to a person who has actually gathered facts from persons who have seen the affair. At the same time, I may explain that probably the Government's source of information is the report submitted by the Inspector of Police, whose name, if I mistake not is Mr. Hardy. It is but natural that a police official who was leading what was practically a raiding party to the jail would naturally be interested in the result of that raid, and in spite of himself, would be unconsciously biassed in favour of his subordinates. So without even doubting his reliability, though being a police officer, it is open to suspicion, I may say that his version is bound to differ from the version of impartial eye-witnesses. What are the facts of this case? On Wednesday last the lady prisoners in the Delhi jail, who were convicted of various offences under the Ordinances that are now unfortunately ruling the country, learnt that they were going to be transferred to the mixed jails in the Punjab. Probably Honourable Members are aware that according to the rules governing the administration of jails no female prisoner, even if convicted of crimes against society or morality, can be allowed to remain in any female ward of the jail for more than a week after her conviction. They must be sent to the female jails where the warders, Superintendent, and the supervising authorities belong to their own sex. But in this case, the lady prisoners, who belong to the most respectable families and whose names I will presently read out, were ordered to be transferred to mixed jails. My first charge against the Honourable the Home Member is that the order of transfer to mixed jails was illegal. Who are these lady prisoners? Some of them belong to very respectable families. Here I may be permitted to point out that this fact should be an eye-opener to the Government, who are carrying on repression in their mad desire to crush a movement which can never be crushed. Who are these ladies? One of them is Mrs. Asaf Ali, the wife of the well-known barrister of this place, a leader of Muhammadans in this country and

An Honourable Member: Question.

Sardar Sant Singh: My Honourable friend may question; the Muhammadans do not form only one party belonging to the Muslim Conference; there are others who belong to the Congress Party also; but they are leaders all the same; they may not be your leaders, but they are the leaders of the most forward class amongst you. However that is a digression. As I was saying, she is a lady of great culture and great education. There was also Shrimati Chando Bibi. Who is she? Here I am not talking merely of ladies belonging to families of respectable leaders of the Congress Party; but I am talking of these ladies belonging to the families of those who, in the ordinary street parlance of today, are known as Government toadies. She is a daughter of Lala Girdhari Lal, ex-Public Prosecutor of Delhi and sister of Chandi Lal, barrister of Delhi, a leading lawyer of this place.

An Honourable Member: Also a toady?

Mr. President: Order, order.

Sardar Sant Singh: The third is Mrs. Durga Das, niece-in-law of Sir Gopaldas Bhandari of Amritsar. The fourth is Shrimati Gauri Bai. I understand, though I have not been able to verify it, that she comes of a family whose members hold respectable positions in Government service and one of her brothers probably is a Captain in the Indian Medical Service. Next was Shrimati Usha Devi, the grand-daughter of Swami Shradhdhanand whose services to the Punjab have been innumerable. I need not mention the remaining names. I mention these names not with a view to create a distinction, that the ladies of the highest families should be immune from maltreatment. I hold that ladies, whether belonging to high families or ordinary families are all ladies. Their sex demands our respect and the utmost consideration. I need hardly remind this House that India has always stood for honouring the ladies, irrespective of the fact whether they belong to high families or ordinary families.

I say these ladies, whom the trying Magistrates had recommended for a class treatment in jails, were being detained in the Delhi District Jail. On Wednesday last, as I was submitting, these ladies came to learn that they were going to be transferred to the mixed jails in the Punjab. They did not like it; they naturally desired to be transferred to female jails. They expressed this desire to the authorities; but the authorities remained adamant. In order to give vent to their strong feelings against this treatment, they refused to take food and went on hunger strike. Even this did not move the authorities. The authorities, as is the policy underlying all their actions in these days, were bent upon bending or breaking these ladies, and so they persisted in sending these ladies to mixed jails. In this connection I may mention that Mrs. Asaf Ali's husband, Mr. Asaf Ali, is a co-prisoner in this jail. Maulana Abul Kalam Azad, whose leadership I do not think there will be any one on this side to question, is recognised amongst all Muhammadans—he also is a co-prisoner in this jail. These gentlemen advised the ladies not to go on hunger strike, not to care for the sufferings they were enduring for the sake of their country. Their intervention was proving helpful, when the lorries came to effect their transfer. There were three lorries, one full of armed police, the other full of female police who have been recently recruited, and the third for the removal of the prisoners. First of all, Chando Bibi was brought out, bruised and bleeding and thrust into one of the lorries. (An Honourable Member: "Shame.") Mrs. Durga Das was another sufferer. She has a child aged three years along with her in jail. The child cried out that her shoe had fallen. Even the cries of the child were ignored and she along with her crying child was also thrown into that lorry. I forgot to mention one important fact in connection with Mussamat Chando Bibi's treatment. When she was being forcibly carried to the lorry and was being forcibly thrust into it the remark made by one of the female constables was "kutiko bandhneko rasi lao".—"Bring a rope to tie the bitch". That was the expression used towards a lady of a high family. After that they were taken to the railway station, bruised, beaten and bleeding. It is too long a story to tell. Prison vans were supplied wherein there were only four planks on which 15 lady prisoners were to be required to spend their night. There were no sanitary arrangements in the prison van; no food was permitted to be given to the ladies and it was with difficulty that the Station Master was persuaded to allot a third class compartment.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member has got only half a minute more.

Sardar Sant Singh: What I want to impress on the House in this connection is that this is not the only instance in which the ladies of India have been humiliated and maltreated. Another story showing similar callousness comes from Benares. There is still another about which papers have been handed over to me this morning. In Meerut one Ram Piar Devi has been treated as badly. My submission is that the time has come when a halt should be made to this sort of treatment. I cannot go into the question now, but I will strongly urge on the Honourable Members not to forego this opportunity of censuring the Government and protecting the honour of their own mothers and sisters. (Opposition Cheers.)

The Honourable Sir James Crerar (Home Member): Sir, in rising to oppose this motion, it is my intention, as has always been my practice, to place the House, without the slightest delay, in the fullest possession of the facts as they are known to me. I will now read the purport of reports which I have received from the Chief Commissioner of Delhi. The facts are as follows:

"It had been found necessary to transfer 16 female prisoners from the Delhi Jail as the accommodation set apart for females was small and, moreover, accommodation had to be made available in case other females were sent to prison. The women themselves had complained of overcrowding and had asked for transfer.

Accordingly on the 16th March orders were received from the I. G. Prisons, Punjab, that these 16 prisoners should be transferred—11 "B" class prisoners to Ludhiana, two "A" class and two "C" class prisoners to Ambala and one prisoner to the Sub-Jail at Dharamsala. The Superintendent of the Jail communicated these orders the same day so that the female prisoners might have a chance of seeing their relatives and friends before their transfer from Delhi. The prisoner for the Dharamsala sub-jail was very pleased and after communicating with her father was sent away without any trouble on the morning of the 18th. The remaining 15 prisoners objected and threatened hunger strike on the morning of the 17th. On the 17th they refused to accept Government rations and expressed their determination to continue their hunger strike unless the orders were cancelled or they were sent to the female jail at Lahore. Accommodation was not available at the Lahore Female Jail—(and that, Sir, is a very important fact)—though the Punjab Government were willing to accommodate these 16 female prisoners, as described, at Ludhiana, Ambala and Dharamsala, they stated that no more female prisoners could be received in the jails in that province. This made it essential that the 16 prisoners should be removed in order to make available accommodation in Delhi for female prisoners which, as has already been explained, was limited. It was not feasible to send them all to one jail in the Punjab and, clearly, an impossible position would arise if female prisoners were allowed to dictate to the authorities the jails to which they should be sent. As prisoners they have no option in the matter and must obey orders.

The Superintendent of the Jail did every thing possible to induce the prisoners to give up their hunger strike and asked Mr. Asaf Ali, who is detained under the Emergency Powers Ordinance, and Dr. Ansari, to intervene. Their intervention, however, was of no avail and the prisoners put forward a further condition that Government should give an undertaking that all women prisoners sentenced in Delhi in the political movement should be transferred either to the Lahore Female Jail or to one single jail. As clearly indicated, this was an impracticable demand and the Superintendent of the Jail informed them that it was impossible to allow them to remain in Delhi any longer and that they would have to go. The Superintendent's last interview with them in the early afternoon of the 17th showed that they were in most unreasonable frame of mind, and that further argument was of no avail. He obtained orders from the Chief Commissioner who said that the rules were to be observed, that the transfer should be effected and that, if necessary, the services of the women police should be called in. The Deputy Superintendent of the Jail was ordered to carry out the transfer. The prisoners were informed at about 4-30 p.m. on the 18th that they would be transferred to Ludhiana and Ambala and were warned to pack for the journey. Those who desired were allowed to interview their husbands and relatives. It appeared that wiser counsels were prevailing, for the prisoners broke their hunger strike and took refreshments. The Deputy Superintendent was also given to understand that no resistance would be offered. By 7 p.m. everything was ready, but Mr. Asaf Ali told him that there was one recalcitrant female prisoner who might give trouble and a postponement of transfer for one day was suggested. The Deputy Superintendent was unable to get into touch with the Superintendent of Jail and, rightly, decided that he must obey the orders given to him. The prisoners were told that if they did not go willingly, women police would be called in. Thereupon the prisoners started shouting objectionable slogans such as "Inqilab Zinda bad", "Angrezi Hukumat Barbad", "Zalim Hukumat Barbad", "Safed Chamre Walon Ka Satyanash", and so on.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh (Muzaffarpur cum Champaran: Non-Muhammadan): What is that last expression please?

The Honourable Sir James Ormerod:

"Safed Chamre Walon Ka Satyanash", "Police Walon Ka Satyanash".

"The women police, nine in number, were accordingly called in under a Deputy Superintendent and directed to remove the prisoners, whereupon one of the latter called out 'Mere Nandik Mat Ao, Mat Hat Lagao, Warna Main Marungi'. On being approached by the police she lay down and caught hold of a tent pole but was lifted bodily and taken outside to the lorry in which they were to be conveyed to the station. The other prisoners caught hold of each other's arms to offer joint resistance. In the course of the removal of the prisoners one prisoner received a slight scratch between the thumb and index finger by accident from a brooch; whereupon all the prisoners began to shout that one of their number had been injured and was bleeding. After three prisoners had been removed with considerable difficulty it was decided to bring the lorry inside the jail up to the gate of the female ward, but the remaining prisoners offered no resistance and reluctantly came out of the yard shouting, cursing and abusing. One of the women police was bitten on the thumb and had her sari nearly torn in two.

When the Dharamsala prisoner was transferred in the morning there had been a demonstration at the main station, and it was decided to remove the batch of 15 prisoners from Shahdara station. At the railway station the prisoners refused to leave the van until they knew the accommodation to be provided for them, but eventually by the efforts of the police officer and some friends of the prisoners they were pacified, and when the train came in, were put into the compartment allotted to them. Under the rules they travel in a prison van or in third class carriages. At the station also abuse and bad language were used freely and the drinking goblet of the women police was thrown down and broken in a fit of temper by one of the prisoners."

Now, Sir, those are the facts as I believe correctly reported, and in the very brief remaining time at my disposal I propose only to make a few brief comments. It struck me in the course of the Honourable gentleman's speech, that he made, so far as I am aware, no single allegation supported by any specific facts of any maltreatment whatsoever, and so far, his account is in accordance with the account which I have received. He said further that the authorities were entirely to blame with regard to this because they were committing an illegality. I deny that there has been any illegality in the matter at all. Transfers from one prison to another are one of the commonest features of jail administration, and these particular transfers were ordered entirely or largely or mainly in the interests of the prisoners themselves. The accommodation in the Delhi jail is limited, especially the kind of accommodation which the jail authorities were desirous of offering to ladies classed as "A" and "B" class prisoners. After great inconvenience to themselves, and after great inconvenience to the Government of the Punjab, arrangements for transfers were made. It was impossible, even if the prisoners were entitled to make a demand of this character, to comply with the specific request that they should be sent to Lahore, because there was no accommodation at Lahore, and I hope that the House will not support any line of action which the prisoners asked the authorities to take which would result in serious congestion and risk and serious injury to the health of the prisoners themselves.

The points which I desire to emphasise are that the transfers had been asked for by the prisoners themselves, and the particular place for which they asked, namely, the Lahore jail, was impracticable for reasons which I have mentioned, and the demands they made were in fact unreasonable and impracticable. There was no desire on the part of the jail authorities to use any force at all, nor would any force have been used if the prisoners had not necessitated it by their own conduct. Such force, as was necessary and no more, was applied by the women police, and I have been informed by the superior police authorities that in his opinion this recently formed body of women police behaved with great discipline and with great propriety in a very difficult situation. Force was only used in the last resort in spite of great provocation, resistance and abuse. It did not exceed the absolute necessities of the case. It was carried out under duly and properly authorised orders, and the action which was taken was, I submit, the only proper action to be taken in this case.

Mr. S. C. Mitra (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): What was the number of lady prisoners?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: The number was 15.

Now, Sir, those being the facts of the case, I shall leave it to the candid judgment of the House in the absence of any specific facts given by the Honourable Member who assures us that further inquiry into the matter was made by himself,—I leave it to the candid judgment of this House what verdict they should pass. But, Sir, I do desire to dwell upon one general question. I think that it would be right for me to point out that the obvious object of entirely gratuitous disturbances and disorders of this kind is to place the police forces and executive authorities in a difficult and embarrassing position—to induce them or to tempt them, as the occasion should serve, possibly to exceed their powers. In this case they were not exceeded, but in every case their object is to excite prejudice against the Government and the officers of Government. Now, there is a phrase very well known to the British people, and I think, in essence to the best and the most reasonable part of the Indian people, and that is, "Women and children first". But the phrase is capable of being used in a very different manner and it has been so deliberately used. Women and children have deliberately been placed in the forefront of disturbances in reckless disregard of any injury, apart from any inconveniences that they may suffer, for the purpose of propaganda, and I do appeal to the House, because I maintain that this is a typical instance of that kind of propaganda—I appeal to the House not to give it any encouragement. (Applause.)

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): The Honourable the Home Member concluded by reminding us of a famous British expression "Women and children first", and accused the political leaders outside of having placed women and children first in their struggle for the purpose of creating a feeling in the country by exploiting these unfortunate people. That was his argument—that women and children were being used as pawns in the game, to paraphrase it frankly. That, Sir, is an entire misreading of the political situation and the part that women take in the political movement. But supposing women and children were used as pawns in the game by political leaders outside, should the British people go back on the principle that the Honourable the Home Member enunciated, namely, women and children first? Should they let loose women constables on women and children first? The introduction of women constables, if not children constables, shows that the British people in this country, obviously inspired by Sir Samuel Hoare, put women and children first

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: We have had women constables in England for quite a considerable time.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: I know that, and I am coming to that. Women constables were in existence in England for a considerable time when women were struggling in England for women's franchise, a struggle which has been crowned with victory by Sir Stanley Baldwin's final surrender, giving practically adult franchise to women. Even so, educated on British ideas, fed on British philosophy, reared on the lap of British science, the women in India are taking to the movement just as our men have taken to the movement. Women in India are taking to the national movement just as the women in England took to their emancipation movement. It is absolutely incorrect to say that women and children are put in the forefront of the political movement. Their being there is a logical result of British rule in India, a result which Macaulay with his prophetic eye foresaw when he penned that famous minute deciding to educate Indian men and Indian women on English lines. Therefore, the charge that women have been put in front of that movement for purposes of exploitation is a charge that cannot hold water. It is a charge that I refute from this side of the House, and I would ask Government to imagine that a situation is developing, has developed, and will continue to develop in this country just as a similar situation developed in their own country. The struggle is going on and will continue until it attains the goal toward which it is directed. Must, therefore, I ask, the Government continue to look at new things in their old fashioned way—must the Government continue to look at new developments, I ask, with their old-time spectacles? Must they not change their attitude now? Must they not change their angle of vision? That is the question that I will put to the Honourable the Home Member. What is the fun of coming and telling us in this House, as the Honourable the Home Member has told us, about jail rules? He said that the women were obstinate, their demand was impracticable. Was not the Honourable Member, when he made that statement, applying the rule that is generally applied to other classes of women prisoners? Are not our provincial and Central Governments treating our lady prisoners exactly in the same manner as non-political prisoners are being treated? Supposing a woman sets fire to a neighbour's house, supposing a woman poisons her relation, supposing a woman proves a murderess and is sent to prison, the prison rules apply to her. Supposing a young girl, fascinated by the idea of securing freedom for her motherland which she feels has been manacled for ages, supposing, fed on the milk of Western education and the teachings of Lord Morley, Milton's ideals and Macaulay's preachings, she wants to liberate her country, her countrymen and countrywomen in exactly the same manner in which English women have been acting in the past—must these brave patriotic girls be treated as ordinary common felons? I am told that the demand is impracticable. How could it be an impracticable demand when young girls, all of them arrested at Delhi . . .

The Honourable Sir James Orerar: I regret very much to interrupt the Honourable Member. The reason why it is impracticable was that the jail to which they required to be transferred was already full and could not receive more prisoners without congestion and all its evils.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: What is their number?

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: The Honourable the Home Member says that the jail to which they wanted to go or they were to be sent was full up. I ask the Government which spends such a lot of money on the maintenance of the Army—could they not have converted one of the hotels in Mussoorie into a prison for the girls of India fighting for their freedom?

Could they not have converted one of the hotels in Simla, say the Cecil Hotel in Simla, into a jail for girls fighting for their freedom? (Laughter from the European Group.) I find gentlemen laughing there, but let us respect these young girls who are fighting for a cause with courage and with idealism. Let them not be treated in the same manner as others are being treated. Could not the Government have known that women are going to enter this movement? Could not the Government have created a good first class women's prison with excellent accommodation, respectable ladies looking after them, and with all the conveniences that these girls used to derive in their own homes,—even more conveniences? Government must have imagination. As Lord Morley said in his letter to Lord Minto, "The Government should not adhere to old maxims. The old times are gone and the new times breathe a new spirit and we cannot carry on upon the old maxims". The old times are gone but these dangerous maxims remain. Why did it not strike the imagination of the Government to build a new prison for girls? There is no getting away from the fact that the Indian question will be settled, as the Irish question was settled, though it threatens to be unsettled, as the Canadian and the South African questions were settled, and if you don't give women and children proper treatment, then take it from me that this kind of treatment will leave a trail of bitterness behind (Hear, hear.) It is no use for the Government to say that they shouted slogans. I myself have shouted slogans when I was a political prisoner, when I was transferred from the Agra prison to the Lucknow jail. There was a breakdown of the lorry near a college in Agra, when the students were preparing for an examination. My fellow prisoners raised shouts. The young boys came forward and I shouted to them the slogan. "Swaraj cannot wait, your studies can wait". I was not muzzled, though the Leader of Allahabad asked why I was not muzzled. If I, a man, could be treated better, why could not these women be treated better?

Then the Honourable the Home Member said that Sardar Sant Singh did not give specific facts. I am astonished that the Honourable the Home Member should have stated that he did not give specific facts. A lawyer of Sardar Sant Singh's eminence and reputation in his own place could not avoid arguments. He combined facts with arguments. Within the short time at his disposal he gave facts. He referred to children being dragged. He referred to how a prisoner or prisoners were bleeding. Are these not facts? We have not secured a contradiction of these facts. My friend has got his facts from a newspaper which is working under the Ordinances. I know what it is to run a newspaper, my paper having been the recipient of a warning lately and a rather hard warning. If I repeat the tone and the language, I must be prepared for a heavy security. I am sure the Hindustan Times is working under the same conditions as every other newspaper, and no newspaper will publish facts without verifying them for fear of being prosecuted under the Ordinances or suppressed, and the very fact that the Hindustan Times is in existence after the publication of these facts and my Honourable friend, Mr. Bajpai, the energetic Publicity Officer, has not issued a contradiction, is adequate to prove to the House that Sardar Sant Singh was taking his stand on hard facts which have not been liquified by the soft reasoning of the Honourable the Home Member. The Honourable the Home Member used the word "inquiry". No inquiry will satisfy this side of the House unless it is an impartial inquiry not meant to whitewash but to probe into the facts, an inquiry which would result in the building up of a good women prisoners' jail with the latest conveniences for these girls, both literary and otherwise, for let it not be forgotten that they are fighting for the freedom of the country. The Honourable the Home Member said that the women police were embarrassed by these ladies. In reply, I will only repeat what Lord Morley said before I conclude. Lord Morley wrote to Lord Minto: "Your law and order people are responsible for at least as many fooleries of history" as these aggressive politicians.

Mr. D. K. Lahiri Chaudhury (Bengal: Landholders): I stand shoulder to shoulder with my friend Sardar Sant Singh in support of this motion for adjournment. He has taken up a right cause as a Member of this House to move this adjournment motion, and I will remind my Honourable friend the Home Member of a saying by Edmund Burke, "Invention is exhausted, reasons are fatigued and experience has given judgment but obstinacy is not yet conquered". However cogent argument is placed before this House, however strong reasoning is put forward, however much truth there be in the testimony, the Honourable the Home Member comes with a few typed pages with the facts known to him as a Gospel truth and brushes away the whole issue with the remark, that the matter is misrepresented, the reason is unjust and the demand is unreasonable. May I relate one bare naked fact. Here is the true copy of the telegram sent by Mr. Asaf Ali to Mrs. Asaf Ali:

"Wire on honour condition health and if food resumed enable me do same, most anxious Asaf."

This clearly indicates that if Mrs. Asaf Ali takes food he is also agreeable to do the same. But what is the reply that Mr. Asaf Ali got to this telegram. I read only a portion which will enable this House to know how the authority interprets. The reply runs thus:

"I withheld your telegram to your wife this morning for the simple reason that you said you would go on hunger strike if she continues hers"

Now, if any Honourable Member knows a bit of English he will understand the meaning of this, and this is the sort of reliance the Honourable the Home Member places on the reports he gets. He said that the demand was unreasonable and what was the demand? The demand was that the women should be sent to female jails, and I will draw the attention of the House to the conditions in mixed jails, and I am grateful to the Hindustan Times for publishing it. It says:

"In view of the debate on an adjournment motion in the Legislative Assembly on Wednesday, permit me to place the following facts before the readers of our esteemed paper with regard to the treatment of women political prisoners in the Punjab Jails where Delhi prisoners have been transferred, to show how dangerous and reprehensible is the practice of keeping women political prisoners in men's jails.

2. In almost all District jails, there is one female ward meant for the detention of under-trial female prisoners or for very short-term female prisoners. After conviction these prisoners are transferred to Lahore Female jail.

(a) Confinement of female political prisoners in these female wards in District jails is highly objectionable and precarious because unlike female jail, where the entire staff except the Superintendent and one or two clerks is female, in District jails the entire staff with the exception of one wardress is male.

(b) Whereas in female jails, no male enters the jail unless accompanied by the Deputy Superintendent or a wardress, in a female ward a large number of males enter every day, even when there is no wardress.

(c) That respectable ladies are likely to be harassed by criminals singing indecent and immoral songs or levelling filthy abuses against each other.

(d) Ladies are, while passing from ward to the office and back for interview, likely to be insulted and assaulted. When the jail staff is not immune from such attacks how can respectable ladies be considered safe?

(e) A criminal may jump over the walls of the female ward and may make an indecent assault on ladies. A large number of convict warders move about in the jail at night. Any punishment after assault will be no remedy for the harm done.

3. The batch recently transferred to Multan jail is open to such disadvantages. The distance from the office to the ward, where they have been lodged, is about a furlong and a half. Water supply is insufficient. The space at the disposal of the prisoners to move about is inadequate. Latrines are quite close to the place where prisoners are kept. There is only one wardress. She cannot be present in jail for 24 hours. If unfortunately any lady falls ill at night, there will be no means of communication to the higher staff.

4. If there is overcrowding in the Lahore Female Jail, another District Jail may be converted into a Female Jail with female staff."

The Honourable Member in a light-hearted manner looks at that little document which he possesses in his hands and says that the demand was not reasonable and it cannot be met. Sir, in his speech my Honourable friend was interrupted by my friend, Mr. Mitra, when he was asked, how many prisoners he was going to transfer. The number given was 15. Only for these 15 individuals, even if accommodation was not available in the Lahore Jail, they could easily be accommodated by the prisoners in sub-jails being transferred to other jails. That was a fair proposal, Sir, what is the underlying motive in all this? It seems that the deliberate intention of the Government is that they will punish these female prisoners in such a manner directly and indirectly so as to intimidate them into refraining from taking part for the future in a movement for Swaraj. I say, Sir, with the utmost confidence and with all the power I can command that this sort of mean trick will not redound to any statesmanship in any civilized government on the face of the globe. Sir, this political movement cannot be retarded by any such tactics as the practising of oppression and maltreatment on our ladies. By such inhuman sufferings being inflicted on our women, the country is not going to be gagged in their political advancement. Our women will have to listen to the still strong voice of their own conscience, and conscience is common to every human being. Sir, by such methods you only yourselves spread hatred in the mind of every self-respecting citizen, and I say no power on this earth can survive if it continues its administration in the future on such lines.

Mr. Jagan Nath Aggarwal (Jullundur Division; Non-Muhammadan): Sir, the Honourable the Home Member almost approached this question with levity. He merely pointed out that in what my Honourable friend said about there being illegality in removing these prisoners, he was not correct. Sir, my Honourable and learned friend gave the other side credit for a good deal more. I can tell him that the section of the law which they have contravened in the treatment accorded to these ladies is not any section of the Indian Penal Code nor of any other Code of Criminal Procedure, but it is a contravention. (Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: "We cannot hear you.") You cannot hear me? You will hear me presently.

Mr. President: Louder, please.

Mr. Jagan Nath Aggarwal: Sir, it is a contravention of the law of decency, it is a contravention of the law of humanity, it is a contravention of that law which my learned friend is quite familiar with, "Women and children first" and of which Europeans are the greatest exponents, and it is a sorry state of affairs that we have now to remind them of that doctrine, which they have in their own lives in dealings with their own countrymen, practised all along for generations untold. Well, Sir, it is that patent and obvious objection that we take to this treatment of our ladies in a manner which is neither befitting their dignity nor redounds to the credit of the Government. What is the objection we take, Sir? We say, one might almost say, "Beggars cannot be choosers". The question is, once you are in jail, you are certainly entitled to expect that you shall be treated in a manner befitting the dignity of the Government, and also befitting the position of the persons sentenced, especially if they be of the fair and gentle sex. Well, if that is so, what is in reality the grievance of us on this side of the House, and what is the answer to our grievance? Our grievance is that these ladies were removed bodily by force and maltreated in this process of transportation. The other side replied that every prisoner is liable to be transported from one jail to another owing to the exigencies of space or overcrowding of jails. In the first place may I point out that when it was settled in December last at the Round Table Conference that there was going to be a fight with Congress—in December last, mind you, not January—in December last before Mahatma Gandhi had departed from London, Mr. Churchill very bluntly informed us of it in the Parliamentary Debate and Mr. Benthall's memorandum has removed all doubts on that score, the Government should have prepared for this fight. Now that being so, it ought to have been anticipated that women are a necessary party in any national struggle; Government should have known it; and is it not sheer inefficiency that they did not foresee that women would figure in the national struggle? It is alleged that women have been put forward by scheming politicians here just to act as screens behind which to take shelter. Sir, can anybody pretend for one moment that this is anything but a travesty of the facts? It has been mentioned and maintained in the Anglo-Indian Press—in which my learned friend over there is very much interested—that men are taking shelter behind the saris of women. Sir, that is grotesquely wrong and mischievous. Look at the figures of men rotting in jails. The same national spirit that pervades these men also permeates our womenfolk. If that is so, then it is wholly idle to make such allegations and indulge in such propaganda as the other side is indulging in. Sir, they send complacent messages to the Secretary of State that, "The situation is all quiet", "The situation is improving". Sir, I say the situation is not improving. It should be understood that when the movement has gone down to our women and children, the situation is not improving, and it cannot improve.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney (Nominated: Non-Official): Sir, I rise to a point of personal explanation. The Honourable Member made a reference to the attitude of my community towards this question. May I inform you, Sir, that, representing as I do my community here, I would never desire anything more than that, "women and children should come first".

Mr. Jagan Nath Aggarwal: The Honourable Member's personal explanation has nothing to do with the point I am now making.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney: You leave my community alone.

Mr. President: Order, order.

Mr. Jagan Nath Aggarwal: As I say, it is wholly idle to pretend that these women are there by the mere design of the scheming politicians: they are there because they feel for their country, because the movement has gone home to them: and I say if the time has come when our women are also being compelled to take such a keen interest in politics and such a keen and hazardous part in the national struggle, then it is time that the communiqué issued by the Government was revised. What do we find? It is said that "The situation has become quiet", and the Secretary of State is assured by the Government of India and the Secretary of State assures the House of Commons that the situation is well in hand. Sir, what is the contention of my Honourable friend opposite? The jails are overcrowded, and he cannot find room for these people in the solitary female jail of the Punjab. Sir, my Honourable friend must confess to palpable inefficiency if he did not foresee that women in appreciable numbers would come forward to court arrest, and he is not entitled to take shelter behind the excuse of lack of space when a new jail is being built adjacent to the central jail at Lahore. My Honourable friend, Mr. Ranga Iyer, was not very happy in his suggestion of converting the Hotel Cecil into a prison for women, but I must say, Sir, there are so many buildings which this city abounds in, and I ask, why not convert all these interesting buildings in which nobody likes to live in the summer for lack of sufficient water, into jails? Women certainly could stay in all these places in New Delhi. After all, the Ordinances are likely to expire in June. Therefore, I say that it is either a part of their self-complacency or it is a lack of foresight. Anyway, I submit that it is high time Government considered that more accommodation should be provided for women prisoners. My Honourable friend Mr. Lahiri Chaudhury has already quoted from the Hindustan Times, and I would also like to point out that it is very essential that women must be placed in surroundings where they are not likely to get improper treatment, either from the officials who are in charge of them or from others who may be confined along with them. Sir, when Government are keeping women in jail for political offences, is it open to them to forget that by that very reason more consideration is due to women as such than is due to men? You must not bring them into surroundings in which their very honour is imperilled. That is what is expected of them. My learned friend told us that there is no room in jails and that there are more prisoners in the country than we can keep. Sir, Government will soon come to a point when half the country will be inside the jails and the other half outside? But I cannot agree with the remark that there is no room in the Lahore jail for the ladies, there must be some room. Sir, there is ample accommodation in Delhi. I say that the Government must have less accommodation for the ordinary convict and women prisoners convicted for political offences should have more accommodation in jails in Delhi and elsewhere. Another suggestion which I would like to make in this connection is this. We read last year in the press that one of the Provincial Governments, during the short space of 15 days, got into existence a jail and they took credit for it. When a Provincial Government could do so with their limited resources, cannot the Government of India construct a new jail for lady prisoners? Then, Sir, another suggestion that was made last time was that criminals were let out in the Lahore jail to make room for political prisoners. You could do this again by sending the ordinary criminals to the district jails. Therefore, I say that the grievance which these ladies had was not that they wanted to go only to Lahore. They wanted to remain in jail, so it did not matter to them where they were kept. What they did want was that they should have proper surroundings, and my Honourable friend's admission that they had no accommodation for them is an admission either of inefficiency or of lack of foresight which he cannot disclaim. I support the motion.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban):

5 P.M. Mr. President, I am certain that nobody on this side of the House is surprised that we are having these discussions a little oftener perhaps than my Honourable friends on the opposite side of the House would desire. But when we consider the atmosphere in which we are living and also consider that we have been sitting in continuous session for nearly two months, it will be admitted that, on the whole, this House has not indulged in discussions of this sort a little too often. Sir, at the very beginning we had a discussion on the Ordinances. We had a Resolution which Members on this side of the House considered exceptionally reasonable but which was construed by my Honourable friends opposite as a vote of censure. It gave this side of the House the opportunity of ventilating their views and, in language that could not be mistaken, of informing my Honourable friends opposite that there was considerable bitterness and ill-feeling in the land. If by any chance they did not agree with that opinion, then we warned them that in a few months they would have to agree to it. Sir, there has been and there is considerable bitterness throughout the length and breadth of this country. If it is not apparent on the surface, believe me it is not because it is not there. And to mislead ourselves or to mislead anybody else, whether they be in this country or outside this country, is, in my humble opinion, a criminal action. We ought to realise the position and we ought to have our eyes open to the state of affairs that exists. I do not know what information is available to my Honourable friends opposite; but, if they consider that all is well in every part of India, I beg to disagree. The movement is going underground and I have not the slightest doubt about it. (Applause from the Opposition Benches); and, therefore, Mr. President, I am not at all surprised at this motion for adjournment of the House.

Looking at the question on its merits, however, as it comes up before us to-day, there is a great deal in which I have to disagree with some of the Honourable Members on this side of the House. The facts of the case appear to me to be fairly simple. There were a certain number of ladies—in England they are all now being called women and I would prefer, without being rude to them in any way, to call them women—in the Delhi jail. Personally, I am not concerned whether they were well-connected or whether they came from the poorest classes. I do not think that has anything to do with the question. A certain number of women were in the jail at Delhi. We have nothing to do on the present occasion as to why they were in jail. We have discussed that question. A certain number of them were in "A" class, a certain number in "B" class and a certain number in "C" class. It was decided that they should be removed from the Delhi jail for good reasons known to Government. It may be due to congestion or it may be that they could not be well looked after here. Anyhow, they were informed that they would be removed and they objected. They stipulated that they must go to a certain jail. Now, whether it is this Government or whether it is a Swaraj Government or whether it is any Indian State, no Government can stand dictation from prisoners. (Applause from Official Benches.) They said they wanted to go to a certain jail. I understand from what the Home Member said that, even that point was considered but it was found that they could not be removed to that particular jail and they were so informed. I have not heard one word said yet from anybody that the jails to which they were to be removed had accommodation which was worse than is provided in the Delhi jail. No allegation has been made that the jails to which they were to be removed, whatever their character, were much worse than the jail at Delhi. Therefore, I take it that they were being removed to jails just as good or just as bad as the jail at Delhi. They refused to go. They carried on their non-co-operation inside the jail as most probably they would have done outside. Under those circumstances, I am at a loss to know what any Government could have done or could do. They begged of them, they implored them to go. I understand that certain well-known gentlemen who happened to be available in jail were asked to help. That is what I believe the Honourable the Home Member said just now. I think he gave out the names of one or two well-known men. He mentioned the name of Dr. Ansari who was asked to persuade them. I also understand from him that the persuasion of these gentlemen resulted in the stoppage of the hunger-strike. Is that correct?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I believe so.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: It seems to me that if those facts are correct, as stated by the Honourable the Home Member, then steps were taken to persuade these ladies to move. But they would not move, and their refusing to move could only result in the use of force by the Police. That has been admitted. Government admit that they did use force. Now, when force is used whether it be against men well-connected or the poorest men, or whether it be against women in any state of life, it is always unpleasant. The use of force always results in retaliation. But my Honourable friend who moved the motion for adjournment did not tell us why force was used by the women police. There must have been some cause, and therefore if there was some cause for using force, he did not mention what it was. It is quite easy to imagine what must have happened. These women must have refused to move, they must have clung together; some force must have been used and there must have been a bit of a tussle and ultimately one or two must have been removed and the rest must have reluctantly followed. On these facts, I regret I am not able to go into the lobby to censure Government.

But, the discussion has had a very useful result and that is as to what is the accommodation that Government are providing under these extraordinary circumstances. That is not a point for a vote of censure, but it arises on this motion which has served a very useful purpose. Are Government taking precautions to see that there is enough jail accommodation, for if the present state of affairs continues, I have not the slightest doubt that Government will require not double, not treble but four times the accommodation they have got at present. If this discussion only results in Government taking proper precautions to have this jail accommodation ready, it will have served a very useful purpose. I agree with every word that my Honourable friends have said with regard to Government seeing to it that all women, whether they be highly placed or the commonest of women, all convicted of political offences should be decently treated. I would on this occasion again appeal to Government to see that the classification is properly judged. That is another point that might well be brought to the attention of Government. Some days you see that men who have been accustomed to live well are put into "C" class and also men who had been put into "A" class before, are put into the "C" class. I do not think that sort of thing should continue. It only adds to the bad blood, adds to the bad feeling, it only adds to the difficulties that we are all going to encounter in a year or two, or perhaps within six months. Therefore, it would be as well that Government took a long view in these matters. All they want to do is to confine these people and stop them from their activities at present. That is all that is required to be done and there should be no malicious action.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi (Burma: Non-European): Mr. President, there was a time, not very long ago, when the Honourable the Home Member had the benefit of serving the Government of Bombay. That also was a time when my Honourable friend Sir Cowasji Jehangir was a Member of the Government of Bombay. Sir, judging from the speeches delivered to-day by the Honourable the Home Member and by Sir Cowasji Jehangir it strikes me that this association has done neither of them any good. (Laughter and Cheers.)

My Honourable friend Sir Cowasji Jehangir quite rightly pointed out to the Government Benches that there is intense feeling in the country and that the movement is gathering strength, whether it be above the surface or below the surface. He pointed out to the Government that it would be a criminal act to minimise or misrepresent the intensity of feeling in the country. I think I am voicing the opinion of the Opposition Benches when I say that nothing done by Government, nothing done by any Government official can cause more bitterness to Indians than the treatment meted out to their women. (Hear, hear.) This is a factor which my Honourable friend Sir James Crear always swayed by his peculiarly cold logic can never take full note of. I was amazed when he informed the House that he saw nothing in the allegations made by my Honourable friend Sardar Sant Singh to justify this adjournment motion. I also listened to the facts narrated by my Honourable friend Sardar Sant Singh and although I have a peaceful disposition, I certainly saw red for a few minutes. If the facts related by Sardar Sant Singh strike the Government Benches as innocuous, if the facts narrated by Sardar Sant Singh fail to move my Honourable friends sitting on the European non-official Benches, then I am afraid the British community, official or non-official, will never realise the strength of Indian feeling, so far as the treatment of India women is concerned. (Hear, hear.)

My Honourable friend Sir Cowasji Jehangir made certain pertinent enquiries and I should also like to repeat those enquiries. Is it the position of the Government of India that the jail administration in Delhi would have come to a standstill if these 15 women had not been removed from Delhi jail to some other jail? Would it not have been possible, assuming that there was congestion in the Delhi jail, would it not have been possible to remove some of the male prisoners from Delhi jail to some other jail and keep the women prisoners here? As a last resort, would it not have been possible to remove from the Delhi jail some of the women prisoners who have been convicted and sentenced under the ordinary law? On this point I want to challenge the statement of my Honourable friend Sir Cowasji Jehangir that this House should not draw any distinction between persons sent to jail under the Ordinances and persons sent to jail under the ordinary criminal law of the land.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: I never said so. I said distinction should be made.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: I stand corrected. Am I to understand my Honourable friend now to say that he did not suggest that whether women prisoners are detained in Delhi jail under the Ordinances or whether they are prisoners under the ordinary criminal law

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: That is not what I said. I say now and I always maintained that there should be a great distinction between political prisoners and prisoners who have been convicted under the ordinary law. But there should be little difference in considering prisoners well-connected and poor people who have been convicted of political offences. There may be a distinction of A and C class by all means. But because a well-connected prisoner happens to be obstinate you cannot let that person off. She or he should get the same treatment as a person who is poor and struggling.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member has made his position clear.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: I apologise to my Honourable friend Sir Cowasji Jehangir for having misunderstood him in any particular. I am glad that I have him with me and the Independent Benches with me when I say that this House will certainly draw a distinction between prisoners whether male or female, who are in jail under the Ordinances and those who are in jail under the ordinary criminal law.

The Honourable the Home Member expressed himself disappointed at the lack of more specific facts from Sardar Sant Singh. I would invite the Honourable the Home Member himself to give fuller facts to the House when he replies to this debate, as to what is the total jail accommodation in Delhi, how many women can be ordinarily accommodated in the Delhi jail, what is the number of women in Delhi jail imprisoned under the ordinary law, and why it was considered necessary to single out these 15 ladies to distribute them all over the Punjab. This House would also like to know whether, when these 15 ladies are separated in this way, two sent to one jail and three to another and so on, there will be any other women prisoners in those other Punjab jails, and what precautions will be adopted to see that the honour of these 15 ladies is safeguarded and that they will not be subjected to ill-treatment, distress, molestation or risk of any kind. Because, ultimately we must come back to this main question, how are we going to allow our women to be treated, whether in jail or outside it? (Hear, hear.)

Mr. President, incidents of this type which have been related in this House to-day will not only help the Congress movement but will also help the revolutionary movement. I ask Sir James Crerar to imagine to himself the feelings of thousands of young men and women who are daily gathering round the revolutionary banner filled with a desire to kill those particular people who have been reported to have subjected these ladies to this violence. I am not here concerned with the point whether it will be right or wrong for these revolutionaries to think of taking such action. But is it not natural for such people who have joined this violent revolutionary movement, to feel at the moment a strong desire to kill persons placed in such positions who subject Indian women to such treatment? Would Sir James Crerar be surprised to read a couple of days hence that one of the Bengal revolutionaries or any other revolutionary, whether he is called a misguided patriot or a dangerous criminal, has killed two or three of these officials who were responsible, according to the reports available to us, for these atrocities committed on these women? I shall not be surprised and I am sure the Opposition Benches will not be surprised. Whither are the Government of India leading these young men and women? The Government of India want to crush the Congress movement; they also want to stamp out revolution and violence. Are these the methods to be adopted? That 15 ladies imprisoned without trial under the Ordinances should be forcibly

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: Did the Honourable Member say they were imprisoned without trial?

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: Without trial except under the Ordinances.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I think the Honourable Member is mistaken. He said they were imprisoned without trial. They were not; they were convicted.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: Does the Honourable the Home Member seriously suggest that any of these women have been sent to jail after a proper trial as a trial under the British constitution and in a British court of law is understood?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: Certainly, Sir.

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: Mr. President, it is very sad to part with a Member of this House, whether official or non-official, with whom one has sat in this House for about four years. But if that is Sir James Crerar's conception of trial under British law, then I for one do not feel any overpowering sorrow at the idea of his leaving the country in the next few days.

Sir, I do hope my Honourable friend Sir James Crerar will make it clear to the House why it was thought indispensable to remove these 15 ladies from the Delhi jail, why they were separated in the manner they have been separated, and what precautions the Government of India or any other Government are going to take in order that these ladies may not be subjected to ill-treatment, insult, molestation or risk of any kind. That, Sir, is so far as future treatment is concerned. But so far as the past is concerned, so far as the maltreatment of these 15 ladies is concerned, that can only be dealt with by a successful censure motion. (Applause.)

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Leader of the House): Sir, I do not wish to speak at any great length, but there are one or two observations which occurred to me in listening to this debate and I felt that I ought to say something. The adjournment procedure, Mr. President, has been devised in order that the House may have opportunities for discussing definite matters of urgent public importance. The subject to-day is the maltreatment of the women political prisoners in Delhi jail in the course of their transfer to mixed jails. I have never heard a debate on a motion for adjournment in which so little has been said on the subject of the motion.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: On a point of order, Sir. Can any Honourable Member question the propriety of the Chair not interfering with Members when they were speaking irrelevantly?

Mr. President (The Honourable Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola): I do not believe that the Honourable Member's contention is that the debate was irrelevant. The Chair would have taken notice if it had been irrelevant. The Chair holds that the debate has been quite relevant. The Honourable Member's contention is that in the discussion which has taken place, sufficient has not been said on the one issue involved to which he wishes to draw attention.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I was not raising for a single moment any question of order whatsoever. I am perfectly well aware, Sir, that you are always ready to control the debates in this House if they tend to go beyond the proper limits. That is not my point at all. But what I noticed was a certain timidity amongst the Opposition speakers and a desire to deal with matters on the fringe of the subject rather than to get near the heart of it. That appeared even in the Honourable the Mover's speech, because as I watched the clock I began to wonder whether he was leaving himself quite sufficient time to give the facts to which he wished to draw the attention of the House; and it seemed to me that he was leaving himself very little time indeed as in fact it turned out. And since my Honourable friend the Home Member read a statement of the facts from the report which he had received, I have not heard his version seriously challenged by any one of the speakers. In those circumstances, Sir, I think I am entitled to claim that our version of the facts holds the field, and the position was very aptly summarised, if, I may say so, by my Honourable friend Sir Cowasji Jehangir in his speech. He put it very briefly and very clearly, and the sum and substance of it is just this, that force was used, that it was necessary to use it if jail discipline was not to go by the board altogether, and that no facts had been alleged to show either that the orders given were unreasonable or that in carrying them out more force had been used than was necessary. It was precisely on those grounds that he announced his inability to vote for the motion. I admit that debates of this kind, which give an opportunity for Members on the unofficial Benches to let Government know what the feeling in the country is—I am not questioning that—but still when we come to the point of whether this motion should be carried or not, then I claim that on the specific point put before the House no sufficient grounds have been advanced for an adverse vote. Now, one speaker—I think it was my friend, Mr. Aggarwal—suggested that it was not right to send women prisoners to places where they might be treated improperly, and my Honourable friend, Mr. Munshi, made a similar suggestion. Now, it occurred to me, as it occurred to my Honourable friend, Sir Cowasjee Jehangir, to ask what reason anybody has to suppose that in the Ambala and Ludhiana jails they are in fact in any greater danger of improper treatment than they are in the Delhi jail? Surely that cannot be assumed. . . .

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: Because they are separated from one another.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Does the Honourable Member suppose that the Delhi jail is not a mixed jail as my Honourable friend the Mover called it?

Mr. Jehangir K. Munshi: But the fifteen have been separated from one another. Here they were not separated but were kept together in the Delhi jail.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Does the Honourable Member suppose that in other jails there is no separation? My Honourable friend is I think a little unfair when, having been betrayed by his own ignorance of the facts, he attempts to cover his tracks, as he did when he made the suggestion that these prisoners had not been tried. I cannot congratulate him on the manner in which he attempted to wriggle out of that little difficulty.

In all seriousness, we do realise on the Government Benches the sensitiveness of Indian opinion when there is any apprehension or any fear that Indian women have been cruelly or unfairly treated. We do realise it. But there is also this to be said, that it is very important, if and when accusations are made of such treatment and are shown to be without foundation, that this House, while ready to condemn what is in fact maltreatment, should also not be ready to censure Government when all that has been done is to carry out the plain duty of any Government in the position which actually arose. That is the plain issue before the House, Mr. President, and personally I have great confidence in what the verdict of the House will be.

Several Honourable Members: The question may now be put.

Mr. President: I accept the closure. The question is that the question be now put.

The motion was adopted.

Sardar Sant Singh: Sir, I would not like to detain the House much longer, but I would like to answer certain questions put to me by the Honourable Sir Cowasjee Jehangir and the Honourable the Leader of the House. The question which has been definitely asked of me by the former is, what is the difference between the jails to which they have been sent and the jail from which they were sent? The reply is very simple. The jails to which these lady prisoners have been sent are meant for habituals alone. Habitual jails are meant for those convicts who have got more than one conviction at their credit. They are hardened criminals and are therefore kept in separate jails. The ladies were sent amongst hardened criminals who would not hesitate to outrage their modesty by shouting abusive slogans even from a distance. The second reason is that the jails to which they have been sent are not intended for female prisoners. Female jails under the jail regulations are provided. In my speech I made it clear. Probably either I was not clear or this portion of my speech was not listened to with attention. Female jails are separate jails in the Punjab, and probably there is only one such jail and that is at Lahore. The other jails have a female ward and that ward is meant for under-trials and no jail can detain female prisoners after their conviction for more than a week. This is the illegality which I pointed out, and if this illegality ceases to be an illegality because it is committed by the agents of the Honourable the Home Member, then I have nothing more to say. But if it is an illegality, then I charge the executive authorities for violation of law in whose name they are transferring these prisoners. If this is not a specific allegation, I fail to see what is a specific allegation.

I now refer to the second point. The Honourable the Home Member has stated that it was impracticable to accede to the wishes of these lady prisoners. The reply to this is also very simple. Since the time these lady prisoners have been transferred from Delhi jail, the female ward lies vacant up till now. I challenge my Honourable friend to say that there are any lady prisoners now there. (Opposition Cheers.) The third specific fact I am going to supply is this: that during the last civil disobedience movement of 1930 the European ward of this jail accommodated fifteen lady prisoners. Now it is being used by their four favourites, who are known as approvers in the Delhi conspiracy case. Could these approvers not be removed elsewhere and these ladies accommodated instead? My friend Mr. Munshi has asked me how many women can be accommodated in Delhi jail. I think I have supplied the answer and this answer should satisfy everybody.

The question has been put to me—what led to the use of force towards these lady prisoners? The reply again is very simple. Is not a man or woman entitled to protect her honour or chastity or modesty, specially when it is being threatened by an illegal act of the executive? Were they not justified in demanding that they should be sent to the female jail? If this demand was legitimate, certainly they were justified in offering satyagraha when being removed to places not meant for their detention by the law of the land.

These are the facts which I want to place before the House. I will say in the end that the real cause which leads to such abuses of power lies in the fact—in the mentality which at this time prevades the European Benches as well as the Government Benches: namely all the members of the family of a person belonging to the Congress school must be considered beyond the pale of laws and decent treatment. The most recent instance of the working of this mentality that I have come to know is of the wife of one Bhagat Singh, who is now detained in the Subzimandi lockup. She fell ill and went round all the hospitals to be treated. Every female hospital refused to admit her and she died only yesterday for want of medical treatment. (Cries of "Shame, shame" from the Nationalist Benches.) These are the facts Sir. The Honourable the Home Member opposite wanted facts. We challenge the mentality of the Government. If they really want any co-operation or any settlement of this burning question, and one day it must come as my friend Mr. Ranga Iyer said, they must not make themselves slaves of such a mentality. In the meantime, Sir, bitterness has increased, and is increasing immensely. It has increased to such an extent that it will in near future become very difficult for the Englishmen to remain in India. With these remarks I leave my motion in the hands of the House.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: Mr. President, I have only got half a dozen sentences to say, as the hour is somewhat advanced, in reply to what has fallen from the Honourable the Mover of this motion. I am somewhat surprised that an Honourable and learned gentleman—learned in law—should be repeating the statement that the action taken in this case was an illegality. The Honourable and learned gentleman referred to a regulation in the Punjab Jail Manual prescribing, if I understood him correctly, that, owing to the existence of a special female jail at Lahore, every other jail should evacuate the special wing allotted to women as speedily as possible. It is a perfectly proper arrangement in normal administrative times, but it is obvious and must be obvious to the Honourable Member himself that it is purely an administrative and executive order issued with reference to normal times, and when he repeats, on the basis of that reiterated fact, that this was an illegality committed by Government and its officers, he must be aware himself of the veritably untenable character of his allegation. I repeat once more, Sir, that even though the Honourable Member has had an opportunity to reply after his notice had been invited to that fact, there was nothing illegal, nothing to indicate or to substantiate the allegation that the women policemen who were mainly concerned in this matter deliberately and gratuitously maltreated these prisoners or used any more force than was absolutely necessary. He has not said one single word about physical maltreatment of that kind, which I understand to be the gravamen of his charge.

With regard to the other more general matters, I would like to say one word in reply to what, if I may call it the more practical speech made by my friend from Bombay and what was said in confirmation by the Honourable the Leader of the House. We do indeed very fully recognise how sensitive public opinion is with regard to these matters, and I do not think that the House will be prepared to admit, in view of the very complete statement which I made, that it could be reasonably inferred by any reasonable and sensible man that our views in the matter were different or were otherwise exemplified in this particular instance. Not only the Government of India but the Local Governments are fully aware of this and indeed they have precisely the same disposition themselves, and I absolutely deny the suggestion that in any jail in any province in India where women are confined that principle is departed from.

As regards the provisions of the jail accommodation to which my friend from Bombay referred, that is constantly engaging the attention of Local Governments, and I may assure the House that, should most unfortunately the necessity arise which recently, I am glad to say, has become less and less, arrangements will be made by which the detention of prisoners will be adequately and properly provided for.

Mr. President: The question which I have now to put is that the House do now adjourn.

APPENDIX.*

Translation of the speech delivered in Marathi by Mr. N. R. Gunjal, M.L.A., in the Legislative Assembly on the 10th March, 1932, during the General Discussion of the General Budget.

Mr. N. R. Gunjal (Bombay Central Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, the Honourable Sir George Schuster last Monday presented to the Assembly the Government of India's revised estimates for the current year and the Budget estimates for the year 1932-33. The public had already before them a fair outline of this Budget in last September and they were consequently unenthusiastic about it. Since the taxes were raised for a period of eighteen months only in last September, it was unlikely that the Finance Member would resort to a fresh enhancement of taxation now. The people may, however, find some interest in knowing how far the Finance Member's expectations have come to be realised during the last four or five months; and as regards this it will be seen that Government estimates have failed in a rising degree.

At the commencement, no deficit was anticipated in the current year; but the Finance Member had to declare a deficit of ten crores last September. The new increase in the taxation was certified in the teeth of opposition from the whole nation, and even then there appears to be a likelihood of the deficit rising up to 13½ crores, for the current year alone. If, even after the application of the retrenchment axe and the excessive increase in taxation, the Budget cannot be balanced, will it be unreasonable to hold that the Government machinery has seriously gone wrong somewhere? Really the Government of India machinery needs overhauling before it can work smoothly again. The reform needed is that full responsibility should be introduced at the centre and an Indian expert should be appointed as the Finance Minister. Even with the abnormally enhanced taxes the estimated income could not be gathered this year; this is ascribed by Government to the general trade depression. No doubt, that is a true cause to a certain extent, but the present political situation in the country is, to my mind, the more potent cause of it. The import and export figures are instructive in this respect. For the first ten months of 1929-30 figures for imports and exports stood at Rs. 265 and Rs. 201 crores, respectively. The corresponding figures for 1931-32 were Rs. 134 and Rs. 105 crores. Although the fall in trade prices may be one of the causes of this diminution in the imports by Rs. 96 crores, the boycott movement is not the less important cause. It has resulted in the decrease of income from custom duties on sugar and cloth. Therefore, starting of conciliatory political policy is the real effective remedy for an early improvement in the economic condition of this country. Even the Budget figures support this conclusion.

The Budget estimates for 1932-33 provide 129 crores and 96 lakhs as the revenues, 127 crores and 81 lakhs as expenditure and 2 crores and 15 lakhs as the closing balance. The accuracy of these estimates depends largely on the progress that will be made in retrenchment. Next year the military expenditure is estimated at 46 crores and 74 lakhs and His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has warned us that there will be no further scope for retrenchment there. Several Indian leaders have already expressed the view that India is unable to bear so much military expenditure. The popular party should not slacken their demand for curtailment of military expenditure. Taxation has now reached the maximum limit, but even then Sir George Schuster suggests enhancement of taxation on salt, kerosene and other articles of necessity. This discloses the delicate condition to which the Government are reduced. The Finance Member should bear in mind that when he raises the taxes, he has got to give corresponding advantage to the people. Maintenance of peace and order is not the only function of the Government: but it is also their duty to solve the problem of unemployment, to develop the industries in the country, and so on.

The inflation of currency by 35 crores has well served the Government in respect of payment and flotation of debt. Great Britain has been much benefited by the export of gold. Government propose to float a loan of 14½ crores next year. Government securities are going up; this ensures success of the loan, no doubt. But Government must, at the same time, strive to improve the political situation in the country.

The Honourable the Finance Member expressed his regrets over the Budget while presenting it and remarked that he had to present it to the Assembly as ordered by His Excellency the Viceroy. The Assembly Members need not feel sorry. The agriculturists had no profit last year and the rainfall was defective this year. The times have changed. If Government realise this, it is strange that they should pursue the policy of adding to the burden of taxation on agriculturists and other professions. This year the farce of retrenchment has started, and Indians have fallen victims thereto. There have been several instances of the Indians coming under retrenchment, but there are only stray instances of Europeans coming thereunder. We feel very much for this discrimination.

One word more; the deficit in the next year's Budget is to be met by floating a fresh loan. Every year Government go in for loans thereby swelling their indebtedness. I accused Government of insolvency last year; that might have given an offence to them. I have to say that any subordinate Government under the Government of India could have, with propriety, declared insolvency on account of the heavy burden of debts; but the Government of India, being the supreme Government, have not got this way open to them. That is the only difference.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Thursday, 24th March, 1932.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at Eleven of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

DELHI MOVE ALLOWANCE AND SIMLA HOUSE RENT ALLOWANCE.

915. Sardar G. N. Mujumdar: (a) Is it a fact that the Army Headquarters staff receive an allowance of 33 per cent. as Delhi move allowance?

(b) Has this allowance been reduced by 10 per cent. and, if so, since when?

(c) Are Government aware that the Delhi move and the Simla house rent allowances are not utilised for identical purposes?

(d) Is it a fact that Government intend to reduce the Simla house rent allowance of their Secretariat staff by ten per cent.?

(e) Are Government aware that most of the Simla Banks and landlords, have refused to reduce rents?

(f) Is it also a fact that Government are not prepared to renew the House Accommodation Act?

(g) Are Government prepared to leave the Simla house rent allowance untouched? If not, why not?

The Honourable Sir James Orerar: (a) No. The Delhi moving allowance is given on a graduated scale and varies with pay. The Honourable Member will find the actual rates stated in my reply to Pandit Nilakantha Das' unstarred question No. 272 of the 21st March, 1930.

(b) Yes, with effect from the beginning of the current Delhi season.

(c) Yes.

(d) to (g). I would invite the Honourable Member's attention to the reply I gave on the 23rd to Mr. Gunjal's starred question No. 895.

COMPLAINT BY MR. P. D. SHARMA OF ASSAULT AT A MEETING OF THE CITIZENS' LEAGUE, DELHI.

916. Mr. Bhuput Sing: (a) Is it a fact that a meeting of the Citizens' League was held at the Queen's Garden, Delhi and that villagers from outside Delhi and the staff of municipal schools and boy scouts were brought to the meeting?

(b) Are Government aware that Mr. P. D. Sharma, News Editor of the Hindustan Times was not allowed to move an amendment to a resolution moved at the meeting?

(c) Are Government aware that when Mr. Sharma insisted on his right to move the amendment prominent conveners of the meeting assaulted and insulted Mr. Sharma?

(d) Is it a fact that the City Magistrate, the City Kotwal and other police officers were present at the meeting and are Government aware that they did not intervene in spite of Mr. Sharma's appeal to them?

(e) Is it a fact that the Citizens' League is patronised by the Chief Commissioner of Delhi?

(f) Is it a fact that Mr. Sharma lodged a complaint under sections 323 and 504 of the Indian Penal Code against Rao Bahadur Dr. Hari Ram, President of the meeting, Khan Sahib S. B. Abdullah, Senior President of the Delhi Municipality and convener of the meeting, Haji Rashid-uddin, Secretary of the Citizens' League, for assault and insult in the Court of the Additional District Magistrate, Delhi?

(g) Is it a fact that the Magistrate held that the complaint related to a "trifling affair" and that he dismissed it as he did not want to encourage "frivolous and unreasonable complaints of this nature"?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: Government understand that the Magistrate's decision to which reference is apparently made has formed the subject of an appeal to the Sessions Judge. It would therefore be improper on my part to express any opinion on the facts of the case at this stage.

COMPETITION OF JAILS WITH INDUSTRIAL CONCERNS.

917. Mr. J. Ramsay Scott: (a) Is it a fact that there has been a recent protest from the Associated Chambers of Commerce with reference to jails competing with private enterprise?

(b) Will Government please state the number of cases in which such competition has occurred in the last year in respect of jails in the following Provinces:—(1) Madras, (2) Bengal, (3) Burma, (4) Bihar and Orissa, and (5) the United Provinces?

(c) Is it a fact that in Government's Resolution of December 23rd, 1922 the Governor General in Council was disposed to think that the apprehension of possible competition of jails with established industries is more imaginative than real?

(d) Is it a fact that during the last year several large orders for blankets have gone to jails, and do Government propose to reconsider the question?

(e) If the answer to part (d) be in the affirmative, what do they propose doing?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) The Secretary to the Associated Chamber of Commerce, India and Ceylon, communicated to the Government of India a copy of a resolution passed by the Associated Chambers on the subject on the 14th and 15th December, 1931. This resolution took the form of a request that Government would again lay down their policy on this question for the guidance of local Governments.

(b) I am unable to state the number of cases in which orders have been given to jails during the last year.

(c) Yes.

(d) A small portion of an order for 96,800 blankets for the Army was placed with a jail in Bihar and Orissa after tenders had been called for.

(e) The policy of the Government of India is clearly stated in the Resolution referred to by the Honourable Member, and they do not consider it necessary to take further action. I may inform the Honourable Member, however, that in view of a resolution passed by the Associated Chamber of Commerce in 1929 the Government of India enquired from all Local Governments whether this policy was being in some instances disregarded. All replies were in the negative.

PRICES OF JAIL-MADE ARTICLES.

918. Mr. J. Ramsay Scott: Are the prices quoted by jails below the market rates and with reference to the following statement by Government in their Resolution of 23rd December, 1922, "In view of the necessity for fixing the price of jail-made articles according to the ordinary market rate for such articles co-operation between the Jail and the Industries Department should therefore include consultation of the latter by the former on the prices to be fixed for jail products", has the above procedure been carried out? If not, why not?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: The answer to the first part of the question is in the negative. As regards the second part, I understand that this procedure is followed.

PRICES OF JAIL-MADE ARTICLES.

919. Mr. J. Ramsay Scott: If the rates quoted by jails in tenders are below those quoted by private firms,

- (a) what is the maximum amount of loss a jail is allowed to make; and
- (b) is it a fact that the procedure laid down is designed to prevent jails underquoting private firms?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: My information is that as a rule the prices of jail manufactures are if anything slightly above the market rate, and that difficulty is sometimes found in disposing of them.

INSTALLATION OF MACHINERY IN JAILS.

920. Mr. J. Ramsay Scott: In view of overproduction everywhere, will Government state,

- (i) whether it is their policy to countenance the spending of public money on equipping jails with power machinery; and
- (ii) what steps they will take to prevent the further installation of new machinery?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (i) The Government's policy is enunciated in their Resolution of the 19th December, 1922. They have no reason to believe, as I have explained in answer to a previous question, that there is any deviation on the part of the Local Governments.

(ii) The Honourable Member is, doubtless, aware that "Jails", under the Devolution Rules, is a Provincial Reserved subject, subject only to central legislation. The further installation of new machinery in jails is thus the concern of local Governments who are fully alive to the present financial and industrial situation.

SAVING ON THE ROYAL AIR FORCE AS IT AFFECTS INDIA.

921. Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: (a) Are Government aware that a cut of £700,000 has been effected in the amount of expenditure on the Royal Air Force in England?

(b) If so, will Government please state whether it will mean any saving on the Indian expenditure so far as the Royal Air Force in India is concerned?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) Yes.

(b) No, Sir; Indian revenues do not benefit directly from the reduction in the Air Force Estimates in England but the proportionate reduction made in the Estimates in England is very small compared with that made in the Royal Air Force Budget in India.

WITHHOLDING OF A CABLE SENT BY PANDIT MADAN MOHAN MALAVIYA.

922. Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: (a) Are Government aware that in response to requests from England for information for the purpose of the impending debate on Indian affairs in the House of Commons, Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya wanted to send a cable to the India Review, the Daily Herald, and the Spectator, from Benares; and that the messages were accepted for which charges amounting to Rs. 230 were paid; but subsequently the messages were not despatched on some pretext or other, and Pandit Malaviya's request to send the cable as a deferred private message to Mr. George Lansbury, and Mr. Tom Williams, for which he offered to pay additional charges, was refused?

(b) Do Government propose to make an inquiry into this, and make a statement on the subject as to why the message was withheld?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) and (b). An investigation into the case has been made, and it transpires that the message in question was wrongly accepted by the Benares Telegraph Office at press rates as the sender was not a registered correspondent in India for the despatch of foreign press telegram (which registration has to be arranged in consultation with the foreign administrations). In the course of handling the message, for the rapid transmission of which to Bombay special line arrangements had been made, the mistake was detected and efforts were made to ascertain whether the sender would pay for the message at appropriate rates. It appears that a prolonged discussion ensued and that the sender's representative was unable to agree to the proposal. The transmission of the message was accordingly stopped. It is reported that no request was made for the transmission of the message at deferred rates.

DISPERSAL OF A MEETING IN THE QUEEN'S GARDEN, DELHI, AND ARREST OF MUFTI KIFAYATULLAH.

923. Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: (a) Is it a fact that a severe lathi charge was made on an assemblage of unarmed Mussalmans in the Queen's Garden, Delhi, on Friday, the 11th March, 1932, who wanted to hold a meeting protesting against the promulgation of Ordinances?

(b) Is it a fact that "Sub-Inspector Abdul Wahid communicated to the people assembled that if in the meeting anything was said against the Ordinances, the meeting would be declared unlawful. The conveners had hardly time to reply, when some among the audience replied that they would speak against the Ordinances. This was the signal for a severe lathi charge on the audience"?

(c) Why was Mufti Kifayatullah arrested, and his house searched?

(d) Are Government aware that Mufti Kifayatullah is the President of the All-India Jamiat-ul-Ulema; and is held in high esteem by his people?

(e) Will Government kindly make a statement on the subject, and state under what law or Ordinance, a meeting designed to protest against the promulgation of Ordinances, could be declared an unlawful body?

The Honourable Sir James Cramer: (a), (b) and (e). I would refer the Honourable Member to the statements made by me in the course of the debate on the adjournment motion on the 14th March.

(c) and (d). A reference is invited to parts (a) and (b) of the answer I gave yesterday to the Honourable Member's question No. 896.

RETRENCHMENT OF CERTAIN JUNIOR INSPECTORS OF ACCOUNTS ON THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

924. Mr. Muhammad Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Is it a fact that some junior Inspectors of Accounts on the North Western Railway were permanent on 31st March, 1929, but were declared temporary? If so, why?

(b) Were the Railway Board informed by the Chief Accounts Officer that they were actually permanent, but were declared temporary arbitrarily? If so, did the Railway Board consider the question of withdrawing the retrenchment of those junior Inspectors?

(c) Will Government please state as to what action was taken on that letter from the Chief Accounts Officer?

(d) Was it not the order of the Railway Board not to reduce those, who had put in more than one year's service?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) On separation of Audit from Accounts the number of permanent posts of Inspector of Station Accounts was reduced from 47 to 38 as expected to follow from certain reforms then contemplated and pending the introduction of these reforms nine temporary additional posts were sanctioned. With the completion of these reforms it has been found possible to reduce the number of Station Inspectors by more than nine and final orders are expected shortly to issue.

(b) and (c). I am informed by the Controller of Railway Accounts that he has not been able to trace the letter to which the Honourable Member refers.

(d) No. The orders were that temporary men with over one year's service should be considered as having equal rights with permanent men.

Mr. Gya Prasad Singh: When these posts of Inspectors of Accounts were declared temporary, were they served with notices of discharge? If not, why not?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I must ask for notice of that question.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: At the time of separation of audit from accounts, we were given to understand that that would mean reduction of expenditure. So from the reply is it not clear that officers were reduced from 47 to 38, but soon afterwards their number was again increased by nine. May I ask whether the people dismissed at the time were reinstated when the new posts were created?

Mr. P. R. Rau: The temporary posts were created immediately. No-body was discharged at the time.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: There was really no reduction of expenditure then, because you first reduce and then immediately you create new posts?

Mr. P. R. Rau: Not with regard to these particular posts.

RETRENCHMENT OF CERTAIN JUNIOR INSPECTORS OF ACCOUNTS ON THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

925. Mr. Muhammad Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Is it a fact that in spite of the pay, allowances and grades of the junior Inspectors of Accounts on the North Western Railway, having all been reduced since the separation of audit from accounts, the question of their retrenchment is still being considered? If so, why?

(b) Is it a fact that only one Inspector of Station Accounts was retrenched on the East Indian Railway? Is it a fact that they are mostly Europeans and Anglo-Indians?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) The question of retrenchment has nothing to do with the revised scales of pay introduced for freshly employed staff on the separation of audit from accounts. I understand that by certain changes in procedure, it is expected that a reduction in staff is possible.

(b) The answer to both parts of the question is in the negative.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: May I know whether the question is still under consideration?

Mr. P. R. Rau: Yes.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY EXAMINATIONS.

926. Mr. Muhammad Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Is it a fact that Junior and School Certificate Examinations of the Cambridge University are held in India?

(b) Will Government kindly state the difference between the qualifications of persons, who pass the School Certificate Examination of Cambridge University from centres situated in the British Isles and of those who pass the same from Indian Centres?

(c) Will Government kindly state what is the position of the School Certificate Examination of Cambridge University for Government service in India?

Sr. Frank Noyce: (a) Yes.

(b) I am not sure what the Honourable Member means by his references to qualifications. The only difference in the conditions applicable to candidates appearing for the examinations is that candidates from India who appear for the School Certificate Examination and are not of European descent are permitted to substitute certain oriental languages for Latin or Greek for the purpose of securing exemption from the Previous Examination of Cambridge University. Students who avail themselves of this concession are not allowed to offer themselves as candidates for the Oriental Languages Tripos.

(c) The School Certificate Examination is ordinarily considered to be equivalent to the Matriculation Examination of an Indian University for purposes of admission to Government service.

QUALIFICATIONS OF ENGINEERS OF THE SUPPLEMENTARY RESERVE AND TERRITORIAL ARMY.

927. Mr. Muhammad Anwar-ul-Azim: Is it a fact that the Army Council decided last year that Associate Membership of the Institution of Structural Engineers is now to be regarded as qualifying Royal Engineer Officer of the Supplementary Reserve and Territorial Army for Engineer pay? ~~Have~~ the necessary instructions giving effect to this decision been issued as amendments to paragraphs 194 (b) and 645 (b) of the Regulations for the Supplementary Reserve and the Territorial Army respectively?

Mr. G. M. Young: Paragraph 194 (b) of the Regulations for the Supplementary Reserve has been amended in the sense indicated by the Honourable Member. I have not seen a recent copy of paragraph 645 (b) of the Regulations for the Territorial Army; but I am prepared to take it from the Honourable Member that it has been similarly amended.

QUALIFICATIONS AND COMMUNITIES OF ENGINEERS IN THE MILITARY ENGINEERING SERVICE.

928. Mr. Muhammad Anwar-ul-Azim: Will Government kindly state the number of Associate Members of the Institution of Structural Engineers, London, serving as Assistant Engineers or Sub-Divisional Officers in the Military Engineering Service in India? How many of them are Muslims, Hindus and Sikhs?

Mr. G. M. Young: The information is being collected, and a reply will be laid on the table.

QUALIFICATIONS AND COMMUNITIES OF ENGINEERS IN STATE RAILWAYS.

929. Mr. Muhammad Anwar-ul-Azim: Will Government kindly state the respective number of graduates and Associate Members of the Institution of Structural Engineers, serving on Indian State Railways in the grade of Executive Engineers, Bridge Engineers, and Assistant Engineers? How many of them are Muslims, Hindus and Sikhs?

Mr. P. R. Rau: Government have no information.

COMMUNITIES OF ENGINEERS IN STATE RAILWAYS.

930. *Mr. Muhammad Anwar-ul-Azim: Will Government kindly state the respective number of Muslim, Christian, Hindu and Sikh Engineers and Inspectors of Works, serving on each of the State Railways in India with the percentage of the total in each case?

Mr. P. R. Rau: The available information is given in the Classified List of State Railway Establishment and in the Classified List of subordinate staff on State Railways, copies of which are in the Library.

QUALIFICATIONS AND COMMUNITIES OF ENGINEERS IN EACH PROVINCE.

931. *Mr. Muhammad Anwar-ul-Azim: Will Government kindly state Province by Province, the respective number of graduates and Associate Members of the Institution of Structural Engineers, London, serving as Engineers? How many of them are Muslims, Hindus and Sikhs?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhoré: It is presumed that the question refers to the Engineers employed in the Public Works Department. The information available will be found in the Government of India, Department of Industries and Labour, Public Works Branch, Classified list of establishment corrected up to the 30th June, 1931, a copy of which is in the Library. The Government of India have no information beyond what is contained in this list.

India.

 ENGINEERING EXAMINATIONS HELD IN INDIA

932. *Mr. Muhammad Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Are Government aware that the Associate Membership Examination of the Institution of Structural Engineers, London, is held in India at the Bombay centre and conducted by Mr. R. V. Sabnis of the University of Bombay?

(b) Are Government aware that the Associate Membership Examination of the Institution of Civil Engineers, London, is held in India and took place last year at Delhi and was conducted by Mr. Sykes, M.L.A.?

(c) Will Government kindly state whether they are aware that the School Certificate Examination of Cambridge University, Associate Membership Examination of the Institution of Structural Engineers, London and Associate Membership Examination of the Institution of Civil Engineers, London, which are held in India, are called Correspondence Examinations?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhoré: (a), (b) and (c). Government have no information.

STANDARD OF QUALIFICATIONS OF ENGINEERING EXAMINATIONS IN LONDON AND INDIA.

933. *Mr. Muhammad Anwar-ul-Azim: Will Government kindly state the difference between the qualifications of persons who pass the Associate Membership Examination of Structural Engineers, London, or of the Institution of Civil Engineers, London, from centres situated in the British Isles and of those who pass the same examinations from Indian Centres?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore: Government have no information.

COMMUNITIES OF ENGINEERS IN THE TELEGRAPH ENGINEERING SERVICE.

934. Mr. Muhammad Anwar-ul-Azim: Will Government kindly state the number of Engineers in the Telegraph Engineering Service of India? How many of them are Muslims, Hindus and Sikhs?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore: It is understood that the Honourable Member refers to the superior Telegraph Engineering Service. There are 57 officers in this service of whom one is a Muslim, twenty-one are Hindus and three are Sikhs.

APPOINTMENT OF COMPUTOR FOR CALCULATION AND DESIGN OF STRUCTURES IN THE PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT, DELHI.

935. Mr. Muhammad Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Is it a fact that in the Delhi Public Works Department the post of Computor for calculation and design of structures was held in abeyance in May, 1931?

(b) Is it a fact that in the Delhi Public Works Department, the post of Computor for calculation and design of structures is now again extended? If so, will Government kindly state:

(i) what the duties of the post are; and

(ii) what the works are for which the post is extended?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore: (a) Yes.

(b) The post has since been abolished.

REDUCTIONS OF APPOINTMENTS OF ASSISTANT DIRECTORS GENERAL, POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS.

936. Mr. H. B. Fox: (a) Will Government please state whether it is a fact that the Posts and Telegraphs Sub-Committee of the Retrenchment Advisory Committee in paragraph 106 of their Report in dealing with the appointment of Assistant Directors General stated "In our opinion the emoluments are higher than the kind of work and responsibilities entrusted to these officers demand" and recommended their replacement by lower paid officers designated "Assistant Deputy Directors General"?

(b) Is it a fact that Government have accepted these recommendations and have given effect to them?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) Yes.

(b) Government have accepted the specific recommendation.

APPOINTMENT OF DEPUTY DIRECTORS GENERAL, POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS.

937. Mr. H. B. Fox: (a) Will Government please state the principles which guide them in selecting officers to fill the posts of Deputy Director General, Posts and Telegraphs?

(b) In view of the acceptance by the Government of the recommendations of the Posts and Telegraphs Sub-Committee of the Retrenchment Advisory Committee, have Government considered the advisability of selecting officers other than Assistant Directors General for promotion to Deputy Director Generalship?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) Promotion to the posts of Deputy Director General, Posts and Telegraphs, is made by selecting those officers in the Post and Telegraph Branches, respectively, of the Department who are considered to be best fitted for the discharge of the duties connected with such posts.

(b) The selection of officers for promotion to Deputy Director Generalship was not confined to officers holding the posts of Assistant Directors General. The latter cadre has, now, however, been abolished.

APPOINTMENT OF DEPUTY DIRECTORS GENERAL, POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS.

938. Mr. H. B. Fox: (a) Is it a fact that recently an Assistant Director General of the Posts and Telegraphs has been promoted to officiate as Deputy Director General?

(b) If the answer to part (a) be in the affirmative, will Government please state why a Deputy Postmaster General was not selected instead of an Assistant Director General?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) Yes, he has been officiating since the 16th January, 1931.

(b) For the reason given in the reply to part (a) of question No. 937.

ACCOMMODATION OF WOMEN PRISONERS IN THE DELHI JAIL.

939. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Are Government aware that A and B class women-prisoners are being accommodated in an overcrowded insanitary mud plastered barrack in Delhi Jail?

(b) Is it a fact that these prisoners last year were accommodated in a pukka kothi fitted with fans which is called the European Ward?

(c) Is it a fact that approvers in the Delhi Conspiracy Case are now being accommodated in the said European Ward?

(d) Do Government propose either to provide better accommodation for women-prisoners or shift the approvers from the European Ward to make it available to the former?

The Honourable Sir James Orerar: (a) "A" and "B" class women prisoners are accommodated in a barrack with a spacious courtyard. The walls, though mud-plastered, are also whitewashed. The barrack is neither insanitary nor overcrowded.

(b) Yes.

(c) Yes.

(d) Women prisoners are being transferred to other jails where suitable accommodation is available.

DISCRIMINATION IN THE PROVISION OF FANS IN JAILS.

940. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Is it a fact that fans are provided in the European Ward, Delhi, as well as in the European Ward, Central Jail, Lahore?

(b) Do Government propose to remove any discrimination that may be existing between European convicts and Indian A and B class prisoners in Indian Jails?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) Yes.

(b) The policy of Government is clearly stated in the communiqué issued on the 19th February, 1930, and is, I believe, being scrupulously followed.

POLITICAL PRISONERS ARRESTED AND RELEASED IN DELHI.

941. *Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Will Government please state the names of such political prisoners as were arrested in Delhi under the Emergency Power Ordinance and subsequently released?

(b) What were the charges brought against them and under whose orders were they detained?

(c) Why were they let off?

(d) If the evidence justifying their detention was not enough, do Government propose to take action against the authority responsible for the detention?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) One such case has occurred up to date, that of Nand Lal, son of Matwala Ram of New Delhi.

(b) There were good grounds for believing that he was engaged in objectionable activities within the meaning of section 3 of the Emergency Powers Ordinance. The arrest was made with the knowledge of the Local Government.

(c) He was released on promising to take no part in objectionable activities and to devote himself to his studies.

(d) Does not arise.

PAUCITY OF MUSLIMS IN THE MILITARY ENGINEERING SERVICE, PRESIDENCY AND ASSAM DISTRICT.

942. *Seth Haji Abdoola Haroon: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to an article under the heading "Muslims in all-India Service", which was published in the Mussalman of Calcutta, dated 23rd February, 1932?

(b) Is it a fact that as alleged therein (i) there are 26 Accountants, of whom none is a Mussalman, (ii) out of 211 permanent clerks, there are only seven Muslims and (iii) out of 32 temporary hands, there is only one Muslim in the Accounts Section of the Military Engineering Service Presidency and Assam District? If not, will Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing correct figures?

(c) Are Government satisfied that the above proportion of Mussalmans in the above Branch is adequate? If not, what action do they propose to take in the matter so as to increase the number of Muslim employees sufficiently?

(d) Is it correct that three Mussalmans out of eight as shown in the article above-mentioned are going to be discharged whereas only 14 non-Muslim clerks out of 243 have been served with discharge notices?

(e) Are Government prepared to instruct the authorities concerned to cancel the discharge order of three Mussalmans in view of the above facts, as also, for the future, to appoint more Muslims?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) Yes.

(b) From the figures quoted it appears that the reference is to the total establishment of the Controller of Military Accounts, Presidency and Assam District, and not only to the portions of that establishment attached to Military Engineer Service formations. This office ceased to exist as a separate entity from the 1st January, 1932, but I lay on the table a statement of the total establishment prior to that date and the numbers employed on Military Engineer Service work; with the number of Muslims in each category.

(c) The Military Accounts Department is an all-India Department; the personnel are recruited on an all-India basis and are liable to transfer to any part of India. The proportions of the various communities are therefore regulated on an all-India basis and not on the basis of individual sub-offices, the composition of which varies from time to time. For the Department, as a whole, recruitment is being carried out in accordance with the principles laid down for the redress of communal inequalities.

(d) The reply is in the affirmative so far as Muslims are concerned. The correct number of non-Muslims served with notices of discharge is 21 out of 227.

(e) Government see no need to issue any further orders. The general orders were that in selecting personnel for discharge the proportions of the various communities as they stood before retrenchment should be maintained to the nearest practicable figure. I am satisfied that in the Military Accounts Department, as a whole, effect has been given to those orders.

ABOLITION OF THE ECCLESIASTICAL DEPARTMENT.

943. Seth Haji Abdoola Haroon: (a) Is it a fact that the Retrenchment Committee has reported in favour of the total abolition of the Ecclesiastical Department of Government, and, if so, what action do Government propose to take to give effect to the recommendation?

(b) In view of the financial stringency in the country, have Government considered the question of the total abolition or considerable reduction in the strength of the Ecclesiastical Department, and if so, what decision have Government arrived at on the question?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) and (b). I would refer the Honourable Member to my reply to a similar question No. 866 by Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh on the 23rd March, 1932.

REDUCTIONS OF SALARIES AND ALLOWANCES, ETC. OF IMPERIAL SERVICES.

944. Seth Haji Abdoola Haroon: In view of the financial stringency in the country, have Government considered the question of the permanent reduction in the salary, allowances, leave rules and pensions of the Imperial services, and if so, what decisions have been reached on the question?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: In regard to present incumbents of the Services I would refer the Honourable Member to the statements I have already made upon this question in this House. In regard to future entrants to the various Services, the question of revision of terms of service is now under consideration, but it must take some time before final conclusions can be reached.

STATUS OF HEADMASTERS IN RAILWAY SCHOOLS.

945. Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad: (a) Is it a fact that both the Principal and the Headmaster of the Oakgrove School are in the Railway officers' grade and are treated as gazetted officers in the matter of all privileges?

(b) Is it a fact that not a single Headmaster of the East Indian Railway Indian High Schools has the status of a gazetted Railway officer?

(c) In what cadre of the Railway service are the Headmasters of the East Indian Railway Indian High Schools included?

(d) Is it a fact that some two years ago these Headmasters were given the pay and status of Provincial Service officers?

(e) Is it a fact that in the East Indian Railway, employees having the same pay and grade as these Headmasters now have, are not treated as gazetted officers but only as upper subordinates?

(f) Are Government prepared to remove this anomaly and treat the Headmasters of the Indian High Schools as Railway gazetted officers in all respects except pay?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) The post of Principal, Oakgrove School, is in the superior service, but not the post of Headmaster.

(b) Yes.

- (c) These posts are in the subordinate grade.
- (d) Their pay was brought into line with the rates of pay of teachers in Provincial Government Schools of equivalent standard.
- (e) Yes.
- (f) No. Government do not think there are sufficient grounds for making the change suggested.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: May I ask what, in the case of High Schools, is the difference between the duties of a Principal and of a Headmaster?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I am not sure what exactly is the difference in the duties: probably the Principal attends to the administrative side.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: In the case of High Schools, you have got the post of Principal for administrative work and the post of Headmaster for teaching work in these days of retrenchment when the Railway Budget is in a frightfully bad condition, and may I ask why there should be two posts? I want to know whether it is not an expensive luxury to have two officers for a High School, one a Principal for administrative work and another a Headmaster for teaching work?

Mr. P. R. Rau: I will have that point considered Sir, but as I have already told the House, I am not aware what are the specific duties of the Principal and of the Headmaster.

PROMOTION OF ROUTINE CLERKS IN THE SECRETARIAT.

946. Mr. K. Ahmed: Will Government be pleased to state:

- (a) whether in the Imperial Secretariat Departments clerks are promoted from the Third (Routine) to Second Division and Second to special grade and First Division; if so, how; if not, why not;
- (b) whether men are recruited direct in the Second and First Divisions or promoted from Third Division; if the former, why; if the latter, what special merit and capacity are required for such promotions;
- (c) whether a clerk in the Third (Routine) Division performing the duties of diarising, despatching and typing can be promoted to the higher or special grades; if so, how do they get the opportunity to qualify themselves for such promotions; if not, why not;
- (d) whether the duties referred to at (c) above are of less importance and do not establish one's claim for promotion to the higher or special grades; if so, how and why;
- (e) how many such promotions came into effect in each Department since 1928;
- (f) how many clerks in the Third and Second Divisions in each Department are drawing the maximum pay of their grade and have not been promoted to the next higher grades and for what reasons;

- (g) how the orders contained in Home Department, Office Memo. No. F. 80/27-Est., dated 8th August, 1927—regulating promotions—have been applied to in cases of those referred to above;
- (h) why clerks in the Second Division drawing the maximum pay of their grade having less than 25 years' permanent service at their credit should not be promoted to the special or higher grades as a matter of course; and
- (i) what is the object of fixing 25 years' permanent service limit for promotion to the special grade of the Second Division?

The Honourable Sir James Orerar: (a) to (d). Under the rules for recruitment to the clerical staff of the Government of India Secretariat, appointments to the First and Second Divisions are made partly by direct recruitment and partly by departmental promotion. Routine Division men who are promoted to the Second Division under these rules are eligible for promotion to the Special Grade of that Division if they fulfil the conditions laid down for such promotion and are also eligible for promotion to the First Division if they are considered fit to perform its duties. The test for such promotion is their ability to do more important work, than that allotted to the routine division. I am not prepared to undertake a general definition of merit and capacity but in practice it is not difficult to decide whether a Third Division clerk is or is not fit for promotion to a higher Division.

(e) to (g) The information is not readily available and in view of the time and labour involved in collection I feel unable to impose this labour on Departments.

(h) and (i). The Special Grade in the Second Division is intended to reward men who have rendered long and meritorious service but have no chances of promotion to the First Division. The object would be defeated if the Honourable Member's suggestions were accepted.

CONFLICTING INTERPRETATIONS UNDER THE COURT FEES ACT.

947. Diwan Bahadur Harbilas Sarda (on behalf of Mr. Jagan Nath Aggarwal): (a) Are Government aware that contradictory and conflicting interpretations have been put by the different High Courts in India, on Articles 4-5, Schedule 1, of the Court Fees Act, 1870?

(b) Are Government aware that while the Bombay and Madras High Courts' interpretation of the said articles (vide I. L. R. 4, Bombay, page 26 and I. L. R. 50, Mad. 488), is liberal and favourable to the subject, that of the Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts (vide I. L. R. 31 All. 294 and I. L. R. 57, Calcutta 679) has made the filing of a review petition more expensive than an appeal or a plaint for the identical relief in some cases?

(c) If the reply to the above be in the affirmative, what steps do Government propose to take to remove this conflict and make the application of this provision of the Court Fees Act uniform throughout British India?

The Honourable Sir James Orerar: (a) and (b). Government are aware of the conflict of judicial opinion disclosed in the cases to which Honourable Member refers.

(c) The matter is primarily one for local Legislatures, and I would refer the Honourable Member to the answers given in this House to questions Nos. 757—761 on the 28rd September, 1931, by Pandit Ram Krishna Jha. As pointed out therein "Judicial Stamps" is, under the Devolution Rules, a provincial subject, only subject to legislation by the Indian Legislature as regards the amount of court fees levied in relation to suits and proceedings in the High Courts under their original jurisdiction, and certain local Legislatures have passed Acts amending the Schedules to the Court Fees Act, 1870. For the reasons explained in my reply to question No. 761 referred to above Government do not propose to undertake legislation for prescribing a uniform scale of court fees for the whole of India.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A TUBERCULOSIS SANATORIUM AT ABBOTTABAD.

948. *Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) With reference to the reply given by Government to question No. 410, asked by me, on the 27th March, 1931, will Government be pleased to state if the Local Administration has considered the advisability of establishing a sanatorium like that at Dharampur in a suitable place near Abbottabad for accommodating and treating tuberculosis patients who frequent Abbottabad in the summer and who, it is proposed, are to be prevented from coming to Abbottabad in future and taking advantage of the cold climate?

(b) Do Government propose to consider the desirability of:

- (i) meeting the expenditure required for a sanatorium by obtaining an adequate share of contributions from the funds of the Municipalities of the five Districts of the Province,
- (ii) arranging in the meantime for a temporary camp for the use of the patients in the next summer at a selected place,
- (iii) avoiding the legitimate complaints of people of the country against the Government orders banning the visits of the patients to Abbottabad, and
- (iv) deputing a selected experienced I.M.S. Muslim officer to hold charge of the sanatorium?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) Government have considered the question of establishing a sanatorium at Haripur, but have not been able to give effect to the scheme owing to financial stringency.

(b) No; in view of the impending constitution of the North-West Frontier Province as a Governor's province.

PROVISION OF AN ELECTED BOARD FOR PESHAWAR CANTONMENT.

949. *Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: With reference to the reply given by Government to unstarred question No. 227 asked by me on the 23rd February, 1931, will Government be pleased to state if they have considered the report received from the Local Administration and, if so, whether they propose to give Peshawar Cantonment an elected Board especially on the province becoming a Governor's Province with a Provincial Council working with effect from the 15th April, 1932?

Mr. G. M. Young: The attention of the Honourable Member is invited as regards both points in his question, to the reply which I gave on the 15th September, 1931, to his starred question No. 307.

INCORRECT LISTS OF VOTERS IN THE NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE.

950. Khan Bahadur Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if they are aware that:

- (i) the inhabitants of the North-West Frontier Province, bitterly complain that thousands of names of voters have been left out when their lists were prepared; and
- (ii) it was absolutely impossible for them to know the omission in time, leave their zamindari work and have the lists of their constituencies corrected in the inadequate number of days allowed for the purpose?

(b) If the replies to the above questions be in the affirmative, do Government propose to give them more time to have the lists corrected and avoid their complaints?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) and (b). Government have received no complaints and are not aware of any popular dissatisfaction or of any desire to postpone the inauguration of the provincial Legislature in order to revise the electoral registers.

The elections in the North-West Frontier Province are being conducted by the Local Government according to rules and regulations under section 72A of the Government of India Act, a section at present in force in that province. It will be for the local Legislature to raise discussion on matters arising out of the electoral procedure.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Are Government aware of the fact that in the North-West Frontier Province there had been an abnormally large number of revision applications and much more than in any other province?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I am indebted to my Honourable friend for the information.

Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi: Are the Government aware that there is no method of bringing the complaints of the people to the notice of the Local Government except through this Assembly?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I find it very difficult, Sir, to accept that statement. I should have thought that there must be means of communicating complaints to the Local Government. I presume that objections to the electoral rolls are sent in according to the procedure in force.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: May I ask, Sir, whether Government will ascertain whether there is discontent in the North-West Frontier Province amongst those people whose names have not been entered on the electoral role?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Government have no information to that effect.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: May I ask whether Government will inquire in the matter?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I do not find sufficient reason to institute an inquiry.

Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi: In view of the questions put in the Assembly, will Government be pleased to recommend to the Local Government to see that the complaints which are now made, say, within a week's time, are heard by the officials?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I shall be much indebted to my Honourable friend, if he will communicate to me any information he has as to complaints. In that case I shall be glad to make inquiries and bring the matter to the notice of the Local Government.

SETTLEMENT OF THE COMMUNAL PROBLEM.

951. *Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the proceedings of the Consultative Committee held on the 22nd February, 1932, and the conclusion to which the Chairman of the Committee came in regard to the immediate decision of the communal question?

(b) Are Government aware that the speech of the Secretary of State made in the House of Commons on February 29th, 1932, relating to the communal problem has not satisfied the Mussalmans of India?

(c) Are Government aware that a session of the All-India Muslim Conference was held at Lahore on the 20th March, 1932, and that therein the Muslim leaders who were at the Round Table Conference were expected to justify their policy so far?

(d) Are Government aware that an overwhelming majority of the politically-minded Mussalmans of India are exasperated at the attitude of Government in the matter and are anxiously considering how best they might demonstrate their anxiety for immediate decision of the communal problem?

(e) Do Government propose immediately to allay the apprehensions of the Mussalmans of India by announcing their decision of the communal problem?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I would invite the attention of the Honourable Member to the statement issued by His Majesty's Government on the 19th of March, 1932, a copy of which is laid on the table.

The following communiqué was issued today:

"His Majesty's Government have taken note of the inability of the Consultative Committee of the Round Table Conference to undertake the settlement of the Indian communal problem and of the Committee's request, transmitted by His Excellency the Chairman, that a decision should be given by His Majesty's Government. In his statement, made to the Round Table Conference on December 1, the Prime Minister speaking on behalf of His Majesty's Government, found it necessary to use the following language:

'I desire to warn you that if the Government have to supply, even temporarily, this part of your constitution, which you are unable to supply for yourselves, and though it will be our care to provide the most ample safeguards for the minorities so that none of them need feel that they have been neglected, it will not be a satisfactory way of dealing with the problem'.

'Let me also warn you that if you cannot come to an agreement on this among yourselves, it will add considerably to the difficulties of any Government here which shares our views of an Indian constitution, and it will detract from the place which that constitution will occupy amongst those of other nations'.

"This being the attitude of His Majesty's Government towards this problem, they have naturally received the information just referred to with great regret. They have been informed that the absence of a communal agreement is now impeding progress with the programme indicated in the Prime Minister's statement of December.

"In these circumstances, His Majesty's Government think it well to reiterate the pledge which the Prime Minister gave in the same statement, that, in the event of the failure of the communities to present a settlement acceptable to all parties as the foundation upon which to build, His Majesty's Government were determined that even this disability should not be permitted to be a bar to the progress, and that they would be compelled to apply a provisional scheme.

"His Majesty's Government desire to make it plain that they realise the responsibilities involved in this undertaking, and will not fail to discharge them. They are engaged in a careful re-examination of the difficult and controversial questions which arise, and it is their firm intention that there shall be no avoidable delay."

Maulvi Muhammad Shafee Daoodi: Are Government aware that the announcement made by His Majesty's Government on the 19th March has also not satisfied the Muslim public?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: That, Sir, I think is a question of opinion.

Mr. K. P. Thampan: Are Government aware that the politically minded Hindus are considerably excited over the fact that the Government propose to give 33½ per cent. of the seats to the Indian States, 33½ per cent. to Muslims, 10 per cent. to Europeans and other vested interests, 10 per cent. to the minorities and so on and that Hindus come nowhere in the future Constitution?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: No, Sir, I am not aware of that.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: May I say, Sir, that this division which has just been mentioned is what is known in logic as a cross division

Mr. President: Order, order.

INTRODUCTION OF THE CONTRACT SYSTEM IN THE CASH AND PAY DEPARTMENT OF THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

952. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Will Government please state (i) whether a couple of years ago the question of introducing the contract system in the Cash and Pay Department of the East Indian Railway was considered, but given up, and (ii) whether it is again proposed to hand over the Cash and Pay Department of the East Indian Railway to a Lahore contractor?

(b) If the reply to the above questions be in the affirmative, will Government please state (i) whether public tenders have been called for again and if so, in what newspaper and when, and (ii) whether the contractor to whom it is proposed to hand over the Cash and Pay Department of the East Indian Railway has tendered for the contract along with others?

(c) If the reply to part (b) be in the negative, will Government please state (i) why public tenders have not been invited, and (ii) why it is proposed to give the contract to a particular contractor in preference to others?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) (i) The question of introducing the contract system in the Cash and Pay Department of the East Indian Railway has been under consideration for some time. Tenders were invited in 1929, and the lowest tender was accepted by Government, but at a later stage when details of arrangements were under consideration, the proposal fell through.

(a) (ii) The question is under consideration, but no decision has yet been arrived at.

(b) and (c). Government consider that no useful purpose will be served by inviting fresh tenders.

INTRODUCTION OF THE CONTRACT SYSTEM IN THE CASH AND PAY DEPARTMENT OF THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

953. Mr. S. C. Mitra: Are Government aware that the Royal Commission on Labour have, in their report dealing with the question of Indian State Railways, strongly condemned the system of cash contract on Indian Railways? If so, will Government please state whether the recommendation of this commission is being given effect to in the case of the Cash and Pay office, East Indian Railway? If not, why not?

Mr. P. R. Rau: Government are aware of the opinion of the Royal Commission on Labour, and will give due consideration to it when arriving at a decision.

REPLACEMENT OF THE CONTRACT SYSTEM ON THE BENGAL NAGPUR RAILWAY BY THE DEPARTMENTAL SYSTEM

954. Mr. S. C. Mitra: Is it a fact that till recently a contract system was enforced on the Bengal Nagpur Railway but has since been replaced by the departmental system? Will Government please state why the departmental system has been introduced on the Bengal Nagpur Railway in place of the contract system?

Mr. P. R. Rau: A departmental system was I believe introduced in the Cash and Pay Department of the Bengal Nagpur Railway in 1928 as a result of certain frauds discovered there.

INTRODUCTION OF THE CONTRACT SYSTEM IN THE CASH AND PAY DEPARTMENT OF THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

955. Mr. S. C. Mitra: Will Government please state what will become of the hundreds of employees at present employed in the Cash and Pay Department of the East Indian Railway, if and when the department is handed over to a contractor and what special advantages are likely to result from the introduction of the contract system in place of the departmental system, which has been in existence on the East Indian Railway ever since the Railway was constructed?

Mr. P. R. Rau: As I have already informed the House, no decision has yet been arrived at on the question, but if it is finally decided to adopt the contract system, the question of finding employment for the existing staff will be one of the questions that will receive most careful consideration from Government.

VISIT TO KALIMPONG OF MR. STRONG, COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, BENGAL.

956. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Will Government please refer to the answer given by the Honourable Sir George Schuster to parts (a), (b) and (c) of unstarred question No. 15, dated 8rd February, 1932, in which it has been asserted that it is "an erroneous assumption" that Mr. Strong, Commissioner of Income-Tax, Bengal, visited Kalimpong on recess, and reconcile the same with the answers given in the Council of State on 21st September, 1931, by the Honourable Mr. A. H. Lloyd to questions 109 and 110, and particularly to parts (b) and (d) of question 110 which amounts to a positive admission of the fact that Mr. Strong visited Kalimpong on recess?

(b) Do the Government agree that the statements made by the Honourable Mr. A. H. Lloyd and the Honourable Sir George Schuster as referred to above are contradictory? If so, will they please state which of them is correct, and who is responsible for the other incorrect statement? If the former's statement is correct, will Government please now give an answer to parts (a), (b), (c) and (e) of Assembly unstarred question No. 15, dated 3rd February, 1932? If, on the other hand, the latter's statement is correct, will Government please state the circumstances under which Mr. Strong was away from his Headquarters and stayed for about a month at the hill station of Kalimpong where he proceeded direct from his inspection at Jalpaiguri, as admitted by the Honourable Mr. A. H. Lloyd in his answer to Council of State question No. 109(d), dated 21st September, 1931?

(c) Will Government please further refer to their answer to part (d) of the unstarred Assembly question No. 15, dated 3rd February, 1932, which amounts to an admission of the fact that Mr. Strong recessed at Kalimpong for a month, and reconcile the same with the answers given by them to parts (a), (b) and (e) of the same question in which it has been asserted that Mr. Strong did not visit Kalimpong on recess?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) and (b). The statement that I made in reply to the Honourable Member's previous question amounts to a partial correction of the reply given by Mr. Lloyd in the Council of State in which by inadvertence "recess" was referred to. To this extent the replies may be said to be contradictory. The statement that I gave was correct. Mr. Strong visited Kalimpong in May on casual leave after making an inspection at Jalpaiguri. Owing to ill-health, he had to remain at Kalimpong for 28 days in all, of which 19 days were working days. After the first ten days, which was the period for which he had originally intended to take casual leave, he disposed of official work.

(c) I cannot understand how the Honourable Member can construe my reply to part (d) of his question as involving an admission that Mr. Strong visited Kalimpong on recess seeing that I had stated categorically my reply to parts (a), (b) and (e) of the question that the visit to Kalimpong in May was not made on recess.

SANITARY AMENITIES FOR KAROL BAGH, DELHI.

957. Mr. S. O. Mitra: (a) Will Government be pleased to give reasons as to why ordinary amenities of life, viz., drainage, filtered water, metalling and levelling of roads and lanes, name boards on them, indication boards, etc., have not been provided in Karol Bagh (a part of Western extension)? Is it a fact that the people of that place are paying ground rent (now to Nazul Department from the 1st October, 1925), and all the other municipal taxes, viz., house tax, octroi tax, wheel tax, etc., according to the laws of the city since 1914? How do Government propose to compensate the inhabitants of that place who have passed their 18 years out of the ninety years lease granted by Government?

(b) Is it a fact that the Delhi Municipality dump night soil, refuse of the city, etc., and bury dead animals in the vicinity of this area, and if so, are Government aware that this results in a foul and unhealthy atmosphere for the people of that place? What action has been taken by Government in this connection?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: (a) Drainage and water supply schemes for Karol Bagh have been worked out, but are held in abeyance on account of financial stringency. Meanwhile everything that can be done with available resources is being done to ameliorate the conditions of life there. The income from direct taxation from that area does not exceed Rs. 8,000 a year, while the Municipal Committee is spending about Rs. 38,000 a year on the maintenance of essential services. The question of granting compensation scarcely arises as the improvements referred to by the Honourable Member are held up for causes over which the authorities concerned have no control.

(b) Government are informed that night soil and refuse of the city are not being dumped in Karol Bagh. Only the local product I understand is dumped close by. The number of dead animals, which are buried at a distance of three quarters of a mile from the locality, is small and the Health Officer states that the inhabitants of the area are in no way being inconvenienced.

NUMBER OF MUSLIMS AND SIKHS IN THE ROYAL AIR FORCE HEADQUARTERS.

958. Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: (a) Will Government kindly state:

- (i) the total number of permanent Superintendents, assistants and clerks in the Royal Air Force Headquarters;
- (ii) the number of members of the minority communities among them; and
- (iii) the number of Muslims and Sikhs among those referred to above?

(b) Is it a fact that the number of Sikhs in the Royal Air Force Headquarters ministerial establishment is greater than that of Muslims? If so, will Government please explain their reasons for keeping the number of Muslims below that of Sikhs?

Mr G. M. Young: (a) (i) Superintendents 4, assistants 11, and clerks 43. Twelve appointments are intended for, and held by, airmen and ex-airmen.

(ii) Superintendents, none, assistants 2 and clerks 15.

(iii) Superintendents—Muslims and Sikhs, none, assistants, Muslim 1 and Sikh 1, clerks, Muslims 7 and Sikhs 5.

(b) The answer to the first part of the question is in the negative. The second part, therefore, does not arise.

CRITERIA FOR APPOINTMENT OF VARIOUS COMMUNITIES TO GOVERNMENT SERVICES.

959. Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: Do Government take into consideration the total numerical strength of the various communities in the population of the country in making allotments to the various services? If not, will they state what are their criteria for making appointments and how they make up communal inequalities?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: The numerical strength of communities whose representation in the services is desired under the orders of February, 1926 is taken into general consideration in broadly deciding whether a community is under-represented or not, but as has been stated on many occasions no definite percentage has been fixed for the representation of any minority community. The second part of the question does not therefore arise.

DISCHARGE OF A MUSLIM CLERK FROM THE ROYAL AIR FORCE HEADQUARTERS.

960. Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: (a) Is it a fact that a Muslim clerk was recently discharged by the Royal Air Force Headquarters on the plea of his not having been able to pass the examination of the Public Service Commission, and that the vacancy held by him had been filled by a non-Muslim?

(b) If the reply to the above is in the affirmative, will Government please state:

- (i) whether the Muslims are at present adequately represented in the ministerial establishment of the Royal Air Force Headquarters;
- (ii) if not, why a temporary unpassed Muslim clerk has been discharged without being given an opportunity to qualify himself or without being replaced by a qualified Muslim; and
- (iii) what steps Government have taken during the last 12 months in connexion with the recruitment of Muslims in the Royal Air Force Headquarters to remove the inadequacy in their representation and what steps in this direction they propose to take hereafter?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) The clerk was discharged because he was unqualified and was employed temporarily in a post not intended for a member of his community.

(b). (i) Yes. There are 8 Muslims in a total establishment of 46 Indians.

(ii) and (iii). Do not arise.

STATEMENTS LAID ON THE TABLE.

RECRUITMENT OF MUSLIMS IN THE OFFICE OF THE DEPUTY ACCOUNTANT-GENERAL, POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS, DELHI.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster (Finance Member): I lay on the table the information promised in reply to starred question No. 749, asked by Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad on the 14th March, 1932, regarding recruitment of Muslims in the office of the Deputy Accountant-General, Posts and Telegraphs, Delhi.

(a) 37 appointments to temporary posts in the lower division and six appointments to the Sorters' cadre have recently been made in the office of the Deputy Accountant-General, Posts and Telegraphs, Delhi.

(b) No. The correct number of minority community men appointed to posts in the lower division is 11. Out of these, 8 are Muslims, 2 Sikhs and one Christian. One more post was offered to a Muslim but he failed to join immediately. The post has, however, been reserved for a Muslim and will be filled up shortly. In the Sorters' cadre, both the posts open to the minority community were filled up by Muslims.

(c) Does not arise as the communal proportion has been maintained in accordance with the orders of Government.

PLATFORMS, THE CREATION OF WHICH HAS BEEN CONDONED IN AMBALA CANTONMENT.

Mr. G. M. Young (Army Secretary): I lay on the table the information promised in reply to parts (a) and (d) of starred question No. 368, asked by Sirdar Sohan Singh on the 15th February, 1932, regarding platforms the creation of which has been condoned in the Ambala Cantonment.

(a) Yes.

(d) As complete records of all platforms condoned under the orders of 1926 are now available in the General Land Register of the Cantonment, Government do not propose to take any action in the matter.

THE HINDU-MUHAMMADAN HIGH SCHOOL, AMBALA CANTONMENT.

Mr. G. M. Young: I lay on the table the information promised in reply to starred questions Nos. 555 and 557, asked by Bhai Parma Nand on the 29th February, 1932, about the Hindu-Muhammadan High School, Ambala Cantonment.

Question No. 555.

(a) Yes.

(b) I am informed that the estimated liabilities of the school amount to about Rs. 11,400.

(c) Yes.

Question No. 557.

(a) The maintenance of a high school by a Cantonment Authority is discretionary under section 117 (d) of the Cantonments Act, 1924.

(b) I am informed that the Cantonment Authority have nothing on record to this effect; a memorial received by them protesting against the enhancement of the present house scavenging tax contained a reference to the School.

GOVERNMENT SERVANTS MURDERED IN COMMUNAL AND POLITICAL DISTURBANCES.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar (Home Member): I lay on the table the information promised in reply to starred question No. 1059, asked by Kunwar Haji Ismail Ali Khan on the 29th September, 1931, regarding Government servants murdered during communal and political disturbances during the last five years.

BOOKS PROSCRIBED BY THE CHIEF COMMISSIONER, AJMER-MERWARA.

Sir Evelyn Howell (Foreign Secretary): I lay on the table the information promised in reply to starred question No. 34, asked by Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh on the 26th January, 1932, regarding certain books which were proscribed by the Chief Commissioner, Ajmer-Merwara.

(a), (b) and (d). Yes. Both books contain matter the publication of which is punishable under Section 124-A, Indian Penal Code. A representation in respect of the latter was however received from the Sasta Mandal, Ajmer, and the Chief Commissioner, Ajmer-Merwara, in view of the generally unobjectionable nature of its contents, withdrew the order under Section 99-A, Criminal Procedure Code, in respect of it.

(c) The duty of preparing English translations of vernacular documents is entrusted to qualified officials. Government do not consider that any useful purpose would be served by giving the names of these officials.

(e) I would refer the Honourable Member to the reply I have given to parts (b) and (d) and invite his attention to page 120 of the book "Yug-Dharma" and page 80 of "Aniti-Ki-Raha Par". I have no information as regards the latter part of this question. Every local Government has power to proscribe under Section 99-A, Criminal Procedure Code.

(f) Yes.

*One daffadar.

"CORRESPONDENCE" COLLEGES IN INDIA.

Sir Frank Noyce: I lay on the table the information promised in reply to starred question No. 336, asked by Mr. Goswami M. R. Puri on the 13th February, 1932, regarding 'Correspondence' colleges in India.

(a) and (b). There are no "Correspondence" colleges in India, that is colleges which seek to impart instruction through correspondence.

CLOTH SEIZED FROM THE ALL-INDIA SPINNERS' ASSOCIATION.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I lay on the table the information promised in reply to starred question No. 140, asked by Mr. Bhuput Singh on the 3rd February, 1932, regarding the All-India Spinners' Association.

The Gandhi Ashram at Bhagalpur was notified under section 3 of the Unlawful Association Ordinance, 1932. It was found on possession being taken that some rooms were used as a Khaddar Cloth shop and as under section 4 it was necessary to take possession of the moveable property the cloth was also taken possession of and removed to police station for safe custody. Orders were subsequently passed directing the restoration of the cloth, etc., to the All-India Spinners' Association or their representative.

INCOME-TAX APPLICATIONS REJECTED BY THE COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX BOMBAY PRESIDENCY.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I lay on the table the information promised in reply to starred question No. 654, asked by Mr. Lalchand Navalrai on the 7th March, 1932, regarding the number of applications for reference to High Court received and rejected by the Commissioner of Income-tax Bombay Presidency.

I regret that I cannot undertake to supply the information for which the Honourable Member has asked. In order to compile the figures it would be necessary to examine the files relating to between 4,000 and 5,000 revision petitions. This would involve an amount of labour that I am not prepared to impose on a staff that has been kept down to the bare minimum strength necessary on account of the need for economy.

With reference to the heading of the third and last column of the Honourable Member's statement I invite his attention to the reply that I gave to the starred question No. 655 that he asked on March 7th, 1932.

PICKETING OF LIQUOR SHOPS IN THE NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE.

Sir Evelyn Howell: I lay on the table the information promised in reply to starred question No. 456, asked by Kunwar Haji Ismail Ali Khan on the 22nd February, 1932, regarding picketing in the North-West Frontier Province.

(a) Yes.

(b) Picketers were arrested and sentenced for breaches of the law and where it was necessary to do so were forcibly dispersed under section 31 of the Police Act and Chapter IX of the Criminal Procedure Code.

(c) Yes.

(d) Does not arise.

SUSPENSION OR REDUCTION OF RECRUITMENT BY THE PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION.

The Honourable Sir James Orerar: I lay on the table the information promised in reply to starred question No. 133, asked by Mr. Nabakumar Sing Dudhoria on the 3rd February, 1932, regarding suspension or reduction of recruitment by the Public Service Commission.

Statement of the position referred to in the reply given to Mr. Nabakumar Sing Dudhoria's question No. 133 on the 3rd February, 1932.

Services for which recruitment by the Public Service Commission has been suspended.	Remarks.
Indian Audit and Accounts Service, Military Accounts Department, Imperial Customs Service, Indian Railway Accounts Service.	No examination was held in 1931 and none will be held in 1932. It is not possible to say at present how long suspension will continue.
Indian Forest Service	No examination was held in 1931. It is proposed to suspend recruitment in 1932 also for the present.
Indian Service of Engineers	Recruitment has been suspended pending a final decision on the question whether the Irrigation Branch of the Indian Service of Engineers should be provincialised.
Superior Railway Services (other than the Indian Railway Accounts Service).	Recruitment not suspended altogether but will be made on a very restricted scale till the return of normal conditions.
Ministerial services	It is not possible to say when the next examination will be held until the position resulting from retrenchments is clear.

REDUCTION OF CERTAIN APPOINTMENTS ON STATE RAILWAYS.

Mr. P. R. Rau (Financial Commissioner, Railways): I lay on the table the information promised in reply to part (c) of starred question No. 259 asked by Rai Bahadur Lala Brij Kishore on the 12th February, 1932.

(c) One post of Executive Engineer (Senior scale) was abolished and one post of Deputy Chief Engineer and one post of Senior scale officer (Power) were held in abeyance.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO THE PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. President: Non-official Members will now proceed to elect four Members to the Committee on Public Accounts. There are 6 candidates whose names are printed on the ballot papers which will now be supplied to Honourable Members in the order in which I call them.

(The Ballot was then taken.)

ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO THE STANDING FINANCE COMMITTEE FOR RAILWAYS.

Mr. President: Honourable Members will now proceed to elect 11 Members to the Standing Finance Committee for Railways. There are 28 candidates whose names are printed on the ballot papers which will now be supplied to Honourable Members in the order in which I call them.

(The Ballot was then taken.)

THE BENGAL CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT (SUPPLEMENTARY) BILL—contd.

Mr. President: Further consideration of the Bill to supplement the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1930, as reported by the Select Committee.

Mr. E. F. Sykes (Bombay: European): Sir, I very nearly finished last night when I was pulled up by the hands of the clock pointing to four. I am afraid I must go back a little over what I said yesterday, so as to connect the main part of my speech with the end which we were so near to.

Further one or two Members have expressed a desire to see, even at a distance, the map which I had prepared to illustrate what I had to say. The House will observe in the centre a large blob here. I may mention that this map represents an area something like 250 miles square. I mention that so that Members may get an idea of the distances. (The Honourable Member then proceeded to explain with reference to the map in his hand the position of the various places he referred to.) This on the banks of the Benas which runs right across the map is Deoli. This is Nasirabad; that is Ajmer; that is Jaipur; and this is Bhawani Mandi. These are the markets of this area, Deoli being in the centre. The scale is one-millionth or 1.014 inches to 16 miles. A further point that this map will illustrate is this: if Members will look at this central spot, they will see from the colouring the number of states there are in this neighbourhood. They will also observe that on the right bank of the Benas this is the solitary patch of British territory: going down in this direction (South) you find no more until you come to the Nerbudda or beyond. I mention this to illustrate that this is British territory purely in a technical sense.

Yesterday I began by saying that the errors of Governments generally rose from one of two sources and sometimes from both. One, the lack of information, and the other, reluctance to recede from a position if it becomes untenable. I hoped to be able to supply the information that was lacking in this particular case and asked the House to see that the other error was not committed. I then proceeded to explain the position of Deoli in two respects, first its salubrity and second its remoteness. I do not wish to detain the House very long by repeating what I said about the salubrity, because I think it is fairly well known. The remoteness is much better illustrated by this map, because you see, Sir, Deoli stands at the junction of these two main roads which after uniting proceed to Kotah and here branching again the main branch goes to Jhalrapatan whence two separate branches lead in different directions into Malwa. After that, I think the House will agree with me that the remoteness of Deoli has been exaggerated.

I would like to refer to a comment in the papers that I saw this morning. It remarked that Mr. Sykes endeavoured to defend his beloved Rajputana from the Bengal terrorists, which is exactly what every one else is trying to do. It is what the Americans call "passing the buck". Bengal wants to get rid of these detenus and nobody wants to accept them; we are all in the same position. But after the demonstration that I have given to the House, it is impossible to accept Deoli as a sufficiently remote place for people who are universally agreed to be most disagreeable neighbours.

Now, Sir, I will come to the amendment that I have put down. I think that when I was interrupted last night, what I said was that, as far as the amendment was concerned, I was not particularly insistent on the exact wording of it; I was quite prepared to accept any modification that the Government were prepared to offer provided they would choose a more suitable location for these gentlemen, and I am quite willing to withdraw it on those terms or to accept any modification that will have the same effect, but I am not quite certain really that any great change is required. If the Governor's provinces in India with their enormous area and diversity of conditions cannot find a suitable place for these people, I consider the matter is a very serious one. Further, Sir, if all the Governor's provinces are so constituted in their temperaments that they are unwilling to come to the assistance of Bengal in its distress the outlook for a Federated India is not a very bright one. We have not yet had any explanation of the reason why the Bengal Government is totally unable to provide for these people themselves. An examination of the map of Bengal shows that there are quite a large number of sites where remoteness could be had in combination with the Bengal life which is considered to be so desirable and so unlikely to be obtained in Rajputana. Sir, I have detained the House quite enough. I hope that the information I have given is quite sufficient to show to the Government and to the House that the present proposals for the execution of this Bill when it becomes an Act, are far from being suitable, and I hope the House will prevent the Government from maintaining their position out of sheer obstinacy.

Mr. S. C. Mitra (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions: Non-Muhamadan Rural): Sir, I have great pleasure in supporting the motion of my friend Mr. Sykes. Though I could not closely follow either the speech or his arguments yet I am in full sympathy with his amendment.

[Mr. S. C. Mitra.]

because it restricts the transfer of the detenus only to Governor's provinces. I do not know if this amendment is made on behalf of the whole of the European Group (Several Members from the European Group: "No, no"); if that is so, I think the Honourable Members of the European Group are anxious to amend this obnoxious measure to a certain extent. One of my principal grounds is this, that in section 4 of this Bill it is contemplated that these detenus will be brought beyond the purview of section 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code, though the Honourable the Law Member in one of his earlier speeches said that though these prisoners cannot get any assistance from section 491, the general principles of habeas corpus will not be denied to them, because the High Courts have their plenary power and their inherent jurisdiction to deal with cases if anybody is detained illegally

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter (Law Member): Might I explain the position, Sir. That is not what I said; I dispute the proposition that beyond 491 the High Court has got any other power. This is a matter on which there are differences of opinion in the different High Courts. The Calcutta High Court has taken the view that 491 is exhaustive, whereas Madras and Bombay have taken a different view.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: Then I stand corrected. I think that now that the Honourable the Law Member thinks that the High Courts have no inherent or plenary power beyond the four corners of section 491

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: When I used the expression plenary power, I meant that the High Court has got the power which 491 gives it. If a detention is not in accordance with any Act, then the High Court can intervene, because the detention is not legal. That was my contention.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: Unfortunately, if these detenus are transferred to provinces directly under the Central Government, they will have no protection from any High Court. Even though there will be a Judicial Commissioner whose powers though allied to those of the High Court in certain matters are not exactly identical in all respects to the powers of the High Courts. So I think if we accept the amendment of Mr. Sykes, at least these prisoners will have some chance to go to a High Court in case of any illegality. We also find, Sir, that in these centrally administered areas the rules are in some cases different. I know for example in Bengal jails non-official visitors are permitted to see the prisoners and report about them, though the Government in their wisdom select a separate class of non-official visitors to see political prisoners. To report about ordinary prisoners they select anybody and everybody who they think would be suitable, but as regards the political prisoners, they make a special selection of people who might perhaps be helpful to Government even in reporting about these detenus. But unfortunately I know from my friend Diwan Bahadur Harbilas Sarda that in Ajmer Jail there is no provision even for non-official visitors. Even in this respect, if the detenus are transferred to Governor's provinces, they will have non-official visitors to report if the rules promulgated by the Government are observed. As a matter of fact, there are occasions when these rules and regulations are seemingly good, but where are the people to see that they are enforced properly in the places of detention? The Honourable the Home Member may stand up and ask me for specific cases. But how is it possible for me or for anybody else, because if one goes within 100 yards of the jail he will be arrested, and how can we give specific instances? What comes out of the jail is by rumours, and then there is the provision of selected jail visitors. Government take care to choose as visitors, titled non-entities, who are afraid even to speak the truth which may be unpleasant to Government. If they are sent out to these outlying districts like Deoli, about which I merely read in the Imperial Gazetteer as follows:

"Deoli lies on an open plain, 57 miles South East of Nasirabad. . . ."

—I think that is the nearest railway station, that is 14 miles from Ajmer —

"The station was laid out by Major Thom, commanding the late Kotah Contingent. Lines exist for a regiment of Native infantry and a squadron of Native cavalry. The station is garrisoned by the 42nd Deoli Regiment, which up to 1905 was known as the Deoli Irregular Force. Deoli is situated on the triple boundary of Ajmer, Jaipur, and Mewar, and is the headquarters of the Haroti and Tonk Political Agency."

So, it was no exaggeration when we said that it was 70 miles from Ajmer and 57 miles away from the nearest railway station. Sir, I find that there is enough sense in my Honourable friend Mr. Sykes' amendment which only says that these people may be transferred to Governor's provinces, and I support his motion.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar (Home Member): Mr. President, in the elaborate and somewhat involved disquisition of the Honourable gentleman who moved this amendment, there were two sentences which I think I understood. The first was that in which he dilated upon the art of tilting at windmills as a somewhat unprofitable occupation. That, Sir, is a proposition which seems to me quite unimpeachable. And the second one which interested me even more was when he summed up his estimate of the opinions which had been received on this Bill as being that every one had approved heartily of the idea but had raised every obstacle to carrying it out. The Honourable gentleman was kind enough to put a few red flags on behalf of the Government on the ground which he regards as a little bit sticky. I wonder whether he himself has not been in some danger of falling precisely into those errors himself. The Honourable Member seemed to attach a very great deal of importance as a ground against the selection of Deoli as a possible site for a detention camp, to the fact that it has a good market. I think that that particular aspect of the question may bear a totally different construction to Honourable Members who take a different view of the Bill from his own, because if he is quite clear that there is a very good market there, which is perfectly true, in matters of diet and the like arrangements can more easily be made for the health and comfort of the detenus. Surely that is a commendation rather than otherwise. He quoted also the opinion of a Local Government on the first circulation of the Bill for opinion. But I should like to inform the House that the selection of Deoli for this purpose was made with the greatest care. It was inspected and explored from all points of view by an officer of the Government of India, by a specially qualified officer of the Government of Bengal, and by the head of the Local Administration, and they all concurred that for the requirements of the Act Deoli seemed to comply with every reasonable requirement in a very satisfactory way. Therefore I am somewhat at a loss to understand why the Honourable gentleman is so solicitous for Deoli. I do not know whether it is some question of local patriotism; I am not quite sure whether it may not be some question of local interest. But I must say quite frankly that, when I am dealing with a matter of public interest and importance, one which both the Local Government principally concerned and the Government of India consider as of very great public interest and public importance, I cannot possibly allow parochial and perhaps pecuniary interests of that kind to affect my judgment. And as an illustration of the utility of the kind of assistance with which the Honourable gentleman proposes to encumber me, I would point out that he put forward two constructive and practical ideas of his own. He approved, he said, of the principle of the Bill. It had been passed by the House and by the Select Committee, and the principle of the Bill could not therefore now be impugned. But he had two useful and practical suggestions, two constructive suggestions to make. One was that the detenus should be interned in Fort William in Bengal

Mr. E. F. Sykes: May I interrupt the Honourable Member? I said that under certain conditions they might be.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I think the words which the Honourable Member used were:

"Either they (detenus) are a nuisance to the neighbourhood or they are not. If not then a convenient detention camp would be either in Fort William under the eyes of the Government of Bengal, or in the Purana Qila under the eyes of the Government of India."

Mr. E. F. Sykes: Exactly.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: Exactly, and what I propose to point out is that the Honourable Member, having given his assent to one of the principles of the Bill, which is to remove detenus from Bengal, makes the constructive suggestion that they should not be removed from Bengal (Laughter); or in the alternative, they should be detained in the Purana Qila. The Honourable Member failed to observe or was never aware that the Purana Qila is situated in a centrally administered territory and is not in a Governor's Province. Therefore, if the amendment which he is good enough to propose for my assistance were accepted by the House, his own valuable suggestion would be explicitly ruled out, and that, as far as I can see, is the extent of the value and utility of the Honourable Member's suggestions. I trust that the House will not accept the amendment.

Mr. President: The question I have now to put is:

"That in clause 2, after the word 'jail' where it occurs for the second time, the words 'in any Governor's Province' be inserted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: I move:

"That to clause 2 the following be added at the end:

'and the rules shall include provision for grant of travelling allowances to the relations of the detenus, twice a year, for interview and shall also provide for reproduction, as far as practicable, of Bengal conditions, specially as regards diet and the manner of cooking the food.'

[Mr. S. C. Mitra.]

In support of my motion, I find that my Honourable friend Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury has added this note of dissent, in the Select Committee's Report:

"In view of the fact that the detenus will be transferred far away from their own province, I would suggest that the Government of Bengal should pay travelling allowances to their near relatives to enable them to visit and interview the transferred prisoners once in three months in order to mitigate hardship incidental to such transfer."

Though my friend suggested once in three months, I have suggested in my own amendment twice in a year to make it more acceptable to the Honourable the Home Member. But I have not very much hope because, as there is a Hindi proverb: 'Jami Jumbat, Na Jumbat Gul Mohammad' which means: "The earth may shake, but Gul Mohammad will not move." I can prophesy that the Gul Mohammad of the Assembly, Sir James Crerar, will not move an inch. Yet it is not the Honourable the Home Member alone to whom I am speaking now, but I am appealing to the whole House; and here I shall quote a few lines from the speech of my Honourable friend, Mr. C. C. Biswas, where he made that point very clear in his able speech on the last occasion. Mr. Biswas said:

"The question is this, whether or not we should require some assurance, either to be embodied in the Bill itself or in rules to be framed under the Bill, to ensure that where such detenus are removed from Bengal to another province, certain things should be done to reproduce as far as possible the conditions of detention in Bengal—conditions as regards food, health, comfort, and so on."

Later on, he says:

"As my Honourable friend, Sir Abdur Rahim, has said, we hope that when the Bill goes before the Select Committee, that Committee would try to insert some clause in the Bill which would make it obligatory on the Local Government to provide for these things: in other words, to minimise discomfort and risk to health as far as practicable. I say as far as practicable, because so far as the climatic conditions go, nobody can control that. But subject to that, I say, it should be possible to reproduce the conditions of detention in Bengal in the provinces to which these men may be removed."

As a matter of fact I have almost reproduced the words of Mr. Biswas, and I shall wait and see if it is acceptable to the Government or to the House. As regards these difficulties, I find my Honourable friend, Sir Muhammad Yakub and my Honourable friend, Sir Abdulla Suhrawardy also supported these views. I do not like to take the time of the House in going through all these views, because I think there is unanimity on this side of the House that in the rules to be framed by Government there should be provision for reproduction of Bengal conditions as far as practicable. It might be asked why I insist on these things being in the rules themselves. My main point is this. It was insisted on, particularly by my Honourable friend, Mr. Mody himself, that these rules that are now obtaining in Bengal should be circulated, but Government are persisting in not circulating them because they consider them to be confidential. So that is the main point, that even the rules are not circulated to Members of the Honourable House. That being so, I ask, how other people then can judge for themselves whether these rules are in force. That is the specific reason why I want that in the rules it should be specifically stated that there should be provision for the grant of travelling allowances to poor relations twice a year, and for other conditions as regards clothing, food, diet, manner of cooking food, etc. Now even if these rules are there, I am not really certain whether they will be enforced, because the past experience is very sad. In these days there are elaborate laws and rules, but at the time of enforcement of those rules they are enforced in such a way that, in spite of all necessary provisions, there is no guarantee of proper treatment on the part of the officers. As a matter of fact, I gave notice of a few questions as to what is happening even at Deoli at present, but I have not yet received any answers. One question I shall quote here:

2. "Is it a fact that these detenues are assaulted by the staff on the slightest pretext and the Superintendent recommends kick when they ask for medicine?"

3. Is Government aware of the fact that one Bengali gentleman who happened to pass by the camp was brutally assaulted to the point of unconsciousness and that people passing by the camp are generally maltreated and molested?"

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: May I interrupt the Honourable Member? It may perhaps conduce to our estimating the value of the instances he has brought before the House if I say that at Deoli none of these incidents could possibly have taken place, as there are no detenues there.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: May I take it that the Honourable Member says that there are no detenues at Deoli at present?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I do.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: There are no detenues in Deoli? Since when? There may be some legal jugglery involved in the answer, and it may be that prisoners are not under the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, because they cannot yet be transferred, but under Regulation III some State prisoners have been transferred, and the same Commandant who was serving in Hijli has been transferred to Deoli; that is my information, also that there are prisoners in the Deoli camp; I should like to know if that is contradicted.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: There are no detenues in Deoli of any description whatsoever.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: Then I must accept that statement. Then as regards these rules, my Honourable friend, Sardar Sant Singh, yesterday was arguing that there are rules for the treatment of female prisoners, but the whole House was informed yesterday how they are treated, but in the case of detenues there are no rules which are known to the public. I would like to be assured that in the rules there must be a specific provision for these things and at the same time that methods should be devised to check whether these rules are actually observed. Sir, I move.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, this is an amendment which I wish had been accepted by the gentlemen of the Select Committee unanimously, and I wish there had been no necessity to move this amendment on the floor of this House. I wish the Government had given a definite assurance that under the rules they would provide for the travelling allowances of detenus. Sir, the House will remember that when the Honourable the Home Member was speaking the other day replying to the debate, I put him a definite question whether he would consider granting travelling allowances to the relations of every detenu. I think perhaps I should not have interrupted him then lest I should be considered as having tried to embarrass him. Perhaps it was not quite a proper way to elicit an answer in the course of a speech. But in view of the opposition that this measure has met with both in this House and in the newspapers of the country, I wish the Government had gone so far as to meet what is a legitimate, a reasonable and a very moderate demand, for the detenus are neither anarchists nor revolutionaries nor terrorists. They are men who have been deprived of their freedom, because the Government consider, from the evidence in their possession, that they are prejudicial to public peace. That being the case, it is but proper that the Government should not make conditions very difficult for the detenus by removing them from one province and depriving them of the opportunity of seeing their relations. I think, Sir, though the Government are not actually depriving the detenus of the right of interviews by transferring them from one province to another, they are, in effect, depriving them of the opportunity of interviews. The detenus may be bachelors, they may be married people, they may be fathers, they may be husbands, but their mothers and sisters would like to see them; their wives and children would like to see them and the Government, by taking them from Bengal to some other province, are doing, in my opinion, a double injustice. The first injustice is the transfer of the detenus themselves. I have been opposed to their transfer. I have not reconciled myself even today, notwithstanding the recommendation of a large number of Members in the Select Committee, to the principle underlying this Bill. I refused to serve on the Select Committee because I could not accept the principle of the Bill. They could at least mitigate the hardship. Why punish their relations, I ask, for what they consider to be a wrong of the detenus themselves, a wrong which I refuse to accept as a wrong until that wrong is proved in a court of law? That being the case, for one alleged wrong, here is a Government which is punishing the relations of the detenus. I do hope, Sir, that the Honourable the Home Member will consider this proposition very carefully. I am grateful to Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury for having incorporated his views in the Select Committee. I wish Sir Hari Singh Gour and Diwan Bahadur Harbilas Sarda, both of whom are not in their seats, and every other Member on the Select Committee had endorsed Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury's suggestion. I am however grateful to Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury for having placed before this House, and for having exercised his responsibility by so placing before this House, a matter of paramount importance. I may assure the Honourable the Home Member that if the Government are not going to consider this proposition reasonably, they will be breaking the hearts of many good people in Bengal because, supposing a detenu is what the Government consider him to be, they have no right to punish his relations. On the reply to that question will depend the attitude that this side of the House will adopt towards the career of this Bill at the remaining stages of this measure.

Sir Abdur Rahim (Calcutta and Suburbs: Muhammadan Urban): Mr. President, on a former occasion I made the position quite clear as to the necessity for providing for the relations of detained persons an opportunity and facility to visit them. I then pointed out that especially having regard to the distance from Bengal of the place where these men will be detained and also having regard to the fact that many of these persons are likely to belong to poor families, it was only right that Government should make certain provisions allowing a certain reasonable number of relations, say, two or three, to visit them occasionally, say, twice a year. That is not making too much of a demand. In this way let them be satisfied and their relations that they are treated properly. I think, Sir, this is a very reasonable demand, and I do hope the Honourable the Home Member will see his way to accept it. I know it has been stated that there are rules which have been framed for a similar purpose, but those rules have been hitherto kept confidential, though, as I pointed out on the last occasion, there seemed to me no justification for treating these rules, which are framed under the enactments of the Legislature, as confidential. I pointed out that these rules ought to be placed on the table of the House if necessary or, at any rate, the Members of this House should be allowed access to these rules so that any misapprehension that may have arisen on the point may be removed. It does strike me that the amendment proposed by my friend Mr. Mitra is a perfectly harmless and reasonable one and I hope the Government will see their way to accept it.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt (Purdwan Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, at the outset I must say that I do not like the provisions of this clause. I am opposed to it. Be that as it may, when my friend moved his amendment, and knowing the hopelessness of our position here, I would like to have an amendment like this rather than the whole clause. My friend has asked for some travelling allowance for the relations of the detenus only twice a year and also for the production of Bengal conditions, especially as regards diet and the manner of cooking the food. Of course, it is qualified by the word "especially" and so I have no quarrel with him, because Honourable Members here may know that even the worst criminals in the European wards in the Punjab are supplied with fans. And I would like to know from the Honourable the Home Member whether the detenus who will be transferred from Bengal to this extreme climate, which the people of Bengal can hardly bear, will also be supplied with electric fans or not. I pause for a reply from the Honourable the Home Member. I am not getting it now. Probably Sir James Crerar will take time to think whether these detenus should be given fans or not. He himself is sitting under a fan all right at this time.

Then, Sir, as regards diet and other Bengal conditions, I may point out that the diet of the Bengalis differs very much from the diet of all other people living in India. I see, Sir, that my Honourable friend Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh has laughed on this remark of mine. He himself comes from a province which till very recently was linked to my province, and whose pride it was to imitate our food and our culture. Sir, I am not here holding any brief for Bengali diet, but this much I may say that that diet is absolutely necessary for a Bengali. I may tell the House that the wife of a gentleman, who holds a very high position, indeed the highest that an Indian can attain in life, after having resorted to the European mode of diet and living became blind. Sir, that is the fate awaiting those who change their methods of life and their diet at a very late hour in their life.

[Mr. Amar Nath Dutt.]

That being so, I think it will not be difficult for him to understand the difficulties of a Bengali if he is asked to take one or two chapatis and probably one or two onions and some har har dhal. Is that the food to which a Bengali is accustomed? Further I may inform the House that Bengalis do not take chapatis during summer. They take rice and dhal twice a day and not chapatis. They take puris only during winter, because they are hardly palatable during the summer. It is only the Bengalis who can appreciate the difficulties in the matter of food. If ever I had the power and if I could get the Honourable Sir James Crerar under my clutches and make him live in a Bengali village with rice and dhal and tamarind and fish, I do not know how he would like it. A few vegetables, one or two brinjals fried will not satisfy his appetite. With this diet, he will not survive for more than six months. My Honourable friend is leaving India, and this Bill is perhaps his parting kick, and I really would have been glad if the Honourable Sir James Crerar had not taken the trouble of introducing this Bill at the fag end of his career. In fact I would once more appeal to him, when he is leaving India for good, to be a little more kind to us and see this small amendment of my friend Mr. Mitra is accepted by him. There is nothing revolutionary, no terrorism in this amendment. There is nothing of the kind in the amendment, and the Honourable Sir James Crerar need not be afraid of it. I hope if he has a little sense of humanity still left in him, he will, just eight or ten days before he leaves the shores of India, do this little act of kindness to the people whom he has ruled. He believes they are inveterate terrorists. Whatever may be his ideas, reserving my right to oppose the whole clause later on, I wholeheartedly give my support to the amendment and I appeal once more to the Honourable the Home Member to accept it.

Mr. C. C. Biswas (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadian Urban): The amendment of my Honourable friend Mr. Mitra falls into two parts, the first part relates to the payment of travelling allowance to the relations of the detenus twice a year, for interviews, and the second part deals with the question of diet and the manner of cooking food, etc. So far as the second part is concerned, I believe I am correct in saying that there is no difference between this side of the House and the other side. The Honourable Sir James Crerar has more than once assured the House that it will be the duty of Government to make every possible provision for the comfort of the detenus who may be transferred out of Bengal. They will try to reproduce, as far as possible and practicable, the conditions of Bengal in the other provinces to which these people may be removed. The question with which we are now concerned is whether or not the Bill itself should embody some provision in this regard: in other words, whether or not we should content ourselves with accepting the assurance which has been given on the floor of the House on behalf of Government, or whether we should insist on some statutory safeguards, so that it may not be possible for Sir James Crerar's successors to act otherwise. There is one preliminary difficulty, however, that I find in the way of the amendment of my friend Mr. Mitra, unfortunately when sending in notice of this amendment, he did not have before him the provisions of the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act. If you look at the clauses of the Bill, you will see that the proviso to clause 2 refers in specific terms to section 11 and section 13 of the Bengal Act and lays down that the powers exercisable by the Local Government under section 11 and the powers exercisable by the Local Government under section 13 regarding the manner of custody of these detenus shall be exercised by the Local Government of the province to which these persons may be transferred for custody. What are the powers under sections 11 and 13?

Sir Cowasji Jehangir (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): They apply to Bengal.

Mr. C. C. Biswas: I am just explaining my point. If you look at section 11 of the Bengal Act, you will find that it provides for the appointment of Visiting Committees, and further lays down that the rules which may be framed under that section shall provide for periodical visits to the persons under restraint. That means visits by members of the Visiting Committee to these persons. What the proviso to this Bill contemplates is this, that the powers which in Bengal can be exercised by the Local Government there under section 11 shall be exercisable as well by the Local Government in the Province to which these persons may be removed. In other words, when these detenus are removed outside Bengal, it will be open to the Local Government of that other province to appoint Visiting Committees, and to frame rules providing for periodical visits by members of the Visiting Committees to these persons. These rules, therefore, will not and cannot include rules for the grant of travelling allowance to any relations of the detenus, or for any of the other matters which my friend Mr. Mitra has in view. That is the difficulty I am feeling.

Then, again, if you turn to section 13 of the Bengal Act, you will find that that section authorises the Local Government in Bengal to make rules providing for the procedure to be followed regarding the notification of residence and report to the police by persons in respect of whom orders have been passed under section 2, and for the place and manner of custody of all persons arrested or committed to or detained in custody under this Act. Now, the effect of the proviso in the present Bill is to give powers to the Local Government in the other province to which these people may be taken to frame rules only for the manner of custody of these persons. In other words, only one part of section 13 of the Bengal Act is reproduced by virtue of the proviso to this clause, and the Local Government there is empowered, if this clause is adopted here, merely to make rules providing for the manner of custody of such persons. The question, again, is, whether the objects which my Honourable friend Mr. Mitra seeks to secure by this amendment do come properly within the purview of the rules which it is possible to frame under section 13. I repeat, Sir, that section 11 and section 13 contemplate rules of a definite kind. Section 11 contemplates rules for the purpose of regulating visits by members of the Visiting Committees to these detenus. And section 13, so far as it is going to be made applicable under this clause, deals only with rules regulating the "manner of custody" of these detenus. I ask, is it possible to say that the amendment of which my Honourable friend Mr. Mitra has given notice comes within the ambit of either of these sections?

Sir, it is not open in this House to suggest amendments here and now. I am sorry I had not studied the actual wording of the amendment until this morning, as I had to go away to Calcutta and came up only yesterday morning. But I took it for granted, and I had a right to take it for granted, that my friend, who took the responsibility for moving an amendment, would see that the amendment did satisfy the requirements of the Act.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: He has seen it; it is all right.

Mr. C. C. Biswas: If it is all right in my friend's opinion, then he need not quarrel with me. But I am pointing out what I do consider a real difficulty in the way. On the merits I have already stated that I am at one with him, but there is this technical difficulty arising from the form of the amendment, and I was going to suggest to my friends opposite that they might so alter the wording of this amendment as to make it clear that it is not merely sections 11 and 13 of the local Act which may be reproduced in the other provinces outside Bengal, but that it should be possible to provide for the other matters as well, which cannot properly come within the rule making powers of sections 11 and 13. I am quite definite, Sir, that so far at any rate as the first part of this amendment is concerned, the payment of travelling allowances cannot possibly be brought under section 11 or section 13. As a matter of fact, I will remind my friend Mr. Mitra that there is a provision in the Bengal Act for the payment of certain allowances to the families of these detenus. That is dealt with in a separate section, and is not left to be covered by rules that may be framed either under section 11 or under section 13. So, if it is a question of the payment of any allowances, that must be the subject-matter of a specific provision to that effect. Mr. Mitra wants to add at the end of clause 2 the words, "and the rules shall include provision", etc. The phrase "the rules" necessarily means rules which are referred to in the proviso, and they are rules under section 11 and section 13.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: But section 11 provides for periodical visits.

Mr. C. C. Biswas: My Honourable friend will kindly look at section 11:

"The Local Government shall, by order in writing, appoint such persons as it thinks fit to constitute Visiting Committees for the purposes of this Act and shall by rules prescribe the functions which these Committees shall exercise."

So this sub-section speaks of rules prescribing the functions which these Visiting Committees are to perform. Then the next sub-section says:

"Such rules shall provide for periodical visits to persons, etc."

That means periodical visits to be paid by members of these Visiting Committees to these persons. They do not contemplate visits by relations of these detenus, and I do not suppose relations of detenus will constitute the Visiting Committees. If the words were simply "rules shall provide" that would be different. But the words are "such rules", and they must mean rules referred to in sub-section (1), and the rules in sub-section (1) can only be rules prescribing the functions which the Visiting Committees shall exercise. That is my interpretation of this section, and I am quite sure my lawyer friends will at once see that I am not far wrong. That is the position. Therefore, if there is no chance of moving an amendment now in such a form as to secure the objects which this amendment has in view, there seems to me no other alternative open to us but to accept an assurance from the Honourable the Home Member in this regard. And there is another practical reason why I suggest that we should be better advised in accepting such assurance. Suppose this amendment is put to the vote and lost. If we on this side of the House can be sure that we shall not be defeated, then I would most certainly say, go to the lobby on this issue and carry it. But if there is a risk of its being defeated, we shall only make our position worse by challenging a division, because if we take it to the vote and lose it, it will be open to the Government afterwards to point to the record and say that the House did not accept it at all but by its vote turned it down. My friends may not agree with me, but I am taking a practical view of the matter; and therefore I suggest that if there is no practical certainty of our being able to carry it, it is much better to leave the matter there and to accept the assurance of the Home Member. (A Voice: "What about interviews?") As regards interviews, we should also ask for a definite assurance in that behalf.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh (Muzaffarpur cum Champaran: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, the proposition of my Honourable friend, the Mover of this amendment, is so eminently reasonable that I do not think it should have been difficult for the Government to accept it. My Honourable friend Mr. Biswas has just said that as a measure of practical politics, we should not press this motion to a division. I do not know whether my Honourable friend the Mover of this motion has any intention of pressing this motion to a division. I have not myself made up my mind whether or not it is better to press it to a division. This is a minor matter. Apart from that, the argument of my Honourable friend Mr. Biswas comes to this, that because we lose this motion it will create a bad impression. . . .

Mr. C. C. Biswas: On a point of personal explanation, Sir, that is not what I stated.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: I am glad to have this assurance from my Honourable friend. Those of us who are opposed to the principle of this Bill can on that account say that as this House, constituted as it is, is not likely to accept any amendment which is opposed by the Government, we should therefore not press our motions.

The second part of this motion relates to the reproduction as far as practicable of Bengal conditions especially as regards diet and the manner of cooking the food. I am afraid that in the matter of reproduction of Bengal conditions as regards food, it will not be quite possible to reproduce in that part of the country, I mean, Deoli, the conditions that obtain in Bengal. I have travelled considerably in that part of the country, in Rajputana and in Central India. In fact I have myself motored down from Nasirabad through Deoli on to Bundi and to Kotah. I quite agree with the picturesque description given by my Honourable friend Mr. Sykes with regard to the situation of Deoli. But there is one difficulty in the way. There is an absence in that part of the country of large sheets of water, tanks and big rivers. That makes it impossible for a plentiful supply of fish which is an indispensable item of diet for a Bengali. This is an impediment in the way of the reproduction of Bengal conditions if the detenus are transferred to Deoli.

With regard to the first part of the proposition, that travelling allowances should be paid to the near relations of the detenus, I think the proposition is extremely fair and reasonable. If these detenus had not been transferred to a distant part of the country, cut off from their provincial and family associations, the near relatives of these detenus would have had easy facility to visit these detenus; but since they are being torn off from their province, and taken to a distant part of the country, and the punishment of deportation is being added to the punishment of incarceration, so far as these detenus are concerned, it is only fair and reasonable that the travelling allowances of their near relatives should be borne by the Government. We have not seen the rules which my Honourable friend the Home Member has already prepared. I do not know whether a provision like that exists in any of the rules; but I would not like to trust either the Government of India or the Local Government of Bengal or any other authority in the matter of framing rules suitable to the requirements of the situation. I am therefore of opinion that provision for the grant of travelling allowance to the near relations of the detenus, and the reproduction, as far as possible, of the conditions which obtain in Bengal in the place, Deoli, or any other place where they may be transferred, must be incorporated in this measure. With these few words I support the proposition.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Twenty Minutes Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Twenty Minutes Past Two of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: Mr. President, my friend Mr. Biswas was, as far as I could understand him, clearly in favour of the principle of the amendment moved by my friend Mr. Mitra. He realised that the detenus who were removed to other provinces for the convenience of the Government of Bengal, should be treated, as far as possible, in the same way as they would have been treated in Bengal with regard to food and other amenities of life, but he appeared to me to have some legal difficulty, and since he is a lawyer and I am a layman. I am in some difficulty

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division: Muhammadan Rural): What is the meaning of reproduction? What do you mean by amenities of life?

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: There is another lawyer interrupting. Perhaps he will give his opinion to this Honourable House on the legal point raised. I am not a lawyer, and we look forward to his legal assistance and opinion.

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadan): We will hear him later.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: There are two principles raised in the amendment: one is that the detenus should get the same food as they get in Bengal, and the other is that Government should give facilities for their relations to visit the detenus, in whatever part of India they may be, by giving these relatives train fares. With regard to food, I think the Honourable the Home Member on the last occasion gave us clearly to understand that Government were prepared to meet this side of the House with regard to such amenities as this side of the House thought necessary, and so far as I remember now,—I have not got his speech before me—he actually read out some draft rules in which it was provided that Bengali cooks would be provided, and that the supervision of the prison would be under a gentleman who was accustomed to Bengal conditions. But with regard to railway fares, the Honourable the Home Member seemed to have some difficulties. Well, Sir, I will, therefore, confine my remarks to this point. After all, these detenus are being removed from Bengal for the convenience of the Government of Bengal, and if that is so, I do not see why the Bengal Government should not be made to pay the railway fare to a reasonable number of relatives of the detenus specially because these detenus may be sent hundreds and hundreds of miles away from Bengal. It would be a cheeseparing policy on the part of the Bengal Government to object to it. When they ask the Government of India to approach this House to assist them and their administration, I cannot help thinking that this demand on the part of Honourable Members on this side of the House is more than justified, and I do not think that either the Government of India or the Government of Bengal should raise any objection to the expenditure

Mr. K. Ahmed: What about your Retrenchment Committee?

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: There is always a limit for retrenchment, and if my friend is so very keen about retrenchment, perhaps he will look a little nearer home for retrenchment than for a purpose of this sort.

Mr. K. Ahmed: That is exactly the point.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: At any rate, Sir, I think we are all agreed that it is a reasonable demand to make.

Then, with regard to the legal point raised by my friend, Mr. Biswas, that the amendment ought to have been in some other clause of the Bill

Mr. O. C. Biswas: Some other form.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: or in some other form. Well, trying to look into it from a layman's point of view, I find that section 13 of the local Act reads as follows:

"The Local Government may make rules providing for the procedure to be followed regarding the notification of residence and report to the police by persons in respect of whom orders have been made under section 2 and for the place and manner of custody of all persons."

Now, the words, "manner of custody of all persons" would cover everything that my friend Mr. Mitra has provided for in the amendment; and even if section 13 is to be carried out by the Provincial Government or the Government of India according to wherever the detenus are sent, they could frame rules even under section 13 in virtue of the expression "manner of custody" so as to provide for railway fares and other amenities of life required by my friend Mr. Mitra. But not being a lawyer, I would naturally depend upon the advice and the opinion of the Honourable the Law Member. Perhaps, he will be able to show us some way out of my legal difficulty that may arise.

[Sir Cowasji Jehangir.]

Another point, Mr. President. Under clause 2 of the Bill, the Local Government has to make such rules and take such action as the Government of Bengal are empowered to take under sections 11 and 13 of their Local Act, but this House has a right, when considering this Bill, to add any other provisions, or to make any other stipulations with regard to what the Local Government should do, or how they should act with regard to these detenus; and I, personally, not having the keen and practised intellect of a lawyer, cannot see how the amendment moved by my friend to a Bill,—not to rules,—to a Bill before the Legislature can be out of order. Mr. President, therefore I do hope that Government will accept this amendment. It only means the addition of railway fares to the undertaking already given by the Honourable the Home Member and Government should put it into the Act itself. It is safer: it gives more satisfaction not only to this side of the House but also to the much wider public who watch our proceedings; it will not do any harm; on the other hand it will help both the Government of India and the Bengal Government in the future, because—we do not know—it may happen that the Government of India may have to bring a similar Bill before this House at a later stage.

Then, Sir, there is another amendment to be moved by my friend Mr. Mitra which empowers the Government of India and not the Provincial Governments to make these rules and regulations. If that is accepted, and I don't see why they should not accept it because it is they who will take the responsibility of sanctioning the removal of these detenus from Bengal to some other province, and surely they should take the responsibility for framing rules. If they frame rules, then it will be for this Honourable House to see that those rules are carried out to the satisfaction of both this Honourable House and the Government.

Mr. K. Ahmed: What was the Central Jail Committee's report of 1920?

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: I trust that Government will accept both the amendments—this one and the one that Government should make rules,—and if they are accepted, I can see no legal difficulty in the matter at all. It will give complete satisfaction, and it will also help this Bill to pass to-day, let us hope, before you, Mr. President, adjourn this House.

Pandit Satyendra Nath Sen (Presidency Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Although I am opposed to the principle of the Bill in any form, I rise to support the amendment moved by my Honourable friend Mr. Mitra on the principle that something is better than nothing. Knowing as we do the attitude of the Government, we can say that the Government will try to have the Bill passed with the least possible modifications, although the Bill was opposed by almost all the elected Members who spoke on the last occasion except one or two who only lent their half-hearted support to this Bill. Sir Cowasji Jehangir on the last occasion and also in his speech which he delivered just now, has made it clear that the Bill may be passed only on condition that the Government will comply with the legitimate demands of this House. The Honourable the Law Member gave us an assurance, and the Honourable the Home Member also gave that assurance on the last occasion as well as this morning, but.

Sir, we are no believers in assurances, because the Honourable Members may not be here, and also they may change their views at any time. If they mean that these assurances will be observed, then it is best that they should clearly put them into writing in the Statute-book. My Honourable friend Mr. Biswas has raised a legal issue that there are legal difficulties in the way of making provision for the interviews.

Mr. G. C. Biswas: On a point of personal explanation, Sir. That is not what I had stated. I did not suggest that there was any legal difficulty in making a provision of that kind; what I did suggest was that the form in which Mr. Mitra had framed his amendment would not permit of its being done.

Pandit Satyendra Nath Sen: However, there is some difficulty according to your view. My Honourable friend Sir Cowasji Jehangir has met that issue in an admirable manner, because the words "manner of custody" are there, which are wide enough for making all these provisions. If these interviews and provision for diet and other requirements are held to be legitimate and proper, then there cannot be any objection to passing this amendment. It is the Government who have, at their sweet will, thought fit to snatch away these unfortunate young men from their homes, and it is only reasonable that the Government should pay for the travelling expenses of the relations of these men. There is no doubt about the fact that such interviews are necessary, because a prolonged separation from their nearest and dearest relations will certainly tell upon their mental condition. This is only a rational view, and this has been recorded by one of the gentlemen who has given their opinions on this Bill. As to the legal point that has been raised, I understand that my Honourable friend Mr. S. C. Sen will argue that point. I am not a lawyer, but I shall give you only a layman's point of view. I would cite only the proverb, "Where there is a will there is a way," and if you cannot devise ways and means for making such a legitimate provision, it is all the more reason why this Bill should be thrown out. If you cannot do that, there is no reason why you should pass it at any cost. We should always remember that there are some brilliant men among these unfortunate detenus, and they must not be thrown to the dogs. They certainly deserve some consideration from this House. With these words, I support the amendment.

Mr. S. C. Sen (Bengal National Chamber of Commerce: Indian Commerce): I also support the amendment. We have had some academic discussion about the legality and construction of the amendment moved by my Honourable friend Mr. Mitra. What is the amendment? The amendment is simply this, that in exercising the powers conferred by sections 11 and 13 of the local Act, the Local Government should do some further acts in the light of the amendment suggested by Mr. Mitra. Is it contended that if these detenus had not been transferred outside Bengal, the Bengal Government could not have, under sections 11 and 13 of the Act, made provision similar to that which Mr. Mitra now seeks to embody in the Bill? I do not think that that would ever be the contention raised by my Honourable friend Mr. Biswas. His contention is that under sections 11 and 13 of the local Act you cannot provide for this matter the same being in his opinion outside the scope of those sections. I do not agree with him there. Section 13, as has been pointed out by

[Mr. S. C. Sen.]

Sir Cowasji Jehangir, is wide enough to include everything on the face of the earth. As a matter of fact, under the term "manner of custody", everything has been provided for. The detenus have even to salaam the superior officers. The detenus are punished under the Jail Code for alleged offences under the Jail Code which do not apply to them at all. And this is a sight which you see every day in Bengal. So, if the words "manner of custody" can include all these things, surely they can also include provision for payment of expenses to the relations of the people who have been detained.

Mr. C. C. Biswas: But which Local Government would pay the expenses in that case?

Mr. S. C. Sen: That is not a matter with which we are concerned. That is for the Imperial Government; it is a matter of arrangement between the Government in whose custody the detenus will be placed and the Bengal Government. That is no concern with us,—who will pay. Does the Bill provide for the payment of cost of these detenus when they are detained in the Deoli jail? Does it provide for that? All we know is that the Bengal Government will have to pay the cost, by arrangement which they will make with the Local Government in whose jurisdiction the people are to be detained. That is a matter of internal arrangement which we have nothing whatever to do with here. All we can say is this, that under the rule-making powers conferred by sections 11 and 13 of the local Act, which will now under the proviso to clause 2 of the Bill be exercised by the Local Government of the province in which the jail is situated—rules should be made—which rules should provide for the various items referred to in the amendment suggested by Mr. Mitra. That is the point. Apart from that, supposing these matters do not come within the purview of sections 11 and 13, surely if the Legislature provides that these matters should be introduced into the rules, such proviso will govern the original sections 11 and 13. That is the ordinary rule of construction of every Statute. Under these circumstances I do not think there is any substance in Mr. Biswas' argument. It is merely an academic discussion which we have had here. As regards the merits of the matter, I fully agree with the views expressed by Sir Cowasji Jehangir and also by Mr. Mitra.

As regards the second portion, there is no dispute between us and Government. The Honourable Sir James Crerar on the last occasion gave his solemn assurance in this House that proper recommendation and proper arrangements for food would be made by him. I do not know whether there will be provision for fans as in the European wards of Delhi and Lahore. These men have not been convicted by a court of law, and if the persons convicted could have these amenities, I do not see why the same concession cannot be extended to these young men in the trying climates of Northern India in the summer. As regards the question of payment of expenses to the relations of the detenus who may come to visit them: on the last occasion the Honourable the Home Member said that this matter required further consideration, as he did not think that public money could be spent on an object like this. When these detenus are transferred, it is done at the public expense, and if the Government of Bengal could have the luxury of sending these men to a remote part of the country, surely they should also bear the expense of the relations of the detenus. I therefore entreat the Government to consider this matter and I support the amendment.

Major Nawab Ahmad Nawaz Khan (Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I see some Members are pressing the Government for the comforts of the detenus, but when the Army is Indianised, will they not also press the Government to give the same comforts to the Bengali officers and clerks? Will they not also say that the Indian officers should not be sent to such and such parts of the Indian Empire, because the climate does not suit them? (In Honourable Member: "But they are not in jail.") In the previous discussion they asked for the removal of discomforts. Now, they want all comforts. Well, there must be some difference between ordinary prisoners and suspects. From my point of view, the chief object is to eradicate revolutionary movements and revolutionary ideas from the country, and it is with that object that the detenus are taken into jail. If the House accepts the principle that revolutionary ideas are not useful to the country, then those who take part in them should not be given so many facilities and comforts as one gives to his guests. If we give all comforts, it would simply indirectly encourage crimes, while the object of the Bill is to discourage and eradicate that spirit from the country. The Law Member and the Honourable the Home Member have said that if there are hardships which are inhuman, they should be removed, but we should not entertain these detenus as honoured guests and we should not supply them all the facilities and comforts which Government supplies to Honourable Members of the Legislature. These political detenus are connected with crimes which shake law and order. They are not suspected for ordinary crimes, but of an open treason and revolution. This is one of the worst forms of crime and those Honourable Members who are really against this sort of crime should not give encouragement to the detenus.

Mr. B. Das: Why don't you take them to Peshawar and shoot them?

Major Nawab Ahmad Nawaz Khan: To remove these people from their country is a very good principle. Their relations and supporters must have no means of communicating with them. If these political suspects are in their own country, they have hundreds of means of communication inside and outside the jail. (Mr. S. C. Mitra: "Very fine discipline.") The warders are all Indians and the relations and friends of the detenus have a regular means of communication. For instance packets of opium, tobacco and other forbidden things have been found inside the jail with the prisoners, and this is a thing which is not allowed.

Pandit Satyendra Nath Sen: Is that the issue before the House—whether the prisoners should be removed to other jails or not?

Mr. President: The Bill deals with the removal of the detenus to other parts of India.

Major Nawab Ahmad Nawaz Khan: Personally, Sir, I think it would be much better for the Government and for the country at large that several islands should be selected out of India (Laughter) where, according to the climatic conditions of each province, the prisoners may be sent.

Mr. C. C. Biswas: What does my Honourable friend think of our having a session of the Assembly in the Andamans? (Laughter.)

Major Nawab Ahmad Nawaz Khan: The keeping of the prisoners in their own province is more injurious from the political point of view and from the point of view of the real object to be aimed at, namely, to remove and eradicate the spirit of the revolutionary mentality.

Mr. B. Das: Sir, I think my Honourable friend, the Home Member, must have been feeling very uncomfortable in his seat while the last speaker was speaking. Sir, I know my Honourable friend from the North-West Frontier Province has got a subvention of a crore of rupees from the Government of India, and naturally, he must give his support at any time and every time to any measure that the Government of India want to see through in this House. (Laughter.) Now, my friend talks of political detenus as "criminals". I am really surprised at that! If they are criminals, then the Government have failed in their duty in not trying them by the ordinary laws and in detaining them indefinitely; and also if they are criminals, there are certain systems of jail rules under which criminals are governed. The Government of India here are not only punishing these sons of Bengal by removing them from their country, but by compelling them to live under different physical conditions entailing great hardships, so that I should call this double punishment, such as no civilized Government should adopt. My friend described to us the amenities of the Deoli jail. When, however, we heard the Honourable Mr. Sykes last evening and this morning we thought that Deoli was a dangerous place, where the people of Bengal, accustomed to the mild temperate climate of Bengal, would be living under very difficult conditions; and my friend wants that these so-called criminals should be deprived of proper food even at Deoli. Sir, I am surprised; and I think if my friend becomes the Home Member of the North-West Frontier Province, then I pity my friend, Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan and his friends. They will all be deported probably to Orissa. (Laughter.) But what I want to make clear before the House is that I wholeheartedly support the amendment moved by my friend, Mr. Mitra. When I interrupted my Honourable friend, Mr. Biswas,—and I know my friend is a big lawyer,—he pointed out a legal difficulty, but the amendment which my friend, Mr. Mitra, has brought forward does not violate the principles of the Bill. It suggests the introduction of certain clauses by which better amenities will be available for these prisoners and their relations who would visit them. Why, I ask, should not the Honourable the Home Member accept it? I would like to hear the view of the Honourable the Law Member as to what he thinks of this amendment which my friend, Mr. Mitra, has moved—whether it is not possible, not practicable under the practice and procedure of this House that such an amendment can be introduced into this Bill and also a further amendment in the jail rules could be introduced. Sir, to me it is quite possible, and most of us on this side of the House think it is possible. If the Government, by their majority of supporters, go against all canons of decency and justice, then, even if we are defeated, nevertheless the Government will be in the wrong.

The Honourable Sir James Orerar: Mr. President, the questions which have come under review on this amendment have already occupied a very great part of the attention of the House. Indeed it is matters of this kind against which I think at least two-thirds of the whole of the debates during the many days over which they have extended have been directed; and I am very well aware, and I am very fully prepared to recognize, that on these matters many Honourable Members opposite feel very deeply; and I think I have already, in my previous observations, on this aspect of the question, shown that I do myself very deeply appreciate the current of feeling on these subjects on the Benches opposite, and that I am anxious to go as far as I think is reasonable and practicable to meet them (Applause); and, therefore, when I have to express my regret that I am unable to accept this amendment (Ironical Opposition Cheers), I hope Honourable Members opposite will at the same time recognize that I do not wish to withdraw any of the assurances I have previously given on several points bearing on this amendment in the earlier stages of the debate. But I have a very strong preliminary objection to the amendment, because it is perfectly plain that it does import matter into the Statute which has been hitherto, and ought to be, regulated by rules or by executive instructions. This Bill, Sir, is a supplementary Bill, and in the local Act which it supplements specific provision has been made for rule-making powers, and it is within the ambit of those powers that this supplementary Bill is intended to make supplementary provisions.

Sir Cowasji Jehangir: May I point out, Sir, that the local Act does not contemplate the detenus being sent out of the Presidency? The local Act only contemplates the detenus remaining in Bengal; and therefore the rules contemplated under the local Act can only refer to the detenus remaining in Bengal.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I quite appreciate the Honourable gentleman's point. My point was that there are certain specific matters which this amendment would seek to regulate by rule and which mutatis mutandis the local Act originally provided for not by Statute but by rule. I think that there is probably a good deal of substance in what my Honourable friend opposite, Mr. Biswas, urged as regards the form of this amendment, and I think it would raise very serious difficulties so far as its correct application and interpretation are concerned. But I do not propose to rely on that particular argument; I rely in the first instance on what I must regard is the impropriety and inconvenience of endeavouring to import into the Statute what normally and on every consideration of convenience and propriety should be enacted by rule.

I pass on now, Sir, to the points of substance involved. As has 3 P.M. been pointed out by more than one Honourable gentleman, so far as points of substance and of merits are concerned, attention was concentrated upon two main issues. The first was that proper arrangements ought to be made by rule to ensure that the conditions of detention in the province of transfer should be as little onerous as was consistent with the circumstances. On that point I did give, on a previous occasion, the fullest assurances which were adhered to by the Honourable Member opposite, and more particularly by my Honourable friend from Bombay, Sir Cowasji Jehangir. Lest there should be any doubt on the matter, I should like just briefly to recapitulate what I did say:

"I am asked if we are prepared to give an assurance to the House that if this Bill is passed and detenus are transferred from Bengal to other provinces every endeavour will be made to reproduce as far as may be practicable the conditions obtaining in Bengal in respect of diet and in respect of other conditions of detention. Well, I am perfectly prepared to give that assurance in the most express terms. So far as detention in places which are centrally administered areas is concerned, I give my Honourable friend a perfectly clear assurance that rules will be drawn up, — as a matter of fact they are now in process of being drawn up,—which will give effect to those conditions. Those rules will be notified by the local authority and they will be reproduced in the Gazette of India: and I may say that so far as the proposed camp at Deoli in the Ajmer province is concerned, every step is being taken to see that those conditions will be secured. An officer accustomed to deal with Bengalis will be in charge, assisted by another officer from the province of Bengal. Bengali cooks will be supplied,—that point was specifically brought forward,—and as far as possible the diet to which Bengalis are accustomed will be provided. Adequate medical arrangements are being made as well as arrangements for proper exercise and recreation, indoor and out-door games, a library, reading facilities, and so on. If there is anything in addition to these anything which has arisen in the course of the present discussion, or any suggestion that may hereafter be communicated to me by any Honourable Member. I shall be very glad to consider it in the framing of the rules."

I will add that that offer is still open. If any suggestion is made to me by any Honourable Member with regard to the rules which are now approaching the form of a final draft, I should be very glad to give consideration to it. For example, an Honourable Member spoke about the provision of electric fans. The provision of electric fans at Deoli is not possible, because there is no electric power at that place. But I am quite prepared to make a provision for punkhas during the hot weather for these detenus. The other matter that was mentioned was the question of the grant of travelling allowance. On that point on a former occasion I was quite specific.

Sir, it has been suggested that these transfers are made merely for the convenience of the Government of Bengal. I should like to remind the House that it is not merely a question of the convenience of a Provincial Government, but it is a question of making what we regard and what they regard as an important provision in the interests of public security. I have already explained that, so far as interviews are concerned, it has been suggested that the objection was to deny all interviews to the detenus beyond Bengal. That is not the case. But I cannot undertake, as I said before, that the Government of Bengal should be under any statutory obligation to make payments which will have to be defrayed by the tax-payers of Bengal in what is essentially a private interest. Such facilities have never been asked for before, and they were not provided for in the previous Supplementary Act which supplemented a previous Local Act. It is not an obligation which any Government in any part of India has been prepared to accept, and I think that I should not be behaving properly if I accepted that statutory prescription for the Government of Bengal. Apart from that, all my assurances stand good. Therefore, when it is urged upon me that I ought to agree to the inclusion of these provisions in the Statute in order that there may be a security that my assurances in due course will be honoured by my successor. I think that the House and the Honourable gentleman opposite will recognise that that is not an argument which can be expected to weigh very heavily with me. No assurance which has been given in such specific terms as I have given on this occasion has ever been given by the Government of India and not been fulfilled, and this assurance will equally be fulfilled. Therefore, I repeat once more that while I appreciate the feeling which has underlain the speeches of many Honourable Members opposite and I will be willing to go as far as is reasonable for me to do so. I do not think that the amendment moved by the Honourable gentleman is one which I can properly accept, and I regret I must oppose it.

Honourable gentleman is one which I can properly accept, and I regret I must oppose it.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That to clause 2 the following be added at the end:-

'and the rules shall include provision for grant of travelling allowances to the relations of the detenus twice a year, for interview and shall also provide for re-production, as far as practicable, of Bengal conditions, specially as regards diet and the manner of cooking the food'."

The motion was negatived

Mr. S. C. Mitra: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in the proviso to clause 2 for the words beginning with the words 'Local Government of the province' and ending with the words 'local official Gazette,' the following be substituted:

'Government of India and the rules made by the Government of India in exercising of such powers shall be published in the Gazette of India.'

The purpose of this amendment is that these rules should be made not by Local Governments to whose jurisdiction these detenues will be transferred, as contemplated in this Bill, but that these rules should be framed by the Government of India themselves. If I have heard the Honourable the Home Member correctly, he said that the Government of India were framing the rules. If so, I do not know why they impose upon the Local Government the duty of promulgating and publishing the rules framed by Government of India in their gazette. Some of these Local Governments will really not be in a position to frame rules for the conduct and control of these detenues. They will have to depend, more or less, on the standard rules that obtain in Bengal, and if anybody else is to supervise these rules, it should be the Government of India and not the particular Local Government to whose province these detenues might be transferred. I do not know what the attitude of the Government of India might be, but I think if I have learnt any lesson from the Honourable Sir James Crerar, it is that that immovable gentleman will remain unmoved and he will not accept any reasonable amendment that may be moved by this side of the House. I appeal to the House to consider that in this amendment I merely ask that the rules should be made by the Government of India so that this House may also have some control over those rules. There were so many appeals from this side of the House to the Honourable the Home Member to circulate those rules. I have not heard what objection the Honourable the Home Member has to bring those rules within the purview of criticism of the Members of this House. The statutory rules made under this Act should not remain confidential. I do not understand why these rules should not be criticised by this House. My purpose in moving this amendment is that if these rules are made by the Government of India, this House will have occasion to see how far those rules are reasonable and how far they come up to the assurances given by the Honourable the Home Member. Further, the different Local Governments will not be in a position really to make any rules. They shall have to follow the rules suggested by the Government of Bengal. With these words I commend my amendment for the acceptance of the House.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: Mr. President, I thought I had already made my position clear with regard to statutory rules. So far as rules made in respect of any place of detention which may be in centrally administered areas, I have already given the House an assurance that those rules will be notified by the local authorities concerned and will be published in the Gazette of India. The same description applies to statutory rules made by other Local Governments. Now the Honourable Member argued that the Local Governments, other than the Local Government of Bengal, would not be in a position to frame rules adequately. But I have already given the House an assurance that our general policy in these matters, which I have explained in very great detail on this and on previous occasions, had already been communicated to the Local Governments; and I gave the further assurance that if and when this Bill is enacted, the attention of the Local Governments will be expressly drawn once more to the policy which the Government of India desire to be adopted in this matter. But a certain latitude must be allowed to Local Governments because local rules may have to provide for local conditions, and when a Local Government accepts or is called upon to accept a responsibility of this kind, which is certainly a grave and serious responsibility, I do submit that they should be given reasonable discretion in the discharge of their responsibility, subject to the main lines of policy which I have explained. I regret, therefore, that I cannot accept the Honourable Member's suggestion.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That in the proviso to clause 2, for the words beginning with the words 'Local Government of the province' and ending with the words 'Local official Gazette,' the following be substituted:

"Government of India and the rules made by the Government of India in exercise of such powers shall be published in the Gazette of India."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: Sir, I move:

"That to clause 2 the following further proviso be added:

"Provided further that periodical examination of detenus shall be made by a committee of the Indian Legislative Assembly with a view to report on the suitability of the place of detention and the general comfort of detenus to the Governor General in Council."

Sir, I move this amendment though I know that I have no chance of carrying it. I cannot complain when gentlemen like my friends Mr. Nabakumar Sing Dudheria and Mr. C. C. Biswas who are present in the House and represent the city of Calcutta from which the largest number of detenus comes do not even support me by their votes. Yet I think it a public duty for me to move these amendments and press on the House the reasonableness of this amendment. Even in the rules there is a provision for a statutory visiting committee. If Government accept this amendment of mine then this statutory visiting committee may be replaced by a committee of this House. The complaint was that the special visitors that are selected are not the proper men. Even the ordinary non-official jail visitors are not permitted to see these political detenus. The allegation is quite general and persistent that they choose some of the title-holders and such people who are not likely even to represent the true facts of the case. You can avoid all that criticism and the election may be made by the process of single transferable vote by which even nominated Members, Government Members, etc., may even get elected. Yet it will be a committee of this House. My Honourable friend Diwan Bahadur Sardar reminds me that there are no jail visitors in Ajmer. But I understand they are going to select some. But if the Government are themselves willing to have a committee why should they not accept my suggestion which is in this amendment that the visiting committee might be a committee of this House, and thus allay public criticism and discontent?

Sir, I move.

Diwan Bahadur A. Ramaswami Mudaliar (Madras City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Mr. President, I have taken this early opportunity of rising on this amendment because, being somewhat unaccustomed latterly to the procedure of this House, I have found that there is no right of reply to the Government at all. In other well-regulated constitutional assemblies Government make known their point of view as early as possible. My Honourable friend Sir James Crerar may laugh at the idea, but I can assure him that in no democratic assembly will the idea be tolerated that a Member representing Government sits tight till 20 Members of the House have partaken in the debate and then quietly gets up and puts in the last word. That is not playing the game as I understand constitutional games. Therefore, Sir, it has fallen to my lot to get up at this very early stage to support this amendment. I see from section 11 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, the powers under which are extended to the Local Governments or authorities which have to deal with these transferred detenus, that:

"The Government shall by order in writing appoint such persons as it thinks fit to constitute Visiting Committees."

The proposal of my friend Mr. Mitra is merely this that such a Visiting Committee shall be, for the purpose of those detenus that are transferred outside the Government of Bengal, a special Committee of this House. He has not, so far as his amendment is concerned, dealt with the manner of the constitution of the Committee, and though he has referred to election by the single transferable vote, the acceptance of this amendment by Government or by any other Member does not bind it or him to that proposal. It may be that the Committee may be a nominated Committee, nominated by the Government from among the Members of this Assembly. Unless therefore my friend Sir James Crerar is prepared to say,—and I should not be surprised if he says it,—that no Member of the Assembly is fit to be a member of the special Visiting Committee under section 11 of the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, and therefore the local authority cannot appoint such a Committee, I feel certain that this amendment is a reasonable one. Sir, one thing is often forgotten in dealing with detenus, that after all what is intended by the Government is to detain them. It is a prohibitive and not a punitive process. You should not punish them and you should not by your rules and by your regulations and the treatment you accord to them try to impose punitive penalties on any of these detenus. If that aspect of the case is remembered, I am certain that some of the replies at least that my Honourable friend Sir James Crerar has given in the course of this debate would have been of a different kind altogether. Sir, what is the good of the administration of Ajmer-Merwara appointing some two persons unknown to anybody in the public world of India, people who may submit reports of their inspection which nobody is going to accept? How will it go down in public opinion? What is the purpose of your appointing Visiting Committees? It is to make people realise that things are all right, that there is no reasonable ground for complaint, that you appoint these Visiting Committees. Having accepted the principle that what you try to do by these Visiting Committees is not to rectify your administration, but to justify your administration, I say fairness, common honesty, demands that that special Committee should not be one which may be termed a whitewashing committee but a committee in which the public have confidence. What better committee can there be than a committee of this Assembly in which the public can rightly be claimed to have confidence? If anybody attacks the report of that Committee Sir James Crerar or his successor would be quite entitled to get up and say from his place that after all a committee of the Assembly itself has gone into this question, has found that various allegations made in irresponsible newspapers are not correct and that the conditions are as reported by the committee. That would be a conclusive, ample and final reply to any sort of charge that may be made. But so long as you adopt hole and corner methods in appointing these committees, so long as you select some A or some B, who may be estimable people from the point of view of the administrators of these various provinces or administrative areas, but who will not have the confidence of the public, you are merely doing an absolutely futile thing, which does not please you, which does not satisfy public opinion, which imposes merely a monetary charge on the public and does not bring about the results which you have in view. Therefore I venture to appeal, even at this stage, as one who has supported the principle of this Bill and not as one who opposed it, that my friend Sir James Crerar should do everything in his power, even at this final stage, at least by accepting this simple amendment, to see that public opinion is in some way satisfied. If he does not accept it, if he still says that even this modest amendment is repugnant to the purpose of the Bill that he has brought forward, that it will somehow or other destroy the great and complex administrative machinery of which he is in charge, then all that I can say is that he should not expect us to take him too seriously in these matters and he should not expect us to believe that the Government are quite enthusiastic about giving fair treatment to these detenus. Sir, I strongly support this amendment.

Diwan Bahadur Harbilas Sarda (Ajmer-Merwara: General): Sir, I rise to support the amendment moved by my Honourable friend, Mr. Mitra. As the Government proposes to send these detenus to Deoli in Ajmer-Merwara, where I understand a jail has recently been constructed, I see no reason why, as these detenus come not from Ajmer but from Bengal, the Government of India should not make rules to provide facilities. Ajmer-Merwara is under the direct administration of the Government of India. Consequently it is only meet that the Government of India, which authorises through this Assembly the transfer of detenus from other provinces to Ajmer-Merwara, should make these rules, and the Legislative Assembly which gives this power of transfer from Bengal to Ajmer should be able to look after these detenus by making such rules as would provide that their health and comfort are being looked after. The Bengal Government had not itself the power to transfer these detenus to any place outside Bengal. It came to the Legislative Assembly to empower it to send these detenus to provinces outside Bengal. That being the case, as we are giving that power to the Bengal Government, as we are authorising the Bengal Government to transfer these detenus from Bengal to outside stations, it is only proper on our part to insist that we want to see that proper arrangements are made for their detention there and that they are looked after properly. As we are giving the Bengal Government power to send detenus to Ajmer-Merwara, we insist that rules should be made by the Government of India and published in the Gazette of India, and we could then know how things are done. So far as I know, there are no jail visitors in Ajmer; they will now have to be appointed, and as these detenus do not belong to Ajmer-Merwara. it is only proper that this Legislative Assembly, which is the Legislature for Ajmer-Merwara, should appoint these visitors.

Mr. C. C. Biswas: Sir, on a previous occasion I pointed out that in 1916 a Resolution was brought forward in the Imperial Legislative Council by the late Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee in connection with the administration of Regulation III of 1818 and other kindred regulations, urging the appointment of an Advisory Committee of the Council to investigate the case of every such Regulation prisoner, and make recommendations regarding his health, allowances, conditions of detention and such other matters. That Resolution was accepted in substance by the then Home Member, and as a matter of fact an advisory committee was appointed and it did useful work. It may be said that that Resolution was necessary, because the regulations did not contain any such provision as you have in the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act for the appointment of visiting committees. I recognise that the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, which follows the lines of the Regulations, does contain a provision for the appointment of visiting committees, but I do not think it is adequate; and I think that it is reasonable and necessary that those who are called upon to sanction such wide powers as have now been claimed on behalf of the Government, should have an opportunity of satisfying themselves that things are going on in the way they should. A special responsibility rests on Members of this House, and in the discharge of that responsibility it is up to the Members to see that the powers which they are according to the executive are being duly administered. That can be done only by means of a committee of this House. Such a committee, if appointed, need not clash at all with the visiting committees. The visiting committees will be there to attend to the daily needs of these detenus. But a committee of the Indian Legislative Assembly, if appointed, will be in a position to take a broader view of things. Today, Ajmer-Merwara is the place selected for the transfer of these people. We do not know if some other place may not be selected tomorrow, if the number unhappily goes on increasing; and so there may be several places of detention under this new Act. Then a committee like the one which is now proposed will have a very real function to perform. That committee will be in a position to examine the whole situation, to compare the conditions of one place with those of another, and to make suggestions to the Government of India, so that steps might be taken in the proper direction. After all this committee is not going to interfere with the executive. The committee will perform only advisory functions. The amendment says that the committee should undertake periodical examination of the detenus and report on the suitability of the places of detention and general comfort of the detenus, and make recommendations to the Governor General in Council in regard to such matters. Therefore I say that the Government ought to accept the principle of this amendment; and there need not be any hesitation whatsoever in taking the Assembly into its confidence. There is also a moral and psychological effect likely to be produced by accepting an amendment of this kind. It will show that the Government really mean to take the House into their confidence, it will mark Government's appreciation of the attitude of the non-official Benches. From that point of view I do appeal to my friend the Honourable the Home Member to accept in substance this proposal which has been put forward by Mr. Mitra.

I cannot resume my seat, however, without referring to another matter which I am compelled to refer to, because of the honourable mention which was made of my name by my friend, Mr. Mitra. Mr. Mitra stated that he and his friends were in a position of helplessness, and he added that when a Member from Calcutta, referring to me by name, was not going into the lobby with him, there was not very much to hope for. Sir, I am well able to take care of myself, and I do not mind confessing that I don't consider it a disparagement to myself that I do not worship in the same temple as my friend Mr. Mitra; but I thought that there would be no occasion whatsoever for misunderstanding my attitude in regard to the Criminal Law Amendment Bill. I have spoken on more than one occasion, and I have left my attitude in the matter in no state of uncertainty, and to suggest that I was keeping out of the lobby for some ulterior motive

Mr. President: There was no such suggestion.

Mr. C. C. Biswas: I am glad, Sir, that there was no such suggestion, but what was the point in referring to me in that manner, if it was not to suggest that it was an act of dereliction of duty on my part as a Member from Calcutta? Sir, I do not accept from my friend the definition of my duty as a Member of this House. After all, we are all here to do our duty according to our lights, and I do claim that I have throughout acted in this matter according to my judgment, uninfluenced by any consideration save and except what I deemed to be in the best interests of the public.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: Sir, I do not see any reason why the Government should not accept this very reasonable amendment unless their conscience makes them cowards. The amendment asks for a periodical examination of the detenus by a committee of this Assembly. It does not say that it should be a committee composed of elected Members of the Assembly. It may be open to the Honourable the Home Member to nominate men whom he likes, avoiding such undesirables as myself

Sir Abdullah Suhrawardy: Are you not in their confidence?

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: I am not. Nominated Members command the confidence of the Government and only a few elected Members do so. By that I do not mean that they are to choose Members from those two classes only. Sir, if my friend cannot accept this amendment of my friend over there, the irresistible conclusion would be that there is really something rotten in the administration of the law relating to these detenus. In fact, we hear wild rumours about the treatment accorded to these detenus. Owing to the strict censorship which is maintained, we do not get the exact news now. You cannot blame us if we try to put greater reliance upon the statements of our own countrymen than the statements of the foreigners who happen to rule over this vast continent. My belief is that it is in their interest to suppress the mischievous activities of some of their officers. Government can carry on the administration with the help of a few self-seekers drawn from this country as is done in every clime, but I would remind them that it is the bedrock of our goodwill and sympathy alone on which depends the stability of their Empire. You have your suspicions no doubt, unnecessary suspicions about the flower of the youth of this country. If you only had imagination, if you had Some Honourable Members: Please address the Chair.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: tried to understand our hopes and aspirations. You have come here for the purpose of exploitation; you have come here

Mr. President: The Honourable Member should address the Chair.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: Had Government not rested upon the help of a handful of self-seeking men of this country, I think their administration would have been more popular, and there would have been no occasion to enact such Draconian laws as they are enacting daily

Mr. President: The present amendment is for the appointment of a Committee of this Assembly.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: Yes, Sir, but I say that such a Committee is needed because of the outrageous provisions of these laws. Sir, these laws are the relics of mediæval ages and need replacement by more civilized laws (An Honourable Member: "By civilized men"), by civilized men. So, Sir, I trust that the Honourable the Home Member will, at least to keep up appearances just at the fag end of his career here,—of course he will earn his pension in England and we all wish him well—and I have always appreciated my Honourable friend's fairness, though at times he is not able to appreciate the motives which inspire us to say some of these harsh things,—as I said, at least to keep up appearances my Honourable friend the Home Member will accept this amendment. I remember, Sir, in the early days of the Congress a gentleman who was opposed to the Congress one day told a relation of mine, my uncle, that men like Alan Octavius Hume, Sir William Wedderburn and others were the worst enemies of India, as they wished to introduce British rule with the affection of the people, which would perpetuate our slavery.

Mr. President: I would remind the Honourable Member that the amendment before the House is for the appointment of a Committee.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: Yes, Sir; but I am just reminding them of the fact that they should broadbase the British rule upon our affection, and therefore the Congress is not their enemy; their real enemies are those who advise them not to accept amendments of this character. These amendments are necessary in the interests of British rule in India. I do not know whether all that I say here pleases Honourable Members opposite; I am rather a little frank and blunt, but I say what I feel for the good of these unfortunate prisoners, and I hope the Honourable the Home Member will accept this amendment.

An Honourable Member: Never in his life has he accepted such an amendment.

Mr. K. C. Neogy (Dacca Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I have not so far participated in the debates on these amendments, because as I made it quite clear on another occasion, my attitude towards this Bill is one of undiluted opposition. But when my friends Diwan Bahadur Ramaswami Mudaliar and Mr. Biswas were addressing the House and making their pitious appeals to the Honourable the Home Member, I was reminded of the days in the years gone by when I used to do the same from my seat in the Assembly. But, Sir, I am sure that my Honourable friends will agree with me, after seeing the result of their appeals on this particular occasion, that it is no use trying to soften the stony hearts of Honourable Members opposite, but that the real opposition should be made in a spirit absolutely undaunted and that there should be an attempt made to throw out this measure at the third reading, and we should not waste our breath in discussing this amendment any further. But, Sir, if I have risen to say a few words, it is because of certain observations that fell from my Honourable friend Mr. Amar Nath Dutt. He referred to the fact that as a result of the strict censorship of the Press that we have at the present moment, it is not possible to have any reliable information with regard to the conditions of life that obtain in the detention camps. A few days ago, when speaking on a motion in regard to this matter, I had occasion to refer to the tragic incidents that happened about the middle of September last in the Hijli detention camp in Bengal, and the Honourable the Home Member in an interruption challenged my statement that the official communiqué issued in that connection soon after the incident was not borne out by the results of the official enquiry that followed. Here I have in my hand both the report of the official enquiry and the official communiqué on the subject, and I should like my Honourable friend to state after going through them, as to whether it is not a fact that in material particulars the two differ. The reason why I am referring to this incident is that the Honourable the Home Member, in speaking on a previous amendment, said that it would be the endeavour of the Government to reproduce the "other conditions of detention as they obtain in Bengal". Now, these are among the "other conditions of detention" that do obtain in Bengal—the incidents that took place in September in the Hijli detention camp, and if that were a solitary incident, I would not have spoken on this motion merely in order to refer to that. I should like to draw the attention of this House to another incident which occurred in the Hijli detention camp on the 8th March last. As a result of the strict Press censorship, newspapers were not permitted to publish any news in connection with that incident till about a week later when as a result of a short notice question in the Bengal Legislative Council, a halting sort of statement, as far as one is able to judge from the unsatisfactory reports that have so far appeared in the Press, was made on behalf of the Government describing the incident as a sort of a minor disturbance. But the facts, which I have got in my possession from a source which I consider to be satisfactory, point out that there was very serious trouble there on the 8th March in the Hijli Jail. Therefore, when the Honourable the Home Member said that he would not merely try to see that proper food, food to which the Bengalis are accustomed, was supplied to these detenus at Deoli, but that he would also see that "other conditions of detention as they have obtained in Bengal" were reproduced in Deoli,—that made me rather apprehensive. From that point of view, I think my Honourable friends who have yet any faith in their appeals to the Government Benches are perfectly justified in putting forward a plea for the appointment of a committee of this House to make enquiries periodically and report to this House, if necessary, regarding the health or other conditions in which the detenus may have to live in distant Deoli. In this connection, I want to refer to the provisions of Regulation III with regard to periodical inspection of the detenus. There are certain definite requirements in the Regulation for a periodical examination of the conditions of health under which the State prisoners have to live under Regulation III of 1818. It was only the other day that I put a question to the Honourable the Home Member enquiring as to whether he was in a position to place on the table the reports which are statutorily required to be submitted at regular intervals to Government regarding the health of the State prisoners, and he plainly gave a blank refusal. I really do not know what State reasons there can be to preclude the statements made by responsible officers of the Government—not non-official visitors—in the case of Regulation III prisoners—what is there to prevent them from the Government point of view from being placed on the table of this House. Those reports relate only to the conditions of health and the nature of the detention, and as to whether the detention is such as may be telling upon the health of the State prisoners. Now, judging from the attitude taken up by the Honourable the Home Member in reply to my questions, I really think that there is every reason for my Honourable friend Mr. Amar Nath Dutt to have his suspicions as to exactly what is going to happen at Deoli when these Bengal prisoners are transferred there.

Now, there is just one word more and I have done. My Honourable friend, speaking on a previous amendment, brought forward a plea that it would not be in the public interest to pay for the travelling expenses of the relations of the detenus who desired to visit them at intervals, and that he could not possibly be a party to saddling the public exchequer with such an item of expenditure. Now, I very much hope that the Honourable the Home Member will not repeat that argument in reply to this amendment. I have great respect for my Honourable friend as a man, though not as the Home Member of the Government of India, and it really pained me when the Honourable the Home Member put forward that argument. I thought that such an argument did not lie in the mouth of a member belonging to a service which has been helping itself liberally to the Lee concessions, and which made the public exchequer pay for the travelling expenses to and fro between England and India, not merely for the members of the service but for their wives, and in the case of those gentlemen who do not believe in birth control, for their children too. I very much hope that the Honourable the Home Member will not repeat that argument in reply to this amendment.

Mr. O. S. Ranga Iyer: The Honourable the Home Member has naturally been faced with one demand after another. We are not, I may make it very clear, making any appeal to the Government from this side of the House. We are rather trying to put the Government in the wrong with the people of this country by putting before them one reasonable amendment after another relating to the detenus and giving the Government an opportunity to accept them if they choose on the floor of this House. My own opinion with regard to the detenus was made perfectly clear when I refused to go into the Select Committee, because I consider that it is a very wrong principle to transfer people from one province to another unless you vouchsafe to them the same conditions of comfort and you vouchsafe to their relations the same opportunities, without unnecessary expense, of interviews. This amendment sums up the whole case. There is no use for the Government of India having come before this House and asked for an opportunity to make this Bill more or less an all-India measure—otherwise they would have introduced this in the Bengal Provincial Council—after having done that, there is no use for them to come and ask us to take up a parochial and provincial view of things. Once they have come before us, I cannot understand why they should shirk the responsibility of making the matter entirely an all-India matter.

It must be the Government of India that should make rules; it should be the Government of India gazette that should publish the rules, and not the Local Government or the local gazette. That being the case, I hope the

4 P.M. Honourable the Home Member will accept this motion and give an opportunity to this House, which is deeply interested in this matter, to examine from time to time in what manner the rules are framed and how the comforts of these people are assured, and that the rules do not make the position of the detenus worse than it would otherwise be. The rule-making power is a most important item, and now that the Bill is before the Assembly, it can hardly be regarded as a provincial or parochial matter.

The Honourable Sir James Orerar: I confess, Mr. President, that it may appear ungracious on my part in being constrained to oppose the third amendment running of the Honourable gentleman from Bengal, but I am somewhat surprised that the anticipated terms of my reply should have generated so much heat in the Benches opposite, particularly as evidenced by the remarks made by the Honourable gentleman from Madras. I was entirely unaware that I was to plunge into deep waters of constitutional policy, still less that I was to show any lack of confidence in the Assembly; and I was surprised to hear his speech and those of one or two Honourable Members who followed him. Apparently they took no notice whatever of the fact that this measure has been referred to a Select Committee by this House without a single dissentient voice and that the motion that the Bill as reported by the Select Committee should be taken into consideration was passed once more without a single dissentient voice. I feel therefore that there is some injustice in the suggestion that I have throughout the whole progress of this Bill been riding roughshod over the Assembly. It is to me a most astonishing thing that this Assembly should be ridden roughshod over but yet there should not have been a single dissentient voice to oppose those steam roller methods. Therefore I cannot agree that that is a fair statement of the case. The Honourable Member who moved this motion to a certain extent anticipated the grounds on which I must take objection. For the purpose of inspection, examination and matters of that kind, specific provision has been made by rules under the Act, and the particular expedient which he advocates is one which, I am bound to say, appears to me to be extremely cumbrous, extremely inconvenient, and, in spite of Mr Neogy's rather ingenious argument to preclude me from the financial argument, which I nevertheless propose to use, very expensive. Because it must be remembered it is not merely a question of an occasional examination of a particular detention camp at Deoli. It involves, to all intents and purposes, the proposition that there shall be a standing committee of this House whose statutory functions it will be to conduct periodical examinations, possibly in every province except Bengal. I do not think that is a reasonable proposition. Sir, though this may be a plea which lies particularly in my mouth to utter, do I think that it is a reasonable thing to ask Honourable Members of this House that they should regard it as the first statutory charge upon their time periodically to examine all detention camps which may be in any province except Bengal. I do really think that the Honourable Member who moved this motion has not quite realised all its practical implications. Therefore on these grounds, and not on the other grounds, which have been quite erroneously imputed to me, I must oppose this amendment.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That to clause 2 the following further proviso be added:

'Provided further that periodical examination of detenues shall be made by a committee of the Indian Legislative Assembly with a view to report on the suitability of the place of detention and the general comfort of detenues to the Governor General in Council.'

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President: The question is that clause 2 stand part of the Bill.

The motion was adopted.

Clause 2 was added to the Bill.

Clause 3 was added to the Bill.

Mr. President: The question is that clause 4 stand part of the Bill.

Rao Bahadur B. L. Patil: (Bombay Southern Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I beg to move the amendment that stands in my name which runs as follows:

"That clause 4 be omitted and clause 5 be renumbered as clause 4."

Sir, at the very outset let me make it plain to the House that I am fully alive to all the implications that arise out of the deletion of clause 4. Let me also make it plain to the House that all sections of people in the country and all parties in the country have strongly condemned the terrorist movement prevailing in Bengal, and I do not see why Government should be nervous about the powers of the High Court. That is the reason why I have tabled this amendment. Amongst the grounds which I have to urge in favour of this amendment, the first is that under the local Act the executive have taken very wide powers; they can arrest and detain whosoever is considered a suspect, suspected of committing or being about to commit a crime. No evidence is required; the mere existence of grounds of suspicion will do, and they can arrest and detain them; and even if you look at section 9 of the local Act, you will see that the Judges who test a case have no proof placed before them whatsoever. Their word will not carry any authority. The word of Government and of its officers is the final word. For these reasons, Sir, I think it is highly unjust and unfair to take away the powers of the High Court under section 491. My point is that in many cases you are detaining persons who are innocent. It seems to me that the argument of the Honourable the Law Member comes to this: "Well, there is a dangerous movement in Bengal. You concede to the Government the power of committing these people to prison without trial. If so, why should you not also concede to them the power of taking away the powers of the High Court?" Sir, I cannot agree to this, because you mean to say virtually this, that let a small percentage of innocent people suffer along with the suspects. I say that it is doctrine to which I cannot personally subscribe; and I am sure no self-respecting people in this country will subscribe to that doctrine. Well, Sir, I understood the Honourable the Law Member to say that, if the detention was illegal, of course the High Court has got the power of interference. If it was legal, there is no power. By this I understand that he means that the power of the High Court always remains there, provided the arrest and detention are not properly done under the Act. He further says that this clause has been inserted simply to remove a particular doubt in order to prevent a particular unsound argument being advanced every now and then before the High Court. But I ask the Honourable the Law Member whether it was not his duty also to make the clause still further clear. Had he accepted the modest suggestion made by the leader of this Party, which has been embodied in the amendment tabled by my friend Mr. Sitaramaraju, certainly it would have cleared the doubts and there would not have been any ambiguity, and the High Court would not have been pestered with frivolous applications. I say it was the duty of the Honourable the Law Member to make the matter clear. As he has not done so, the only duty of this Honourable House is to reject the clause.

Then, Sir, I come to the stock argument advanced by the Honourable the Law Member. That argument is this, that we have got the Regulations which were passed in the early part of the 19th century and those Regulations have been excepted from the operation of section 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code and we want to place the persons detained under this local Act also in line with those prisoners. Well, Sir, at this stage I wish to bring to the notice of this House the circumstances under which those Regulations in the provinces of Bengal, Bombay and Madras were made. Those circumstances should be compared with the circumstances now obtaining in Bengal. Let me for that purpose read out the preamble to those Regulations:

"Whereas reasons of State, embracing the due maintenance of the alliances formed by the British Government with foreign Powers, the preservation of tranquility in the territories of Native Princes entitled to its protection, and the security of the British dominions from foreign hostility. . . ."

Sir, I emphatically ask the Honourable the Law Member whether we are now living in a state of war, whether any foreign invasion is threatening us. . . .

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: Please read on the preamble; you have not read the whole of it.

Rao Bahadur B. L. Patil: I am coming to that. I ask him whether we are living amidst rebellions? Is this the state of affairs in Bengal or in any other province in India? If that is so, I say very frankly that you are entitled to place the prisoners detained under the local Act in line with the prisoners detained under those Regulations. But I very respectfully submit that that is not the case and it can never be the case. The British Government have been here for nearly 150 years or more and the roots of the British Government have gone so deep that it is no use now saying that we are living in a dangerous condition. Therefore, the situation is entirely different. We cannot say now that because we want to place these persons in line with those persons, we want this. That argument will not hold water.

Now, Sir, there is also another reason for which I should like to ask the support of the House to my amendment. It is this. We have been told on the floor of this House, and we have been reading the same in the Press as well as in the Law Reports, that the High Courts are in a position to say that after all they are not bound by such a clause which can be passed into law by this Assembly. We have every reason to suppose that the High Courts are likely to fall back upon the powers which they have got under the Letters Patent. Under those circumstances, it is unworthy of this Honourable House to enact such a clause and bring this Honourable House into a sort of undesirable estimation in the eye of the public.

Sir, before I conclude, in support of my first contention, namely, that you are not entitled to detain innocent persons and that it is highly unjust and unfair on your part to detain innocent persons, I should like to read out a few lines from the speech of Mr. Pipin Chandra Pal from the debates of this House of the year 1925:

"I asked Government: 'These are matters of ancient history. You cannot plead reasons of State to keep these dossiers in your keeping. Now, bring the dossiers and let us examine these ancient records and see if you had any justification to arrest these honourable gentlemen and take them away from their homes and keep them in detention without formulation of charge or trial or any of the ordinary processes of law. Your present action may be tested by those old records. I thank the Government of Bengal for having accepted that challenge or acceded to that request. The Honourable Sir Hugh Stephenson, in course of his speech in the Bengal Legislative Council, openly confessed that so far as these two gentlemen were concerned, the Government never suspected them of any complicity with murderous crime. Now, how are we to be assured, Sir, then, that in the present case, the men, who have been similarly taken into custody, have not been taken for the same reasons for which Aswini Kumar Datta and Krishna Kumar Mitter had been taken in 1908.'"

Sir, I have already made it clear that I have a conscientious objection to this clause being a part of the statute, which this House is going to place on the Statute-book. For these reasons I commend my amendment for the consideration of this House.

Mr. President: Amendment moved:

"That clause 4 be omitted and clause 5 be renumbered as clause 4."

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai (Sind: Non-Muhammadden Rural): Sir, I consider that this amendment is the most important amendment that has been put forward by my friend. Sir, I do not mean to say that the other amendments that have been moved with regard to this Bill were not important; they were very sensible and all means, by way of arguments, appeals and pressure were used but none have succeeded. Sir, so far as this amendment is concerned, I must ask the House to beware that if clause 4 is made part of the Bill and this amendment is not accepted, they will be clearly in a wrong position; they will be depriving themselves of the very first and very elementary principle of law, namely, the freedom of person. This clause is divided into two parts. One is with regard to the transfer of the detenus from one place to the other, which has an executive aspect, and the other having a purely legal aspect is with regard to putting a restriction on personal liberty most harmful to humanity: That restriction provides that when any detenu is detained in one jail or the other, he shall have no right to have his case reviewed by the highest court of the land. It can therefore be seen at a moment's glance that what this House is asked to assent to is to deprive mankind of the very fundamental right which is given them under the common law. The first part of the Bill however is such that even if it is maintained there will be certain remedies and certain adjustments which could go to alleviate the difficulties and the harm which this Bill does. With regard to that, Government have come forward to say that they will be minimising the difficulties so involved, though of course they cannot possibly minimise the inconveniences complained of, such as that of the climate. Government cannot change the climate of one place for the other, though other facilities such as giving of plenty of fish and providing Bengali cooks for the Bengali political prisoners and the like have been promised. But apart from that. . . .

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Have they been promised?

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Yes, I think they were promised. They can also transport rice from Bengal. My point is this, that these things can be easily adjusted. But if you are going to accept this clause, how are you going to help humanity? Liberty is the first principle for which we have been fighting all along, for which all nations have fought and that freedom of humanity is in danger by introduction of clause 4. What do we ask these better constitutions for? What do we ask these political benefits for? They are all for freedom of humanity, and the meanest individual is entitled to freedom, but here in this Bill the condition imposed is absolutely inhuman. I must only call it by that name and no other. It has the effect of sending a man, without proper trial and without the ordinary law being complied with, to jail. The ordinary principles of law, and the remedies available under the ordinary law are all these the detenus are being deprived of. The very last vestige of hope to them, namely, of having their cases reviewed by the High Court is being taken away from the detenus. Let the House beware therefore that if they accept the clause in the Bill, they will be cutting the ground underneath their feet. I therefore say that this amendment is the most important one.

With regard to this amendment, I will now address myself to the legal aspect, for which the Honourable the Law Member is anxious, by his looking at me, that I should go into. We have heard the Honourable the Law Member giving us some assurances and also interpreting in a particular manner the provisions of the law on that point. Sir, in my humble opinion there are two courses on this point left to the High Court. Formerly they pertained to only particular High Courts, but since some time back the law was changed, and now all the High Courts are given powers under section 491, Criminal Procedure Code. Of course that does not apply to places where there are no High Courts, and I was under the impression that Ajmer-Merwara had no High Court.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: I would refer my Honourable friend to the definition of "High Court" in the Code of Criminal Procedure, which means the highest court of criminal appeal or revision for any area.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: If that is so, then I think Ajmer-Merwara will also have a High Court to look into these things. The point now is, why is that right going to be refused to the highest court, if any, in Ajmer-Merwara? I will come to the reason presently. At present my submission is that there are two rights within the power of the High Courts. I repeat that the High Court has got two rights, one is under the common law and the other is under a statute. I shall be showing presently that a statute cannot possibly take away the right which the public and humanity have got under the habeas corpus. That is common law and that common law applies equally to the whole of the British Empire. I submit there is nothing to show that common law is overridden or abolished by any statutory power.

An Honourable Member: What about the Calcutta High Court?

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: I will come to that shortly.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: This Bill does not purport to take away any power except the power under section 491, Criminal Procedure Code. If there is any other power, that power is left untouched.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: I am very thankful to the Honourable the Law Member, and I will ask the Honourable the Law Member to stick to this opinion. There was a specific question put to him today. I was watching keenly when he said on the floor of the House that the habeas corpus right to humanity is independent of this statute and it is not overridden. At that time the Honourable the Law Member did not say what he was saying just now. What I mean to emphasise is this. Even if there has been a difference of opinion between the High Courts, I still maintain that that common law right cannot be taken away and if that exists then why are we now trying to make this rule curtailing the provisions of section 491 and taking away a similar right? As soon as you take away this right, if you have the power to do so, then the High Court will claim under the habeas corpus the power to call for records. Therefore this provision will be nugatory, this provision will not be operative, and the discussion of this provision will only be a waste of the time of the House. With regard to this common law right, permit me to say what the English jurists state on that point. In this connection I should like to draw the attention of the House to Halsbury's Laws of England, page 40.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: Which volume?

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Probably under "H". The Honourable Member can ask his Assistants who are Barristers to find out the number of the volume for him. This is what Halsbury's Laws of England say:

"In any matter involving the liberty of the subject, the action of the Crown or its Ministers or High officials of the Privy Council or Executive Government is subject to the supervision and control of the Judges on habeas corpus. It is this fact which makes the prerogative writ of the highest constitutional importance, it being a remedy available to the meanest subject against the most powerful."

Well, Sir, here the Government of India are going to be more powerful than anybody else, even the High Courts. And there they will be just coming into clash with the very first fundamental principle of common law, that habeas corpus is a right of the public which cannot possibly be taken away. Then, Sir, with respect to a right of taking away the habeas corpus right by statutory provision, which I do not admit, I must confess that it is true that the Calcutta High Court has in one or two decisions given that opinion, that section 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code is the only section under which particular persons who are detained can ask the High Court to go into their cases. But I submit that even the opinion of the Calcutta High Court is not unanimous. I know the Law Member is partial to the Calcutta High Court in adopting that view perhaps because he has remained there long.

Mr. C. O. Biswas: He argued the case and induced the Court to take that view.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Then, Sir, he was a party himself (Laughter) and he cannot possibly be a judge or a legislator here. (Laughter.) On the contrary, I think his opinion should be considered as prejudiced.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: It is no longer my opinion; it is now the opinion of the Court.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: I am submitting that the Court, which was led by the Honourable gentleman, has given a decision which is in direct contradiction to the opinion of other highest Judges for whom the Law Member must also have respect, the High Courts of Bombay and Madras. Sir, I know of two decisions in I. L. R. 50 Bom. page 616 and 45, Madras page 922, where it is said that the right to issue a writ of habeas corpus still continues in the chartered High Courts, in spite of section 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Then, Sir, the Calcutta High Court has no doubt given that opinion which the Law Member is relying upon and stating that it is not his opinion but the opinion which has been accepted by the High Court. It is true, but there also the Judges admit, at page 751 of 54 Calcutta, that the Criminal Procedure Code has incorporated in it only a portion of the rights under the Habeas Corpus Act, and not all the rights. They therefore stated after some consideration that they would not go into that question. They have, so to say, not given a definite decision on that point, and therefore I consider that that is a hesitating judgment. It is not a judgment which this House can accept, but further between these differences of opinion who is to decide? It is the Legislature that has to decide whether the Bombay and Madras High Courts are correct or the Calcutta High Court. I appeal to the House then to consider this question. The thing is this, that the common law right is a right which has been given by the common right of habeas corpus and the further question is whether we can manipulate that common law right, which has been given with regard to the liberties of a man and say that we will not accept that law but would curb the liberties of men. Apart from that there being two opinions of High Courts against one, what I say is this, that the common right should not be taken away, and that we will be wasting the time of the House if we make a provision which will be in fact absolutely nugatory.

Then, Sir, I come to the second question of law. The second question of law is dependent on section 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code and the interpretation that the Honourable the Law Member puts upon it. Section 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code says:

"Any High Court may, whenever it thinks fit, direct (a) that a person within the limits of its appellate criminal jurisdiction be brought up before the Court to be dealt with according to law;

(b) that a person illegally or improperly detained in public or private custody within such limits be set at liberty; and

(c) that a prisoner detained in any jail situated within such limits be brought before the Court to be there examined as a witness in any matter pending or to be inquired into in such court."

Now, Sir, after reading this the interpretation that has been put upon it is this, that if a particular detenu has been detained illegally and not only illegally but improperly too, then the High Court has got jurisdiction under section 491. That is how the Law Member has interpreted that section. Then what will happen is this. A representative on behalf of a detenu will come and put in his application. He will allege therein that a certain man has been detained illegally and improperly. What is the High Court to do? The High Court will get that application registered. After having got it registered they will send for the record. They probably will give notice to the detenu to appear, as otherwise it will be impossible to find out the impropriety or the illegality of the action in detaining him. Then the High Court will have to go into the record and find out whether the detention is really illegal and improper. Will this procedure be carried out or not? It will certainly come to that, because when you make an application and you allege illegal or improper detention, the High Court will never say that it is only the party's allegation so the application must be thrown out. They will surely go into the question to see if the allegation of improper and illegal detention is made out. That was the gist of the argument put in by the Honourable the Law Member and I do not know what different construction the Law Member will now put upon the wording of section 491 Criminal Procedure Code, and I will be very interested in seeing what reply he makes to my argument that if the High Court can go into the illegality of the detention, in spite of clause 4 of the Bill, why should clause 4 be enacted at all? If a man can move the High Court with regard to the question of the illegality or the impropriety of the detention, then everything is done and section 491 has been complied with. I do not know if, when making that statement, the Honourable the Law Member's attention was drawn to the words "improperly detained", in section 491 Criminal Procedure Code. If it was, I am glad my argument stands and he loses his case. (Laughter.)

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: Not so easily.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: I know the obstinacy on the other side. What I say

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: We have had plenty of politics; let us have a little law.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Sir, I say that this question is one purely of law and of the liberty of a man and it is no matter such as to be trifled with. If a High Court has got the power to go into the question of impropriety of the detention, it will be a question of merits and the merits will be considered by the High Court. Any way the High Courts will stand upon their rights and say, "We will go into the merits and find out under section 491 whether the detention is right or wrong". Therefore my second contention is that this provision, which is being incorporated into this Act, is not at all necessary.

Then the only reason that has been given for the introduction of this clause 4 is this. I wondered what must be the reason of the Government for this clause being put in, so as to take away the rights of the High Court under section 491. What did I find? It was shown in the Objects and Reasons of the Bill that because once the Criminal Procedure Code was amended and clause 3 added to section 491, providing that nothing in that section applied to persons detained under the Bengal State Prisoners Regulation, 1818, Madras Regulation II of 1819, or Bombay Regulation XXV of 1827, or the State Prisoners Act, 1850 or the State Prisoners Act, 1858, such a provision should be made with regard to the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act also. In other words they say that once we have made that exception, why not make it here also? But, is that sound reasoning I ask? It is no reasoning at all. On the contrary

[Mr. Lalchand Navalrai.]

I maintain that this provision 3 in section 491 Criminal Procedure Code is ultra vires. The Legislature had no power to make this provision, which is on the Statute-book. Because it is there that does not show that it is a valid one. High Courts have disputed it, and the question having risen before them, they have said that there is a doubt about it. But I maintain that the rights that have been given under section 491 are common law rights, which the common people have got, which cannot be repealed by any other law. Therefore no Legislature can possibly make any provision which cuts away the rights of habeas corpus. This clause 4 in my humble opinion is ultra vires and for that I find an authority in 39 Calcutta

Mr. President: How long is the Honourable Member likely to take?

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: About twenty minutes more, Sir.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Tuesday, the 29th March, 1932.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Tuesday, 29th March, 1932.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at Eleven of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

MEMBERS SWORN:

Major-General John Wallace Dick Megaw, C.I.E., M.L.A., (Government of India: Nominated Official); and

Mr. Narayan Raghavan Pillai, M.L.A. (Government of India: Nominated Official).

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

BRAZILIAN IMMIGRATION SCHEMES.

961. Rao Bahadur B. L. Patil: (a) Have Government any information regarding the Brazilian immigration schemes started by the Brazilian Government with a view to attract industrial and agricultural population?

(b) If so, will Government place it on the table?

(c) If not, have Government any objection to obtain the necessary information on the subject of Brazilian immigration including the following points:

- (i) the number of Indians who have already settled there;
- (ii) the names of Indians in superior official posts and in learned professions;
- (iii) the time since how long the schemes are in operation; and
- (iv) restrictions, if any, as to the profession of religious faiths?

Sir Evelyn Howell: (a) No, Sir.

(b) Does not arise.

(c) His Majesty's Government will be moved to make enquiries on the points mentioned by the Honourable Member.

BRAZILIAN IMMIGRATION SCHEMES.

962. Rao Bahadur B. L. Patil: Will Government be pleased to place on the table the correspondence, if any, of whatsoever date, between the Brazilian Government and the Government of India, either direct or through the British Government, on the immigration schemes?

Sir Evelyn Howell: No such correspondence has taken place.

MUSLIMS APPOINTED TO THE POLITICAL DEPARTMENT IN THE NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE.

963. Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad (on behalf of Seth Haji Abdoola Haroon): Will Government be pleased to state:

- (a) how many Muslims have been taken into the Political Department in the North-West Frontier Province during the last ten years;
- (b) how many of them were appointed Deputy Commissioners and Political Agents in that Province; and
- (c) if the reply to part (b) be in the negative, the reasons for the same?

Sir Evelyn Howell: (a) Out of 14 Muslim officers recruited for the Political Department since 1922, ten have served in the North-West Frontier Province.

(b) Two.

(c) Does not arise.

TEN PER CENT. CUT IN EARNINGS OF PIECE-RATED EMPLOYEES OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA PRESS, NEW DELHI.

964. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan: (a) Is it a fact that the compositors, distributors, impositors and pressmen of the Government of India Press, New Delhi, are paid on piece rates and they are allowed no privileges of holidays and Sundays like the salaried hands?

(b) Is it a fact that the 10 per cent. cut is made both from the salaried and piece-rated employees of the Press?

(c) If the answer to parts (a) and (b) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state if they contemplate to stop the 10 per cent. cut from the earnings of the piece-rated employees? If not, why not?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore: (a) The answer to the first part is in the affirmative and to the second part in the negative.

(b) Yes.

(c) The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the reply given on 18th March, 1932, to part (g) of unstarred question No. 198 by Mr. S. C. Mitra in the Legislative Assembly.

RENT OF QUARTERS OF EMPLOYEES OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA PRESS, NEW DELHI.

965. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan: (a) Is it a fact that the employees of the Government of India Press, New Delhi, are provided with quarters with only 5 per cent rent owing to their scanty earnings, with the sanction of the Government of India since the transfer of the press from Calcutta to Delhi in 1912 which is a period of about 20 years?

(b) Is it a fact that the employees of the press are exempted from such extra charges as water tax, and electricity metre rent, etc., due to their poor earnings?

(c) If the answer to parts (a) and (b) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state whether it is contemplated to raise the rate of rent and to levy such extra charge as water tax, etc.? If so, why?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhoré: (a) Indian subordinate employees of the Government of India Press, Delhi, are charged rent up to a maximum limit of 5 per cent. of their emoluments.

(b) and (c). The employees of the Delhi Press have been given the concessions under Fundamental Rule 45A, under which no separate rent is charged for sanitary, water supply and electric installations and fittings. But this rule requires that the tenant should pay meter hire and the cost of water and electric energy, etc., consumed. The question whether Press employees should receive water free of charge or not is under consideration.

DEDUCTION FOR PROVIDENT FUND FROM THE EARNINGS OF PIECE-RATED EMPLOYEES OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA PRESS, NEW DELHI.

966. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan: (a) Is it a fact that the Contributory Provident Fund was deducted on the earnings of the piece-rated employees of the Government of India Press, New Delhi?

(b) Is it a fact that the Contributory Provident Fund of the piece-rated employees of the press is now deducted on their class-rate pay?

(c) If the answer to parts (a) and (b) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state why the Contributory Provident Fund is not deducted on the earnings of the piece-rated employees?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhoré: (a) and (b). Yes.

(c) Because the earnings of piece-workers fluctuate and the rules require that the subscription fixed by the subscriber shall not vary throughout the year.

EXPENDITURE BY THE POST OFFICE FOR THE OCCUPATION OF THAKERSEY HOUSE AND IRWIN HOUSE IN BOMBAY.

967. Mr. N. M. Joshi: Will Government be pleased to state:

(a) the amount of rent paid by the Post Office for the occupation of the Thakersey House in Bombay per month inclusive of all municipal and other taxes;

(b) the total amount paid for the purchase of Irwin House in Bombay for the Post Office including the commission of the house agent;

(c) the ground rent paid per month to the Bombay Port Trust;

(d) the average amount required to be spent per month for the purchase of disinfectants and the supervisory charges required to be paid to the Bombay Municipality or otherwise;

(e) the average monthly amount demanded by the Bombay Municipality by way of house and other taxes;

(f) the total expenditure so far incurred on the repairs to the Irwin House after its purchase and the recurring expenditure required annually for its repairs;

- (g) the annual depreciation value of the building; and
- (h) the total monthly expenditure on account of all items mentioned in parts (c), (d) and (e) including the average monthly interest on the purchase price?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) Rs. 2,500. Thakersey House was given up from the 1st December, 1931.

(b) Rs. 2,09,100.

(c) Rs. 2,174.

(d) Rs. 81. Supervisory charges were paid to the Bombay Municipality for two months only, viz., May and June, 1931, at Rs. 15 per month. Since the 1st July, 1931, the supervision is exercised departmentally.

(e) Rs. 307 per month as house tax. Water and other taxes have not yet been fixed by the Municipality.

(f) Rs. 12,270. The recurring expenditure required annually is about Rs. 5,000.

(g) Rs. 600.

(h) Rs. 3,611 excluding water and other taxes under item (e).

STOPPAGE OF PERMANENT RECRUITMENT FOR THE POST OFFICE.

§68. Mr. N. M. Joshi: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether:

- (i) the Director General of Posts and Telegraphs had issued instructions on the Post Office side not to fill in any vacancies permanently in the staff since 1st July, 1930; and
- (ii) that similar orders were issued by the Government of India to have effect from the 15th July, 1931?

(b) If the replies to items (i) and (ii) be in the affirmative, are Government prepared to issue instructions that those who held vacant appointments prior to 15th July, 1931, in the Post Office may be confirmed in those posts?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) (i). Orders were issued by the Director General in April, 1931, directing that pending further orders no officiating incumbent of a post should be made permanent.

(ii) The Honourable Member apparently refers to the Resolution dated the 9th July, 1931, published in the Gazette of India conveying the decision of the Governor General in Council that as an ad interim measure all appointments to any posts permanent or temporary made on or after the 16th July, 1931, of persons not in Government service on the 15th July, 1931, whose pay the Governor General in Council in competent to determine under the Civil Services Rules shall be made on a provisional footing, that is to say, in an officiating capacity.

(b) The Director General is issuing instructions permitting, subject to certain restrictions, the confirmation of permanent officials in posts not affected by retrenchment in which they were appointed to officiate prior to the 24th September, 1931.

DELEGATION OF CERTAIN POWERS TO TOWN INSPECTORS OF POST OFFICES IN FIRST CLASS HEAD OFFICES.

969. Mr. N. M. Joshi: Will Government be pleased to state:

- (a) whether the examination of the question of giving powers to the Town Inspectors of Post Offices attached to the First Class Head Offices has been completed and, if so, with what result;
- (b) whether it is a fact that the Town Inspectors at the Presidency Towns of Madras and Calcutta, do exercise the powers of appointments, etc., of postmen and inferior servants and that no administrative difficulty is experienced at those Presidency Towns;
- (c) whether the delegation of these powers in Bombay would reduce considerably the work of the Inspecting Postmasters attached to the Bombay General Post Office;
- (d) whether the inspection of First and Second Class Offices was carried on by the Town Inspectors even when these posts carried time-scale of pay; and
- (e) if reply to part (b) above be in the affirmative, whether Government propose to extend those powers to the Town Inspectors in Bombay?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) The examination is still in progress.

(b) The reply to the first part of the question is in the affirmative, as regards the second part, some administrative difficulty has arisen.

(c) Some slight reduction of work might result.

(d) Yes.

(e) As already stated the whole question is still under examination, and no final decision has been reached.

ATTENDANCE AT RAILWAY PLATFORMS OF RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE SORTERS.

970. Mr. N. M. Joshi: Will Government be pleased to state:

- (a) whether the enquiry referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 306, on the 16th March, 1931, by Mr. N. R. Gunjal in the Legislative Assembly, has since been completed and if so, with what result;
- (b) whether it has since been further decided that the platform attendance of the R. M. S. Sorters should be completely ignored and the additional set in the R. M. S. Section withdrawn under certain circumstances and, if so, whether Government will be pleased to place on the table a copy of these orders; and
- (c) whether it is an intention of these orders that the platform attendance, even to the extent of two hours in excess of the permissible time of 15 minutes, should neither be considered nor counted as duty?

Mr. T. Ryan: (a) Yes. The decision arrived at is that the time spent by sorters of Railway Mail Service sections in Record Offices should not be taken into account in determining their weekly working hours in the vans.

(b) and (c). The position is not as stated by the Honourable Member. He is referred to the orders contained in the Government of India, Department of Industries and Labour letter No. Est.-B./APC-31/27, dated the 14th July, 1930, a copy of which is placed on the table of the House

No. Est.-B./APC-31/27.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRIES AND LABOUR.

Posts and Telegraphs Branch.

Dated Simla, the 14th July 1930.

From

T. RYAN, Esquire, C.I.E.,

Joint Secretary to the Government of India.

To

The Director General of Posts and Telegraphs.

SUBJECT :—Standard of weekly working hours for sanctioning additional sets for R. M. S. Sections.

SIR,

With reference to the orders communicated in this Department letter No. 100 P.T.E., dated the 13th December, 1926, sanctioning additional sets in the Railway Mail Service for 53 sections, it has now come to the notice of Government of India that cases often arise in which the weekly working hours of a Railway Mail Service set exceed the prescribed standards by an hour or two and as no formula exists for determining what excess over the prescribed standards of weekly working hours of 30 and 36 hours for night and day sections, respectively, should be taken to justify an additional set, there is a considerable diversity of practice in dealing with such cases. In order to ensure uniformity the Government of India consider that definite orders should be issued, to the effect that an additional set should not be sanctioned when such addition will have the effect of reducing the weekly working hours per set below 24 and 30 in the case of night and day sections, respectively. In applying this standard, platform attendance should not be counted since work on the platform before the departure of a train is not so strenuous as work in a running section, and the standard for a sorting mail office is as high as 8 hours a day. Moreover, the counting of platform attendance in such cases increases the weekly working hours appreciably, and causes avoidable expenditure.

2. As an example a case may be quoted of a section with 5 sets which has run of 10 hours 10 minutes in the out-trip and 9 hours 37 minutes in the in-trip. The weekly working hours of each set are 26 hours 27 minutes and 3 seconds, a figure much below the standard of 30 hours fixed for a night section; but by adding its daily platform attendance of $3\frac{1}{2}$ hours, the weekly working hours were increased to 32 hours 15 minutes and 4 seconds, and another set was sanctioned. The result is that the weekly working hours now are 25 hours 4 minutes and 50 seconds per set, which the Government of India consider too low even for a night section.

3. In order to avoid the recurrence of such cases in future platform attendance may, for ordinary purposes, be counted in determining the number of sets of a section, but when the addition of the platform attendance has the effect of reducing the weekly working hours below 24 hours in the case of a night section and below

30 hours in the case of a day section, it should not be taken into account, but the number of sets should be determined solely by the actual working hours in the mail van.

4. Heads of Circles should now be instructed to re-examine the number of sets in each of the Railway Mail Service sections under their control and to readjust them where necessary in accordance with the principles laid down above.

I have the honour to be,

Sir,

Your most obedient servant,

T. RYAN,

Joint Secretary to the Government of India.

SCALES OF PAY IN THE POSTAL DEPARTMENT.

971. *Mr. N. M. Joshi: Referring to the reply given to starred question No. 1057 (regarding scales of pay in the Postal Department) put in the Assembly by Mr. T. N. Ramakrishna Reddy, on 21st March, 1931, will Government be pleased to state—

- (i) how the concluding sentence in clause (g) can be reconciled with the statement in clause (c) of the said reply;
- (ii) whether a graduate recruited in the Bombay Circle on 11th June, 1926, on an initial pay of Rs. 51 per month in the old scale of Rs. 40—120 then, was under P. R. 22 brought on to the new scale on 1st March, 1927 and his pay fixed at Rs. 55 per month;
- (iii) whether a graduate recruited on and after 1st March, 1927, in the new scale, viz., Rs. 40—5—140 was, however, given an initial salary at Rs. 60 per month;
- (iv) whether it is a fact that in the case referred to in (ii) and (iii) above, a junior got higher pay than what his senior did;
- (v) whether it is a fact that the number of such affected officials does not exceed 50; and

- (vi) whether they propose to grant to the old graduate servants one advance increment under Fundamental Rule 27?

Mr. T. Ryan: (i) There is no inconsistency between the two statements to which the Honourable Member refers. One of them admitted that certain officials got less pay than certain others. The second statement was that those officials were not put to any loss. In fact, nobody lost any pay. In both cases the officials received the pay to which they were entitled under the conditions which existed at the time they joined the service, or as subsequently revised.

(ii) No. In June, 1926, there was no time-scale of Rs. 40—120 in the Bombay Circle.

(iii) Yes.

(iv) Cases of this kind occurred though the precise case contemplated in part (ii) of the question did not occur.

(v) Government have no definite information as to the number of such cases but it probably exceeds 50.

(vi) No. The changes made in scales of pay, coupled with the operation of the rules, no doubt caused some anomalous cases; anomalies cannot always be avoided and as no body was adversely affected in pay Government decided not to treat specially the cases in question.

EDUCATION OF THE CHILDREN OF PRESS EMPLOYEES IN DELHI.

972. Kunwar Raghubir Singh (on behalf of Mr. A. Das): (a) Will Government be pleased to state why schools for boys and girls are not yet started in the Press area at Barakhamba since the move of the Press from Old to New Delhi in August, 1931?

(b) Are Government aware that education of the children of the Press employees has been hampered owing to want of Primary Free Schools? If so, when will such schools be opened?

(c) Is it a fact that the Press employees represented the said case to the higher authorities? If so, what action has been taken by Government? If not, why not?

(d) Is it a fact that at Timarpur there were three schools, one for boys, one for Bengali girls and another for Hindu and Muhammadan and Christian girls under the Notified Area Committee?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) A primary school for boys and girls was started in the Barakhamba area by private enterprise on the 16th November, 1931. This school has been recognised by the Education Department of Delhi Province which has also made a recommendation to the New Delhi Municipal Committee that the school should receive a grant-in-aid. The provision of additional facilities for schools in this area is the responsibility of the New Delhi Municipal Committee.

(b) Primary education in the schools maintained by the New Delhi Municipal Committee as well as in most of the aided schools in New Delhi is already free.

(c) Government have no record of any such representation.

(d) Yes.

QUARTERS OF PRESS EMPLOYEES IN NEW DELHI.

973. Kunwar Raghubir Singh (on behalf of Mr. A. Das): (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether the accommodation in the new quarters for the Press employees at Barakhamba is not better than those at Timarpur or New Delhi, especially of "B", "C" and "D" type quarters?

(b) Is it a fact that in the corner space one "B" and three "C" quarters have been built and the back side of these quarters are very close to the latrines of the adjoining quarters and bad injurious smell of the adjoining latrines come to the verandahs and courtyards of these "B" and "C" quarters?

(c) Is it a fact that the latrines of the "B" and "C" quarters have been built in the verandah attached to bedroom?

(d) Is it a fact that some dhobi ghats have been built on the back site of the quarters forming a square where dhobis from the City and surrounding places come to wash their clothes? Are Government aware that this is likely to bring infections into the Government quarters?

(e) Do Government propose to take immediate action to stop this practice?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore: (a) The accommodation provided in the newly constructed "B" type Press quarters is a little less than that provided in New Delhi and at Timarpur, but greater in cases of "C" type Press quarters than the corresponding type in New Delhi. The accommodation in "D" type quarters is a little less than the Timarpur quarters.

(b) The reply to the first part is in the affirmative and to the second part in the negative.

(c) No.

(d) The reply to the first part of the question is in the affirmative. These ghats are not open to dhobis from the City. Only dhobis holding licences from the New Delhi Municipality are authorised to use them.

(e) Does not arise.

PROVISION OF FACILITIES FOR RECREATION, ETC., OF PRESS EMPLOYEES IN NEW DELHI.

974. Kunwar Raghubir Singh (on behalf of Mr. A. Das): (a) Is it a fact that no quarter for a recreation club has been given to the Press employees at Barakhamba and are Government aware that much inconvenience is being felt for library, etc.?

(b) Is it a fact that no suitable play ground has been fixed for the employees of the Press since their coming over to Barakhamba? If not, why not?

(c) When do Government propose to remove all the said inconveniences?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore: (a) No press quarter is available for allotment for a recreation club.

(b) Common playgrounds exist outside the Delhi Gate and at Connaught Place for the use of residents at Barakhamba, and Government are not in a position to provide a separate playground for the press.

(c) Does not arise.

LACK OF HEATING ARRANGEMENTS IN THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA PRESS, NEW DELHI.

975. Kunwar Raghubir Singh (on behalf of Mr. A. Das): Is it a fact that no heating arrangement had been made this winter in the new Government Press building in New Delhi? What is the idea in regard to this?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore: Yes, Government do not propose to take any action at present.

LACK OF WATER TAPS IN THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA PRESS, NEW DELHI.

976. Kunwar Raghubir Singh (on behalf of Mr. A. Das): (a) Will Government be pleased to state how many water taps have been fixed in the main Government Press building, New Delhi?

(b) Is it a fact that only one tap has been fixed in front of the Manager's room where the Press employees are not allowed to go?

(c) Are Government aware that much inconvenience is felt on account of want of water taps?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore: (a) 28.

(b) and (c). No.

ACCOUNTANTS REVERTED TO THEIR SUBSTANTIVE APPOINTMENTS.

977. Mr. S. C. Mitra: Will Government be pleased to lay on the table a list of the Accountants, with names, who have been on deputation in the office of the Accountant General, Central Revenues, since 1923 showing the grounds on which they have been retained or reverted to the substantive appointments held by them in other provinces owing to retrenchment in that office?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: With your permission, Sir, I will reply to questions Nos. 977 and 978 together.

The information has been called for and will be laid on the table in due course.

DIVISIONAL ACCOUNTANTS RETIRED AT 55 YEARS OF AGE.

†978. Mr. S. C. Mitra: Will Government be pleased to state the names of the Divisional Accountants serving under the Accountant General, Central Revenues, who have or have not been given an extension of their services after completing 55 years of age?

FORMATION OF A "KARNATIK" PROVINCE.

979. Rao Bahadur B. L. Patil: (a) Referring to the replies to unstarred question No. 49 (a), dated the 15th September, 1931, will Government be pleased to state whether any action has been taken under section 52A of the Government of India Act?

† For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 977.

(b) Do Government intend to proceed to make an enquiry when the conditions of section 52A are complied with?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: With your permission, Sir, I propose to answer questions Nos. 979, 980 and 981 together.

Government are aware of the views which have been expressed on these questions from time to time in the Central Legislature and the Legislative Councils of Madras, Bombay and Coorg. There is no present intention of proceeding further at this stage with the question of forming separate Andhra and Kannada provinces.

CREATION OF A SEPARATE ADMINISTRATIVE UNIT IN THE KANNAD-SPEAKING DISTRICTS OF THE BOMBAY AND MADRAS PRESIDENCIES.

1980. Rao Bahadur B. L. Patil: (a) Are Government aware that the attention of the public is greatly concentrated in the Kannad-speaking districts of Bombay and Madras Presidencies and the Province of Coorg on the question of unification of these districts into a separate administrative unit?

(b) Are Government further aware that widespread discontentment prevails in those places, among all classes of people, owing to Government's inaction in those places in connection with this question?

(c) Are Government prepared to appoint a small committee to investigate this matter and report as to the financial position and other questions incidental thereto?

FORMATION OF AN ANDHRA PROVINCE.

1981. Rao Bahadur B. L. Patil: (a) Are Government aware that there is a strong demand also for the formation of an Andhra Province adjoining the Kannad districts?

(b) If so, have Government considered the question of appointing a single committee both for Andhra and Kannad speaking districts?

(c) Do Government propose to reach a decision before the reforms are ushered in?

FUTURE STATUS OF BERAR.

982. Mr. S. G. Jog: (a) Is it a fact that the Government of India have received any communication or statement or suggestion in the matter of the future status of Berar from the Government of the Central Provinces?

(b) If so, will Government let the House know as to what that statement or suggestion is?

Sir Evelyn Howell: It is regretted that it is not possible to make any announcement on the subject at this stage. The Honourable Member's attention is invited to the answer given by me to starred question No. 36 by Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh on the 15th of January last.

† For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 979.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Do Government propose to give the people of Berar an opportunity of expressing their opinion, on the principle of self-determination, before any changes are made in the political or administrative status of Berar?

Sir Evelyn Howell: I regret I cannot give the Honourable Member any information.

Diwan Bahadur A. Ramaswami Mudaliar: Will Government kindly state whether they would take this Assembly into confidence before any commitments of a wider nature than are at present incurred are entered into in connection with this question?

Sir Evelyn Howell: I would like to have notice of that question.

THIRD CLASS ACCOMMODATION PROVIDED FOR SECRETARIAT EMPLOYEES MOVING TO SIMLA FROM NEW DELHI.

983. Mr. Badri Lal Rastogi: (a) Are Government aware that the Government of India staff generally prefer to move up to Simla by the 143 Up train, it being the most convenient, and that mostly applications for reserved compartments at the time of move are for smaller capacity III class compartments, say 9 seaters?

(b) Is it a fact that the stock running on the said 143 Up train from Delhi to Kalka is comprised of only three 9 seater compartments and all the remaining compartments are 40 and 20 seater III class compartments?

(c) If the reply to the above be in the affirmative, have the Railway authorities concerned considered the desirability of attaching more 9 seater compartments in the said train to meet the demand of the staff of the Government of India Secretariat? If not, why not?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) Yes.

(b) Government understand that the number of third class carriages with small compartments is very limited, but are not aware of the actual number of such compartments available in the stock of this train.

(c) I have communicated the Honourable Member's suggestion to the Agent, North Western Railway, for such action as the latter may consider feasible.

REPRESENTATION OF THE INTERESTS OF INDIAN SETTLERS IN TANGANYIKA.

984. Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: (a) Will Government kindly state if the representation of the Indian settlers in Tanganyika is based either on their population, or on their large commercial and settlers' interests?

(b) Are Government aware that no Indian settler in Tanganyika has yet been appointed as an officer in the territory, or to any judicial post; and that in the grant of public contracts, there is a marked tendency to ignore the claims of Indians in favour of Europeans who may even not be citizens of the Empire?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: (a) I am sorry, Sir, I am unable to answer this part of the question, as the Honourable Member has not specified the body in respect of which he desires the information.

(b) I am prepared to accept that the position in regard to the appointment of Indians in the higher services in Tanganyika may be as stated by the Honourable Member. As regards the second part of this question, Government have no information.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Are Government aware that the condition of Indian settlers in Tanganyika is becoming as acute as that which obtains in Kenya?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: I had the privilege about a month ago of passing through Tanganyika, and I heard very divergent views on that subject.

Mr. B. Das: In view of what the Honourable Member said regarding the employment of Indians, what steps does the Honourable Member propose to take to remedy matters?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: The Indian community in Tanganyika have two avenues of getting redress. One is by appeal to the Permanent Mandate Commission of the League of Nations and the other is through their own representatives in the Tanganyika Legislative Council. Government do not think that in minor matters of this kind they can really interfere in what appears to be a matter of purely internal policy.

Mr. B. Das: May I ask the Honourable Member what is the use of accepting the statement, if the matter is going to be left to the representatives in the Tanganyika Legislative Council.

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: Though I said that the position stated by the questioner may be as stated by him, I accept no responsibility on behalf of Government.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: In view of the divergent information which the Government have received, may I ask whether the Government would try to find out the actual position and make an attempt to redress the grievances, if they are found to exist.

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: If the Honourable Member wants to have detailed information on the subject I should say that the great bulk of the opinion which I was able to collect in Tanganyika was to the effect that the majority of the Indian community there are quite happy.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Are Government aware that some important pieces of legislation have been passed by the Government of Tanganyika restricting the trading rights of Indian settlers in that territory?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: I would ask my Honourable friend to exercise a little patience and wait for the answers to the further questions which he has put down on that subject.

Mr. B. Das: Does not the Honourable Member think it is high time that the Government of India should appoint an Agent in East African Tanganyika to look after the interests of the Indians there? The suggestion has been made very often from this side.

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: The suggestion regarding the appointment of an Agent in Tanganyika has only been made today. The suggestion about Kenya has been made before and has been under the consideration of the Government.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Are Government aware that the suggestion about the Agent in East Africa has been made for some time?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: I confess that it comes to me entirely as a piece of new information today.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Does the statement made by the Honourable Member that the majority of Indians residing in Tanganyika appear to be quite happy, represent the considered opinion of the Government of India, or is it based on certain observations made by him as a tourist in that country?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: The Honourable Member seems to assume that my visit to Tanganyika was merely that of a tourist. It was not exactly that, because the local Indian Association came and saw the members of the delegation and stated to them what their views on the position in Tanganyika were. Now, it is perfectly clear that in regard to one or two matters they had certain representations to make, but I think that my Honourable friend, merely because one or two pieces of legislation were placed on the Statute-book recently, would not be justified in drawing the inference that the general condition of the Indian community is one of unhappiness.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Am I to take it that the delegation was officially authorised by the Government of India to inquire into the situation in Tanganyika?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: It was not officially authorised to inquire into the Tanganyika situation. Equally it was not officially prohibited from listening to representations that were made to them.

Mr. B. Das: Do I infer that in the opinion of the Honourable Member the situation is so good in Tanganyika and East Africa that there is no necessity for the appointment of an Agent there?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: I never said that.

AMENDMENT OF THE TRADE LICENSING ORDINANCE IN TANGANYIKA.

1935. Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: (a) Are Government aware that an Ordinance, entitled "An Ordinance to amend the Trades Licensing Ordinance", was passed by the Legislative Council of Tanganyika, on the 5th February, 1932, in spite of the protest of the Indian Association, and the Indian settlers there?

(b) Is it a fact that the Ordinance creates monopolies in favour of non-Indians to the prejudice of the Indian trading and commercial interests, so far as the native produce is concerned?

(c) Are Government aware that this Ordinance is at variance with Article 7 of the mandate, which secures "to all nationals of States Members of the League of Nations the same rights as are enjoyed in the territory by his own nationals in respect of entry into and residence in the territory, the protection afforded to their person and property, the acquisition of property, movable and immovable, and the exercise of their profession or trade?"

(d) What steps, if any, have Government taken, or propose to take in the matter?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: (a) Yes.

(b) There is nothing in the Ordinance to show that monopolies would be created in favour of non-Indians. The Governor gave an assurance that the law would be applied with absolute impartiality.

(c) This is the view held by the Indian Association of Dar-es-Salaam. It has been brought to the notice of His Majesty's Government.

(d) Government are in correspondence with the Secretary of State on this subject.

Mr. B. Das: Is it not a fact that the Government of India contemplated the appointment of a Trade Commissioner for East Africa and that official was to be located at Zanzibar?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: I think that question ought to be addressed to the Honourable the Commerce Member. I do not deal with Trade Commissioners.

Mr. B. Das: I addressed my question to the Treasury Benches.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I did not hear the Honourable Member's question.

Mr. B. Das: Is it a fact that the Government of India contemplated the appointment of a Trade Commissioner in East Africa to look after the interests of Indians there and that he was to be located at Zanzibar?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: They certainly contemplated the appointment of a Trade Commissioner at Mombasa, but there was no question of looking after Indian interests apart from trade interests. That was not part of the scheme.

Mr. B. Das: The question put concerned the question of looking after the Indian trade interests: I was not thinking of political interests?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: The Honourable Member is quite correct that that was part of our Trade Commissioners' scheme.

Mr. B. Das: May I inquire what led to the holding in abeyance of that particular scheme,—why no Trade Commissioner had been appointed?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I think the Honourable Member is aware that owing to financial stringency we can make no provision for that scheme at present.

LEVY OF A POLL TAX IN TANGANYIKA FOR EDUCATION.

986. Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: (a) Will Government kindly state if "an Ordinance to make provision for the levy of non-native poll tax" in Tanganyika, has been or is about to be passed in that territory, which seeks to repeal the non-native education tax? Are Government aware that this tax has been helpful in the maintenance of schools?

(b) What in short are the proposals in this Ordinance?

(c) Do Government propose to take steps to see that this Ordinance does not affect adversely the interests of the Indians there?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: (a) The Ordinance referred to by the Honourable Member has been passed. It repeals the Non-Native Education Tax Ordinance, 1930, the proceeds from which were utilised for educational expenditure on the different non-native communities according to their respective contributions.

(b) A copy of the Ordinance has been placed in the Library of the House.

(c) The Government of India are already in correspondence with His Majesty's Government on the subject.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Is it a fact that the Government of Tanganyika spend much more money on the education of Europeans than on the education of the Indian settlers in that territory?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: I would like the Honourable Member to put down a question on that subject. I could not say offhand.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: In spite of these Ordinances, do the Government still think that the Indians there are very happy?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: I should say that no community in the world which is called upon to pay any tax is happy over that, but that does not necessarily imply general unhappiness in them.

APPOINTMENT OF AN INDIAN AS ASSISTANT AIRCRAFT INSPECTOR.

987. Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: (a) Is it a fact that the Government of India have invited applications for the post of Assistant Aircraft Inspector through the High Commissioner in London?

(b) If so, has any application been received from qualified Indians? What is the number of such applicants, if any?

(c) Do Government propose to give preference to an Indian, provided a qualified Indian is available?

The Honourable Sir Joseph Bhore: (a), (b) and (c). The High Commissioner has been asked to recruit a suitably qualified officer for the post of Assistant Aircraft Inspector in the Civil Aviation Directorate. Should there be Indians possessing the qualifications necessary for this particular post, subject to the paramount necessity for securing efficiency, Government are prepared to give preference to an Indian.

CENSORSHIP OF NEWS SENT TO FOREIGN NEWSPAPERS.

988. Mr. K. O. Neogy: (a) With reference to the answer given to a supplementary question in connexion with starred question No. 805, on the 15th March, 1932, to the effect that immunity from censorship depends partly on "the responsibility of the news agency or correspondent" sending news to foreign newspapers, will Government be pleased to state by what standards is such "responsibility" judged and by whom?

(b) Is news sought to be sent by cable by any responsible non-official Indian to any British or foreign newspaper liable to be subjected to censorship, unlike news sent by any correspondent or news agency?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) The practical test is whether the concession is or is not abused, and of that Government must clearly be the judge.

(b) The arrangements in question relate to press messages only, and the ordinary procedure in other cases applies.

REVENUE SACRIFICED UNDER SECTION 49 OF THE INDIAN INCOME-TAX ACT.

989. Mr. Rahimtoola M. Chinoy (on behalf of Mr. H. P. Mody): Will Government be pleased to state what amount of revenue has been given up by them under section 49 of the Indian Income-tax Act of 1922 during the last six years?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: A statement is laid on the table.

Statement showing the amount of refunds granted under section 49 during the years 1925-26 to 1930-31.

	Rs.
1925-26	91,84,314
1926-27	1,06,90,863
1927-28	96,68,078
1928-29	93,02,077
1929-30	1,08,31,287
1930-31	1,00,61,217
Total	5,96,37,836

EXEMPTIONS, ETC., UNDER SECTION 60 OF THE INDIAN INCOME-TAX ACT.

990. Mr. Rahimtoola M. Chinoy (on behalf of Mr. H. P. Mody): Will Government be pleased to state what exemptions, reductions in rate, or other modifications, if any, have been made in respect of Income-tax under section 60 of the Indian Income-tax Act of 1922?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: The information required by the Honourable Member is contained in paragraphs 17 and 17A of the Income-tax Manual, a copy of which is kept in the Library of the House.

"EXTRAORDINARY RECEIPTS" OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

991. Mr. Rahimtoola M. Ohinoy (on behalf of Mr. H. P. Mody): Will Government be pleased to lay on the table a classified statement of the "Extraordinary Receipts" of the Government of India during the last five years?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to Account No. 79-A. of the Finance and Revenue Accounts of the years concerned.

TRAINING OF INDIAN CADETS FOR THE ROYAL AIR FORCE.

992. Mr. B. V. Jadhav: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether the policy laid before this House by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief in his speech of the 8th of March, 1928, about reserving 6 vacancies in each of the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and the Royal Air Force College, Cranwell, still continues in force?

(b) What is the number of cadets admitted into each college up till now, and the dates of their admission there?

(c) Have any of these completed their course and returned to India?

(d) To what units are they attached?

(e) Is there any provision made at present for cadets at the new Indian Military Academy, Dehra Dun, for Air Force or the Engineer Corps training?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) and (e). Indian Air Force cadets will continue to go to Cranwell for the present. But Indian cadets for the artillery, engineers and signals will, after this year, be sent for training to the Indian Military Academy.

(b) Woolwich.—Two in September 1930, two in February 1931, two in September 1931, and three in February 1932. Three more will join in September 1932.

Cranwell.—Six in September 1930, one in September 1931, and three in January 1932. Three more will join in September 1932. Of the six admitted in September 1930, one cadet was found unfit for training in flying, and has been transferred to the Stores Branch.

(c) and (d). None of the Indian cadets at Cranwell has yet completed the course. Two cadets have completed the course at Woolwich and are now undergoing a post-graduate course in England.

PROVISION OF QUARTERS FOR THE STAFF OF THE RAILWAY CLEARING ACCOUNTS OFFICE, DELHI.

993. Mr. D. K. Lahiri Chaudhury (on behalf of Mr. Goswami M. R. Puri): (a) Will Government please say what is the position at present regarding the provision of quarters for the staff of the Railway Clearing Accounts Office, Delhi?

(b) If there is no likelihood of quarters being provided in the near future, are Government prepared to consider the advisability of allowing leased plots in Paharganj or Karol Bagh to such of the staff of the Railway Clearing Accounts Office who wish to build their own houses?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) It has not been possible to provide funds for this purpose in the Budget for 1932-33, but the preparation of detailed plans and estimates is in hand, so that no delay may occur when money is available.

(b) Government have so far received no applications, but the suggestion will be carefully considered.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Are Government contemplating to send part of it to Madras? In that case the question of accommodation will not arise?

Mr. P. R. Rau: No, Sir.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Are Government contemplating to do away with the office altogether as being an expensive and unnecessary waste?

Mr. P. R. Rau: No; whether it is a waste or not is a matter of opinion, Sir.

AUCTION OF LAND IN KAROL BAGH AND PAHARGANJ FOR RESIDENTIAL QUARTERS.

994. Mr. D. K. Lahiri Chaudhury (on behalf of Mr. Goswami M. R. Puri): (a) Is it a fact that Government are considering the auction of leased plots of land for residential quarters in Karol Bagh and Paharganj?

(b) Is it also a fact that the staff of the Railway Clearing Accounts Office applied to the Nazul Officer for the grant of land in Karol Bagh or Paharganj for residential quarters as great hardship was experienced in the matter of accommodation, house rents, etc.?

(c) If so, will Government please say what steps are being taken to help the staff who have to pay high rents? Is it a fact that many times in this Assembly Government have shewn their intention to provide quarters for the staff? Is it a fact that nothing has been done in the matter so far and are Government aware that the hardships of the staff continue more so now-a-days on account of the 10 per cent. emergency cut recently imposed upon them?

(d) If it is not possible at this stage to build quarters for them, are Government prepared to consider their claims for the leased plots in Karol Bagh and Paharganj in preference to the outside public?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) and (b). I am obtaining information on the points raised and will lay a reply on the table in due course.

(c) Government regret that financial stringency has stood in the way of the building of quarters for the staff.

(d) As I have already stated, any application will receive most careful consideration.

REINTRODUCTION OF A THROUGH CARRIAGE BETWEEN LUCKNOW AND BOMBAY ON THE GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.

995. Mr. J. Ramsay Scott: (a) Are Government aware of the discontinuance by the Great Indian Peninsula Railway authorities, with effect from the beginning of June 1931, of the upper class through composite bogie carriage on the mail trains between Lucknow and Bombay?

(b) If the answer is in the affirmative, are Government aware of the great inconvenience caused to upper class passengers travelling between the United Provinces, and particularly Lucknow and Cawnpore, and Bombay by the discontinuance of this through service?

(c) Are Government aware that the United Provinces Advisory Committee of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway have on three occasions recommended the re-introduction of this through bogie, either permanently or at least in connection with out-going and in-coming mail and passenger steamers and that the United Provinces Government have also, on the 9th October, 1931, recommended to the Great Indian Peninsula Railway authorities the feasibility of running the through bogie composite on the Punjab mail trains during the months of March-April and October-November of each year?

(d) Are Government aware that the Jhansi-Lucknow section of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway offers the main and most direct route between Bombay and two-thirds of the United Provinces, including the important cities of Cawnpore, Lucknow and Bareilly, and are Government prepared to provide on this route the same facilities for travel as are provided on the route from Jhansi to Delhi and recommend to the Great Indian Peninsula Railway the re-introduction of the upper class through composite bogie between Bombay and Lucknow via this route?

Mr. P. R. Rau: (a) Yes.

(b) Government are aware of the inconvenience caused by the discontinuance of the through service carriage.

(c) Yes.

(d) The Agent, Great Indian Peninsula Railway, has been asked to re-examine this matter.

SUPPLY OF FILTERED WATER, LIGHTING, ETC., IN KAROL BAGH, DELHI.

996. Sirdar Harbans Singh Brar: (a) Will Government please state whether the area comprising the suburbs of Delhi known as Karol Bagh is within the limit of Delhi Municipality and taxes such as house-tax and ground-tax are realised from the house owners within that area?

(b) If so, will Government please state why facilities for the supply of filtered water, roads with drains and street lighting are not provided there?

(c) Is it a fact that the Proprietors' Association, Karol Bagh, have ventilated through a memorial to the Chief Commissioner, Delhi, in December 1931, their above grievances and no action has yet been taken? When is it likely that their grievances will be redressed?

(d) As regards water supply to Karol Bagh, do Government propose to consider the advisability of a supply of water from the new reservoir which has recently been constructed close to the area, of Karol Bagh?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: (a) Yes.

(b) Street lighting has been provided in a large part of the area and roads are reported to be in fair condition. Drainage and water supply schemes have been worked out, but are held in abeyance on account of financial stringency.

(c) Yes. As soon as funds permit.

(d) The water-supply scheme which has been worked out provides for supply from the new reservoir.

CONFISCATION OF THE PRIVILEGE OF INTERVIEW OF CERTAIN POLITICAL PRISONERS.

997. Mr. S. C. Mitra: Are Government aware of the fact that the privilege of interview of some C class political prisoners has been confiscated for 6 months in the Ajmer Jail? What is their number and why have they been so punished?

Sir Evelyn Howell: With your permission, Sir, I propose to answer questions Nos. 997, 999 to 1003 and 1005 to 1019 together. The information is being collected and will be given to the House in due course.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Are Government aware that there is no non-official visitor of the Ajmer Central Jail, and if there is none, why?

Sir Evelyn Howell: I would like to have notice of that question, please.

INSUFFICIENCY OF CLOTHES PROVIDED FOR PRISONERS IN THE AJMER JAIL.

998. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Are Government aware of the fact that in Ajmer Central Jail only one jangia is provided and not two as stated by Sir Evelyn Howell in reply to Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh's starred question No. 707 on March 9th, 1932?

(b) Do not Government feel that even for washing the one jangia the prisoners have to remain almost naked?

Sir Evelyn Howell. (a) "One pair of Jangias" means a single garment.

(b) No doubt that is so.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: Does the Honourable Member appreciate the situation and would he like to continue the same situation, or does he want to give two pairs of jangias to each?

Sir Evelyn Howell: I shall consider the Honourable Member's suggestion.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Does not the Honourable Member think that the practice is simply barbarous?

Sir Evelyn Howell: It is most universal, Sir, in this country.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Is it not monstrous that there is only a single pair of jangias supplied, and while that is being washed, the prisoner has to remain absolutely naked?

Sir Evelyn Howell: Sir, the question stated:

“Do not Government feel that even for washing the one jangia the prisoners have to remain almost naked?” The answer given was that no doubt that was so.

Mr. B. Das: May I inquire of the Honourable Member if it is the practice throughout all the jails in India to only allow one pair of jangias to the ordinary criminal prisoners and to allow them to remain naked while that pair is being washed?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I have studied the jail administration with great care, Sir, but I could not, in reply to a supplementary question, commit myself to what is the practice in every jail in India.

Mr. S. C. Mitra: Is the practice in question prevalent in all the jails in the centrally administered areas—namely, that only one single garment is supplied, and while that is being washed, the prisoner has to remain naked—or the practice is only confined to Ajmer?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I should like to avoid any possibility of giving the Honourable Member any inaccurate information. I must therefore ask for notice.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Do Government realize the significance of the reply of the Honourable the Foreign Secretary to this question? Is it really the position that the prisoners all over India or even in Ajmer jail have to remain naked while their single jangia is being washed?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I did not understand the statement of my Honourable friend to have that effect.

Diwan Bahadur Harbilas Sarda: Is it in order that this kind of treatment to the prisoners in the Ajmer jail may not be questioned or objected to by outsiders, that no jail visitors to Ajmer jail are appointed?

Sir Evelyn Howell: No, Sir.

Mr. B. V. Jadhav: Is it the desire of Government then to encourage the new naked cult in the prisons? (Laughter.)

CONFINEMENT IN A DARK CELL OF A PRISONER IN THE AJMER CENTRAL JAIL.

†999. Mr. S. C. Mitra: Is it a fact that Sjt. Narsingh Das has been kept in a dark cell in the Ajmer Central Jail? If so, why?

HUNGER STRIKE OF A PRISONER IN THE AJMER JAIL.

†1000. Mr. S. C. Mitra: Are Government aware of the fact that Master Lakshmi Narain has been on hunger strike since 1st March, 1932, in the Ajmer Central Jail? What are the reasons?

†For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 997.

REMOVAL UNDER THE ORDINANCE OF PRIVATE MONEY BY THE AJMER POLICE.

†1001. Mr. S. C. Mitra: Are Government aware of the fact that the Ajmer Police while searching some places for Congress moneys on 17th February, 1932, took away private moneys of the persons for whom the notice under section 3 of sub-section 7 of Ordinance No. IV of 1932 was meant and also of their family members, though the attention of the Police Officer, Sardar Ishwar Singh, was drawn and objection raised by Mr. Srilal, B.A., LL.B., Vakil, that he was not authorised to take away private moneys?

AUCTION OF PRIVATE PROPERTY IN THE GANDHI ASHRAM AT HATUNDI.

†1002. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Is it a fact that the Gandhi Ashram, Hatundi, is a notified area?

(b) Are Government aware of the fact that the private properties of the inmates of the Ashram and the furniture of the Ashram School have also been auctioned?

ARREST OF A SHOPKEEPER FOR FLYING THE CONGRESS FLAG.

† 1003. Mr. S. C. Mitra: Are Government aware of the fact that the national flag was flying on the 26th January, 1932, on an open roof in Ghasity Mohalla, Ajmer and that Seth Kalyan Mal, a shopkeeper, was taken into custody, abused by the Sub-Inspector, detained the whole day, was forced to apologise and then released, though the said Kalyan Mal informed the police of his utter ignorance in this matter at the very outset?

ALLEGATIONS ABOUT THE "DEOLI DETENUS CAMP".

1004. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) How many prisoners are there at present in the Deoli detenus camp?

(b) Are Government aware that these detenus are assaulted by the staff on the slightest pretext and the Superintendent recommends kicks when they ask for medicine?

(c) Are Government aware of the fact that one Bengali gentleman, who happened to pass by the camp, was brutally assaulted to unconsciousness and that people passing by the camp are generally maltreated and molested?

(d) Is there any non-official visitor in Deoli Camp; if not, are Government prepared to appoint one now?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a), (b) and (c). There are no detenus at present in the proposed Deoli Camp Jail which has not yet been opened. The Honourable Member will therefore realise that the allegations are without any foundation.

(d) Non-official visitors will be appointed in due course if and when the Camp Jail is opened.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Will not the non-official visitors be of the usual toady class?

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: May I take it that there is not one prisoner at present confined in the Deoli jail?

The Honourable Sir James Orerar: There is none.

ARREST OF YOUNG BOYS IN AJMER.

†1005. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Are Government aware of the fact that in Ajmer young boys below 16 are put under arrest and set free after having been stripped of their clothing? Will they state under which law or Ordinance all this is being done?

(b) Are Government aware of the fact that six boys under the age of 16 while making some demonstrations in the court compound of Ajmer, were arrested and summarily convicted for lurking and house trespass and flogged?

(c) Do Government intend to issue instructions to Local Governments for the discontinuance of flogging?

CLASSIFICATION OF PRISONERS IN THE AJMER CENTRAL JAIL.

†1006. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) How many political prisoners are there at present in Ajmer Central Jail and how are they classified? Why is none considered eligible for 'B' class?

(b) Do Government think that there was any mistake in the classification of political prisoners during the civil disobedience movement of 1930-1931? If not, will they state reasons why prisoners formerly classed 'A' are now awarded 'C' class, e.g., Messrs. Baijnath Mahodaya, B.A., Gopikishan, Narsinghdas, Ladhuram, Ramadevi, Bhikamsingh, Nityanand Nagar, Rishidutt Mehta, Govardhan and others?

CLASSIFICATION OF PRISONERS IN THE AJMER CENTRAL JAIL.

†1007. Mr. S. C. Mitra: Are Government aware of the fact that prisoners are generally classified a long time after their conviction and during this interval persons of even high academical qualifications and social status are given 'C' class treatment? Do Government propose to ask the Ajmer-Merwara administration to advise Magistrates to classify people at the time of conviction?

CLASSIFICATION OF PRISONERS IN THE AJMER CENTRAL JAIL.

†1008. Mr. S. C. Mitra: Will Government please state whether Mrs. Shoba Lall Gupta has been put in 'C' class in the Ajmer jail while Mr. Shoba Lall has been awarded 'A' class? If so, why?

STANDARD OF DIET OF "C" CLASS PRISONERS IN AJMER.

†1009. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the reasons why there has been a change in the standard of diet allowed to 'C' class prisoners in Ajmer this year from that allowed during the civil disobedience movement last year?

(b) Is it a fact that the standard of diet last year was:—Wheat flour 12 chataks, Ghee $\frac{1}{2}$ chatak, Dal 3 chataks, Vegetable 2 chataks, private cooking allowed and the standard of diet this year is—Half-baked Rotees and black Dal, boiled leaves of vegetables?

CORN-GRINDING LABOUR GIVEN TO POLITICAL PRISONERS.

†1010. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) How many of the political prisoners in Ajmer were given corn-grinding labour at the outset? Is it not a fact that this is the general practice with nearly all the political prisoners for some days in the beginning?

(b) Will Government be pleased to explain the justification in giving corn-grinding labour to people like Prof. Gokul Lall, M.A., a thin man of about 80 lbs. an 'A' class prisoner, Mr. B. S. Deshpande, B.Sc. and Mr. Baij Nath Mahodaya, B.A., in the Ajmer Central Prison?

(c) Is it a fact that one political prisoner was put in a dark cell for not being able to grind full 15 seers?

HUNGER STRIKE OF POLITICAL PRISONERS IN AJMER.

†1011. Mr. S. C. Mitra: Is it a fact that a number of political prisoners in Ajmer Central Jail went on hunger-strike recently? What was the exact number of these hunger-strikers? What is the cause and the duration of the hunger-strike? How did it end?

COMPLAINT ABOUT THE TREATMENT OF PRISONERS IN THE AJMER CENTRAL JAIL.

†1012. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Is it a fact that Pt. Jainarain Vyas, Secretary of the Beawar District Congress Committee, was abused by a warder in the Ajmer Central Jail and on complaint to the Jailor, the latter refused to ask the warder to apologise? Is it a fact that the Jailor himself twisted the ear of and slapped Sjt. Durga Prashad Choudhary, Captain of Provincial Volunteer Corps, and kicked and otherwise assaulted Sjt. Lal Chand a volunteer? Is it a fact that these among others were the causes of hunger-strike referred to in the preceding question?

(b) Is it a fact that water was not supplied to Mr. Vyas for two days while he was on hunger-strike and that food was not given for more than one day to all 'C' class political prisoners, although they went on only a single day's sympathetic hunger-strike?

(c) What punishments, if any, have been awarded to the hunger-strikers by the jail authorities? How many have been so punished?

CONDITIONS OF INTERVIEWS WITH POLITICAL PRISONERS IN THE AJMER CENTRAL JAIL.

†1013. Mr. S. C. Mitra: Are Government aware that interviews with political prisoners in the Ajmer Jail are generally allowed only on Sundays; that this practice is enforced even in the case of undertrial prisoners; that this practice is not in accordance with the Jail rules; that ladies and gentlemen have to stand in the sun outside the Jail while interviewing the political prisoners; that interviews even with 'A' class prisoners are held under similar circumstances and that it was not so last year when all political prisoners, whether in 'A' or 'C' class, were allowed interviews sitting inside the Jail? Will Government be pleased to state reasons for this change?

†For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 997.

ALLEGED HARASSING OF PRISONERS IN THE AJMER CENTRAL JAIL.

†1014. Mr. S. C. Mitra: Are Government aware that there is a great discontent among prisoners, their friends and relatives, against the generally humiliating autocratic harassing and differential treatment meted out by the Jailor of the Ajmer Central Jail? Is it a fact that the Jailor refused to deliver some articles of dress, toilet, books, etc., to Messrs. Shoba Lall and Haribhan, 'A' class prisoners, on the ground that he could accept articles only if similar things were brought for all 'A' class prisoners?

RECORD OF WEIGHTS OF POLITICAL PRISONERS IN THE AJMER CENTRAL JAIL.

†1015. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Will Government be pleased to place on the table the record of the weights of all the political prisoners in the Ajmer Central Jail?

(b) Is it a fact that Messrs. Baij Nath Mahodaya, B. S. Deshpande, Bhikam Singh and some more have lost 10 to 15 lbs. of weight?

DISALLOWANCE OF A RELIGIOUS BOOK TO A PRISONER IN THE AJMER CENTRAL JAIL.

†1016. Mr. S. C. Mitra: Are Government aware of the fact that even a religious book like Atharva Waid was disallowed to prisoner Gopikishan in the Ajmer Central Jail and no reason was assigned for this?

PROVISION OF A NON-OFFICIAL VISITOR FOR THE AJMER CENTRAL JAIL.

†1017. Mr. S. C. Mitra: Is there a non-official visitor for Ajmer Central Jail? If not, why not? Do Government propose to appoint one now?

LACK OF SOAP AND OIL IN THE AJMER CENTRAL JAIL.

†1018. Mr. S. C. Mitra: Is it a fact that washing soap and oil are not allowed even to lady prisoners in the Ajmer Central Jail?

ALLEGED OBJECTIONABLE METHODS IN SEARCH FOR CONGRESS FUNDS ADOPTED BY THE POLICE INSPECTOR, AJMER.

†1019. Mr. S. C. Mitra: (a) Do Government know that during searches for Congress money Sardar Ishwar Singh, Police Inspector, Ajmer, put altogether impertinent and unnecessary questions even to the ladies, and searched even household utensils, glass phials, clothing, empty match boxes, etc., and that the Police took away private money for which they were not authorised by warrants? Do Government propose to hold an enquiry into the matter?

(b) Will Government please state why the account books current and old of some firms taken away during the searches, have not been returned even up to this time, though about a month has passed since they were taken away?

†For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 997.

CLOTHING ALLOWANCE OF BRITISH AND INDIAN TROOPS.

1020. Mr. B. Das: (a) What was the total amount of clothing allowance paid for the year 1930-31.

- (i) to British troops;
- (ii) to Indian troops;
- (iii) to the British soldiers; and
- (iv) to the Indian soldiers?

(b) What proportion of the sum so paid is in respect of actual clothing and what proportion in respect of cleaning materials, repairs and other similar heads?

(c) Is it a fact that troops are under obligation to purchase all regulation items of clothing through the Quartermaster's store of the unit to which they belong?

(d) How much of the amount paid as clothing allowance is received back by Government through the Quartermaster's stores?

(e) What becomes of the balance allotted for purchase of regulation items of clothing? Is this balance retained by the soldier?

(f) Will the Army Secretary lay on the table a copy of the regulations covering the payment of clothing allowance and a complete statement showing how this balance is spent?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) (i) Rs. 55,43,000.

(ii) Rs. 50,80,000.

(iii) Rs. 95-4-0, a year.

(iv) Rs. 29-4-0, a year.

(b) The proportions are 62·8 per cent. and 37·2 per cent. in the case of a British soldier, and 82 per cent. and 18 per cent. in the case of an Indian soldier.

(c) Yes.

(d) 41·6 per cent. of the total allowance or 55·5 per cent. of that part of the allowance which is meant for the up-keep of authorised clothing and necessaries.

(e) The balance is retained by the soldier.
